

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

A

863,711

10763
NOTES AND QUERIES.

THIRD SERIES—VOL. VII. V///

10763
NOTES AND QUERIES.

THIRD SERIES—VOL. VII. V///

16
305
N9
x2.3
V. 7-8

NOTES AND QUERIES:

A

Medium of Inter-Communication

FOR

LITERARY MEN, GENERAL READERS, ETC.

"When found, make a note of."—CAPTAIN CUTTLE.

THIRD SERIES. — VOLUME SEVENTH.

JANUARY—JUNE 1865.

LONDON:

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 32 WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

1865.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 158.

—The Young Pretender's Conforming to the Church and Visit to London in 1750, 1—Scottish History, 3—Regimental Badges, 4—Pembroke Oxford, 5—Rope-tying—"Cooper"—Duchess of bury—A London Book Auction, 1898—Johnsoniana Depreciation of Currency—"Turning the 6.

S:—Richard Sackville, Earl of Dorset, 7—The at School, 8—Mr. Baskett—Bedstead Superstition ardino—Sir Richard Braham—Caryll Family—The Charlotte of Brunswick—Comets—"Deadly ineel"—Tree—Guilting—Who, or what were Hen-d Horra?—Irish Poor Law—Irish Song—Patrick
M.D.—Ladies of the Order of the Garter—Omar n, Abou'l-hassan Kuschiar, and Jamal'u-din—Herolmer's Burial—Quotation—Romney's Portrait of —Tombstone Inscriptions, St. John's, Horsly-—Hymn to the Virgin—The Universal Accommo-
Office, established in 1778—Washington Arms, 9.

S WITH ANSWERS:—Civitas Lucronii—Marriaze —Hospitals for the Sick—Old Inns of Southwark
Bush Lane—Leycester's Progress in Holland, 12.

ES:—Greek Drama: Ezechiel's "Exagoge," 14—r's "Garlands," 17—"Cousins," a Song: Præd's s, 18—The Grotto of the Nativity and other Christmas ers, 19—Passage in "Hamlet," 21—Thomas Sydeserf, p of Brechin, 16.—Christmas Waits—Viel-Liebchen et Melody, &c., 23.

n Books, &c.

Notes.

YOUNG PRETENDER'S CONFORMING TO CHURCH OF ENGLAND AND VISIT TO DON IN 1750.

ne peculiarly interesting documents illustraf the history of the time having been dis-d among the Stuart Papers, which are now process of arrangement at Windsor, under perintendence of Mr. Woodward, the Queen's ian, Her Majesty "was pleased to command o make them publicly known, considering to be too valuable a contribution to the knowledge of our history at that time to until the Calendar of the Stuart Papers
l be published." Acting upon this com-Mr. Woodward has printed them in The in a communication which appeared in Journal on the 27th ult., and I venture to you will transfer to "N. & Q." the following sting extract from it, and will consider its et a sufficient excuse for its length. Let me observe (which Mr. Woodward has not cond it necessary to notice), that the first of documents, the "Remarks" on the Comm, were obviously added to it at a subse-period.

ne first of these papers is a copy of a 'Manifesto,' 1745, and addressed by the Prince to Scotland. It is appended to a 'commission' from his father, dated in 1743. At the end of it we find some 'remarks,' one of which is this:—

"8ly. To mention my religion (which is) of the Church of England as by law established, as I have declared myself when in London the year 1750."

"The next three are memoranda for letters or reports in the Prince's handwriting—the first two written on torn scraps of paper; the third, on a thin card.

"Parted ye 2d Sept. Arrived to A[ntwerp] ye 6th, parted from thence ye 12th Sept. E[ngland] ye 14th, and at L[ondon] ye 16th. Parted from L[ondon] ye 22d, and arrived at P[aris] ye 24th. From P[aris] parted ye 28th, arrived here ye 30th Sept. If she dos not come, and yr M. agreed on to send bac for yr Letter and Procuration; ye House here of P. C. and her being either a tretor or a hour, to chuse which, not to send to P. even after her coming, unless in absolute neces-sity, or her requiring it then at her dor."

Verso. "The letter to Godie retarded a post, ye Lady being arrived or her retard to be Little if she is true stille."

"Ye 5th Sept., O. S., 1750, arrived; ye 11th, parted to D[over]: ye 12, in ye morning, parted and arrived at B[oulogne]: and ye 13th at P[aris].
N. S., ye 16th Sept., ye 22d, 23d, and 24th.

"Either ill counsiled or She has made a Confidence. Mr. Lorain's being here ye 12th Sept.
Mr. Duran his disceores to amuse not having to do with anybody but ye Lady, and Mr. Lisle's not marrieeng, or appearing: to go ye same day with ye King, speking to W. ye last day.

"Md. II. here this six weeks."

Verso. "The Vignion for W., and letters K and L, the money and adresses. (In pencil, "The money for Dormer.")

"Je ne puis pas envoie pour ne pas doner du subson et si j'envoi pas je done encore."

"The last sentence, notwithstanding its bad French, is clearly indicative of the Prince's growing hopelessness in his own cause:—

"Lux. Novemr. ye 26th. Mrs. Tomson. Ye
P.M. is the best time for me to go. Rue Verneuil, visavi La Rue Ste. Marie faug. St. Germin, Ju.
Waters. . . . ye Ordonances; ye Lady; my being a Republican: Sr. J. Grenis [Graham's] being sent; Sr. J. Stuard; ye Envoy of P.[russia?]
at Lu.; Charles Smit; Mr. Illeborn [Hepburn]; my resons of Declaring myself a Protestant at ye age of 30ty. my being at London ye yr. 50ty. K.
of P[russia's?] uniform for to go Lu. ye 50 Louidors for Ca: Kely: Wm. Murray," &c.

* In The Times this was erroneously printed R. S., which gave rise to an opinion that there was a discrepancy in the dates. But it will be seen that the difference is only that of eleven days, the difference between the Old and New Styles.

"On the verso of the card are some memoranda of money matters, and the date 'ye 21st March, 1754.'

"The letter now to be given contains neither date nor signature; but I think the name of the writer (evidently a Scotchman) will be ascertained from a comparison of the writing and with other papers of the same period. The date is approximately determinable as 1769 or 1770, from the references to the death of the Chevalier de St. George (the Old Pretender) and to the flight of Miss Walkinshaw with their child. The proposal to repudiate the National Debt is very curious and amusing:—

"It was most certainly a very great affront and Injury done to the Prince to carry from him his Daughter, that behoved to be a fine amusement to Him in his solitary way of living, while still expecting better Times.

"When He Discovers Him that acted it, or had a share in the Crime, He or they should be punished, tho' with much goodness, to imitate our great Creator. In the meantime it should not be resented to His own Disadvantage, or that of his most sincere Well Wishers, but a proper time waited when it can be done more effectually. If his Majesty had any share in it, It can be imputed to nothing else than a wrong principle in his Religion, and ought therefore to be heartily forgiven, and a good Understanding fully re-establish'd. It must be a great Loss to His Royal Highness and all true subjects to have the intercourse betwixt Him and them intirely cutt off by his Resolution of so strict a Retirement which they most earnestly wish and beg He would change to their Vast Comfort; and it is the greatest Glory of a man to forgive an Injury. I hear'd more than three years ago, That the Prince (upon the King's Death) was resolved to goe to Rome, of which I took no notice, having heard long before, That he said That He would never return to Rome. It is most earnestly Wished That He would be so good as Change his intention of goeing there, if He ever had it. It may happen That his Affairs in Britain might be at the Crisis in his favours at the time he was there, which could not fail to make a very bad turn, even with his friends upon hearing it. But how would his Enemies Triumph and be Overjoyed. Yea, his best Wishers might justly believe. That he was not fully settled in his principles of religion, which being the same with their Own, gave them the best grounds to believe, That they would get Him safely settled on the Throne of his Fathers, as there was no other possible objection against Him But upon his being there, they might suspect; That He was resolved at the bottom to continue in his Father's Principles of Religion. Besides if He should go there and retain his present Opinion He might be exposed to great Hazards amidst a People so bigotted to a different way of thinking, and Its not to be Doubted but they would contrive something against Him, at least to disappoint Him of the Desire he had for goeing, and whatever View He has, It is not to be compared with the gaining the Crowns of Scotland, England, and Ireland; But not to pry into what the Desire of his Journey may be He is sure to Obtain it more easily when he is possessed of these Crowns. [turn over

"The Present State of Britain is in a very Unsettled way, Their Vast Load of Debt must Ruin them, And they have no other way to get Clear of it but by settling the Royal Family on the Throne, When One Act of Parliament will Discharge It, As having been contracted to Exclude and keep them from their Just Right, and Those who suffer will have themselves only to blame, tho' These who shall be reduced to great Indigence by this Act, can from time to time, be provided so as to live, they and their Familys in a Comfortable Way. Every Reasonable Man would approve of this Conduct, as the most effectual Beacon against new Usurpation; But If the Debts should be annulled during the Present Usurpation, It would bring an Indelible Ignominy upon the whole Nation.

"I most sincerely wish his Royal Highness would frequently correspond with his Friends in Britain: And if He would allow me to his Presence I would Beg on my Knees That He would never goe to Rome on any Account Whatever.

"This is from a faithfull Subject who does not want five months, of being seventy two years of age Compleat."

"I append the following fragments, which are of the class which Lord Stanhope has printed, as 'Lays of the Last Stuart.' If they do not illustrate the poetical genius of the Prince, they show, I think, that he was negatively sincere in his profession of Protestantism. They occur among the numerous scraps of paper on which he was accustomed to scribble memoranda of every conceivable kind:—

"Papish, Irish, such is fools,

"Such as them Cant be my Tools."

"I hate all priests, and the regions they rein in,
"from the pope at Rome to the papists of Britain."

"And to this he has added a couplet from Rochester's well-known poem, which similarly illustrates his being a 'Republican':—

"I hate all Kings and the Throns they sit on,
"From the Director of France to the Culia [Cully] of B[ritain]."

"Vice versa at present," he adds, which seems to show that he appreciated the difference between the wretched Louis XV. and our valorous George II., who certainly were 'vice versa' to Louis XIV. and Charles II. in Rochester's time."

Thus far Mr. Woodward. Let me add that this visit to London is confirmed by Dr. King, in his well-known Anecdotes of his Own Time, and in a very striking manner by the interesting Diaries of a Lady of Quality, recently published under the editorship of Mr. Hayward, where we read, on the authority of the lady's brother, Mr. Charles W. W. Wynn, not only that the Young Pretender was in England in 1750, and then conformed to the Church of England, but that such conforming took place at St. James's, Piccadilly.

"My grandmother often repeated to me the account which she had herself received from Lady Primrose of Charles Edward's visit to London in 1750 (a letter from the historian Hume to Sir J. Pringle, published in the Genesius's Magazine, May 1788, relating the same incident, assigns to this visit the date 1753).^{*} She described her consternation when Mr. Browne (the name under which he was to go) was announced to her in the midst of a card party, among whom were many who she felt might have seen him abroad and would very probably recognise him. Her ears almost dropped from her hands, but she recovered herself, and got him out of the room as quickly as she could. He slept at her house that night only, and afterwards went to that of a merchant in the city. The impression he left on the mind of Lady Primrose, a warm and attached partisan, was by no means favourable. I have read myself among the Stuart papers a minute of the heads of a manifesto in Charles Edward's own handwriting, among which appeared, 'My having in the year 1750 conformed to the Church of England in St. James's Church.' Some idea may be formed of the extent of the panic felt at the time of his advance to Derby from the account given by an old workman at Wotton, of his having at that period assisted in burying by night all the family plate in the garden.—C. W. W. W."

One word more. Would the books of St. James's Church record the "conforming" of "Mr. Browne?" As the search would necessarily be limited to five days, namely, between the 16th and 22nd Sept., 1750, Old Style, it is to be hoped some reader of "N. & Q.," who may have the opportunity of examining the Registers at St. James's, will do so, and give us the result of his inquiries. T. P.

SCOTTISH HISTORICAL GOSSIP.

I do not know that the Dalkeith portrait of Claverhouse has ever been copied, engraved, or photographed; but I cannot agree with F. M. S. (3^d S. vi. 472) that it is the only one that does Dundee justice, when I recollect those at the Lee and Milton-Lockhart. At the latter place, Claverhouse's most interesting portrait hangs over ^{} Hume speaks of a second visit on the authority of Lord Holderness, and adds, 'You see this story is so near traced from the fountain-head as to wear a great trace of probability. Query, what if the Pretender had taken up Dryock's gauntlet?' Miss Strickland, in her Life of Mary II., says, 'This incident has been told as a gossip's tale pertaining to every coronation of the last century which took place while an heir of James II. existed. If it ever took place, it must have been at the coronation of William and Mary. That there was a pause at this part of the ceremony of above two hours, and that when the champion appeared the gauntlet was heard to be thrown, but nothing that was done could be seen on account of the darkness of the evening, all this rests upon the authority of Lamberty, the historian and diplomatist.'

Allan's picture of the Murder of Archbishop Sharp, which arrangement led to the following lines being written:—

"On Graham the Avenger.

"What, tho' the bigots of our own more peaceful times
May paint thee still a monster stained with crimes,
Breathes there a man unwarped by party lore,
Could hear that struggling orphan pour
To deafened ears her agonizing prayers
For mercy on that old man's silver hairs,
Nor feel they had earned the avenging rod,
Who sold their king, and slew the priests of God?"

This allusion to the sale of the king by the Scotch army reminds me to call attention to the extraordinary blunders in regard to its constitution, and the appointment of its officers, published by Mr. Bisset in his Omitted Chapters in the History of England, especially his confounding Lord Loudon, Chancellor of Scotland, with the Laird of Lawers, who commanded a regiment. Mr. Bisset tells us, that the appointment of these officers is "a subject somewhat dark, but after much digging in the rubbish heaps and fossil remains of the Scottish Records, and Scotch peerages and baronages, we obtain some glimpses of light."

Although I could not conceive why our admirably kept records (almost perfect, except where they were taken away from us by Edward I. and Cromwell), should be called "rubbish heaps, and fossil remains" more than those in the English Record Office, still I did hope that on reading further I should have received some new information as to the officers of the Scottish army at the period. Guess my astonishment when I found that the extent of the diggings of this would-be Macaulay was the Douglas Peerage and Baronage, with Sir Walter Scott's Tales of a Grandfather, the latter originally being merely a hasty set of sketches, dashed off to amuse an invalid child, and hurriedly got up as a publication, under the pressure of pecuniary circumstances.

The extent of Mr. Bisset's digging (I should call it scratching) may be estimated by the fact, that he has never consulted such an obvious source of information as "The Books of Reference in the Reading Room of the British Museum." He would there have found a collection, entitled The Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, published by the Record Commission. Had he done so, he would probably have dropt upon such an entry as this—showing that, although the Earl of Loudon was a Campbell of Lawers, he had nothing to do with the regiment of the Laird Lawers (vol. vi. p. 415):—

"At Edinburgh, the 9th day of March, in the year of God 1649. The which day was presented and produced in face of Parliament, in name and behalf of Colonel James Campbell, son to the late Colonel Sir Mungo Campbell of Lawers, one particular list and roll of persons from whom money is to be borrowed; which, being heard read, the Estates ordain the same to be submitted by the Lord Chancellor, and have remitted the same to the Committee to be appointed for borrowed monies."

This document is endorsed: "Produced by the Laird of Laweris, and remitted to the Committee." Signed, "LOVDOUN CANCEL. I.P.D.P."

In fact, there are numerous entries in this volume of the Acts of Scotland; as for instance, the Petition of Colonel James Campbell of Laweris, p. 360. The List of Colonels, p. 389, contains the name of Col. Colline Campbell, of Laweris, as commander of the Foot, raised in Linlithgowshire. But it would be endless to continue; suffice it to say, that these Acts of Parliament contain the most complete information as to officers in command of regiments in the Scottish service.

I would further ask, on what authority Mr. Bisset founds his assertion, that any one of our Scotch families sets up a pedigree, commencing at the flood?

My old Milton-Lockhart recollections lead me also to take this opportunity of correcting an error in another book, which I approach in a totally different spirit than the senseless and coarse abuse of Scotland contained in the Omitted Chapters of the History of England. To Mrs. Gordon all Scotchmen, and especially those who, like myself, had the good fortune to be pupils of her father, owe a deep debt of gratitude for her admirable Memoir of Professor Wilson. There are, however, spots in the sun; as the following passage in her work (vol. ii. p. 94, note) is calculated to give an erroneous idea of the character of my old friend John Gibson Lockhart, and is an instance how a literary anecdote may lose its point in passing from hand to hand.

"On a later occasion Mr. Lockhart amused himself, in a similar manner, by appending to a paper on Lord Robertson's Poems, in the Quarterly Review, the following epitaph:—

* Here lies the peerless paper Peer, Lord Peter,
Who broke the laws of God and man, and metre."

These lines were, however, only in one copy, which was sent to the Senator [of the College of Justice]; but the joke lay in Lord Robertson imagining that it was in the whole edition."

The article in the Quarterly Review on Lord Robertson's Poems (vol. lxxvi. p. 424), commences:—

"This is a very pleasing, as well as a beautiful little volume;" and concludes, "we should ill-discharge, even our critical duty, if we omitted the praise so justly due to the amiable tone which in the little volume before us is constantly perceived. The sound good sense and purely moral feeling of the learned and ingenious author is not more remarkable than the tenderness of heart which everywhere shines through his verses."

Into an article with such a heading and such a conclusion it is of course needless to say that a sarcastic epitaph like the above could not be dovetailed with any chance of a successful hoax. The real facts of the case were as follows:—Lord Robertson and John Lockhart met in the autumn of 1845 at the hospitable table of William Lockhart of Milton-Lockhart, the brother of the editor of the Quarterly. His lordship, better known as Peter Robertson, had, as is not unusual, under the mass of jocularity and even buffoonery which attaches to his memory, a deep underlying current of sentiment, which first broke out in the conclusion of his well-known speech in defence of the Glasgow cotton spinners. On being raised to the Bench, he published a small book of sentimental poems entitled Leaves from a Journal and other Fragments in Verse. When on this occasion he visited Milton-Lockhart, he had become aware that this brochure was to be reviewed in the December Number of the Quarterly for 1845, and tried all he could to get out of Lockhart the nature of the forthcoming critique, but without success. The next morning after breakfast, Lord Robertson renewed the attack, when J. G. Lockhart, after tantalising him for some time, walked over to the table in the oriel window, where there were always writing materials, scribbled a few words, and returning said, "Peter, you have been trying all you can to find out what the Quarterly is going to say about your poems. You know that it is against all rule for me to tell you; but as you are an old friend, I will give you the epitaph with which it concludes, from which you may judge of the general tone."

Of course Robertson was too shrewd a man not to know that the critique was favourable, and after lunch he and John Lockhart started in the highest spirits to dine with another old friend and distinguished literary character, at whose house the Quarterly having come of age. . . . "Every thing would be on the scale of the greatest magnificence, and an author roasted whole." (See Quarterly Review, vol. lxxvi. p. 247.)

(GEORGE VERE IRVINE.)

REGIMENTAL BADGES.

Many years since my lamented friend, the late Colonel Thomas Sidney Powell, C.B., 53rd regiment, placed in my hands the following letter, which must interest your numerous military readers. The author holds the rank of Major-General in the British army, and served with Colonel Powell in the 6th, or Royal 1st Warwickshire Regiment of Infantry. I feel certain that he shares with me my sorrow at the murder of Colonel Powell by the mutinous sepoys, in India, on the first of November, 1857:—

"Mr. Cannon, in his Records of the Sixth Regiment of Infantry, states that, 'Tradition has connected the King William the Third gave 'The Lion of Nassau' to the Eighteenth, or Royal Irish, regiment; and the Twenty-first and Twenty-seventh Regiments received appropriate badges as national corps. This seems to be the principle, as far as I can judge.—J. ff. C."

This letter was written in 1851. JUVENA.

PEMBROKE COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Wishing to test the current accounts of a certain incomparable pair of brethren, successively lords chamberlain of the royal household, and chancellors of the university of Oxford, I had recourse to a semi-official periodical work in high repute—whence I transcribe the paragraph which follows:—

"PEMBROKE COLLEGE. This college, originally Broadgates Hall, was founded in the year 1624, by king James the first, at the costs and charges of Thomas Tisdale, esquire, of Glympton in Oxfordshire, and Richard Wightwick, B.D., rector of Hales, Berks, for a master, ten fellows, and ten scholars, or more or fewer; and obtained its name from Philip Herbert, earl of Pembroke, who was chancellor of the university when it was founded."

More than suspicious of this accredited guide, with regard to one part of the information which he gives, I consulted a guide who wrote two centuries before him, and published his curious volume with academic sanction. It is entitled Academia Oxoniensis notitia. Oxoniæ, typis W. H. Innesis R. Davis, 1665.—and calls for another extract:—

"COLLEGIUM PEMBROCHIANUM. Collegium quod hodie Pembrochianum audit, olim Latarum Portarum Aula dicta est. Cum vero Thomas Tisdale, etc.* * * Collegium ibi loci instituendum concessit Jacobus rex; quod in honorem D. Guilielmi Herbert, Pembrochiæ comitis, Academiae tunc temporis cancellarii, Pembrochianum appellari visum est."

The author of this anonymous tract was William Fulman; ob. 1688. The copy in my hands was formerly in the collection of Alexander Chalmers, and subsequently in that of the learned and estimable Philip Bliss—who records an edition of 1675.

Now, as to the modern guide, I presume to make two observations, 1. William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, was chancellor of the university of Oxford from 1616-17 to 1630; 2. Philip Herbert, who was created earl of Montgomery in 1605, was elected steward of the university in 1615; but he did not become earl of Pembroke till the death of his brother in 1630, nor did he obtain the chancellorship before the resignation of archbishop Laud in 1641. (Camden, Annales Jacobi I.; Antony Wood, History, etc. by Gutch; Laud, Autobiography.)

Do the members of Pembroke ever condescend to examine The Oxford university calendar? Seldom, I conceive—for the error now pointed out has been in existence for twice-seven years!

BOLTON CORNEY.

Barnes, S.W.

ROPE-TYING.—There is a passage in the life of Apollonius of Tyana which has a curious bearing on the performances of the Brothers Davenport. Apollonius, according to Lucian, was a skilful magician, and made a profession of it; but his biographer, Philostratus, portrays him as a philosopher, with the power of performing miracles. I have not access to the original: but, in Tillemont's Life of Apollonius Tyaneus, which is compiled from Philostratus, it is stated that, being imprisoned by the Emperor Domitian—

"whilst he was in chains he assured Damis, his pupil, who followed him into prison, that Domitian could do him no hurt. And, to show him what he could do, he freed his leg from the chain which was fastened about it, and then put his leg into the chain again."

Tillemont quotes this from Philostratus, Vita Apoll. Tyani., c. xv. pp. 366, 367. Apollonius had visited India, and professed to have acquired much of his skill amongst the Brahmans.

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

"COOPER."—The following passage from Every Day Papers by Andrew Halliday, Lond. 1864, ii. 257, explains the origin of this mixture of stout and porter:—

"Some brewers, who are jealous for the reputation of their beer, employ a traveller, who visits the houses periodically, and tastes the various beers, to see that they are not reduced too much. This functionary is called the Broad Cooper. When the Broad Cooper looks in upon Mr. Noggins, and wants to taste the porter, and the porter is below the mark, Mr. Noggins slyly draws a dash of stout into it. And this trick is so common and so well known, that a mixture of stout and porter has come to be known to the public and asked for by the name of 'Cooper.'"

T. C.

DUCHESS OF QUEENSBURY.—Walpole, in his Letter to Montagu of May 18, 1749, describing an entertainment given by the Duke and Duchess of Richmond, speaks of this eccentric lady "in her forlorn trim—a white apron and a white hood; and would make the Duke swallow all her undress." Upon which the editor has the following note:—

"There is a good caricature of the Duchess in this costume fencing with Soubise, the black; whom she educated and indulged in extravagance, till he got so much in debt, that she was obliged to send him to India. The first Marquis of Townshend made the drawings, aided by one Austen a drawing-master."

As this note is not reproduced in the last edition, I may give it a corner in "N. & Q." for the use of caricature collectors and future Walpoleans.
D. O.

A LONDON BOOK-AUCTION, 1698.—The following extract, from A Journey to London in the Year 1698, "written originally in French by Monsieur Sorbier, and newly translated into English," London, 1699, p. 23, may prove interesting and suggestive:—

"I was at an auction of books, at Tom's Coffee House, near Ludgate, where were above fifty people. Books were sold with a great deal of trifling and delay, as with us, but very cheap; those excellent authors, Mounseur Maimbourg, Mounseur Varillas, and Mounseur le Grand, tho' they were all guilt [sic] on the back, and would have made a very considerable figure in a gentleman's study, yet after much tediousness were sold for such trifling sums, that I am ashamed to name 'em."

The book from which I quote, is rather curious, being "after the ingenuous method" of Dr. Martin Lister's Journey to Paris in 1698, of which, as I understand, an excellent notice may be found in the Retrospective Review, xiii. 95—109.

ABHBA.

JOHNSONIANA.—There are many phrases and peculiar expressions in current use in this present nineteenth century, which, we flatter ourselves, are of recent invention; but which may, nevertheless, be traced back to the sturdy old lexicographer. One of these comes across me as I turn over some of Boswell's "magnetic" pages. The Doctor is writing to console his friend Dr. Lawrence on the loss of his wife, and uses the following magnificent language:—

"He that outlives a wife whom he has long loved, sees himself disjoined from the only mind that has the same hopes, and fears, and interest; from the only companion with whom he has shared much good or evil: and with whom he could set his mind at liberty to retrace the past, or anticipate the future. The continuity of being is lacerated," &c.

My remark applies to the phrase "continuity of anything." I apprehend this to have been perfectly new at the time it was used: one, in fact, of Johnson's own creating. It is of great force and elegance; but, if I mistake not, nine out of ten would look on it as a Gallicism of our own day. In French physical works, we continually read of a "solution of continuity" instead of a break, &c. This query, therefore, arises: Has any French author so used the word continuity before Johnson? Or, can any French author be supposed indebted to Johnson for it?

PHILOLOGUS.

AMERICAN DEPRECIATION OF CURRENCY.—In December, 1779, and in the state of Maryland, an English officer (one of the convention troops) received an innkeeper's bill which, in his Travel (Aubury, ii. 492), he has printed in full length, amounting in paper money to 732*l.*; and this bill he paid in gold with four guineas and a half (Mahon's England, vi. 416). In other words, the Englishman paid a debt of 155*l.* to an American with the value of one sovereign. At this time General Washington said, "A waggon-load of money will now scarcely purchase a waggon-load of provisions." It is just now an interesting question to Americans, "Who lost the difference between 732*l.* and 4*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*?"

T. J. BUCKTON.

"TURNING THE TABLES."—Instead of considering this proverb, or saying, as a metaphor taken from the vicissitudes of fortune between two opponents at a gaming-table, or backgammon (as suggested to MINGLI in the Notice to Correspondents, 3rd S. vi. 140), its origin, I am disposed to believe, may be traced to a passage in Pliny. During the Augustan age, the Romans expended inordinate sums of money on tables made of the most costly materials: of ivory, gold, silver, marble, and highly-prized woods. The citrus-wood, the produce of the forests of Mount Atlas (Plin. iii. c. 29) became at one period the most valued and attractive material for the purpose. These tables were denominated Tigrine, or Pantherine, from the spots of the grain—the lines of which also resembled, at times, the eyes of a peacock's tail: "patronum caudæ oculos" (Plin. loc. cit. c. 31). The price of a single table equalled a Senator's income (Seneca, De Benef., vii. 9, p. 136). Cicero, notwithstanding his comparatively moderate means, gave no less than one million sesterces—about 9,000*l.* sterling (Plin. loc. cit. c. 29). And the sale for its weight in gold, of one belonging to Ptolemæus, King of Mauretania, proves Martial's Epigram to be no exaggeration:—

* Accipe felices, Atlantica munera, sylvas:
Aurea si dederit dona, minora dabit."—xiv. 89.

* This citrus table Mount Atlas sends to thee,
Were it of pure gold, the gift far less would be."

"Mensarum insanire," observes Pliny, "quas femine iris contra margaritas regerunt." Wives, when reproached for extravagance in pearls, revert the table-mania (that is, turn the tables,) on their husbands." W. PLATT.

Conservative Club.

Queries.

RICHARD SACKVILLE, EARL OF DORSET.

This somewhat celebrated lord appears to have included in his great extravagance the buying of costly books, and he had in his library some in very expensive binding, one of which is in my possession, and I am desirous of ascertaining where seven of its early companions are? It is a large folio, —

"Works of Seneca. Printed by Wm. Stansby, dwelling in Thames-Street, by Paul's-Wharfe, next to St. Peter's Church. 1620."

containing about 950 pages, spotless as new, gilt edges, bound in red silk velvet, impressed on both sides of the cover with the letters R^E D about an inch long, stamped in solid gilding. On a fly-leaf is written the following note:—

[* This explanation of the saying was suggested in our 1st S. iii. 276.—ED.]

"R^E D stand for Richard Earle of Dorset, whose Book this formerly was, and by his daughter, Margaret Countess Dowager of Thanet (together with seven other books, all of the same binding), was since left as part of her legacy to me. 1676."

(Signed with a monogram formed of the letters C and H, surmounted with a Viscount's coronet, neatly outlined.)

The date refers to the year when the Dowager Countess of Thanet died, Christopher Lord Hatton not being created a Viscount until 1682.

Richard Earl of Dorset died 1624. He was the first husband of the more celebrated Anne Clifford, Countess of Dorset, Pembroke, and Montgomery. Their daughter, Lady Margaret Sackville, married, 1620, John Tufton, Earl of Thanet, and died his widow August 14, 1676. Her daughter, Lady Cecilia Tufton, was the first wife of Christopher, second Baron Hatton, and afterwards Viscount Hatton. Margaret, Countess Dowager of Thanet, by her will, dated June 20, 1676, proved at Doctors' Commons (Bence, 106), gives to her daughter, the Lady Anne Grimstone, her jewels, pictures, coins, china, and books of what sort soever, —

"except only my eight books, bound with red velvet, and marked with the letters R. E. D., which were formerly my father's, Richard Earl of Dorset."

She afterwards says, —

"I give to my son-in-law, the Lord Hatton, 1697; and also my said eight books, covered with red velvet, and marked with the letters R. E. D."

The death of her daughter, Lady Cecilia Hatton, was a dreadful event. Her husband and his family were residing, when he was governor of Guernsey, 1672, at Cornet Castle, in Guernsey. The magazine of powder was fired in the night by lightning; the lady and several of her women were blown into the sea and killed. Lord Hatton was blown through the window of his bedroom upon the ramparts of the castle, but he and his children received little injury. One of the children, an infant, was found the next day alive, sleeping in its cradle under a beam. Aubrey, the antiquary, tells a remarkable story, how "the Countess of Thanet saw, as she was in bed in London (the candle then burning in her chamber), the apparition of her daughter, my Lady Hatton," ... "who was then in Northamptonshire," so that it must have been sometime before this catastrophe.

It is probable that on the death of Viscount Hatton, 1706, the eight volumes went to the Finch family, Anne Hatton, only surviving child of Cecilia Lady Hatton, having married Daniel Finch, Earl of Nottingham, from whom descended the Earls of Nottingham and Winchelsea.

RICHD. ALMACK.

Melford, Suffolk.

THE BLUE COAT SCHOOL.

From a letter in the State Paper Office (now the Record Office) it would appear probable that that celebrated and excellent foundation, the "Blue Coat School," owes its preferment to Dudley, Duke of Northumberland—a fact that I have not seen stated by any writer. The letter runs thus:—

John Dudley, Earl of Warwick, to Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Cecil, 1st Feby. 1547-8.

"After my right hartie commendacions thies may be to require you to gyve credyte to this berer, my servunt; who shall at length shew you th' affect of this my sending at this tyme, which ys at the instant sute and request of certeyn of my neyghors concerning the preferment of a certeyn free scole, wherin sondry poore folkes hath also theyr fyndyng, that they may opteyn my Lorde's grace* good favor for the preferment therof, which they wold styll kepe in the same foundation. Wherin his grace shall do (in myn opynyon) a right charitable act, and your furderunce herin shalbe by theym honestly conydyerd.

"So I byde you for this tyme hartely farewell. At Ely Place this fyrste of February, An^o 1547. [1547-8.]

"Your Loving frend, J. WARWYK.

"To my loving frende, Mr. Cicell."

Holinshed speaks of the "Earl of Warwick's lodging, which was then at Ely Place, in Holborn." Stow, in his Survey of London, speaks of the "Bishop of Ely's Inn, commonly called Ely Place, as it pertaineth to the Bishops of Ely." Dudley's letters, while he was Earl of Warwick, were dated from Ely Place. The Serjeants-at-Law held their feasts in this house. At one of them, held in 1531, Henry VIII. and Queen Katherine dined there with the foreign ambassadors, Lord Mayor, judges, aldermen, citizens, merchants, and the "Crafts of London." Stow relates that this feast continued for five days.

At the same time that Christ's Hospital was founded, St. Thomas's Hospital was established for the relief of the sick. Bridewell also, built by Henry VIII., was appropriated "for the correction and amendment of the vagabond and lewd: provision also being made that the decayed house-keeper should receive weekly parochial relief."

In connection with this is a very curious letter from Ridley, Bishop of London, preserved among the Lansdowne MSS., in the British Museum:†—

"To the righte Woorshipfull Sr William Cecil, Knighte, One of the Principall Secretaries unto the Kinges Maistie.

"Good Mr Cecil, I muste be a suter unto you in our Master Christe's cause, I beseeche you, be good unto him. The matter is, Syr, Alas, he hath lyen to too long abroad (as you do knowe) wthout Lodginge, in the Stretes of London, both hungrie, naked, and colde. Now thanks be unto all mightie God, the Citizens are willinge to refresh him and to geave him, both meate, drinke, clothinge, and fyreinge. But Alas, Sr, they lacke Lodginge for him; for in some one howse, I dare saie, they are faine to lodge Thre families under one Roffe.

"Sr, there is a wide Large emptie howse of the Kinges Majesties, called BRIDEWELL, that would wonderfullie well serve to lodge Christe in, if he mighte finde suche good Freindes in the Courte, to procure in his cause. Suerlie I have suche a good opinion in the Kinges Ma^{tie}, that if Christe had suche faithfull and hartie freindes, that would hartely speake for him, he should undoubtedlie speede at the Kinges Ma^{tie} handes. Syr, I have promised my Brethren the Citizens in this matter to move you, because I doo take you for one that feareth God, and would that Christe should lye no more abroad in the Strete. There is a Rumor, that one goeth aboute to buy that howse of the Kinges Ma^{tie}, and to pull it downe, if there be any suche thinge, for Gode's sake, speake you in or Master's cause. I have written unto Mr Gates more at large in this matter. I joyne you wth him, and all that love and looke for Christe's finall Benediccon on the latter daie. If Mr Cheke (in whose recoverie God be blessed) were amanges you, I would suerlie make him in this behaulf, one of Christe's speciall Advocates, or rather one of his principall Proctor, and suerlie I would not be aida nay. And thus I wishe you in Christe ev^{er} well to Fare.

"From my howse at Fulham, this presente Sondaye, beinge the xxixth daie of Majj, 1553.

"Yours in Christ,

NIC. LONDON."

"I pra yow suffer the beror hearof to talk ij or iij wordes wth yow in this cause."

Nicholas Ridley was translated, by Edw. VI., from the Bishopric of Rochester to that of London, April 1, 1550. Edward died July 6, 1553, only five weeks after Ridley's letter was written. On the accession of Mary, Ridley was deprived and burnt to death by her orders, October 16, 1555.

Can any of the readers of "N. & Q." furnish any further light on the subject? G. A.

Barnsbury.

[The letter of the Earl of Warwick, we are inclined to think, does not relate to the foundation of Christ's Hospital; but may refer to a projected school at the Charter House, at this time the property of the Earl (afterwards created Duke of Northumberland). In 1542 the Charter-House was granted by Henry VIII. to John Brydges and Thomas Hale for their joint lives; and, in 1545, to Sir Edward, afterwards Lord North. This nobleman sold it to the Earl of Warwick, who being afterwards attainted of treason, it reverted again to the Crown. On a copy of the Letters Patent of Queen Mary, granting for the second time the Charter-House to Lord North, is the following memorandum:—"There is enrolled a grant from the Queene [Mary] unto Sir Edward Northe, of the scite of the House or Priory of the Carthuse, within mencōned to be granted by these Lres patentees of 36 Henry VIII., and of the gardens, gates, conduyts, and other things within mencōned, and in the said Lties patents of 1 Marie specified to come to the Crowne by the attaynder of John, Duke of Northumberland. See it seemeth that Sir Edward North, after the grant thereof to him, 36 Henr. VIII., did sele or conveye the same to the Duke of Northumberland; who afterwards being attaynted of treason for rebellion, the pmisses thereby came to the Crowne agayn at the begynning of Queene Mary's reigne, who granted the same agayn to Sir Edward Northe, with the same libertyes as are mencōned in this of 36 Henr. VIII."

In 1550 Ridley was translated from Rochester to London: and both in the council-chamber and the pulpit, he boldly resisted the sacrilegious spirit of his day. Although the young king [Edward VI.] was but partially able to stem the torrent of corruption, he yet founded (according to Carlisle) at the suggestion of Ridley, no less than sixteen grammar-schools, and designed, had his life been spared, to erect twelve colleges for the education of youth. It was shortly before the death of Edward, that Ridley preached his famous Sermon, in which he so strongly pressed the duty of providing for the poverty and ignorance of the lower classes, and which eventually led to the foundation of Christ's Hospital, Bridewell, and St. Thomas's. The greater portion of the Bishop's letter furnished by our correspondent has already appeared in Gleaner Ridley's Life of Bishop Ridley, p. 377, 4to, 1763; in Strype's Stour, p. 169; and in Trollope's History of Christ's Hospital, p. 37.]

* Protector Somerset.

† Lansdowne MSS., vol. iii.

MR. BASKETT. — One of the persons to whom the authorship of The Whole Duty of Man has been attributed, was a Mr. Baskett, who, I believe, was the clergyman of some place in Worcestershire.* Is there any biographical or other notice of him to be met with in any magazine or other publication? L.L.A.L.W.G.

BEDSTEAD SUPERSTITION. — Having ordered a neatly constructed single bedstead, with somewhat high and ornamented sides, I was surprised when it was brought home to find that the ornamentation of one side of the bedstead was not repeated on the opposite side, it being in fact quite plain. I expressed my surprise and dissatisfaction to the maker; saying that, when the bedstead was placed with its head against the wall of a room, the sides then showing will appear quite unlike—one ornamented, and the other plain. At this, the maker expressed his surprise that I should be ignorant of a German custom and prejudice: "for," says he, "in Germany single bedsteads are only placed sideways against a wall, or partition; and only removed from this position, and placed with its head against the wall, to receive a dead body." And the worthy maker assured me that nowhere in Germany could a native be induced to sleep on a single bedstead which had not its side placed against a wall, or partition. The same objection does not hold against placing two single bedsteads side by side, with their heads against a wall. It is possible that this German custom has already a place in "N. & Q.;" although, in a hasty looking over of my set, I did not find it. Does the custom, with prejudice, obtain in other countries? The custom I think does, but not the prejudice—at least, not in England or America. W.

Frankfurt-am-Main.

BERNARDINO. — In the preface to Specimens and Notes on Living English Authors, Boston, 1846, the author says that the early English poets were indifferent about originality: —

* A clergyman of Somersetshire, according to Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, ii. 604.—E.D.]

"Chaucer invented little or nothing; Shakspeare borrowed nearly all his plot, and helped himself freely to all the language which was worth taking; and Ben Jonson took two-thirds of his Catiline and Sejanus from Sallust and Tacitus, and his Alchemist and Volpone from Bernardino."—P. vi.

I shall be obliged by information as to Bernardino and his works, which have been so named. E. S.

SIR RICHARD BRAHAM. — Can any of your correspondents give me the exact date of the death of Sir Richard Braham, M.P. for Windsor in the reign of Charles II.? He was created a baronet 1662, and described of New Windsor; but dying without issue, his title became extinct. Tighe and Davis, in their Annals of Windsor, mention a payment toward his funeral expences; but they entirely omit, in their list of M.P.'s for that borough, the election that was caused by his decease. I find, from a MS. document in his handwriting, Sir Francis Winnington, then Solicitor-General, was returned M.P. for Windsor, Feb. 19, 1676; and sat during the remainder of the then existing Parliament. Browne Willis also, in his Notitia Parliamentaria, omits this return.

THOS. E. WINNINGTON.

Stanford Court, Worcester.

CARYLL FAMILY. — Did any member of the Caryll family of Harting settle in South Brent, Devon? If so, when? Did he leave any descendants? What are the armorial bearings of this family? CARILFORD.

Cape Town, S. A.

THE PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF BRUNSWICK. — I lately read one of the most fascinating and delightful works I ever had the good fortune to meet with, in which genius, goodness, and beauty meet together in the happiest combination, showing the additional charm of an historical basis—Too Strange not to be True, by Lady G. Fullerton: who, by the way, also wrote, many years ago, one of the most disagreeable books I ever read, at once clever and repulsive, viz. Ellen Middleton. Lady Fullerton mentions that the germ of her strange romance of history was a sketch published by the late Lord Dover, in the Keepsake of 1833, entitled "Vicissitudes in the Life of a Princess of the House of Brunswick." I was speaking of Lady Fullerton's book, the other day, to a lady who had just read it; and she told me she read the strange story of the Princess Charlotte, worked up into a romance in two volumes, between the years 1810—1820. My informant could not remember the title, nor the author's name distinctly; but she said it was a name like Holcroft, Hoffmann, or Holford, and added that the same writer had published some German tales. I observed, that Mrs. Holford had written a book called Czarina, in 3 vols.; but my friend replied,

THE BLUE COAT SCHOOL.

From a letter in the State Paper Office (now the Record Office) it would appear probable that that celebrated and excellent foundation, the "Blue Coat School," owes its preferment to Dudley, Duke of Northumberland—a fact that I have not seen stated by any writer. The letter runs thus:—

John Dudley, Earl of Warwick, to Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Cecil, 1st Feby. 1547-8.

"After my right hartie commendacions thies may be to require you to gyve credyte to this berer, my servunt; who shall at length shew you th' affect of this my sending at this tyme, which ys at the instant sute and request of certeyn of my nybors concerning the preferment of a certeyn free scole, wherin sondry poore folkes hath also theyr fyndyng, that they may opteyn my Lorde's grace* good favor for the preferment therof, which they wold styll kepe in the same foundation. Wherin his grace shall do (in myn opynyon) a right charitable act, and your furdurance herin shalbe by theym honestly consydyrd.

"So I byde you for this tyme hartely farewell. At Ely Place this fyrste of February, An^o 1547. [1547-8.]

"Your Loving frend, J. WARWYK.

"To my loving frende, Mr. Cicell."

Holinshed speaks of the "Earl of Warwick's lodging, which was then at Ely Place, in Holborn." Stow, in his Survey of London, speaks of the "Bishop of Ely's Inn, commonly called Ely Place, as it pertaineth to the Bishops of Ely." Dudley's letters, while he was Earl of Warwick, were dated from Ely Place. The Serjeants-at-Law held their feasts in this house. At one of them, held in 1531, Henry VIII. and Queen Katherine dined there with the foreign ambassadors, Lord Mayor, judges, aldermen, citizens, merchants, and the "Crafts of London." Stow relates that this feast continued for five days.

At the same time that Christ's Hospital was founded, St. Thomas's Hospital was established for the relief of the sick. Bridewell also, built by Henry VIII., was appropriated "for the correction and amendment of the vagabond and lewd; provision also being made that the decayed house-keeper should receive weekly parochial relief."

In connection with this is a very curious letter from Ridley, Bishop of London, preserved among the Lansdowne MSS., in the British Museum:†—

"To the right Woorshipfull Sr William Cicill, Knighte, One of the Principall Secretaries unto the Kinges Maiestie.

"Good Mr Cicill, I muste be a suter unto you in our Master Christe's cause, I beseeche you, be good unto him. The matter is, Syr, Alas, he hath lyen to too long abroad (as you do knowe) without Lodginge, in the Stretes of London, both hungrie, naked, and colde. Now thanks be unto all mightie God, the Citizens are willinge to refreshe him and to geave him, both meate, drinke, clothinge, and fyreinge. But Alas, Sr, they lacke Lodginge for him; for in some one howse, I dare saie, they are faine to lodge Thre families under one Roofe.

"Sr, there is a wide Large emptie howse of the Kinges Majesties, called BRIDEWELL, that wold wonderfullie well serve to lodge Christe in, if he mighte finde suche good Freindes in the Courte, to procure in his cause. Suerlie I have suche a good opinion in the Kinges Ma^{ties}, that if Christe had suche faithfull and hartie freindes, that wold hartely speake for him, he should undoubtedlie speede at the Kinges Ma^{ties} handes. Syr, I have promised my Brethren the Citizens in this matter to move you, because I doo take you for one that feareth God, and wold that Christe should lye no more abroad in the Strete. There is a Rumor, that one goeth aboute to buy that howse of the Kinges Ma^{ties}, and to pull it downe, if there be any suche thinge, for Gode's sake, speake you in or Master's cause. I have written unto Mr Gates more at large in this matter. I joyne you wth him, and all that love and looke for Christe's final Benediccon on the latter daie. If Mr Cheke (in whose recoverie God be blessed) were amonges you, I wold suerlie make him in this behaulf, one of Christe's speciall Advocates, or rather one of his principall Proctor, and suerlie I wold not be saide nay. And thus I wishe you in Christe ev^r well to Fare.

"From my howse at Fulham, this presente Sondae, beinge the xxixth daie of Maij, 1553.

"Yours in Christ, NIC. LONDON."

"I pra yow suffer the beror hearof to talk ij or iij wordes wth yow in this cause."

Nicholas Ridley was translated, by Edw. VI., from the Bishopric of Rochester to that of London, April 1, 1550. Edward died July 6, 1553, only five weeks after Ridley's letter was written. On the accession of Mary, Ridley was deprived and burnt to death by her orders, October 16, 1555.

Can any of the readers of "N. & Q." furnish any further light on the subject? G. A.

Barnsbury.

[The letter of the Earl of Warwick, we are inclined to think, does not relate to the foundation of Christ's Hospital; but may refer to a projected school at the Charter House, at this time the property of the Earl (afterwards created Duke of Northumberland). In 1542 the Charter House was granted by Henry VIII. to John Brydges and Thomas Hale for their joint lives; and, in 1545, to Sir Edward, afterwards Lord North. This nobleman sold it to the Earl of Warwick, who being afterwards attainted of treason, it reverted again to the Crown. On a copy of the Letters Patent of Queen Mary, granting for the second time the Charter House to Lord North, is the following memorandum:—"There is enrolled a grant from the Quene [Mary] unto Sir Edward Northe, of the seite of the House or Priory of the Carthuse, within mencōed to be granted by these Lres patentēs of 36 Henry VIII., and of the gardens, gates, conduyts, and other things within mencōed, and in the said Lres patentēs of 1 Marie specifed to come to the Crowne by the attaynder of John, Duke of Northumberland. See it seemeth that Sir Edward North, after the grant thereof to him, 36 Henr. VIII., did sele or conveye the same to the Duke of Northumberland; who afterwards being attaynted of treason for rebellion, the pmisses thereby came to the Crowne agayn at the begynning of Quene Mary's reigne, who granted the same agayn to Sir Edward Northe, with the same libertyes as are mencōed in this of 36 Henr. VIII."

In 1550 Ridley was translated from Rochester to London; and both in the council-chamber and the pulpit, he boldly resisted the sacrilegious spirit of his day. Although the young king [Edward VI.] was but partially able to stem the torrent of corruption, he yet founded (according to Carleile) at the suggestion of Ridley, no less than sixteen grammar-schools, and designed, had his life been spared, to erect twelve colleges for the education of youth. It was shortly before the death of Edward, that Ridley preached his famous Sermon, in which he so strongly pressed the duty of providing for the poverty and ignorance of the lower classes, and which eventually led to the foundation of Christ's Hospital, Bridewell, and St. Thomas's. The greater portion of the Bishop's letter furnished by our correspondent has already appeared in Gloucester Ridley's Life of Bishop Ridley, p. 377, 4to, 1763; in Stryke's Story, p. 169; and in Trollope's History of Christ's Hospital, p. 37.]

* Protector Somerset.

† Lansdowne MSS., vol. iii.

MR. BASKETT.—One of the persons to whom the authorship of The Whole Duty of Man has been attributed, was a Mr. Baskett, who, I believe, was the clergyman of some place in Wiltshire.* Is there any biographical or other notice of him to be met with in any magazine or other publication? L.L.L.L.W.G.

BEDSTEAD SUPERSTITION.—Having ordered a neatly constructed single bedstead, with somewhat high and ornamented sides, I was surprised when it was brought home to find that the ornamentation of one side of the bedstead was not repeated on the opposite side, it being in fact quite plain. I expressed my surprise and dissatisfaction to the maker: saying that, when the bedstead was placed with its head against the wall of a room, the sides then showing will appear quite unlike—one ornamented, and the other plain. At this, the maker expressed his surprise that I should be ignorant of a German custom and prejudice: "for," says he, "in Germany single bedsteads are only placed sideways against a wall, or partition; and only removed from this position, and placed with its head against the wall, to receive a dead body." And the worthy maker assured me that nowhere in Germany could a native be induced to sleep on a single bedstead which had not its side placed against a wall, or partition. The same objection does not hold against placing two single bedsteads side by side, with their heads against a wall. It is possible that this German custom has already a place in "N. & Q.;" although, in a hasty looking over of my set, I did not find it. Does the custom, with prejudice, obtain in other countries? The custom I think does, but not the prejudice—at least, not in England or America. W.

Frankfurt-am-Main.

BERNARDINO.—In the preface to Specimens and Notes on Living English Authors, Boston, 1846, the author says that the early English poets were indifferent about originality:—

[* A clergyman of Wiltshire, according to Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, ii. 604.—ED.]

"Chaucer invented little or nothing; Shakspeare borrowed nearly all his plots, and helped himself freely to all the language which was worth taking; and Ben Jonson took two-thirds of his Catiline and Sejanus from Sallust and Tacitus, and his Alchemist and Volpone from Bernardino."—P. vi.

I shall be obliged by information as to Bernardino and his works, which have been so named. E. S.

SIR RICHARD BRAHAM.—Can any of your correspondents give me the exact date of the death of Sir Richard Braham, M.P. for Windsor in the reign of Charles II.? He was created a baronet 1662, and described of New Windsor; but dying without issue, his title became extinct. Tighe and Davis, in their Annals of Windsor, mention a payment toward his funeral expences; but they entirely omit, in their list of M.P.s for that borough, the election that was caused by his decease. I find, from a MS. document in his handwriting, Sir Francis Winnington, then Solicitor-General, was returned M.P. for Windsor, Feb. 10, 1676; and sat during the remainder of the then existing Parliament. Browne Willis also, in his Notitia Parliamentaria, omits this return.

THOS. E. WINNINGTON.

Stanford Court, Worcester.

CARYLL FAMILY.—Did any member of the Caryll family of Harting settle in South Brent, Devon? If so, when? Did he leave any descendants? What are the armorial bearings of this family? CARILFORD.

Cape Town, S. A.

THE PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF BRUNSWICK.—I lately read one of the most fascinating and delightful works I ever had the good fortune to meet with, in which genius, goodness, and beauty meet together in the happiest combination, showing the additional charm of an historical basis—Too Strange not to be True, by Lady G. Fullerton: who, by the way, also wrote, many years ago, one of the most disagreeable books I ever read, at once clever and repulsive, viz. Ellen Middleton. Lady Fullerton mentions that the germ of her strange romance of history was a sketch published by the late Lord Dover, in the Keepsake of 1833, entitled "Vicissitudes in the Life of a Princess of the House of Brunswick." I was speaking of Lady Fullerton's book, the other day, to a lady who had just read it; and she told me she read the strange story of the Princess Charlotte, worked up into a romance in two volumes, between the years 1810—1820. My informant could not remember the title, nor the author's name distinctly; but she said it was a name like Holcroft, Hoffmann, or Holford, and added that the same writer had published some German tales. I observed, that Mrs. Hoffland had written a book called Czarina, in 3 vols.; but my friend replied,

THE BLUE COAT SCHOOL.

From a letter in the State Paper Office (now the Record Office) it would appear probable that that celebrated and excellent foundation, the "Blue Coat School," owes its preferment to Dudley, Duke of Northumberland—a fact that I have not seen stated by any writer. The letter runs thus:—

John Dudley, Earl of Warwick, to Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Cecil, 1st Feby. 1547-8.

"After my right hartie commendacions thies may be to require you to gyve credyte to this berer, my servunt; who shall at length shew you th' affect of this my sending at this tyme, which ys at the instant sute and request of certeyn of my nybors concerning the preferment of a certeyn free scole, wherein sondry poore folkes hath alke theyr fyndyng, that they may opteyn my Lorde's grace* good favor for the preferment therof, which they wold styll kepe in the same foundation. Wherin his grace shall do (in myn opynyon) a right charitable act, and your furdurance herin shalbe by theym honestly consydyrd.

"So I byde you for this tyme hartely farewell. At Ely Place this fyrste of February, An^o 1547. [1547-8.]

"Your Loving frend, J. WARWYK.

"To my loving frende, Mr. Cicell."

Holinshed speaks of the "Earl of Warwick's lodging, which was then at Ely Place, in Holborn." Stow, in his Survey of London, speaks of the "Bishop of Ely's Inn, commonly called Ely Place, as it pertaineth to the Bishops of Ely." Dudley's letters, while he was Earl of Warwick, were dated from Ely Place. The Serjeants-at-Law held their feasts in this house. At one of them, held in 1531, Henry VIII. and Queen Katherine dined there with the foreign ambassadors, Lord Mayor, judges, aldermen, citizens, merchants, and the "Crafts of London." Stow relates that this feast continued for five days.

At the same time that Christ's Hospital was founded, St. Thomas's Hospital was established for the relief of the sick. Bridewell also, built by Henry VIII., was appropriated "for the correction and amendment of the vagabond and lewd; provision also being made that the decayed house-keeper should receive weekly parochial relief."

In connection with this is a very curious letter from Ridley, Bishop of London, preserved among the Lansdowne MSS., in the British Museum:†—

"To the right Woorshipfull Sr William Cicill, Knighte, One of the Principall Secretaries unto the Kinges Maiestie.

"Good Mr Cicill, I muste be a suter unto you in our Master Christe's cause, I beseeche you, be good unto him. The matter is, Syr, Alas, he hath lyen to too long abroad (as you do knowe) without Lodginge, in the Stretes of London, both hungrie, naked, and colde. Nowe thanks be unto all mightie God, the Citizens are willinge to refreash him and to geave him, both meate, drinke, clothinge, and fyreinge. But Alas, Sr, they lacke Lodginge for him; for in some one howse, I dare saie, they are to faine to lodge Thre families under one Roffe.

"Sr, there is a wide Large emptie howse of the Kinges Majesties, called BRIDEWELL, that woud wonderfullie well serve to lodge Christe in, if he mighte finde suche good Freindes in the Courte, to procure in his cause. Suerlie I have suche a good opinion in the Kinges Ma^{tie}, that if Christe had suche faithfull and hartie freindes, that woud hartely speake for him, he should undoubtedlie spele at the Kinges Ma^{tie} handes. Syr, I have promised my Brethren the Citizens in this matter to move you, because I doo take you for one that feareth God, and woud that Christe should lye no more abroad in the Strete. There is a Rumor, that one goeth aboute to buy that howse of the Kinges Ma^{tie}, and to pull it downe, if there be any suche thinge, for Gode's sake, speake you in or Master's cause. I have written unto Mr Gates more at large in this matter. I joyne you wth him, and all that love and looke for Christe's final Benediccon on the latter daie. If Mr Cheke (in whose recoverie God be blessed) were amonges you, I woud suerlie make him in this behaulf, one of Christe's speciall Advocates, or rather one of his principall Proctor, and suerlie I woud not be saide nay. And thus I wishe you in Christe ev^r well to Fare.

"From my howse at Fulliam, this presente Sondaie, beinge the xxixth daie of Maij, 1553.

"Yours in Christ, Nic. LONDON."

"I pra yow suffer the beror hearof to talk ij or iij wordes wth yow in this cause."

Nicholas Ridley was translated, by Edw. VI., from the Bishopric of Rochester to that of London, April 1, 1550. Edward died July 6, 1553, only five weeks after Ridley's letter was written. On the accession of Mary, Ridley was deprived and burnt to death by her orders, October 16, 1555.

Can any of the readers of "N. & Q." furnish any further light on the subject? G. A.

Barnsbury.

[The letter of the Earl of Warwick, we are inclined to think, does not relate to the foundation of Christ's Hospital; but may refer to a projected school at the Charter House, at this time the property of the Earl (afterwards created Duke of Northumberland). In 1542 the Charter-House was granted by Henry VIII. to John Brydges and Thomas Hale for their joint lives; and, in 1545, to Sir Edward, afterwards Lord North. This nobleman sold it to the Earl of Warwick, who being afterwards attainted of treason, it reverted again to the Crown. On a copy of the Letters Patent of Queen Mary, granting for the second time the Charter-House to Lord North, is the following memorandum:—"There is enrolled a grant from the Quene [Mary] unto Sir Edward Northe, of the scite of the House or Priory of the Carthuse, within mentioned to be granted by these Lres patentees of 36 Henry VIII., and of the gardens, gates, conduyts, and other things within mentioned, and in the said Lres patents of 1 Marie specified to come to the Crowne by the attaynder of John, Duke of Northumberland. See it seemeth that Sir Edward North, after the grant thereof to him, 36 Henr. VIII., did sele or conveye the same to the Duke of Northumberland; who afterwards being attaynted of treason for rebellion, the pmisses thereby came to the Crowne agayn at the begynning of Queene Mary's reigne, who granted the same agayn to Sir Edward Northe, with the same libertyes as are mencioned in this of 36 Henr. VIII."

In 1550 Ridley was translated from Rochester to London; and both in the council-chamber and the pulpit, he

* Protector Somerset.

† Lansdowne MSS., vol. iii.

lily resisted the sacrilegious spirit of his day. Although the young king [Edward VI.] was but partially able to stem the torrent of corruption, he yet founded (according to Curdiss) at the suggestion of Ridley, no less than sixteen grammar-schools, and designed, had his life been spared, to erect twelve colleges for the education of youth. It was shortly before the death of Edward, that Ridley preached his famous Sermon, in which he so strongly pressed the duty of providing for the poverty and ignorance of the lower classes, and which eventually led to the foundation of Christ's Hospital, Bridewell, and St. Thomas's. The greater portion of the Bishop's letter furnished by our correspondent has already appeared in Chambers's Life of Bishop Ridley, p. 377, 4to, 1763; in Scrymgeour's Story, p. 169; and in Trollope's History of Christ's Hospital, p. 37.]

MR. BASKETT.—One of the persons to whom the authorship of The Whole Duty of Man has been attributed, was a Mr. Baskett, who, I believe, was the clergyman of some place in Worcestershire.* Is there any biographical or other notice of him to be met with in any magazine or other publication? L.L.L.A.W.G.

BEDSTEAD SUPERSTITION.—Having ordered a newly constructed single bedstead, with somewhat high and ornamented sides, I was surprised when it was brought home to find that the ornamentation of one side of the bedstead was not repeated on the opposite side, it being in fact quite plain. I expressed my surprise and dissatisfaction to the maker: saying that, when the bedstead was placed with its head against the wall of a room, the sides then showing will appear quite unlike—one ornamented, and the other plain. At this, the maker expressed his surprise that I should be ignorant of a German custom and prejudice: "for," says he, "in Germany single bedsteads are only placed sideways against a wall, or partition; and only removed from this position, and placed with its head against the wall, to receive a dead body." And the worthy maker assured me that nowhere in Germany could a native be induced to sleep on a single bedstead which had not its side placed against a wall, or partition. The same objection does not hold against placing two single bedsteads side by side, with their heads against a wall. It is possible that this German custom has already a place in "N. & Q.;" although, in a hasty looking over of my set, I did not find it. Does the custom, with prejudice, obtain in other countries? The custom I think does, but not the prejudice—at least, not in England or America. W. Frankfurt-am-Main.

BERNARDINO.—In the preface to Specimens and Notes on Living English Authors, Boston, 1840, the author says that the early English poets were indifferent about originality:—

* A clergyman of Somersetshire, according to Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, ii. 604.—ED.]

"Chaucer invented little or nothing; Shakspeare borrowed nearly all his plots, and helped himself freely to all the language which was worth taking; and Ben Jonson took two-thirds of his Catiline and Sejanus from Sallust and Tacitus, and his Alchemist and Volpone from Bernardino."—P. vi.

I shall be obliged by information as to Bernardino and his works, which have been so named. E. S.

SIR RICHARD BRAHAM.—Can any of your correspondents give me the exact date of the death of Sir Richard Braham, M.P. for Windsor in the reign of Charles II.? He was created a baronet 1692, and described of New Windsor; but dying without issue, his title became extinct. Tighe and Davis, in their Annals of Windsor, mention a payment toward his funeral expences; but they entirely omit, in their list of M.P.'s for that borough, the election that was caused by his decease. I find, from a MS. document in his handwriting, Sir Francis Winington, then Solicitor-General, was returned M.P. for Windsor, Feb. 19, 1676; and sat during the remainder of the then existing Parliament. Browne Willis also, in his Notitia Parliamentaria, omits this return.

THOS. E. WINNINGTON.

Stanford Court, Worcester.

CARYLL FAMILY.—Did any member of the Caryll family of Harting settle in South Brent, Devon? If so, when? Did he leave any descendants? What are the armorial bearings of this family? CARILFORD.

Cape Town, S. A.

THE PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF BRUNSWICK.—I lately read one of the most fascinating and delightful works I ever had the good fortune to meet with, in which genius, goodness, and beauty meet together in the happiest combination, showing the additional charm of an historical basis—Too Strange not to be True, by Lady G. Fullerton: who, by the way, also wrote, many years ago, one of the most disagreeable books I ever read, at once clever and repulsive, viz. Ellen Middleton. Lady Fullerton mentions that the germ of her strange romance of history was a sketch published by the late Lord Dover, in the Keepsake of 1833, entitled "Vicissitudes in the Life of a Princess of the House of Brunswick." I was speaking of Lady Fullerton's book, the other day, to a lady who had just read it; and she told me she read the strange story of the Princess Charlotte, worked up into a romance in two volumes, between the years 1810—1820. My informant could not remember the title, nor the author's name distinctly; but she said it was a name like Holcroft, Hoffmann, or Holford, and added that the same writer had published some German tales. I observed, that Mrs. Hoffman had written a book called Czarina, in 3 vols.; but my friend replied, that the book she read was written before Mrs. Hoffland's publications, to the best of her belief. Can you identify the work referred to?

EIRIONNACH.

COMETS.—In the opening chapter of Mr. Hind's work on The Comets, there is this passage:—

"The Chinese astronomers, though they looked upon comets without any fears of their malignant agencies, had a very fanciful opinion respecting them, which, nevertheless, led to the frequent observation of the position of these bodies," &c.

What was the fanciful opinion alluded to? and where can I find detailed information on this point?

E. V. H.

Derby.

"DEADLY MANCHINEEL" TREE.—In A Naturalist's Sojourn in Jamaica (Longmans, 1851), the above reference is made to a handsome tree which has acquired, throughout the West Indies, a very repulsive reputation. Suspecting exaggeration in the statements afloat, I plucked a few of the freshest and youngest leaves, and rubbed them with some force over the pulse of my wrist, and against the earnest remonstrance of some friends; but there was no result whatever, much to the surprise of the latter. Was this simply an exceptional case?

S. Q.

GUILING.—In an article in the Quarterly Review, on "Workmen's Benefit Societies," occurs the following extract from the Rules of an old Society in Gloucestershire:—

"No member on the feast day shall provoke another by calling him nicknames, or by guiling at him, or casting meat or bones at another, or about the room; neither shall any member feed another by way of fun, and wasting the victuals, to the shame of the company."

What is the meaning of "guiling"? And I don't quite see the fun of feeding another.

II. FISHWICK.

WHO OR WHAT WERE HENGIST AND HORSa?—It is generally supposed that Hengist and Horsa were two men, who led the Danes and Jutes; but there is every reason to believe that they were simply two poles surmounted by horses heads, and were carried in advance of the army as tutelary deities. At this day, the houses in Jutland are all built with the gable rafters projecting in the form of a V, each limb being surmounted by a horse's head. On inquiring of any of the inhabitants the meaning of this, the answer invariably is—"Oh, those are Hengist and Horsa; they are put up for good luck."

Hengist in the Danish means a stallion; and Horsa, a mare. There is a tradition in the country that these were formerly worshipped as gods. Jutland, from time immemorial, has been celebrated for its breed of horses, which no doubt were brought with them in their migration from Asia; and, to this day, they pay great attention to the rearing of horses. The Saxons were composed of Danes and Jutes. From these grounds, I think I have shown that there are good grounds for believing, that Hengist and Horsa were merely a stallion's and a mare's head, carried on poles at the head of the army. Another instance to be added to the many, showing the proneness of Pagan nations to deify animals that are useful to them. The analogy to the Roman eagles will not escape observation.* S. C. SEWELL, M.D.

Ottawa.

IRISH POOR LAW.—In Swift's Sermon on the wretched Condition of Ireland (Works, vii. 30), it is said that by the ancient law of that country, and still in force when he wrote, every parish was bound to maintain its own poor. What law was that? In the debates in 1840, on the introduction of the present Irish poor law, it was always treated as a measure wholly new in principle and detail; and especially it was assumed that there was no existing law of settlement, as the above extract would seem to imply.

LYTTELTON.

IRISH SONG.—Above forty years ago I heard a song, part of which and the chorus I recollect, viz.:—

"There's the childer stark naked, all covered wid' rags,
Who eat no honest bit, but the morsel they steal;
At home there is nothing but three empty bags,
And the devil a skirret to fill them wid' meal.
To your kill me now, arrah! dow, wid' your cold water now;
Water's a drink only fit for a whale.
Boney got beat at the poor game of Waterlow,
Whiskey had brought him off clean as a nail.
" 'Is it me you disparage,' said Phelim, 'you devil?
A tight Dublin lad, and so handsomely cast;
And you, faith and troth, the curst Spirit of Evil,
Auld waddin' Peg Shambles, the sport of Belfast:
A short leg and a shorter, a head wid' one eye in't;
A mouth wid'out teeth, that you better might bawl;
A nose cocking up, to behold your eye squint;
And a hump on your back, like the huge linen hall.'
To your kill me now," &c., &c.

Was this song ever published? If so, when and where? I never saw it in print or manuscript. When I heard it, it was attributed to the Marquis Wellesley; and said to have been written by him during the first time he was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. C. D.

PATRICK KEIR, M.D., published—

"An Enquiry into the Nature and Virtue of the Medicinal Waters of Bristol, and their Use in the Cure of Chronical Distempers. London. 8vo. 1739."

He was buried at St. Mark's, Bristol; and his epitaph is printed in Barrett's History of Bristol, p. 348. It thereby appears that he died December 17, ret. thirty-seven. Unfortunately, the year

* Four articles on the historical existence of Hengist and Horsa appeared in "N. & Q." 2nd S. i. 439, 517; ii. 76; iii. 170.—Ed.]

of his death is not stated. If any correspondent can supply it, I shall be obliged. S. Y. R.

LADIES OF THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.—In the Memorial of the Order of the Garter by Mr. Beltz, at p. ccxxi. a list is given of the Ladies of the Order; i. e. of ladies for whom robes of the order were provided:—

"The favour was not limited to the consorts and relicts of the Knights of the Order, but extended to others of their families; and where such connection does not appear, there is room for the conjecture that the distinction was an especial homage to eminent personal or mental endowments, spontaneously paid by the Sovereign himself, or at the suggestion of a Knight who by some martial act had acquired a claim to the nomination."—(Ib. pp. 246-7.)

Had such ladies the right to encircle their shields with the Garter? One of the ladies, the Countess of Warwick, was named in the 10 Henry VI. 1432. Her figure on her tomb in Ewelme church is represented with the Garter around the left arm. (Ib. ccxxiii.) EDMUND WATERTON.
Athenæum Club.

OMAR CHEYAM, ABOULHASSAN KUSCHIAR, AND JAMAL'U-DIN.—The first of these three is said to have been one of the eight astronomers Jelal'uddin Malek Shah employed to regulate the Persian State Calendar about A.D. 1075; the second is mentioned in Herschel's Outlines of Astronomy (3rd ed. p. 645); and the third is said to have regulated the Chinese Calendar in the thirteenth century. Fuller information respecting them and their works, with references to authorities, would greatly oblige
J. B.
Boulton.

HERBERT PALMER'S BURIAL.—Your notice of Mr. Grosart's book (3rd S. vi. 525) puts into my mind to ask you whether some of your Westminster correspondents (of whom you seem to have many and good ones), cannot tell us in your pages where Herbert Palmer was buried? He died, it appears, on 13th August, 1647, and was buried at "the New Church, Westminster," says one authority, "New Chapel, Westminster," says another. Was this the New Chapel, Broadway, Westminster, built, according to Peter Cunningham—(how glad I am to see him again appearing as a correspondent to "N. & Q.")—as a chapel-of-ease to St. Margaret's, about the beginning of the reign of Charles I. and replaced in 1843 by a new church called Christ Church? Burials in this chapel-yard seem to have been entered in the register of burials at St. Margaret's. Is there any entry there relating to Herbert Palmer?

JOHN BRUCE.

QUOTATION.—Where are the words to be found, "perfidium ingenium Scotorum," or, as the Saturday Review says, "perfervidum"? They are generally ascribed to George Buchanan, and he is said to have quoted from an older author.

SCOTUS.

ROMNEY'S PORTRAIT OF WESLEY.—

"Monday (Jan.) 5 (1789). At the earnest desire of Mrs. T.—, I once more sat for my picture. Mr. Romney is a painter indeed. He struck off an exact likeness at once, and did more in one hour than Sir Joshua in ten."—Wesley's Journal.

Is anything known of Romney's portrait of Wesley, or Sir Joshua's, which I suppose is implied?
QUIVIS.

TOMBSTONE INSCRIPTIONS, ST. JOHN'S, HORSLEYDOWN.—I should feel much obliged if any reader of "N. & Q." can inform me if there are any MS., or printed copies, of the inscriptions which were on the tombstones that were removed from the churchyard of St. John's, Horsleydown, Southwark, Surrey, a few years ago, when the vaults under the church were closed? I believe a great many of the headstones were used to pave the footpaths of the churchyard.
W. D.

HYMN TO THE VIRGIN.—Where can I find a hymn, one verse of which runs thus?—

"Our Lady sings Magnificat,
In tones surpassing sweet;
And all the choirs of virgins
Sitting around her feet."

IS. STEVENSON.

THE UNIVERSAL ACCOMMODATION OFFICE, ESTABLISHED IN 1778.—Is anything known of the origin, career, or fate of "The Universal Accommodation Office, No. 100, Long Acre," which, it was announced, "will be elegantly finished and opened for business on Monday, the 13th of April, 1778"? It was intended for two objects: 1. The letting of shops, houses, chambers, lodgings, &c., in London, and all the villages within ten miles. And 2. The registration and hiring of servants; which, it was proposed, might be much better managed at one such office than at the many register offices, "or rather horels," which were then in existence, and whose shameful frauds, and other malpractices, were reprobated with the utmost severity. The Prospectus of this scheme, a sheet of four closely-printed foolscap pages, is now before me; and I shall contribute it to the interesting collection of Broad-sides, and other papers of the kind, preserved in the Library of the Society of Antiquaries.
J. G. N.

WASHINGTON ARMS.—In the work of Sir Bernard Burke, which contains the coat armour of all the English families, that of Washington of Lancashire and four other counties, is given as, Argent, two bars gules in chief, three mullets of the second. As its chief is usually of a "different" tincture in arms generally, could any of your readers inform me if such is ever the case with those of Washington? The stars and stripes are not such legitimate descendants of the first bearing as they would be, provided its chief was different in tincture.
H. P.

Queries with Answers.

CIVITAS LUCRONII. — What city is termed in Latin Lucronium? In the Prolegomena to Dressel's Prudentius, in the list of the editions of that author one is mentioned (p. xxviii.), of which the subscription is—

"Impressum præsens opus in civitate Lucronii per Arnaldum Guillelmum de Brocario, et finitum die secunda mensis Septembris anno a nativitate Christi millesimo quingentesimo duodecimo."

As this printer was the same who executed the Complutensian Polyglott, I want to ascertain where Lucronium is, where he exercised his art before he took the charge of the printing office of Cardinal Ximenes at Alcalá. From the date of his edition of Prudentius, it is clear that he could not have removed to Alcalá for more than about five months before the accession of Leo X. to the Papedom. The importance of this is, that it has been thought that the writers of the Polyglott have not spoken accurately when they express their thanks to that Pope for his aid in having sent Greek MSS. for the New Testament. The volume containing the New Testament was completed January 10, 1514, and it has been asserted that it must have been begun long before the accession of Leo; but it is clear that the printer had not taken up his abode at Alcalá a year and four months before that volume was completed: so that at all events it was quickly printed; and why not in less than a year? The locality of Lucronium may throw some light on this, and it may lead to a further knowledge when the printer settled at Alcalá. S. P. TREGELLES.
Plymouth.

P.S. Since sending my query as to the modern name of this place, I felt persuaded that it must be Logroño; and, on examining Sprüner's Historical Atlas, I find this to be the case. This elucidates one point in the life of Brocario the printer; and it is so far a contribution to the history of the Complutensian Polyglott, that we can say that it could not have been commenced at press before September, 1512; and as much later as was needful for Brocario to change his abode, and remove his whole establishment to Alcalá.

MARRIAGE RINGS. — I am anxious to know how, when, where, and why the custom originated of employing a plain gold ring in matrimony; and whether a priest or Sir James Wilde could interfere with the fantastic taste of anybody who chose to prefer a wedding-ring of any other fashion. The Rubric of the Church Service only orders that "The man shall give unto the woman a ring."

On this same subject of rings, there are, I believe, several legends connected with good King Solomon. Will some one of your readers tell me where I can find these? R. C. L.

The Temple.

[The legend of King Solomon's ring will be found in Josephus (Antiq. lib. viii. ch. 2), which, however, has been considered an interpolation. It is there stated that Josephus had witnessed the healing of many demoniacs by one Eleazar, a Jew, in the presence of the Emperor Vespasian, by the application of a medicated ring to the nostrils of the parties; and that on this Jew's reciting several verses connected with the name of Solomon, the devils were extracted through the noses of the parties.]

It is not improbable that this story, for which Josephus is made responsible, is nothing more than an allusion to the celebrated Magic Ring of Solomon, said to have been found in the belly of a fish, and concerning which a great many idle fictions have been created by the Arabian writers. The Arabians have a book called Scalathal, expressly on the subject of Magic Rings; and they trace this ring of Solomon, in a regular succession, from Jared the father of Enoch to Solomon. More concerning it may be seen in Licetus, cap. xxii., and in D'Herbelot, Biblioth. Orient. pp. 478, 819, folio edition. (Archæologia, xxi. 123.)

With respect to the style and material of the marriage ring, the pattern of those used among the Romans appears to have been one which has gone out of use, namely, right hands joined, such as is often observed on ancient coins. According to Swinburne, that oracle of canon law, "the ring at first was not of gold, but of iron [i. e. among the Romans], adorned with an adamant; the metal hard and durable, signifying the durance and perpetuity of the contract. Howbeit (he adds) it skilleth not at this day, what metal the ring be of; the form of it being round, and without end, doth import that their love should circulate and flow continually." (Matr. Contr. sect. xv.) As substitutes for the usual wedding ring, it is said that curtain rings, and even the church key, and one made of glove leather, have been used in the celebration of marriage. ("N. & Q." 2nd S. x. 290.) The plain gold ring at present used as a visible pledge, appears to have descended to us, in the mere course of traditionary practice, from the time of the Saxons, without any impulse from written authority or rubrick.]

HOSPITALS FOR THE SICK. — When was the first hospital of this kind founded? So far as I am aware, there is no trace of any such institution in the classical writers. I shall feel thankful for reference to any works bearing on the subject.

CPL.

[We have never met with any work containing a connected historical account of these beneficent establishments. Bearing some resemblance to our present hospitals was the bath of Asclepius, a temple of the gods called Epidotæ, erected by Antoninus Pius at Epidaurus—a temple dedicated to Hygieia, Asclepius, and Apollo surnamed the Egyptian, and a building beyond the sacred enclosure for the reception of the dying, and of women in labour (Paus.

l. 27.) Epidaurus is also described by Strabo (viii. p. 374) as a place renowned for the cure of all diseases, always full of invalids, and containing votive tablets descriptive of the cures, as at Cos and Tricca. (Smith's Dict. of Geography, i. 841.)

Hospitals for the poor and sick, however, are pre-eminently characteristic of Christianity. In the first ages of the Church, the Bishop had immediate charge of all the poor, both sound and diseased. When the churches came to have fixed revenues allotted them, it was decreed, that at least one-fourth part thereof should go to the relief of the poor; and to provide for them the more commodiously, houses of charity were specially erected for the sick. So early as the Council of Nice, A.D. 325, hospitals for the sick are spoken of as commonly known. The first celebrated one was that of Casarea, A.D. 370-380, richly endowed by the Emperor Valens. After it followed the hospital of Chrysostom at Constantinople.

We learn from Jerome, that Fabiola, a wealthy Christian widow of a noble Roman family, who died in his time, first erected a public infirmary: "Prima omnium vrocorum instituit, in quo egrotantes colligeret de plateis, et consumpta languoribus atque inedia miserorum membra fovaret." (Epist. lxxvii. ed. Migne. Paris, 1845, tom. xxiii. 694.) And Gregory the Pre-byster, in his Life of Nazianzen, says, that Basil, who lived in the same age with Jerome, built a large hospital for lepers with charity money, which he collected for that purpose. (Seecker's Sermon, preached before the Governors of the London Hospital, Feb. 29, 1754.)

In early times no convent was without its tenement for the sick poor; but the first order which we find exclusively founded for hospitals are the Hospitalières, who follow the rule of St. Augustine, and were appointed to the care of the Hôtel Dieu at Paris. For an account of the Religious Orders in the Roman Catholic Church consult the Encyclopédie Théologique, par M. l'Abbaye Milne, and the Histoire des Ordres Religieux par M. Herion.

Connected with this subject is the history of the various Spitals, such as St. Mary's Spital, near Bishopsgate; St. Bartholemew's Spital, Smithfield; St. Thomas's Spital, Southwark, and the New Abbey of Tower Hill, called "Our Lady of Grace." Vide Stow, Newcourt, and the numerous Spital Sermons. A list of works on the Hospitals of London is printed in the Catalogue of the Library of the Corporation of London, 1859, pp. 69-72. Mr. Murray, in 1850, published a useful little work on this subject, entitled Hospitals and Sisterhoods, 12mo. Consult also a valuable article in Rees's Cyclopædia, vol. xviii.]

OLD INNS OF SOUTHWARK.—Observing that the Catherine Wheel Inn, High Street, Southwark, Surrey, is to be closed in the course of a few days for the purpose of making alterations, I should feel much obliged if any reader of "N. & Q." can refer me to any historical account which will inform me when it was built; and also of the other old inns of Southwark—namely, the Talbot, King's Head, Queen's Head, George Inn, Horse Shoe, &c.

I am also very anxious to know if there is any water-colour drawing of the Catherine Wheel, and of the other old inns I have mentioned; if not, I should advise that some one equally interested in the matter should take a water-colour drawing before the alterations commenced, it being a very ancient building. I observe that at the Talbot Inn there is an old painting over the outside of the door of the booking-office, which is now very defaced. I should feel obliged if any reader is able to tell me what it represents.

D. R. J.

Streatham Hill, Surrey.

[An interesting paper on the Inns of Southwark from the pen of the late Mr. George R. Corner is printed in the Collections of the Surrey Archaeological Society, vol. ii. pp. 50-81. Some historical notices are given of the following Inns:—The Tabard, or Talbot; the George (with an illustration); the White Hart (with an illustration); the Bear's Head; the Bear at the Bridge Foot; and the White Lion, afterwards called the Crown and Chequers, The Three Brushes, or Holy Water Sprinklers. A continuation of Mr. Corner's paper will shortly appear in the Proceedings of the London and Middlesex and Surrey Archaeological Societies. Among some water-colour drawings by Mr. J. C. Buckler, to illustrate Pennant's London, in the Library of the Corporation of London, are the following Southwark Inns:—The Ship, taken down in 1831; The George; The Spur, on the east side of High Street; The Tabard, now the Talbot; The White Hart; The King's Head; The Queen's Head; The Boar's Head Place, formerly an inn on the east side of High Street, pulled down in 1830; The Dog and Bear Inn, and old Croydon House, on the west side of High Street; The Catherine Wheel Inn; and the Green Man Inn, Old Kent Road.]

HAGBUSH LANE.—Where is, or was, this lane? I fancy somewhere in the northern suburbs of London. About forty years ago, I more than once saw in the Royal Academy Exhibition views of "the Cottage in Hagbush Lane"; a picturesque old "bit," evidently dear to the artists of those days. Has it been swallowed up among the new streets of "enlarged, and still increasing London?"

J.

[Many a sexagenarian now living can remember his rural rambles in summer time from the metropolis over the green fields between Pentonville and Highgate—more especially to that sequestered and shady retreat, Hagbush Lane, the favourite suburban haunt of every botanizing perambulator. But the spoilers have been abroad—

"Bricks and mortar! bricks and mortar!"

Give green fields a little quarter:
As sworn foes to Nature's beauty
You've already done your duty!"

So sang one, lately removed from among us, who always delighted to take an interest in the topography and antiquities of his "Merrie Islington."

Hagbush Lane extended from the northern end of the present Liverpool Road, Islington, in a winding direction westerly to the fields by Copenhagen House, from whence it proceeded northerly in a zig-zag course to Crouch End and Hornsey. The upper part of this Lane, now divided by the Camden Town Road, pursued a winding course northerly to the road leading from Kentish Town to Upper Holloway. It then made another zig-zag or elbow, and was continued by a passage into the great North Road at Upper Holloway by the sign of the Mother Red Cap—a public-house celebrated by Drunken Barnaby in his amusing Itinerary—

"Thence to Hollowell, Mother Red Cap,
In a troupe of trulls I did hap;
Whores of Babylon me impalled,
And me their Adonis called;
With me toy'd they, buss'd me, cull'd me,
But being needy, out they pull'd me."

The late Mr. George Daniel, of Canonbury, had in his possession a token, on the right side of which is engraved "Mother Red Cap" holding a Black Jack, with the initials of the proprietor "J. B. his Half Penny;" and on the reverse, "John Backster, at the Mother Red Capp in holloway, 1667." It was sold among his Miscellaneous Objects of Art (lot 2223), where it is said to be unique; but we know of at least four others in the collections of numismatic antiquaries.

Hone, in his Every-Day Book, i. 870-879, has given a graphic description of Hagbush Lane, with an engraving of a cottage formerly in it. A plan of the lane is faithfully delineated, from a survey made by Mr. Dent in 1820, in Tomline's Perambulation of Islington, royal 8vo, 1858, p. 26.]

LEYCESTER'S PROGRESS IN HOLLAND.—I once read in a monthly periodical or some other magazine, an account of Leycester's Progress and Reception in Holland, written by a contemporary of the earl. I cannot remember in what periodical it was. It must have been before 1854, since that was the date when I read it. Poole does not give any reference to it. Could possibly any of your numerous correspondents kindly oblige me with this information? Q.

[There is "A Journal of my Lord of Leicester's Proceeding in the Low Countries, by Mr. Stephen Burrough, Admiral of the Fleet," printed in the Correspondence of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, during his Government of the Low Countries, edited by John Bruce, Esq., for the Camden Society, 4to, 1844. Is it possible that our correspondent has met with a review of this work in some periodical? Mr. Motley, in his History of the United Netherlands, 2 vols. 8vo, 1860, has given numerous quotations from it; but has not even alluded to any subsequent article on Leycester's Progress in Holland.]

Replies.

GREEK DRAMA: EZECHIEL'S "EXAGOGUE."

(3rd S. vi. 388, 447.)

A correspondent inquired if certain fragments of a Greek drama, by a Jewish poet, named Ezechiel, which are preserved by St. Clement of Alexandria and Eusebius, are rendered into English in any of the translations of their writings. Another correspondent answered, that there has been no English translation. There was, however, a work published about twenty years ago, called Leaves from Eusebius, being an English translation of select portions of his Præparatio Evangelica, in which was given a stiff and obscure version of a very small part of the extracts from Ezechiel. I have therefore made a complete translation of the whole of these fragments, expressly for the pages of "N. & Q.," and to gratify the correspondent who wished to see such a translation. It may be well to premise, that the introductory and intermediate sentences in prose are in the words of the respective writers, St. Clement and Eusebius. I have translated from the Greek of the Wurtzburg edition of St. Clement of Alexandria, 1778, and from the Paris edition of Eusebius, 1628.

"On the education of Moses, Ezechiel will agree with us, who was a writer of tragedies; who in the drama, which is entitled the Exagoge, thus writes in the person of Moses:—

"When Jacob had deserted Chanaan's land,
With seventy souls around him, chosen band,
To Pharaoh's realm he came, and numerous were
His progeny in after years begotten there.
Long did they bear a wicked nation's yoke,
And groan beneath increased oppression's stroke.
Pharaoh the King beheld our race increase,
And by deceitful arts destroyed their peace.
No respite to their cruel toils he gave,
Forced them to furnish bricks, to work and slave
Building high towers, and cities stretching wide,
With fruitless toil, through tyranny and pride:
And to the Hebrews gave the dire command
To drown each infant male throughout their land.
Then, as my honoured mother would relate,
Three months she hid me from that cruel fate;
Then bore me to the river rolling wide,
And laid me wrapt where sedges fringe its side;
While my sweet sister Mary, stationed there,
Watched me with all a sister's anxious care.
Not long did I all helpless thus remain;
For Pharaoh's daughter, with her numerous train
Of beauteous handmaids came beside the wave,
In the refreshing stream at morn to lave.
There she observed the unconscious floating child,
Saved me from threatening death, and on me smiled.
Knew 'twas a Hebrew babe; while Mary ran
With joy and eagerness, and thus began
The princess to accost: 'Dost thou desire
That I should find the nurse thou wilt require,
A Hebrew woman, fit for such employ?'
She gave assent; and Mary flew with joy,
To bid her mother quiet her alarms,
And come:—she came, and pressed me in her arms.

Then spoke the princess: 'Nurse this child for me,
Well for thy care shalt thou rewarded be.'
She named me Moses, having deigned to save Me from the danger of a watery grave.

'When infancy had passed, the princely dome
Thenceforth became my rich and happy home;
Dearer my mother led me; but before,
Off had she carefully repeated o'er
All that concerned my origin and race,
My nation, and God's wondrous gifts and grace.
There, till my years of boyhood all were spent,
I lived in ease and luxury content,
As if I'd been of royal birth, supplied
With rich profusion, and no wish denied.
But when I reached the fulness of my days,
My splendid home I left for arduous ways.'

'I saw my race afflicted, and assailed,
Where the King's wanton tyranny prevailed;
And shortly I beheld in savage feud,
A brother Hebrew beaten and subdued
By an Egyptian: and as none was near,
No witness of my deed had I to fear;
So to avenge my countryman, I slew
The fell Egyptian, and concealed from view
His body buried in the sand; that so
None might betray me, or the murder know.
The next day I beheld two more engage Egyptians both, in fight with mutual rage:
To one I said: 'Why, coward, dost thou strike
One to thy strength unequal and unlike?'
But he replied: 'And who appointed thee,
Our judge and master here supreme to be?
Wilt thou kill me, as thou didst yesterday
My countryman, the poor Egyptian, slay?'
Hearing these words I feared, and full of dread,
'Who can have made this known?' I trembling said.
'Will not this deed soon reach King Pharaoh's ear?'
It quickly did: his threats pursued me near,
He sought to kill me; but I quickly fled;
And since in foreign lands my life I've led."

"Then he speaks thus of the daughters of Ra-guel:—

'Before me seven fair virgins I behold.'

He enquires whose daughters these virgins are,
and Saphora answers:—

"Stranger! the land thou seest from afar,
Is Libya called, there Ethiopians are,
Thousands of dark skinned people; o'er whose lands
And in whose wars one Emperor commands.
But here o'er all things human and divine
The priest holds rule, who is their sire and mine."

"Then after mentioning the watering of the flocks, he inserts the nuptials of Saphora, and introduces Chumus thus addressing Saphora:—

"As it behoves thee, Saphora, make known
To this our guest thou'rt given, and made his own."

Thus far Eusebius quotes from the drama of Ezekiel. In his next chapter, he gives passages from the same as quoted by Demetrius, who relates the early history of Moses, as it is found in the Bible. Then he observes that the poet Ezechiel recounts the same in his Erastogoe, adding

* Thus far is taken from St. Clement of Alexandria; the rest is from Eusebius.

also the dream of Moses, interpreted by his father-in-law. Thus he introduces Moses discoursing alternately with his father-in-law:—

"A large and splendid throne do I descry, Raised on the radiant summit of the sky:
Seated thereon of noblest form is seen
A monarch crowned, and of majestic mien.
His left a rich and ponderous sceptre yields,
His right to me a gracious summons yields.
I fly in haste, and quickly reach the throne:
At once he yields it; it becomes my own.
He hands the sceptre, and enthrones me there,
And binds his glittering diadem round my hair.
Then as I view the world's immense extent,
The earth below, the heavenly firmament,
From all the sky departing, and through all,
A multitude of stars before me fall.
All these I number separate on their way,
Moving like warlike legions in array.
Fear seizes me, and trembling at the sight,
With sudden start I chase the dream of night."

"Which dream the father-in-law thus interprets:—

"Stranger! what joyful things has God foretold
To thee. And shall I see them,—I so old?
Take courage, son, thou shalt erect a throne,
And thou shalt rule whole nations as thine own.
For all thou then didst see,—all earth contained,
And all that heaven's vast firmament sustained,
All that exists at present thou shalt see,
All that has been, and all that is to be."

"Then of the burning bush, and how he was sent to Pharaoh, he again represents Moses conversing with God. Moses says:—

"This burning bush, this sign, what can it mean?
What monster this, which none will think I've seen?
The bush was suddenly suffused with flame,
Yet though on fire, all green it stands the same.
Why is this so? I'll go, and view it near,
This wonder none will credit when they hear."

"Then God answers him.

"Moses! no nearer dare to come, but stay,
Put off thy shoes, ere thou may'st tread this way;
The place beneath thy feet is holy ground.
Then from the bush came words of solemn sound:
'Take courage, son, hear in this awful place
My words: no eye of man could bear my face;
But thou art privileged to hear my voice,
Thou, favoured man, the object of my choice.
I am the God thy honoured sires adored,
Of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob,—God and Lord:
And mindful of my ancient mercies, now
I come, myself the parent to avow,
And the avenger of the Hebrew race,
Whose wrongs cry out for vengeance to my face.
Then go thou, Moses, in my awful name,
Tell Pharaoh, and the Hebrew race the same,
All it shall please me to make known to thee,
To aid thee to lead forth my people free.'"

"Then after some further alternate convers-Moses speaks:—

"But I am slow of speech, how shall I bring,
My tongue thus boldly to address the King?"

"But God answers:

"Send then thy brother Aaron; let him know
My words, as thou hast heard them: he shall go

And speak instead of thee, and every thing
Fearless shall he declare before the King."

"Then they converse concerning the rod, and the other prodigies.

"Say what is that thou holdest in thy hand?"
'A rod, o'er flocks and men a potent wand.'
'Cast it upon the ground, but quickly fly,
For a huge serpent shall its place supply.'
It is cast down: 'O save me thou, I pray,
How frightful is this monster in my way!
Help, I entreat thee: for I sorely fear.'
'Fear not the serpent, confident draw near,
And seize its tail, all danger will be o'er,
It shall become the rod it was before.—
Into thy bosom put thy hand, and lo!
Dost thou not bring it forth as white as snow?
Place there thy hand again; it shall be seen,
When taken out, as it had ever been.'

"Then, after a few other matters, he (Demetrius) goes on to say: 'These same things Ezechiel commemorates in his Exagoge.' And of the prodigies, he introduces God speaking thus:—

"With this same rod shalt thou work every woe.
The river first with blood alone shall flow;
In every fountain, every pond and flood,
The water shall be hideously changed to blood;
Frogs shall abound, sciniphs shall fill the air,
And dust, like ashes, I will scatter there.
Foul sores and ulcers it shall cause: and then Large stinging flies shall torture Egypt's men.
After these plagues, a pestilence shall rise,
Beneath its rage, the stoutest sinks and dies.
The heavens shall frown, and shower down hail and fire
On sinful mortals, with avenging ire.
The fields shall be laid waste, the beasts shall die.
Three days in darkness Egypt's land shall lie.
Locusts, all food devouring, shall be seen,
The corn shall perish in the fields yet green;
Each first-born son I'll slay of every age,
And thus at last shall cease proud Egypt's rage.
For hardened Pharaoh I command in vain,
Till he shall see his first-born son lie slain.
Then seized with dread, he'll set my people free.—
Thus then instruct them, as I speak to thee.
This month shall be the first of all the year,
When you shall go forth free from bonds and fear,
And shall possess the long since promised land,
Proclaim again unto them this command,—
That month I bid you, when her fullest light
The moon shall reach, offer, the previous night,
The Paschal lamb to God, and with its blood
Sprinkle your door-posts, as you hope for good.
The angel sent to slay, shall see, and spare
Your dwellings, while the rest no mercy share.
The lamb's flesh roasted you shall eat that night.
Quickly shall Pharaoh, trembling with affright,
Urge you to fly: my favour you shall find,
Woman to woman goods of every kind
Shall freely give, their vessels, garments, gold,
And silver for your wants, unweighed, untold.
Then when your feet at length secure shall stand
In your own long desired, and promised land,
Seven days from that, on which was first begun
Your march from Egypt, then shall every one
Each year eat bread unleavened, and shall bow
To God, and first-born animals shall vow
And sacrifice; and with each first-born son
Of woman also shall the like be done."

"And then he observes that God gave more minute directions respecting the same festival:—

"In all your families of Hebrew race,
This month, which as the first of months has place,
Take sheep and calves, without a spot or stain,
And let them till the fourteenth day remain.
Then offer them in sacrifice that eve,
And eat with entrails roasted; nothing leave,
Having your loins, while eating, girded round,
Staves in your hands, and on your feet shoes bound.
Let all thus offer, and thus eat that night;
For hastily the King shall urge your flight.
This for your sacrifice, is my command:
Take each a bunch of hyssop in your hand,
Dipped in the blood, your door-posts on each side,
Sprinkle, and so escape destruction wide,
Keep to the Lord this feast: seven days complete,
No leavened bread shall any dare to eat:
God freed you in this month from woes accursed,
This then of months and times shall be the first."

"He then gives other particulars: 'Ezechiel also,' he says, 'in the drama entitled The Exagoge, introduces a messenger describing the position of the Hebrews, and the defeat of the Egyptians, thus:—

"When the King Pharaoh, with a mighty host,
Went forth full armed, with proud insulting boast,
With horses, chariots, generals trained to war,
His numerous army terror spread afar.
Infantry in the midst, in proud array,
Marched on, but leaving clear a chariot way:
The cavalry protected either side
Of the Egyptian army, flushed with pride.
I ask the number of the imposing band;
Ten hundred thousand own the King's command,
Outspread the Hebrews lie, all Egypt's foes.
Some stretched along the Red Sea's shores repose,
Others their babes, and older children feed,
And aid the faint and weary in their need.
Their numerous flocks and herds are feeding round,
And household vessels everywhere abound.—
When these defenceless saw our army near,
They filled the air with shrieks, and cries of fear,
With trembling limbs, bewildered and amazed,
Their hands and voices to their God they raised.
A city near them we encamped before;
Beelsephon the name that city bore.
But when the sun was set, we took repose,
Waiting for morning, to assault our foes,
Confiding in our veteran troops, and arms,
Men to subdue, half-dead with dire alarms.
But lo! a wondrous prodigy was seen;—
There stood, the Hebrews' and our camp between,
A pillar formed of clouds: and Moses brought
The rod, with which such wonders he had wrought,
Such prodigies and plagues in Egypt's land;
And raising it he struck with mighty hand
The great Red Sea; and at his stroke the tide
Obeys, the waters instantly divide,
And all the Hebrews safely tread their way
Through the deep bed, untouched by salt-waves' spray
We quickly followed, marching boldly on,
And loudly shouting, where they first had gone.—
And now 'twas night; our noiseless wheels sunk deep,
Our men no footing in the mire could keep.
Suddenly, to our wondering eyes, a light,
Like fire from heaven appeared, intensely bright.
And then we knew, appalled and sore afraid,
That God was their protector, strength, and aid."

And when the Hebrews safely reached the shore,
Down came the impetuous waters rolling o'er,
And gathering round us: then arose the cry:
'O from this great Avenger let us fly!
These he protects, on us his angry frown
Sends only evil and destruction down.'
The whelming waters of the deep Red Sea Closed over all: our army ceased to be."

"Again, a little after, they went a journey of three days, as Demetrius commemorates; and this the Holy Bible also testifies. But as they had no sweet water, but only what was bitter, by the command of God, he cast a certain kind of wood into the spring, and the water was made sweet. Thence they came to Elim, and there they found twelve fountains of water, and seventy palm trees. Of these, and of a certain bird which they saw, Ezechiel introduces a person addressing Moses; and on the subject of the palm trees and the twelve fountains, he speaks thus:—

"Attend, great Moses! we a spot have found,
Where breezes through the valley softly sound.
Here in this charming place, this sweet retreat,
Thou mayest wisely choose to fix thy seat.
Here there appeared a light of heaven divine,
A fiery column, of great joy the sign.
And then a wide, well-shaded space we found,
Where water'd meadows spread luxuriant round.
For in the valley's bosom wide, but low,
Twelve fountains from one rock are seen to flow.
There, firmly rooted, seventy palm trees stand;
And flocks feed richly on the fertile land."

"He then goes on to describe the appearance of the bird:—

"Soon after this, we saw a living thing,
A strange and novel bird upon the wing.
Equal he was to twice the eagle's size;
His wings were beautiful with changing dyes.
His purple breast great admiration won,
His legs with bright vermilion colour shone.
Around his graceful neck, like fleece, there grew
Rich plumage of a golden yellow hue.
Pale yellow round the pupil of his eye
Was seen: the pupil was of scarlet die,
His voice the most melodious ever heard,
He was in truth the king of every bird.
All others followed him in silent dread,
While he, like Taurus, proudly reared his head."

F. C. H.

FISHER'S "GARLANDS."

(3rd S. vi. 286.)

The query of J. M. scarcely admits of a concise and ready reply: there has also been some evident mystification practised on this subject, which makes it rather difficult to get at the truth: but from a notice lately published in the Fisherman's Magazine (No. VII.) of a work entitled A Collection of Right Merrie Garlands for North Country Anglers, Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1864; from Mr. T. Westwood's very excellent and interesting Bibliotheca Piscatoria, a book seemingly not so well known as it deserves to be; and from my own collection of angling literature, I am enabled to give the information required.

The first Garland was published in 1821, in form of a single-sheet broadside: it commences, "Auld Nature now revived seems," and was the joint production of Robert Roxby and Thomas Doubleday. It was annually succeeded by similar pieces, principally by the same writers, till 1832, when the series terminated. It is impossible to say how many editions of these single-sheet broadsides were issued, or how many of each: but it may be set down as a significant hint, that some of them, published at Newcastle for a halfpenny, were bought by collectors in London for sixpence, and even one shilling, and we may conclude that demand found its usual supply. There was a kind of mania at the time for angling works, and many dodges were the consequent result: one of these may be mentioned here as a curious, if not amusing, piece of literary history. A person named Lathy one day called upon Gosden, the well-known bookbinder, publisher, and collector, with an original poem on angling. Gosden purchased the manuscript for 30*l., and had it published, with a whole length engraved portrait of himself, in a fishing dress, armed with rod and landing-net, leaning sentimentally against a votive altar, dedicated to the manes of Walton and Cotton, as a frontispiece. A number of copies were printed on royal paper, and one on vellum, the vellum alone costing Gosden 10*l.*, before it was discovered that the whole was a plagiaristic swindle, the manuscript being very little more than a copy of a rather rare poem, entitled The Anglers. Eight Dialogues in Verse. London, 1758.†

To return, however, to the Fisher's Garlands. In 1836, the set of Garlands from 1821 to 1832 inclusive, were published in a collected form, octavo, by Charnley of Newcastle, their original publisher. There were fourteen garlands in this collection, two being placed to the credit of 1824, and the well-known Angler's Progress of Boaz, written and published in the previous century, being interpolated as the "Fisher's Garland" for 1820. How many editions were published of this collection, or what were their dates, is now unknown. In 1842, after a lapse of ten years, an attempt was made to resuscitate the annual series of garlands, but without success: they only continued till 1845, and then completely and finally ceased. But in 1842, Mr. Charnley published a

* Under the title of The Angler; a Poem in Ten Cantos, with Notes, &c. By T. P. Lathy, Esq. Subsequently, when the fraud was discovered, the last words were altered to "By Piscator."

† Correctly ascribed to Dr. Scott, a dissenting minister at Ipswich. The poem was afterwards published by Ruddiman, in his Collection of Scarce, Curious, and Valuable Pieces, &c., Edinburgh, 1773. See also Gentleman's Magazine, vol. lxxxix. p. 407.

Collection of Right Merrie Garlands for North Country Anglers, 8vo, Newcastle; and, as the writer in the Fisherman's Magazine observes, "with an ingenuity worthy of a better cause," raked a number of fishing songs together, to supply the vacant years when no garlands were published. How many editions of this collection were published is also unknown; nor is it clear, whether we should class with it an edition published by the Newcastle Typographical Society, including the Fisher's Garlands from 1821 to 1845, with the Angler's Progress and Tyne Fisher's Farewell. Again, in this present year of Grace, we have, published at Newcastle, A Collection of Right Merrie Garlands for North Country Anglers. Edited by Joseph Crawhall and continued to this present Year." Here, as before, a number of poems are collected from all quarters, to represent the garlands of years when none were published. Thus we have them selected from Chatto's Angler's Souvenir, Scenes and Recollections of Fly-fishing, Watts' Annual Souvenir, Richardson's Borderer's Table Book, and other sources. Mr. Crawhall contributes some of his own compositions, and the very best of the whole are written by Mr. Westwood.

I may add that the choice of the Roxby and Doubleday Garlands were published, in a collected form, as The Coquet-Dale Fishing Songs, by the Blackwoods in 1852. And I should not conclude this unpleasant notice of crambe repetita of the worst kind, without observing that Allan Cunningham actually published one of the Roxby and Doubleday garlands, The Auld Fisher's Welcome to Coquet-Side, in the strange omnium gatherum, which he had the boldness to term The Songs of Scotland; though, at the same time, he had, or could have easily found, at least fifty genuine Scottish songs to take its place, any one of them fifty times superior to the Northumbrian doggrel garland aforesaid.

WILLIAM PINKERTON.

"COUSINS," A SONG: PRAED'S POEMS.

(3rd S. vi. 414.)

W. M. F. inquires if Praed were the author of this song; and though an answer will probably be given ere this reaches England, this query and several like it may serve as an excuse for a note on Praed's poems. This poem was in the American edition, and is not in the authorised collection. The American book was necessarily composed of such poems as were found in print and were signed by Praed; and it contained also poems supposed to be written by the same author. As editor, I have had occasion to examine many of the Annals and Magazines to which Praed contributed, and the result of the search is as follows:

The poems reprinted from the Etonian and the Annals are, with two exceptions, said there to be by W. M. Praed, or by "the Author of Lillian."

Those contributed to Knight's Quarterly Magazine have also been easily recognised; but in 1828, when Mr. Knight edited the London Magazine, Praed sent him four poems, all published over the signature E. These were, "School and School-fellows," "Arrivals at a Watering Place," "April Fools," and "Our Ball."

In the New Monthly Magazine a series of poems appeared, all signed E. In 1826, without a signature, "Josephine" was printed, which is confessedly Praed's.

In 1827, with the signature were "Utopia," "A Year of Impossibilities *," "A Song for the Fourteenth of February," "To — by an Exquisite *," and "Goodnight to the Season."

In 1828, "My Partner," "A Chapter of Ifs *," "The Fancy Ball," "A Letter of Advice," and "The Light o' Love *."

In 1829, "Twenty-eight and Twenty-nine," "Chivalry at a Discount *," "Quince," "Song to a Serenader in February *," "Sybil's Letter," "The Vicar," and "Cousins *."

Of these poems all but seven, marked with a star in the preceding list, are reprinted in Mr. Coleridge's most interesting edition. As all the poems appeared over the same signature, it seems difficult to decide upon the authorship, unless the poet left some list of his publications.

Six other short poems in the London Magazine signed E were printed in the American book, and are doubtless not the work of Praed. One of these, signed E, "Chivalry at a Discount," was especially noticed in the London Times, Oct. 7, 1864, with an expressed wish from the critic to know who wrote it, if Praed did not. In the Literary Souvenir for 1830, another poem on the same subject, and one called "An Invitation," signed E, were printed; the same volume contained two poems by the "Author of Lillian," and one, "Where is Miss Myrtle," unsigned, but written by Praed.

It seems hardly possible that two writers would use the same signature in the same volume, and yet if Praed was E of the New Monthly in 1827, 1828, and 1829, would he have been apt to yield the name in 1830 in a volume to which he contributed, especially if he had already written a poem on the same subject?

It has been repeatedly said that some of these poems were written by a Mr. Fitz-Gerald. Surely it cannot be too late to learn something about him. In 1834, two songs, "I remember," and "The Runaway," were published by Dannely, London, the words by Praed, the music by Mrs. E. Fitz-Gerald. Could this lady's husband have been so intimate a friend that Praed joined with him in his enterprises, and shared the signature of with him?

The question is interesting because in 1839 and 1841 certain Charades appeared in the New Monthly, which were the production of no inferior poet. These are numbered 1, 2, 21, 22, 25—30, in the American work. Two of them, "Sir Geoffrey lay in his cushioned chair," and "There kneels in holy St. Cuthbert's aisles," are certainly worthy of Præd's genius. If we are yet to have the collected works of one who belonged to Præd's school, and who has so successfully studied his style, it is time the enterprise were announced.

Lastly, may we not hope that, in view of these repeated inquiries, Mr. Coleridge will inform us if the edition contains all the poems which Præd acknowledged, and in what form the declaration was made; or whether it contains only such poems as the surviving friends of the poet can identify positively. If the latter, it is not unreasonable to hope that an author will be found for these poems, which so nearly approach the perfection of one who must rank as chief of the minor poets of England for the present century.

W. H. WHITMORE.

Boston, U.S.A.

THE GROTTTO OF THE NATIVITY AND OTHER CHRISTMAS MATTERS.

(3^d S. vi. 493, 519.)

The readers of "N. & Q." are much indebted to DR. RIMBAULT for his interesting article on the Pifferari in Rome, at the same time it contains some remarkable mythological speculations after the manner of Convers Middleton, upon which I would fain offer a few remarks.

The Pifferari speak of our Saviour having been born in a Grotto: DR. RIMBAULT is pleased to consider this a "popular corruption of the Scriptural text," and adds, "I am not aware that any attempt has been made to trace the origin of it." He undertakes the task himself, and traces it mediately to the false gospels forged by some of the ancient heretics, and ultimately to "the great Mithraic mysteries, the Sibyl's Cave, the Cave of Trophonius," &c. On his way to these primeval antiquities, DR. R. picks up "the celebrated religious poet Sannazarius of Naples," who has "un- equivocally adopted" this corruption of Scripture, and who, I fear, helped on DR. R. to his Pagan conclusions. M. l'Abbé Gaume, a good Catholic, thus disposes of this "religious poet," notwithstanding his having founded a church:—

"Sannazaro, in his poem entitled De Partu Virginis, makes a medley, which we should call ridiculous, were it not indecent, of the most august truths of the Faith, and the absurdities of mythology. The whole poem is filled with gods and goddesses, while the name of our Lord does not occur once."—Le Ver Rougeur des Sociétés Modernes, ch. xi.*

I am at loss to conceive how the allusion in the Pifferari Hymn could in any sense be called "a corruption of the Scriptural text." It is a tradition of universal Christendom, which comes under the conditions of the golden rule of St. Vincent of Lerins, Quod ubique, quod semper, et ab omnibus creditum. The Eastern Church refers to it in her services, and the early Greek writers and painters commemorate it; moreover, the local tradition is clear and steadfast. It would be easy to quote a host of authorities, I shall however quote but a few, and those readily accessible. The learned patristic theologian, Mr. Isaac Williams, says of our Lord's birthplace:—

"It was a cave in the native city of David according to the testimony of Justin Martyr, Origen, and others; for such the stables in that country often are. And thus as He was buried, so also was He born in a cave in the rock."—Comm. on the Nativity, 1852, p. 83.

Bp. Taylor says in his Life of Christ:—

"She that was Mother to the King of all creatures, could find no other place but a stable, a cave of a rock, whither she retired."

And in a note to this passage he refers to the Septuagint Version of Isaiah, xxxiii. 16, which some ancient writers consider to be a prophecy of this birth-place.†

We have not only good testimony to show that our Saviour was born in a cave of a rock at Bethlehem, but we have also good reason to believe that the very cave can be identified, the record of it having been preserved by an uninterrupted tradition. Mr. Chester, in his admirable little work entitled Three Weeks in Palestine and Lebanon, which, I believe, the S. P. C. K. has stereotyped, thus writes of "the lowly scene of the Messiah's birth, upon entering which," he says, "I sank instinctively upon my knees . . ."

"Buckingham treats the idea of the Grotto of the Nativity being really the scene of that event as an absurdity, chiefly on account of its being underground: while Clarke, though generally so sceptical with regard to the identity of the Holy Places, says that the tradition respecting this cave seems so well authenticated as hardly

* The poet's tomb was quite in keeping with his pagan predilections. We are told in an account quoted by Hone that—"His superb tomb in the church of St. Mark is decorated with two figures originally executed for, and meant to represent Apollo and Minerva; but as it appeared indecorous to admit heathen divinities into a Christian church, and the figures were thought too excellent to be removed, the person who shows the church is instructed to call them David and Judith."

† The note is curious and worth quoting here: "Juxta propheticum illud, Esai. xxxiii. 16, 'Ουτος οικήσει ἐν ὑψηλῷ σπηλαίῳ πέτρας ἰσχυρᾶς.' Ἀπὸς δοθήσεται αὐτῷ, apud lxx., sed hanc periodum Judæi eraserunt ex Hebræo textu; sic et Symmachus. [Hexapl. Montf. vol. ii. p. 146], ἄπὸς δοθήσεται, mystice Bethlehem, sive Domus panis, indigitatur."—Eden's ed. vol. ii. 64.

to admit of dispute. Whatsoever the truth may be, I do not think Buckingham's objection a valid one, as it is by no means uncommon in these countries to use similar souterrains as habitations both for man and beast; and the adherence to ancient customs in the 'never-changing East,' argues the probability of similar usage in our Saviour's time.—Ed. 1838, p. 57.

DR. RIMBAULT looks askance at "the winter wild," and other accessaries to the Nativity; but these are trifles, let us pass on to a graver matter. Granting that in the conversion of Heathendom, new converts clung to some of their old superstitions, which in some cases the Church was unable to eradicate, and in others unwisely permitted, "christening the ceremonies of pagan superstition, and adapting their fables to the mysteries of Christian worship, which will undoubtedly account for much of the ceremonies and superstitions of the modern Church of Rome:"* Granting that the old image of Jupiter-at Rome does duty for the Jew Peter, and that the Mariolatry of Rome is a most deplorable heresy—still, surely DR. RIMBAULT might have found a truer and a fairer origin for this last than the foul worship, and abominable rites of Cybele!† Surely if he had reflected a little, he would have shrunk from such an association with the Blessed Virgin Mother of our LORD. It is true that the accomplished and lamented authoress of Legends of the Madonna gravely refers us [to the Egyptian group of Isis and Horus as the prototype of the Blessed Virgin and Child of Catholic Art, and the inspiring Idea of Cyril and the Council of Ephesus! But the instincts of her heart were truer than the teaching of her creed, and elsewhere she does more justice to the subject. Devout celibates, poring with love and wonder upon that abyss of mystery the INCARNATION, became dazzled by "the matchless dignity of Mary," and loved not wisely but too well: not preserving "the proportion of faith," their fond imaginings at length condensed into new articles of faith, and they came at last to receive as sober truth and revelation what they had long wished might be true—Populus vult decipi, et decipitur. From S. Bernard to Pio Nono we may trace the successive stages of Mariolatry.‡ This is illustrated by an

* See Polydore Virgil, De Rerum Inventoribus, and Jones of Nayland's Reflections on the Growth of Heathenism among Modern Christians.

† Middleton quotes the following passage from a congenial writer, "the describer of Modern Rome" (who is he?):—

"If in converting the profane worship of the Gentiles to the pure and sacred worship of the Church, the faithful desire to follow some use and proportion, they have certainly hit upon it here, in dedicating to the Madonna, or Holy Virgin, the temple formerly sacred to the Bona Dea, or good goddess."—Letter from Rome.

‡ Ed. 1852, p. xxii.

§ For the earlier history of it, the reader can refer to Mr. Tyler's valuable work, and to Bp. Hall, The Old Religion, ch. xiv.

anecdote related by the late Rev. H. J. Rose in a very instructive article on "Catholicism in Silesia," published in the first volume of the Foreign Quarterly Review:—

"A friend of ours, long resident in the south of Italy, was in the habit of talking to a very devout old woman in the neighbourhood. One day the old lady, in the course of conversation, said that there was but one thing she wanted to be perfectly happy. On being asked what was this one requisite for the vita beata, she said, 'If the Virgin could but be made God—for He was so severe, but the Virgin was always kind, and gentle, and compassionate.'—P. 552.

The French beggars referred to by DR. RIMBAULT, who asked alms au nom de la BONNE DEESSE, seem to have reached that happy height of imagination to which the Italian devotee in the above story only aspired, wistfully and despondingly.*

In Hone's Ancient Mysteries and Every-Day Book, he describes a very interesting edition of Sannazaro's curious Poem, a quarto volume printed at Florence in 1740, with engravings of the Nativity, from sculptures on an ancient sarcophagi at Rome. Hone also describes a very curious sheet of Carols, printed in London in 1701, price one penny. The description is as follows:—

"It is headed 'CHRISTUS NATUS EST: Christ is born;' with a woodcut 10 inches high by 8½ inches wide, representing the stable of Bethlehem; Christ in the crib, watched by the Virgin and Joseph; shepherds kneeling; angels attending; a man playing on the bagpipes; a woman with a basket of fruit on her head; a sheep bleating, and an ox lowing on the ground; a raven croaking, and a crow cawing on the hay-rack; a cock crowing above them; and angels singing in the sky. The animals have labels from their mouths bearing Latin inscriptions. Down the side of the woodcut is the following account and explanation: 'A religious man inventing the conceits of both birds and beasts drawn in the picture of our Saviour's birth, doth thus express them: the cock croweth, Christus natus est, Christ is born. The raven asked, Quando? when? The crow replied, Hac nocte, This night. The ox crieth out, Ubi? Ubi? Where? where? The sheep bleated out, Bethlehem. A voice from heaven sounded, Gloria in Excelsis, Glory be on high.'"

This was, when Hone wrote, in the possession of Mr. Upcott. Where is it now? I have quoted the above description of this curious carol that I may give an instance of the same treatment of the subject existing in fresco in this country. Dr. J. M. Neale, who refers to it in The Unseen World, seems not to be aware of the existence of the broadside. He says:—

* See Bp. Hall's Apostrophe to the B. V. M.: "O Blessed Virgin, if in that heavenly glory wherein thou art, thou canst take notice of these earthly things, with what indignation dost thou look upon the presumptuous superstition of vain men, whose suits make thee more than a solicitor of Divine favours! Thy humanity is not lost in thy motherhood, nor in thy glory. It is far from thee to abide this honour, which is stolen from thy Redeemer."—Cont. N. T. lib. ii. p. 50, folio ed.

"An example, which in modern times would be considered ludicrous, of the manner in which our ancestors made external Nature bear witness to our Lord, occurs in what is called the Prior's Chamber in the small Augustinian house of Shulbrede, in the parish of Linchmere, in Sussex. On the wall is a fresco of the Nativity; and certain animals are made to give their testimony to that event in words which somewhat resemble, or may be supposed to resemble, their natural sounds. A cock in the act of crowing stands at the top, and a label issuing from his mouth bears the words, Christus natus est. A duck inquires, Quando, quando? A raven hoarsely answers, In hac nocte. A cow asks, Ubi, ubi? And a lamb bleats out Bethlehem."—P. 27.

What is the earliest date at which this curious design first appears, and where else is it found? The whole design is stamped with the quaint and naïf character of the Middle Ages, and the introduction of the bagpipes points to an Italian origin.

In which of the old English versions of the Bible does the word cratch occur in St. Luke's Gospel?—

"And this shall be a sign unto you; you shall find the Child swaddled, and layd in a cratch . . . So they came with haste, and found both Mary and Joseph with the Babe layd in the cratch."

It is quoted in a devotional work of the seventeenth century now before me, and I have not Bagster's Hexapla or any such book to refer to. Our old divines, Bp. Taylor, Bp. Hall, &c., use this word Cratch instead of that in our Authorised Version. EIRIONXACH.

P.S. It may be well to mention that the above (intended as a Christmas paper) was written and despatched to the Editor on Dec. 20, and consequently before the appearance of F. C. H.'s valuable communication (vol. vi. p. 519).

PASSAGE IN "HAMLET."

(3rd S. vi. 410.)

Your correspondent, Dr. F. A. Leo, proposes two emendations of the text of Shakspeare in Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 1.

Now, with regard to the first passage, I am unable to appreciate the objection to the reading "sleaded" or "sledded," that "it must have been a ridiculous position," an unkingly action "to mite down a man sitting in a sledge." For, in the first place, the sledge would be to the "Polack on the ice," as a chariot or horse to the combatant on less slippery ground; and, in the second place, I believe Shakspeare to have intended by "the Polack" an army or nation, and not a single man. Indeed, Malone considers it probable that he wrote "Polacks," which is confirmed by the Quarto, "Pollax."

Again, that "it was not a remarkable—not a memorable fact that in the cold Scandinavian country in winter-time, people were found sitting in a sledge," seems to me to be an argument for rather than against the reading, "sledded." Shakspeare did not mean to convey anything remarkable by the epithet. If he had, would "sturdie" have better answered his intention? I conceive the epithet "sledded" used of the Polack to be akin to those constant epithets, as they are called, which are so common in epic and ballad poetry: to possess, that is, this property of a constant epithet, that the Polack need not at the time have been in a sledge at all, and yet Shakspeare might call him with perfect poetical propriety "The sledded Polack."

Once more: I do not quite see how "sturdie" "should express a provoking manner;" but I am entirely at a loss to discover how the emendation "sturdie" follows as much as possible the form "sledded" or "sleaded."

With regard to the second reading. Instead of "Disasters in the sun," Malone would read "Disasters dimmed the sun;" and he certainly has much to adduce in support of his conjecture. He remarks on "the disagreeable recurrence of the word stars" in the next line, and thinks Shakspeare may have written—

"A-stres with trains of fire and dews of blood Dis-a-strous dimmed the sun . . ."

Perhaps we might read—

As stars (i. e. while stars—) . . . or "And stars . . .
Dis-a-strous dimmed the sun."

Malone's emendation seems to me to be preferable to those proposed by your correspondent.

May I be allowed to question whether " . . . stars Did enter in the sun . . ."

is Shakspearian English?

I certainly think that the words "disaster" or "disastrous" (cf. Homer's ὄβλιος ἀστυρ), and "dews of blood" (cf. Virgil's "sanguinei rores," and Statius' "rores cruenti") must not be sacrificed to any emendation.

FABRUS OXONTENSIS.

THOMAS SYDSERF, BISHOP OF BRECHIN.

(3rd S. vi. 206.)

"Tho. Brechin" was certainly Thomas Sydsarf, who was consecrated Bishop of Brechin, in Scotland, on July 29, 1634, at Edinburgh, by the Primate, Archbishop John Spottiswoode. His name is omitted by Keith, among the occupants of that see; although afterwards he correctly states, under the Bishops of Galloway, that he was "translated from Brechin to Galloway," and hence the difficulty of I. B. E. Dr. Sydsarf, who was then Rector of St. Giles's church, Edinburgh, and Dean of the cathedral of that diocese, was consecrated on the same day that his predecessor in the see of Brechin, Dr. David Lindsay, was installed as Bishop of Edinburgh; and his successor there, Dr. Walter Whitford, Rector of Moffat, co. Dumfries, and Sub-dean of Glasgow, was nominated in June, 1635—and not “in September, 1634,” as erroneously stated by Keith; but his consecration had not taken place up to September 10, 1635, though it must have occurred shortly after that date. Dr. Sydserf consequently held the see of Brechin for at least one year till translated to that of Galloway, in June, 1635; and he sat in the latter till December 13, 1638, when he was deprived of his temporalities, as well as “deposed and excommunicated,” by the Glasgow Assembly. He survived, however, until the Restoration, being then the sole remaining member of the Scottish Hierarchy of the “Spottiswoode succession,” as it was termed; and, during his long exile, of twenty-two years from his native land, he appears to have resided partly in England, but the greater part of the time in France. He was in Paris in 1644-5; and is recorded as having, on June 12, 1650, conferred the orders of both deacon and priest in the English Ambassador’s chapel there—after a sermon by Dr. Cosin (then Dean of Peterborough, and afterwards Bishop of Durham,)—upon Messrs. John Durell and Daniel Brevint: of whom the former became Dean of Windsor, and the latter Dean of Lincoln, at subsequent periods. In 1658, he appears to have been again in England; since, in that year, he superintended the printing at London of Considerationes Modestæ et Pacificæ—the valuable and learned work of Dr. William Forbes, first Bishop of Edinburgh. The initials “T. G.,” subscribed to the “Præfatio ad Lectorem,” showing that he had never abandoned, even in name, his right to the see of Galloway. Among those ordained by him was, also, Dr. John Tillotson (afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury), about the year 1660; though there were doubts, for a long time, whether that prelate ever had received episcopal ordination; and it is said that Bishop Sydserf incurred the dislike of the bishops in England for conferring holy orders within that kingdom in an irregular manner, and without requiring either oaths or subscriptions from the candidates.* Other accounts, however, give a different description of his proceedings in England; and state that, being desired and allowed by the English bishops, he ordained, according to the Scots form, several hundreds of the English Nonconformists who had some scruples and objections against the English ordinal. One of these was the famous Dr. Thomas Manton, who had been admitted to deacon’s orders only by Bishop Hall of Exeter, but still officiated as a parish minister both at Stoke Newington and Covent Garden, London; but, being sensible of his error, he applied to the Bishop of Galloway for the order of Presbyter, and received it from his hands. He relapsed, however, to Nonconformity.

* It was Bishop Sydserf who conferred orders in Westminster on the notorious Richard Kingston, preacher of St. James’s, Clerkenwell, which being so contrary to ecclesiastical rule, we felt inclined to call in question. See “N. & Q.” 3rd S. ii. 471.—ED.]

On the re-establishment of Episcopacy in Scotland in 1661, instead of being raised to the Primacy as he fully expected, and should have been, Dr. Sydserf was translated to the Bishopric of Orkney and Zeatland—one of the best endowed of the Scottish sees; and he was installed in the cathedral church of St. Magnus, at Kirkwall, on November 14, 1662; but it is believed by proxy, for it is doubtful whether he ever personally visited his remote diocese, owing to his advanced age.

He died at Edinburgh, September 29, 1663, in the thirtieth year of his episcopate; and was interred on the 4th October following, in the aisle of St. Giles’s cathedral there. On which occasion, funeral sermons were preached by Dr. George Wishart and William Annand, the Bishop and Dean of Edinburgh; and commemoration made of his life and learning, and of his labours and sufferings.

The character of this prelate fully merited the commendations of his contemporaries. During the worst of times, he had never shrunk from the open profession of his principles; and, when restored to power and station, he practised those lessons of moderation which he had learnt in poverty and adversity.

Among the Bishop’s children, one son, David-Andrew Fairful, who was born in 1648 (probably in France), entered the Society of Jesus in 1678, and was a priest on the Scottish Mission for a considerable period, during which he was twice apprehended, and suffered long imprisonment. On Feb. 2, 1697, he was promoted to the rank of a professed Father, and was famed as a preacher. In 1708, he appears to have been Rector of the Scots College at Douay, in Flanders; and, in 1716, he was at Paris; but the period of his death I have not ascertained, though it cannot have been long subsequently to the latter date, when he was nearly seventy years of age.

A daughter, Margaret Sydserf, married Alexander Fergusson, Baron of Kilkerran, co. Ayrshire; and had two sons, viz. 1, Alexander; and 2, James, who became a clergyman in England. The elder son, Alexander, married Catharine, daughter of Sir William Weir of Stoneybyres, by whom he had three sons: 1. John, who married Margaret, daughter of David Crawford of Kerse; and died without male issue, leaving only one daughter; in conjunction with his father, he sold the ancestral lands of Kilkerran in 1700. 2. William, married Agnes, eldest daughter and co-heir of John Kennedy of Auchinblain; and joined his father and elder brother in the renunciation of his right to the family estates. And 3. Alexander, who perished during the unfortunate Darien expedition of 1690—1700.

The name of Sydsersf is said to be derived from St. Serf—an ancient Scottish bishop, "Apostle of the Orkneys," and a disciple of St. Palladius: of his history little is known, but he has ever been highly venerated by the Church of Scotland, and died A.D. 443. Nisbet, in his Heraldry, however, states that the name came originally from France: and he gives, from "Pont's MS." the following arms of this family: "Argent, a flower-de-luce, azure."

The above account of Bishop Thomas Sydsersf—which has, I fear, exceeded the proper limits of a reply, and expanded into a note—is abridged from my "MS. Fasti Ecclesie Scotice," a work which I have been occupied in compiling for many years, though it is still far from completion. Indeed, the ancient records of the Church of Scotland, especially from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century, are so very scanty as regards the episcopal succession in the different sees, that, even the names of the bishops who occupied them cannot be ascertained, in many instances, with any approach to accuracy. Considerable light has been thrown upon this subject, of late years, by the publication of many of the Scottish chartularies: but much remains still to be done in this almost untrodden field, before a work like Stubbs's Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum can be expected from the sister kingdom. Bishop Keith, in his Historical Catalogue of the Scottish Bishops, with Bishop Russell's continuation to 1824, is almost the only work which attempts to give anything of the kind: though Grub's Ecclesiastical History of Scotland (4 vols. 1861) adds considerably to it, and is the best work we have on the subject: but "an attempt to exhibit the course of the Episcopal Succession in Scotland, from the Records and Chronicles of the Church," is still a desideratum in Scottish literature.

My authorities for this article are:—

- Keith's "Historical Catalogue of Scottish Bishops," 1824.
- Grub's "Ecclesiastical History of Scotland," 1861.
- Row's "History of the Kirk of Scotland," 1842.
- Gordon's "History of Scots Affairs," 1811.
- Garden's "Life of Dr. John Forbes."
- Tytler's "Life of Sir Thomas Craig."
- "Diary of Alexander Jaffray."
- Hailes' "Memorials and Letters of the Reign of Charles I."
- Evelyn's "Diary and Correspondence," 1850.
- Baillie, Wodrow, Kirkton, Lamont, Law (passim).
- Burnet's "History of his own Time," 1839.
- Pepps's "Diary"; Forbes's "Considerationes," 1850-56.
- Birch's "Life of Tillotson."
- Rose's "Biographical Dictionary."
- Symson's "Present State of Scotland," 1738.
- Playfair's "Baronetage of Great Britain," 1811.
- Nisbet's "Diary of Public Transactions," 1836.

- Lawson's "Episcopal Church of Scotland," 1844.
- Stephen's "History of the Church of Scotland," 1848.
- Spalding's "Memorials of the Troubles in Scotland," 1850-1.
- Anderson's "Scottish Nation," 1863.
- Cunningham's "Church History of Scotland," 1859.
- Dalzel's "History of the University of Edinburgh," 1862.
- Peterkin's "Rentals of Earldom and Bishoprick of Orkney," 1820.
- Oliver's "Collections towards Biography of Scotch Members of the Society of Jesus," 1848, &c., &c.

A. S. A.

Banks of the Ganges, Cawnpore, E. I.

CHRISTMAS WAITS (3rd S. vi. 487.)—As Mr. CHAPPELL has done me the honour to refer to some observations of mine (with a slight defect in the orthography of my name) in the Archæological Journal, printed some twenty years ago, he will allow me to advert to a correction or two that ought to be applied to those observations, or to his quotation from them.

The word Wayternesse ought to have been printed Waytern-fee: the word in the original roll had been misread by the transcriber of the copy seen by me. In the original record, now in the Public Repository, the last syllable is clearly fee; i. e., feodum, or fief. I am speaking, of course, of the Launceston Castle document, and not of the Winton Domesday.

In the words "Curia de Gayte," also quoted by Mr. CHAPPELL, he has either inadvertently, or from misconception, introduced an accent on the last letter, as if the word had been synonymous with gaieté, whereas it is the Low Latin gaita, or vacta (hodie, guet) of the Glossaries, and is no otherwise connected with music or minstrelsy than a watchman is with his rattle, and certainly is quite unconnected with the idea of carols. Essentially and originally the word implies the duty of keeping watch, and nothing more. The mode of awakening the garrison, or sounding the alarm, whether by horn, drum, or gun-shot, is only an incident of the duty. Of course I quite agree with Mr. CHAPPELL that the modern waits are the legitimate descendants of these watchmen of old, the incidental music having become the substantial meaning and essence.

EDWARD SMIRKE.

I have a faint recollection (brought to my mind whilst reading the first portion of Mr. WILLIAM CHAPPELL's interesting article on this subject), of seeing a woodcut in the Illustrated London News, some number of years ago, which represented a farmhouse—it and the surroundings being covered with snow—in Saxony, I believe, in front of which were assembled two or three of the peasantry, playing on their "oaten reeds," and several children, who sang a carol favoured with the aforesaid musical accompaniment. To the best of my remembrance it was stated in the text descriptive of the scene, that it was an ancient custom, among the poorer class of people, to go round to the various farmhouses in their vicinity on Christmas eve or day, playing and singing of the approach or arrival of the anniversary of the birthday of our blessed Saviour, and crying out, after the finish of their simple carol, "Wassail! Wassail!" and that it was the practice of the farmers to give them something to drink; and of the husbandmen's wives to bestow upon them the articles wherewithal to make their Christmas dinner. Thus the well-to-do classes in the agricultural districts had the satisfaction of knowing that their needier brethren were possessed of the means for enjoying themselves upon this most auspicious day. I trust, therefore, you will pardon me for any error in this description, as I quote entirely from memory, having only seen the engraving at the time of the publication of the number it appeared in. Some of your readers who have access to the "back" volumes of the Illustrated London News, may be able to refer to the paper and verify, rectify, or abnegate my account hereof. If I am correct, the usage may date to an ancient custom imported into England by the Saxons from the "Vaterland." I dare say you are aware it is the custom in some parts of England at the present day for the children of the poor to sing a simple carol at the principal houses in the village on the Christmas morning. Perhaps the idea sprang from the Song of the Angels when they announced the birth of Jesus to the shepherds of Bethlehem: "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, goodwill toward men."

GEO. RANKIN.

VIEL-LIEBCHEN (3rd S. vi. 458, 501.)—CHITTABOB, in a recent number of "N. & Q.," from close resemblance in pronunciation, has for the German term Viel-Liebchen substituted Philippine, and thus induced annotations foreign to the former.

Twin almonds or other nuts in one shell are designated in Germany Viel-Liebchen,—a term not susceptible in our language of strictly literal translation, but which may be rendered true-love, or less unliterally, much-love, with the final diminutive of endearment, chen. The origin of the custom associated with the Viel-Liebchen I have never heard explained. The usage is, however, universal among, probably peculiar to, the Germans. In the family circle it is a mark of affection, among friends of kindness and courtesy, when a Viel-Liebchen is found, to address to one of them the question, "Wollen Sie ein Viel-Liebchen mit mir essen?" The invitation is of course accepted, and the twin nuts are eaten. At the first meeting of the partakers on any subsequent day, each of them seeks to anticipate the other with the greeting, "Guten Morgen, Viel-Liebchen!"—the person speaking first being entitled to a present from the other. The custom is the source of entertainment amongst all classes in the Vaterland, more especially among more refined and courtly circles. Ingenuity is taxed in devising expedients and stratagems for securing the first greeting. Children conceal themselves and lie *perdu*s behind curtains, screens, and under tables, for the opportunity of unexpectedly pronouncing the "Guten Morgen, Viel-Liebchen," which ensures their gift,—devices often connived at for the pleasure of conferring it. Frequently also the custom is taken advantage of as affording the means of generously bestowing a present which could not otherwise be so gracefully granted or received.

Some of the readers of "N. & Q." may probably be able to indicate the origin of this national custom. The word denoting it is not to be found in German dictionaries, and several years ago I failed to meet with it in a Conversations Lexicon. The compound word Viel-Liebchen occurs in old German Volkslieder, and in these I have remarked that the affectionate meaning of the term liebchen is generally enhanced by the addition of treu, or fein, or viel. The following, which I quote from memory from Volkslieder, may be cited in illustration:—

"Viel-Liebchen ich muss scheiden, Viel-Lieb es muss geschehn," &c.

"Schwimm hin, schwimm her, Gold Ringlein, Schwimm bis in den tiefen See;
Mein Feinslieb das ist gestorben—
Jetzt hab' ich kein Feinslieb meh'."

"Gestern bin ich geritten durch eine Stadt, Da dein Feinslieb hat Hochzeit gehabt."

"Ich hatt ein Treulieb auserkoren," &c. &c.

JOHN HUGHES.

STREET MELODY (3rd S. vi. 274.)—In glad compliance with MR. ROFFE's suggestion I send you the notation of three London cries that still dwell in my memory after the lapse of many years. I also have inveigled a brother, not in the flesh, but in the love of music in all its varieties, Mr. Pickard Hall of this city, to note down these few primitive cries, which melodiously warbled to the following words:—

1. Two bunches a penny, sweet lavender;
Two bunches a penny.

I think wall-flower was occasionally substituted for lavender.

2. Hot-cross buns,
One a penny, buns;
One a penny, two a penny,
Hot-cross buns.

3. Young lambs to sell!
Young lambs to sell!
If I'd as much money as I could tell,
I never would cry
Young lambs to sell.

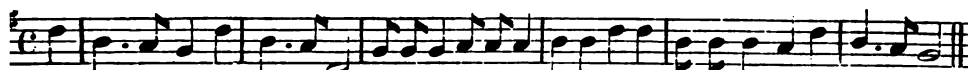

The lavender and wall-flower were carried about young girls neatly dressed, and as bright and looking as the flowers themselves. The young lambs were the property of an old man, very neat and clean; and the hot-cross buns seemed to be offered by the goodwill of the whole street population, emblematic of the good news to all mankind conveyed by the bun.

J. MACRAY.

Oxford.

Young lambs to sell, Young lambs to sell, If I'd as much money as I could tell, I ne-ver would cry Young lambs to sell.

Hot cross buns, one a pen - ny bun, one a pen - ny two a pen - ny, hot cross buns.

Two bunches a pen - ny sweet la - ven - der, two bunches a pen - ny.

PASSAGE IN "DON QUIXOTE" (3rd S. vi. 473.)—Spanish mil, as well as the English word mailed, denotes a great number, quantity, or indefinitely. "He finds a thousand occasions for generosity," writes Addison in The Tutor, and "a thousand chances to one" is an everyday expression. The example, "Viva V. M. mil años!" quoted by MR. THOS. KEIGHTLEY is only one given for the usage of mil, in an indefinite sense by Aldrete in his Dictionary: mil años—esto es, Muchos años."

His translation, therefore, of the passage is "On thy throne was seated a nymph clad in many several veils," &c.

In Marmol's Rebelion y Castigo de los Moriscos (iii. c. 9) occurs a sentence in which mil is employed indefinitely in relation to distance:—

"En cualquiera que alaba a Dios por su lengua, no le escaparse de ser perdido, y al que hallan una cosa, envian tras dél un adalid, que, aunque esté á mil millas, lo halla y preso."—Aribau. Biblioth. de Autores morescos, vol. xxi. p. 180, col. 1.

W. PLATT.

Reservative Club.

IN ANSWER TO MR. KEIGHTLEY'S query, I wish to observe that the Spanish word mil is constantly in an indefinite sense, like the corresponding mil in French and Latin, &c. But mil velos, in the passage referred to in Don Quixote (part II. xxxv.) cannot, I think, mean "an immense veil," but simply that the nymph was clad in several robes of cloth of silver—which were probably very light. Wilmott, in his English edition of Don Quixote (vol. ii. part II. p. 107), gives a free translation in these words: "Upon an elevated throne sat a nymph, habited in robes of silver tissue," &c. Velos may mean as well as veils.

In the Spanish we have the words—a few lines lower down the page (275, ed. Salisbury, par Juan Bowle, 1781, tom. iv.)—"Traya el rostro cubierto con un transparente y delicado cendal," &c. It seems evident, therefore, that the mil velos must refer to her dress of cloth of silver, as her countenance was covered with something else named un delicado cendal.

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

MASTMAKER (3rd S. vi. 439.)—Your correspondent should have stated the connection in which he met with the word mastmaker, to obtain a categorical reply. Nevertheless, the word mast in German, Anglo-Saxon, and English meaning pigs' food, the mastmaker may be the person who selects and mixes the acorns, and other such edibles suitable for pigs, and excluding what may be pernicious or not tending to fat. The word mast appears to be confined in this sense to the productions of the forest: hence the mast of a ship may be so named from its being also a product of the forest.

T. J. BUCKTON.

A TAILOR BY TRADE (3rd S. vi. 26, 76, 484.)—Vide the old ballad of "Edward IV. and the Tanner of Tamworth," in Bp. Percy's Collection:—

"What craftsman art thou?" said the King,

"I pray thee tell me trowe."

"I am a barker, Sir, by my trade;

Now tell me what art thou?"

E. H. A.

ORDER OF THE LION AND SUN (3rd S. vi. 107, 156, 482.)—This order was instituted in honour of Sir John Malcolm, whose predecessor, Sir Harford Jones, refused the order of the Sun on account of its origin, as it had been created for the ambassador of Buonaparte. (Malcolm's Sketches of Persia.)

E. H. A.

GENERAL VALLANCEY (3rd S. vi. 482.)—EIRION-NACH's note of this renowned archaist brings back on my conscience a prank which I played him nearly threescore and ten years ago. I had been more amused than edified I fear by a discussion on the St. John's Eve fires, which are memorially set a-light throughout Ireland; wherein he had talked as familiarly of Baal and Belus, and Béal and Beltane, and Baltinglas in the county of Wicklow, and the hundred and fifty other Irish places, whose name begin with Bal—

"As maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs."

Happening a day or two afterward to overtake the learned general, he resumed his antiquarian proflusions, and spoke of Zoroaster and the fire-worshippers. "General," said I, "did it never occur to you that Zoroaster was an Irishman born?" "God bless me no!" he exclaimed. "Because," I added, "Z being, as you know on Shakespeare's authority, an 'unnecessary' letter, his family name must have been O'Roaster."

Off I turned into a lucky cross street, and kept out of the etymologist's way for some days. A friend lectured me sharply on my impertinence, assuring me that, but for my juvenility, he would have had me into the fifteen acres. E. L. S.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS.

Heraldry, Historical and Popular. By Charles Boutell, M.A. With 975 Illustrations. Third Edition revised and enlarged. (Bentley.)

That the favourable opinion of Mr. Boutell's endeavour to furnish Heraldic Students with a practical and useful guide, was one to which the work was fairly entitled was at once made manifest by the fact that a second edition of it was called for in less than two months. That second edition has been for some time out of print; and we have now to direct the attention of our readers to a third edition entirely revised, and greatly enlarged. Thus, the chapters entitled "Marshalling" and "Cadency" now appear enlarged, and re-arranged, severally bearing the titles of "Marshalling and Inheritance," and "Cadency and Differencing." A chapter has been devoted exclusively to "Royal Cadency." The chapter on the "Royal Heraldry of England" has been in part rewritten, and that on "Foreign Heraldry" has been considerably extended. Lists of Plates and Illustrations and a very copious Index, give completeness to a work which is clearly destined to supplant the excellent Introduction, which the best heralds have hitherto regarded as the most complete—we mean Pory's well known Elements—and to become for the future the recognised Text-Book for Students of this interesting branch of historical learning.

Hymns from the German; translated by Frances E. Cox. Second Edition, revised and enlarged. (Rivingtons.)

It is hardly necessary to do more than announce the second edition of a work, so long before the public, and the first attempt to make the German Hymns familiar to English readers. The German and English are printed on opposite pages, as though our practised authoress were not afraid to challenge criticism on her power of exact translation. Yet some of them flow so smoothly, that they might easily pass for originals. We would instance especially "O let him whose sorrow," which has found its way into more than one English Hymnal.

The Moralist and Politician; or many Things in few Words. By Sir George Ramsay, Bart. (Walton & Maberly.)

A book which reminds us, in its style, of some parts of Coleridge's Aids to Reflection, without affecting to emulate its power. Without being profound, it is thoughtful and sensible; and forms a little collection of aphorisms on morals and politics, with which a solitary reader might well while away an evening over a Christmas fire.

Familiar Words: an Index Verborum, or Quotation Handbook, with parallel Passages, of Phrases which have become imbedded in our English Tongue. By J. Hain Friswell. (Sampson Low.)

This is not only the most extensive Dictionary of Quotations which we have yet met with, but it has, moreover, this additional merit, that in all cases an exact reference is given to every chapter, act, scene, book, and number of the line. Parallel passages are moreover added in the notes; and the nearly seven thousand quotations, to be found in the volume, have been made readily available by an index so copious, that in some cases the same quotation has been indexed four or five times under its most remembered phrases. Need we add one word more in commendation of this useful little volume, which must have cost Mr. Friswell a vast amount of time and labour?

The History of Playing Cards, with Anecdotes of their Use in Conjuring, Fortune-telling, and Card-Sharpping. Edited by the late Rev. E. S. Taylor, B.A., and others. (Hotten.)

Such of our readers as remember the zeal and perseverance with which the late Rev. E. S. Taylor pursued in these columns his investigations into the History of Playing Cards, will feel assured that the work in which he should give to the world the result of those researches would be one of considerable interest. Such is the work before us. Long delayed by the illness and subsequent death of that lamented gentleman, and now completed by other hands, it forms a volume in which will be found concentrated the labours of English and Foreign Antiquaries; and if not a substitute for, certainly a necessary companion to the works of Singer and Chatto upon the same subject. Many of the illustrations of the present volume are extremely curious. We shall be glad to see the curious "Chapters on Card Conjuring, Fortune-telling, and Card-Sharpping," enlarged into a separate little volume. The subjects would be much better kept distinct. One does not expect to find "Boxiana" appended to Bell On the Hand.

Furioso, or Passages from the Life of Ludwig van Beethoven. From the German. (Deighton & Bell.)

This is a most valuable contribution to our knowledge of the great musician, furnishing details of his boyhood, which was very superficially treated by Spindler. The book is rich too in pictures of the olden time, gives us pleasant glimpses of bygone manners, and furnishes an interesting account of Beethoven's introduction to the Emperor Joseph II. and Haydn. It is a book which must interest all who admire the genius of Ludwig van Beethoven.

SERIALS AND PERIODICALS.—We have to bid welcome to a new magazine, The Englishman's, published by Messrs. Rivington's, whose name is a guarantee that, though the bulk of the magazine will be devoted to matters purely secular, the assertion of the truth, as it is held by the Church of England, will never be lost sight of. The Autographic Mirror, of which we have already spoken with high commendation, goes on with undiminished spirit—the twenty-third Part, which is just issued, being as varied and interesting as any of its predecessors. The Orator furnishes us, at very small price, with the most celebrated speeches in the English tongue; and deserves the attention of all admirers of English oratory. The Graves and Epitaphs of our Fallen Heroes in the Crimea and Sicily, by Capt. the Hon. J. Colborne and F. Brine, is a work of more melancholy and touching interest, with its lithographic views and literal copies of inscriptions. The Astronomical Register refers with pride to the increased success with which it enters on the third year of its useful existence.

DEATH OF JAMES HEYWOOD MARKLAND, ESQ.—It is with great regret that We announce the death, on the 28th ult., of this much respected scholar, to whom the readers of "N. & Q." have been so frequently indebted. MR. MARKLAND was as benevolent as he was accomplished, and his loss will be mourned by a wide circle of friends; including many of the dignitaries and most eminent members of the Church of England, of which he was indeed a faithful son.

Notices to Correspondents.

FAMILY QUERIES. The increasing number of these Queries compels us to inform our Correspondents, that where such Queries relate to Persons and Families not of general interest, the Querist must in all cases state in his communication where the Replies will reach him; as, though willing, as far as possible, to give facilities for such inquiries, We cannot give up our space for Replies which are worse than useless to the majority of our Readers.

Just published, in foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth,

ELSIE; FLIGHTS INTO FAIRY-LAND; AND OTHER POEMS.

By J. CRAWFORD WILSON,

AUTHOR OF "JONATHAN OLDAKER," ETC.

London: EDWARD MOXON & CO., Dover Street, W.

T. O. WEIGEL'S NEW CATALOGUE.

CATALOGUE of an extraordinary Assemblage of RARE and CURIOUS BOOKS; comprising an Extensive Collection of Bibles and Testaments in different languages; important Works on Missions and Martyrs; an unusually large number of Books of Emblems, Proverbs, Music, Sport, Orders of Knighthood, &c. several unique Tracts and Letters of Indulgence; also a large assortment of Early Works on America, Palestine, Poland, Greece, and other countries; as well as an unrivalled collection of different editions of "Beyond the Fox," in German, French, Flemish, Low German, and Latin, on sale at the affixed prices. This Catalogue may be obtained of M^r. D. NUTT, 570, Strand; Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORDGATE, 11, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden; and the other Foreign Book-sellers.

YORK CHAMBERS, ST. JAMES'S STREET.

PRIVATE RESIDENCES.—These Chambers have been improved, and several of the best Sets of Rooms are now Vacant.

Apply to the House Steward on the Premises.

To our Correspondents generally let us here suggest, though We do not insist upon it—

1. That Contributors to "N. & Q." append their name and address.
2. That, in writing anonymously, they give the name guarantee privately to the Editor.
3. That quotations be certified by naming edition, and chapter or page, reference to "N. & Q." by series, volume, and page.
4. That in all cases Proper Names, at least, be clearly and distinctly written.

H. INGALL. The volume of "Marston's Works" was published in 1633; Shakespeare died in 1616.

F. M. S. The "Delicate Investigation" was into the conduct of the Princess of Wales. See our 1st S. v. 201, 351.

HERMENTRUD asks, What are they? The answer is given formerly.

T. B. The remarkable quotation from Col. Hanger on the subject of arrests appended to "N. & Q." of the 28th July last. Had the journal, from which you extracted it, acknowledged that it was copied from "N. & Q." your signature would not have been taxed in vain.

F. M. W. A Life of John Carpenter, Town Clerk of London, was published by Mr. Thomas Brewer in 1856.

R. I. O. The book you mention is De Fox's well-known History of the Devil.

OXONIKKIS. Some particulars of the mysterious autographs, or the Devil's handwriting, said to have been formerly in Queen's College library, Oxford, will be found in our 1st S. xl. 146, 183.—An excellent digest of the various speculations respecting the Mandrake and its properties is given in Dr. Huxley's Dictionary of the Natural History of the Bible.

M. A. The lines commencing—
"I hear a voice you cannot hear," &c., occur in Tickell's ballad of "Colin and Lucy."

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly Index) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 24, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., to whom all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

CURE OF DISEASE OF THE CHEST BY DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS. From Mr. Thomas Wiles, Market Deeping: "Your valuable Wafers are very efficient for Chest Diseases. I have tried them myself, and recommended them to several friends, and proved their beneficial effects. T. WILES." They give instant relief, and rapidly cure asthma, consumption, coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. per box. Sold by all Druggists.

AUTOGRAPHS.

FOR SALE, about 200 AUTOGRAPHS of some of the most Celebrated Men; among which will be found those of the Duke of Wellington, George IV., William IV., Duke of York, Earl Elgin, Charles Pitt, Earl of Albemarle, Earl of Liverpool, Sir James Graham, Joseph Hume, Lord Southampton, &c. Nicely bound in One Volume.

Address, G. W., "NOTES & QUERIES" Office.

AUTOGRAPHS.—To be disposed of, SIXTEEN AUTOGRAPHS. Among them are those of Lafayette, W. M. Thackeray, Thos. Campbell, Samuel Rogers, G. A. A. Beckett, Henry Brongniart, Robert Owen, R. H. Horne, and Wm. Haslitt. Apply by Letter to Collector, 11, Arlington Square, Islington.

THE PRETTIEST GIFT for a LADY is one of JONES'S GOLD LEVERS, at 11½ 11s. For a GENTLEMAN one at 10½ 10s. Rewarded at the International Exhibition for "Cheapness of Production."

Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House.

Just published, with Illustrations, price 5s.

ROBIN HOOD, his LIFE and ADVENTURES.

A New Book for Boys and Girls.

London: WHITTAKER & CO.

Now publishing,

THE ORATOR: a Treasury of English Eloquence; being a Collection of the best Speeches in the English Tongue.

Nos. 1 and 2, in a wrapper, price 1d. Parts I., II., III., and IV., now ready, price 6d. each.

London: H. A. VILES, 34, Carey Street, W.C.

1865 LETTS'S DIARIES, ALMANACKS, and HOUSEKEEPERS

save all their cost many hundred fold.

The following are, for various reasons, amongst the best:—

LETTS'S No. 8x 4	by 7 1/2 inches 1 page to each day 6s. 6d.
" 15x 3 1/2	" 7 1/2	" 1 page to 1 week 7s. 6d.
" 18 tuck 3 1/2	" 5	" 1 page 2s. 6d.
" 22	" 3	" 4 1/2	" 1 page 2s. 6d.
" 27	" 3	" 3 1/2	" 1 page to 3 days 2s.
" Card Case	" 1 1/2	" 3	" 3 pages to a month 1s. 6d.
" Almanack	" 1 1/2	" 3	" 1 page to 1 week 1s. 6d.
" 31 9	" 12 1/2	" 1 page to 1 week 1s. 6d.
" Large Print Almanack	" 1 1/2	" 3	" 1 page to 1 week 6d.

Catalogues Gratis from any Bookseller.

W. HEATH'S LIST OF SECOND-HAND

BOOKS in the several branches of Standard Literature, English History, Biography, Poetry, Divinity, Books of Reference, Greek and Latin Classics, Translations and Mathematics. Send stamp for postage.—497, New Oxford Street, London.

Forwarded Post Free on receipt of Six Postage-stamps.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS, MEDALS, &c.

Mr. C. R. TAYLOR, 2, MONTAGUE STREET, RUSSELL SQUARE, respectfully announces that he has an extensive Collection of the above articles for Selection on moderate terms. Also, fine Proofs and Pattern Pieces, Cabinets, Numismatic Books, &c.

Articles can be forwarded to any part of the Country for inspection. Coins, &c., bought or exchanged, and every information given in reply to communications addressed as above. Attendance daily from 10 A.M.

WHAT WILL THIS COST TO PRINT? is a thought often occurring to literary men, public characters, and persons of benevolent intentions. An immediate answer to the inquiry may be obtained. A SPECIMEN BOOK OF TYPES, and information for authors, sent on application, by

RICHARD BARRETT, 13, Mark Lane, London.

LAUSANNE.—ÉCOLE SPÉCIALE de la SUISSE FRANÇAISE, for Instruction in Manufacturing Art, Civil Engineering, Architecture, &c. founded in 1828 by industrial Swiss Gentlemen, to provide a Scientific and Practical Education for Young Men, without exposing them to the temptations of large cities. It is under the Direction of a President, Council, and 11 Professors. The Courses of Study comprise Three Annual Terms, and embrace Mathematics, including Analytical and Descriptive Geometry, Mechanical Drawing, Civil and Mining Engineering, Chemistry, Geology, and Mineralogy. Students enter at and above the age of 17. Prospectuses obtained from ANDREW FRITHARD, Esq., M.B.L., St. Paul's Road, Highbury, London, and R. L. CHANCE, Jun., Esq., Edgbaston, Birmingham, to either of whom reference is kindly permitted.

CHUBB'S LOCKS and FIREPROOF SAFES,

with all the newest Improvements. Street-door Latches, Cash and Deed Boxes. Full illustrated price lists sent free.

CHUBB & SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London; 27, Lord Street, Liverpool; 16, Market Street, Manchester; and Horseley Fields, Wolverhampton.

STARCH MANUFACTURERS TO H.R.H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,

Used in the Royal Laundry.

And awarded the Prize Medal, 1862.

Sold by all Grocers, Chandlers, &c., &c.

On Saturday, Jan. 14, will be published,

THE LITERARY GAZETTE.

A RECORD OF LITERATURE.

No. I. Price Twopence.

London: EDWARD TUCKER, 5, Warwick Square.

PARTRIDGE & COZENS,

MANUFACTURING STATIONERS,

193, FLEET STREET, corner of Chancery Lane.

Carriage paid to the Country on Orders exceeding 30s.

The LARGEST and most varied Stock in the Kingdom of Note, Letter, and Fcap. Papers, Envelopes, Account and MS. Books, Household Papers, &c.

PARTRIDGE & COZENS' celebrated GUINEA CASE of STATIONERY forwarded free to any Railway Station in England, on receipt of Post-office Order.

NO CHARGE for Plain Stamping Crest, Arms, or Address on Paper or Envelopes. Coloured Stamping (Relief) reduced to 1s. per 100. Polished Steel Crest Dies engraved for 5s. Business or address Dies from 3s.

SERMON PAPER, plain, 4s. per ream: Ruled ditto, 4s. 6d. An immense variety in all sizes and qualities always in stock.

Illustrated Price List of Inkstands, Despatch Boxes, Stationery Cabinets, Postage Scales, Writing Cases, &c. post free.

BOOKBINDING—in the MONASTIC, GROlier, MATOLI and ILLUMINATED styles—in the most superior manner, by English and Foreign Workmen.

JOSEPH ZAEHNSDORF,

BOOKBINDER TO THE KING OF HANOVER,

English and Foreign Bookbinder,

30, BRYDGES STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

HEDGES & BUTLER, Wine Merchants, &c.

recommend and GUARANTEE the following WINES:—

Pure wholesome CLARET, as drunk at Bordeaux, 18s. and 24s. per dozen.

White Bordeaux 24s. and 30s. per doz.
Good Hock 30s. " 36s. "
Sparkling Epernay Champagne 36s. 47s. " 48s. "
Good Dinner Sherry 24s. " 30s. "
Port 24s., 30s. " 36s. "

They invite the attention of CONNOISSEURS to their varied stock of CHOICE OLD PORT, consisting of Wines of the Celebrated vintage 1820 at 18s. per doz.

Vintage 1834..... " 18s. "

Vintage 1840..... " 84s. "

Vintage 1847..... " 72s. "

all of Sandeman's shipping, and in first-rate condition.

Fine old "beeswing" Port, 42s. and 60s.; superior Sherry, 36s., 42s., 48s.; Claret of choice growths, 30s., 42s., 48s., 60s., 72s., 84s.; Hochheimer, Marobrunner, Rudesheimer, Steinberg, Lallfrummitz, 60s.; Johannisberger and Steinberger, 72s., 84s., to 100s.; Braunsberger, Grunhausen, and Scharaberg, 42s. to 84s.; sparkling Moselle, 60s., 66s., 78s.; very choice Champagne, 60s., 78s.; fine old Sack, Malmsey, Frontignan, Vermuth, Constantia, Lacryma Christi, Imperial Tokay, and other rare wines. Fine old Pale Cognac Brandy, 60s. and 72s. per doz.; very choice Cognac, vintage 1850 (which gained the first class gold medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1850), 144s. per doz. Foreign Liqueurs of every description. On receipt of a post-office order, or reference, any quantity will be forwarded immediately, by

HEDGES & BUTLER,

LONDON: 155, REGENT STREET, W.

Brighton: 30, King's Road.

(Originally established A.D. 1667.)

"RECONNOITERER" GLASS, 9s. 6d. 1 Weights

6oz., shows distinctly the windows and doors of houses ten miles off, Jupiter's Moons, &c.; as a Landscape Glass is valuable for twenty-five miles. Nearly all the Judges at Epsom and Newmarket use it alone. "The Reconnoiterer is very good,"—Marquis of Carmarthen. "I never before met an article that so completely answered its maker's recommendation,"—F. H. Fawkes, Esq. of Farnley. "The economy of price is not procured at the cost of efficiency. We have carefully tried it as an 800-yard rifle-range, against all the glasses possessed by the members of the corps, and found it fully equal to many, although they had cost more than four times its price,"—Field. "Effective on the 1000-yard range,"—Captain Sendey, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield. An indispensable companion to a pleasure trip. It is as good as it is cheap,"—Noise and Quercus. Post-free, 10s. 10d. The "Hythe" Glass shows bullet-marks at 1200 yards, 3s. 6d. Only to be had direct from SALOM & CO., 68, Princess Street, Edinburgh. No agents.

BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK.—

The original invention, established 1821, for marking CRESTS, NAMES, INITIALS, upon household linen, wearing apparel, &c.

N.B.—Owing to the great repute in which this Ink is held by families, outfitters, &c., inferior imitations are often sold to the public, which do not possess any of its celebrated qualities. Purchasers should therefore be careful to observe the address on the label, 10, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN, E.C., without which the Ink is not genuine. Sold by all respectable chemists, stationers, &c., in the United Kingdom, price 1s. per bottle, 10s. 6d. size every maker.

NOTICE.—REMOVED from 28, Long Lane (where it has been established nearly half a century), to 10, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN, E.C.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 159.

NOTES:—Montfaucon and Enguerrand de Marigny, 29—
Purcell Papers, No. III., 30—A Lincolnshire Dialogue, 31—
Translations of Homer, 32—Longevity of Clergymen—Baptism for the Dead—Spenser and the Daisy—Dr. Johnson and Macaulay—The Victoria Cross, 32.

QUERIES:—Baronetess—The Bell Inn and Broadhurst
—Caricature: Syr Mitchell Bruce—Chalmers of Cultra:
Nova Scotian Baronetcy—Coinage—Dwight Family—
Fraser Epitaphs—The Inventor of Gunpowder—Harrison Family—Leigh Hunt's Description of a Classical Washerwoman—Jack-Stones—Modern Latin Pronunciation—Leland's "Itinerary," and St. Sarik—"Limehouse"—
"Memoirs of the Life of Lord Lovat"—Milton and Charles II.—Early MSS. on English Law and Government—General Parli's Residence in London—St. Donat's Castle—
Society of Industry—Whitbread Family in Sussex, 33.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Beredos—Belick Sunday, &c.
—"The Church of England and Ireland"—Title of Malady—Hilpa and Shallum—Mr. Bentley's Harlequinade
—"The Wishes," 36.

REPLIES:—"The Reformed Monastery," 37—James I. and Marston, 38—Pretended Son of Louis XVI., 39—Tournaments, 40—Quentin Matsys—General Hugh Mercer—
The Mickleton Hooter—Hollands: Cheers—The Young
Pretender—Old Inns of Southwark—Mum—Johnsoniana:
Solution of Continuity—English Tunes "annexed" by the Yankees—Nolo Episcopari—Composition at Haberclasher's Hall—Mummy—Byron's "Don Juan"—Angus McDiarmid—Scarlett Family—English Soldiers at the Battle of Leipzig—Disclaiming—Sarsen Stones—A Poem having only one Vowel—John Balston—"Take my Cap" —Portrait of Oliver, &c., 40.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

MONTEFAUCON AND ENGUERRAND DE MARIGNY.

In his preface to the romance of Berthe aux grands pieds, M. Paulin Paris says: "Je ne crains pas de le dire, pour bien connaître l'histoire du moyen âge . . . il faut l'avoir étudiée dans les romans." Without, perhaps, endorsing absolutely this opinion, we have no hesitation to say that many a passage in the old metrical romances of the middle ages can be adduced as illustrating important historical facts, clearing up difficulties of either chronology or archæology, and even resolving errors which have been handed down from time immemorial by writers more anxious for autentiquité paragraphs than for truth. An instance of this suggested itself to me a short time ago as I was perusing the well known work of Adenis, composed in 1270 or 1274. Speaking of a certain Tybert, who had been condemned to capital punishment, the author goes on to say:—

"Quant la vielle fu arse, Tybert font ateler,
Tout parmi la grant rue li firent trainer,
A Montfaucon le firent sus au vent encroquer."

Now, the general opinion has long been current that Enguerrand de Marigny ordered the construction of the hanging establishment at Montfaucon; but, if we admit 1260 as the date of his birth, we see at once that the popular story must be discarded. It was evidently put into circulation for the sake of drawing an ingenious and moral parallel between the supposed cruelty of the unfortunate Marigny and his melancholy fate: it was set forth as an act of retributive justice, a dignus vindice nobis, just as Cardinal la Balue's iron cages, and the more expeditious instrument of Doctor Guillotin. Pierre Rémy is another person to whom the édification of Montfaucon has been ascribed, though with a little probability.

In point of fact, the real originator of the celebrated gibbet is not known, and the name of Pierre de Brosse, or la Brosse, adduced by some, must be considered, in the present state of historical investigation, as simply hypothetical.

Under the sweeping measures of Baron Hauss-man all the remains of old Paris are quickly disappearing: the rue du Puits-qui-parle, and the Place Maubert, the Collegium Bajocassense, and the numerous glories of the Quartier Latin have departed, whilst the few reminiscences of days gone by that are left standing (such as the Hôtel de Clugny, and the tower of Saint Jacques la Bouche-rie), scraped, furnished up, and decorated after the newest fashion, seem to us wretchedly bereft of their character and their beauty.

Such being the case, we should cordially welcome every attempt to preserve for future ages a memorial of Paris as it used to be. We are glad as we walk through London not to see grim-looking skeletons dangling in the breeze from the actual gallows at Tyburn: we rejoice that our more humanised civilisation is inconsistent with the exhibition of traitors' heads from every "coign of vantage;" but at the same time we like to know where the utmost sentence of the law was wont to be inflicted, and as we read in memoirs, diaries, and correspondences, scenes full of tragic interest, we feel a most legitimate desire to identify the locality, the exact spot of those scenes.

Such is the interest belonging to M. Firmin Maillard's little volume, Le Gibet de Montfaucon, to which I naturally turned in quest of the particulars I wanted about Enguerrand de Marigny—his career, and his deplorable end; and, as I am thus brought to mention it incidentally here, let me be allowed to recommend it for the valuable information it contains on the subject of capital punishment during the middle ages.* With its help we can mark on a map of Paris all the spots where either justice or (too frequently, alas!) despotism and revenge brought wretches to the brink of eternity: the Abbot of Saint-Germain des Prés had his pillory at the Place Sainte Marguerite;
the Bishop of Paris kept his immediately in front of the cathedral, and it was there that Pope Clement V.'s bull was read, condemning to death all

* Le Gibet de Montfaucon, étude sur le vieux Paris, par Firmin Maillard, 12°. Paris: Aubry.

the Knights Templars. The Metropolitan Chapter, the Prior of the Abbey of Saint Martin des Champs, the Grand Prior of France, the Abbot of Sainte-Geneviève, in fact, every individual or body corporate exercising any authority, had a privileged corner reserved for the punishment of culprits who fell within their respective jurisdictions.

Montfaucon, the most celebrated of all these dismal places, situated on the road to Meaux, between the Enclos Saint Lazare and the Butte Saint Chaumont, was a parallelogram of solid masonry, surmounted by sixteen pillars joined by beams, from each of which a ghastly row of skeletons might constantly be seen, testifying to the lenient style of mediæval justice. Pierre de Brosse, favourite of Philip the Bold, and accused of having poisoned Prince Louis of France, was the first man (at least the first person of consequence) who died at Montfaucon. He inaugurated a long list, in which we find amongst many others, Enguerand de Marigny, Henry Tapperel, Provost of Paris; Jourdain de l'Isle, who was accused of no less than forty-eight crimes, each punishable by death; Olivier le Daim, Jacques de Beaune de Semblançay, and the illustrious Admiral de Coligny. If the poet Villon did not enjoy the pleasure of going backwards to heaven (aller au ciel à reculons, as the Slang Dictionary has it), it was only thanks to the kindness of Louis XI. The last tragedy enacted at Montfaucon appears to have taken place in 1617. On account of the extension given to the fauxbourgs du Temple and Saint Martin, the gallows themselves were moved in 1760 from their original locality to some distance beyond the walls of the city; and on Jan. 21, 1790, the last remaining pillars of the building fell never to rise again. Henceforward those who wish to be acquainted with Montfaucon must study it in M. Maillard's instructive little volume, and the ominous woodcut prefixed to the title-page.

GUSTAVE MASSON.

Harrow-on-the-Hill.

PURCELL PAPERS, No. III.*—"THE CONJUROR'S SONG."

Amongst the music to the Third Act of the Indian Queen, will be found one of Purcell's finest efforts, known as "The Conjuror's Song;" and consisting of the recitative, "Ye twice ten hundred Deities;" and the air "By the croaking of the toad," written for Ismeron, the "prophet and conjuror." This recitative and air may well stand a comparison with any incantation music since produced. Nothing, surely, can be more solid and severe than is the treatment of the subject by Purcell, who has here shown himself able to take his place by the side of Gluck. In that memoir of Mr. Bartleman, to which I have already referred, is an interesting notice of his performance of Ismeron's song at the Ancient Concerts. Professor Taylor had been treating of the preponderance of Handel's music at the Ancient Concerts, and of Mr. Bartleman's desire to bring forward the compositions of Purcell. These are the Professor's own words:—

"In 1796, Bartleman resumed his place at the Ancient Concerts; but the season had half expired ere he was allowed to venture on the novel and perilous experiment of reviving Purcell. At the sixth concert he sung the Magician's song from the Indian Queen—'Ye twice ten hundred Deities;' and his auditors were soon made to feel the truth of Burney's remark, that this song opens with the finest piece of recitative in our language. But who will ever forget his delivery of the passage:—

"From thy sleepy mansion rise,
And open thy unwilling eyes."

The gradual crescendo, from the first bar of this expressive passage, until the full power of his splendid voice pealed in at its close, took the audience by surprise. Accustomed to the chaste simplicity and quiet excellence of Harrison, the fire and animation of the new English singer, and the bold originality of the music on which he was engaged, woke them as from a dream."

That minute particularity in editing, which is so justly bestowed upon Shakspeare, should not be withheld from Purcell; whose whole secular works, it is to be hoped, will one day be edited in the style of that portion which has been done for the Musical Antiquarian Society. In the meanwhile, with the wish to aid a little in gathering materials for any future editions of Purcell's Works, it is proposed to note down the nature of the circumstances under which the Conjuror's song occurs. All dramatic music ought, for those who wish fully to enter into the composer's intentions, to have its surroundings indicated; and, therefore, not only when the time and the editors have come, for a complete National Edition of Purcell, but even when a new edition of this particular song appears, it will be desirable to have it signified that the scene of the incantation is the Conjuror's cave; where, while lying asleep, he is roused by the Indian queen Zempoalla, who, stamping on the ground and calling thrice upon the Conjuror's name "Ismeron," awakes him up. Then follows the grand recitative—"Ye twice ten hundred Deities;" but, on the stage, before the air ensues, is the following piece of dialogue between the queen and Ismeron:—

"Zempoalla. How slow these Spirits are! Call, make them rise,

Or they shall fast from Flame and Sacrifice.

"Ismeron. Great Empress!

Let not your Rage offend what we adore,
And vainly threaten, when we must implore;
Sit, and silently attend—

While my powerful charms I end."

* Vide 3rd S. vi. 105.

Now follows the air: "By the croaking of the toad," at the end of which air, rises up the God of Dreams. All these circumstances known, will help to paint to the imaginative singer what sort of images he must strive to set before his audience. The Indian Queen itself is one of those plays which we must think is for ever vanished from the stage; and, therefore, it becomes still the more necessary that the right editor should give us a little argument, as it were, to the song; embodying all the information which is now brought together.

The original singer of the Conjuror's song is stated, by Sir John Hawkins, to have been Richard Leveridge; and, although I am not at present able to verify that statement—as neither in the old editions of the song, nor in the play itself, is any name given to us—yet I will assume it to be so; and we shall thus be led to consider the correctness of certain notions put forth by Sir John as to Leveridge, of whom he affirms that—

"Though he had been a performer in the Opera at the same time with Nicolini and Valentini, he had no notion of grace or elegance in singing—it was all strength and compass."

Now, notwithstanding the confidence with which the historian has here expressed himself, it is really very difficult to receive his dictum in this case. Leveridge showed marked talent as a composer; and it seems hardly philosophical to think that a man, who could produce such a melody as "Black-ey'd Susan," and who had heard two of the best singers of Italy, should make "strength and compass" his chief measures of the vocal art. As to Ismeron's incantation, and the peculiar romantic style required to produce effect with it, we may be as certain as we can well be of anything, that, whoever was the original singer, he must have had the benefit of receiving Purcell's conception of the style in which that incantation should be given from Purcell himself. This would also, most surely, be true as to the original singers of Purcell's songs in general; and, as it would seem, involves a point altogether overlooked by those who are so prone to think that Purcell's singers could not at all adequately execute his music. Considering the unquestionable talents of Leveridge, and the advantages he possessed, it really seems to follow that, if he were the original Ismeron, the audiences of the Indian Queen might have enjoyed a striking performance of that very remarkable composition, "The Conjuror's Song."

ALFRED ROFFE.

Somers Town.

A LINCOLNSHIRE DIALOGUE.

SCENE: Inside of a Cottage. Old Woman and a little Boy. Knock heard at the door. Enter another Woman.

1st Wom. A-deary me, Mrs. Cox, who'd ha' thowt of seeing thee! Why thou'rt quite a stranger.

Mrs. Cox. Well, I thowt I'd joust room and see t'now t'has' flitted; its a s'trange nice't house, Mrs. Davy.

Mrs. Davy. Oh, its nice't enouf; but t'would ha' becan a deal nice'ter if they had becan cha'ambers i'steed o' parlours. When I'm a sitting here o' wi'ndy da'ys there's sich an a draft. Lor' it is some cowl!

Mrs. Cox. Well I can't say as thou hast got a very good roo'ad up to it, and this howry da'ay maes it clattier still. As I was a-crossing the beck t'was so slape, down I coomed with sich a belk; I'm quite wetchard, and I could hardlins get out. But who's that bairn?

Mrs. Davy. Why my maister's uncle to him; his poor father was sla'ain last Pag-rag Da'ay; * he was remmeling a sta'ay when it fell right-a-ways upov his yead and killed him. He left two poor bairns, a little boy and a little gel; and my maister ses, "Well, missus," says he, "we mun ta'ak toner—which is't to be?" Now I beant noways fond o' bairns, they're allost a-tewing and a-taving about, and making sich an a clat; but I ses, well then we'll hev t'little boy, he can addle a penny now and then wi' tenting craws, and he is a gallace't little chap, I'll apaud; when he's grawn up he'll ma'ak a wakenish bla'ade, though now it offens capame what to do wi' him; and t'little lass is but a poor wanckle creetur. She has joust hed sich a bout wi' the fever.

Mrs. Cox. Well, I mun be a-going whoam, but what hes got t'gardin?

Mrs. Davy. Thou may well ast. T'other da'ay I heerd sich an a bealing, and when I looked, some beast had brok out o' Mr. Ward's crew, and there they was a-ramping about the gardin. I was flinging some sto'ans at 'em to get 'em out, when one of the sto'ans fell right into a cletch of young gibs, and killed one on 'em. Well, there was Mr. Ward down upov me in a moment, a-telling me I mun pa'ay for killing t'gib. "Pa'ay thee," I ses, "it's t'other-way-on; it's thou as ought to pa'ay me. Joust look where them there beast hev been trampling up the tonhups and yeating the pays, and breaking down the pipricks, and not a rasp nor a berry shall I hev t'year wi' 'em." "Ma'aking sich an a blather about it," he ses, "why t'gardin has ta'aken no payment; look at them ta'ates and

* Pag-Rag Day is the day in May when all the farm servants leave their places and pug (Lincolnshire for pack or carry) away their rags.

the marquery." * Aye, I ses, them's the only things they've left, and I'd a deal sooner they'd ta'en the marquery; for we've had sich a vast sight on it, I'm clear stalled.

Mrs. Cox. Well, ni'bour, I really mun go; but I can't get this door opened no ways.

Mrs. Davy. Why thou'rt strange and unheppen. What meagrim's art thee up to? Thou mo'an't pull i' that how; thou nobbut hes to pull the sneck. That's reight, good da'ay to thee.

C. P. T.

TRANSLATIONS OF HOMER.

Lord Derby's translation, great in itself and in its circumstance, has done all that the ten syllables of our heroic metre, under its restrictions of Syntax and Prosody, can do with the seventeen of the classic hexameter; wherein abides, I think, so much of the expression of Homer's several characteristics. As nearly as possible Chapman's version approached this plenary power, but failed under the rhyme which induced his many additions and omissions. Cowper shook off this incumbrance; but the assumption of Milton's manner with his form set him yet further away from the manner of Homer. The divinities of the Olympian Bard are merely human; the humanities of the Uranian are almost divine. Milton's is dialogic, Homer is dramatic. It were an anachronism to say that he is Shakspearean! but Lord Derby has shown us what neither Pope nor Cowper showed our fathers—that Shakspeare is Homeric; that his variety, his energy, his directness, his raciness, have descended on him from his Attic precursor. We may now dismiss the regret of our college days—that Dryden had not left Virgil to Pope, and taken Homer into his own hands.

Had Mr. Newman, when dishyming Chapman's metre of its eight-and-six jingle forborne his own trochaic terminals, the old Elizabeth fourteens might have escaped Professor Arnold's censure of Balladism. I cannot resign my notion of their being the metre most congenial with Homer's dactylic freedom, and most expressive of his several moods. Thus thinking, I venture a translation of the well known 'ὦς δ' ἔρ' ἐν οὐρανῷ, wherein is studiously noted every word of the original in its separate and relative meanings. This I have endeavoured to do linea pro linea, the surest mode of trans-fusing a poet's spirit in a metre as, or nearly as, numerous as his own:—

"As when the firmamental† stars around the shining moon
Show excellently beautiful, and stirless in the air;

* Marquery is a vegetable that seems peculiar to Lincolnshire. It resembles spinach.
† Dryden.

When all the sea-marks rise to view, the foreland's lofty range,
And woodland dells; then the broad heavens unfold their topless height,
And all the stars come out, and glad the shepherd is at heart:—
So thickly o'er the plain between the ships and Xanthus' streams
By Trojan hands the fires were lit before the walls of Troy;—
A thousand fires, and round the blaze of each sate fifty men;
While hungerly* their horses champed the barley and the rye,
And, tethered at the chariots, stood, waiting the brightthroned dawn."

Omni præteritis!—were I half a century younger (I arrived at man's age a year before Lord Derby was born), I might have attempted the whole Iliad in this fashion. E. L. S.

LONGEVITY OF CLERGYMEN.—The following cutting from a newspaper will show that the Roman Catholic clerics of Canada have as good reason to boast of their longevity as their clerical Protestant brethren in the British isles:—

"Nearly all the Roman Catholic Bishops of the Province will be present at the celebration in Three Rivers to-morrow of the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination to Priesthood of the Right Rev. Mgr. Cooke. The Roman Catholic Bishops of the Lower Province, we may say in this connection, have on the whole been singularly long lived. Mgr. de Laval, the first Bishop of Quebec, was ordained in Paris on the 23rd Sept., 1643, and died on the 6th May, 1708, in the 63rd year and 7th month of his priesthood. Mgr. de St. Vallier, the second Bishop of Quebec, had also passed the fiftieth year of his priesthood, as he died at the advanced age of 74 years. Mgr. Duplessis de Mornay, third Bishop of Quebec, his successor, expired at the age of 78 years, and Mgr. Dosquet, the fourth Bishop of Quebec, at 86, having filled the See during the long space of 52 years. The seventh Bishop of the same Diocese, Mgr. Briand, lived to the age of 79 years and 5 months. The eighth, Mgr. Mariaucheu d'Esly, witnessed the 53rd anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood, and Mgr. Panet, the twelfth Bishop, the 55th anniversary of the same proceeding. Mgr. Turgeon, the present Archbishop of Quebec, is also in the 55th year of his priesthood. It would thus appear that of the fourteen Bishops who have successively filled the See of Quebec, eight lived to witness the fiftieth anniversary of their ordination. A correspondent of the French Press, to whom we are indebted for the foregoing particulars, further states Mgr. McDonell, the first Bishop of Kingston, had at his death on the 13th January, 1840, been 52 years and 11 months in the priesthood. We hope and trust that, advanced as Mgr. Cooke's age seems to be, he will live to witness, if that be possible, the 75th anniversary of his affiliation to the Church."—Montreal Gazette, Sept. 17, 1864.

And Pape mûr of Canadian bishops of the Church of England has, probably, not fallen much behindhand. The first Bishop of Quebec, Moun-tain (descended from a French Protestant family), and his son, the third bishop, died at the respective ages of 75 and 72 years; and the present Bishop of Toronto, Strahan, is in the 60th year of his priesthood, and 87th year of his age, with a constitution that bids fair to carry him through to the end of his century. ERIC.

* Shakspeare.

Ville-Marie, Canada.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD.—The passage in 1 Cor. xi. 29, may be illustrated from a Jewish legend; where one person was to risk his life to save the community of Jews from the vengeance of a Pasha of Jerusalem, as recorded by Dr. Frankl:—

"The boy fell upon one of the servants of the synagogue, a man of distinguished piety. 'I am the servant of God,' he said; and prepared his soul to meet death by bathing, and by immersing himself three times in water."

Baptism with the Jews was symbolic of entering on a new course of life: the baptism of John was distinct from the baptism of Jesus, because a different life was contemplated and entered on by that act. The baptism for the dead was symbolic of the entrance into a new and future state, for which preparation was made when death approached. St. Paul intimates to the Corinthians that, as Christians, they were liable constantly to death: as he expresses it, "we stand in jeopardy every hour," and then by a strong metaphor, he asserts that he "died daily."

T. J. BRICKTON.

Richfield.

SPENSER AND THE DAISY.—I find these words printed in a book intitled, Dreamthorp; a Book of Essays written in the Country, by Alexander Smith, London, 1843, namely:—

"Spenser's genius was countryless as Ariel; search ever so diligently, you will not find an English daisy in all his enchanted forests."

Mr. A. Smith's reading of Spenser's Works must have been confined to the Fairy Queen, for I cannot find that I noted any lines with the word daisy in them in that poem: but if your readers will turn to Spenser's poem, headed "Prothalamion," they will find these words:—

"Of every sort which in that meadow grew
They gather'd some: the violet, pallid blue,
The little daisy, that at evening closes,
The virgin lillie, and the primrose true,
With store of vermeil roses.
To deck their bridegroom's posies
Against the bridal-day, which was not long;
Sweet Thames! run soft till I end my song."

EDWIN ARMISTEAD.

Leeds.

DR. JOHNSON AND MACAULAY.—In Boswell's Johnson (vol. iii. p. 353, A.D. 1778), occurs the following passage:—

"Looking at Messrs. Dilly's splendid edition of Lord Chesterfield's Miscellaneous Works, he (Johnson) laughed, and said: 'Here are now two speeches ascribed to him, both of which were written by me; and the best of it is, they have found out that one is like Demosthenes, and the other like Cicero.'"

Johnson wrote the Parliamentary Debates at that time for the Gentleman's Magazine, &c.; hence the statement as to authorship. In Macaulay's review of Thackeray's History of Lord Chatham, we observe the following:—

"A contemporary historian," says Mr. Thackeray, "describes Mr. Pitt's first speech as superior even to the models of ancient eloquence. According to Tindal, it was more ornamental than the speeches of Demosthenes and less diffuse than those of Cicero."

This parallelism is curious; and gives rise to the question, whether it was Tindal who applied the same simile to Chesterfield's supposed oratory mentioned by Johnson? Upon whom should the simile be fathered? Macaulay's favourite phrase about a man's eloquence being as durable as the English language, is well known.

PHILOLOGUS.

THE VICTORIA CROSS.—The following is an extract of the rules and ordinances of the above-named naval and military decoration:—

"Firstly, it is ordained that the distinction should be styled and designated 'The Victoria Cross,' and shall consist of a Maltree Cross of bronze," &c. &c.

How has it happened that the decoration is in the form of Cross patée, and not in the form of a "Maltree Cross," as prescribed by Her Majesty's command?
J. S. R.

Queries.

BARONETESS.—I have always understood that the legal designation of a baronet's wife was Dame. But Chamberlain (Mag. Brit. Not., ii. 47) states that Sir Cornelius Speechman, General in the service of Holland, was created a baronet Sept. 9, 1686, with a special clause of precedence for his mother, who was to take the rank and title of a Baronetess of England. S. P. V.

THE BELL INN AND BROADHURST.—The notice of the "Old Inns of Southwark," in the New Year's number of "N. & Q.," reminds me of a query I have long intended making relative to the scenes of Archbishop Leighton's retirement and death. I am anxious to know whether there are any representations extant of the Bell Inn, Warwick Lane, and of the mansion of Broadhurst in Sussex. The Bell Inn, at the time of Leighton's death in 1684, was but some sixteen years old, its predecessor having been destroyed in the Great Fire. In Mr. Chambers's Book of Days, there is a woodcut of the modern Bell Inn as it now stands. How far it resembles the inn of 1668, I know not. The mansion of Broadhurst, the property of Mr. Lightmaker, has long since disappeared. I shall be much obliged to any one who will kindly give me the required information, either privately or through the medium of "N. & Q."

EIRIONNACH.

CARICATURE: SYR MITCHIL BRUCE.—A print collector would be glad of any information about a curious caricature, entitled "Syr Mitchil Bruce, Stowkiller, 1742; W. Stukeley, inv. et delin." It represents a naked man with weights round his neck, pursued into a fiery lake by a demon, from whose lips issue the words "Arthurs Oon." The following Latin words are at the bottom: "Furias, ignemque severum Cocyti metuet tortosque Ixionis angues." J. B. D.

CHALMERS OF CULTS: NOVA SCOTIAN BARONETCY.—It is presumed that this Aberdeenshire family were concerned in the Rebellion, and the title of "Sir" forfeited. The last that enjoyed the title was Sir Charles Chalmers of Cultra, Captain in H. M. Royal Regiment of Artillery. I am anxious to find particulars of a pedigree that will connect this Sir Charles Chalmers with other members of the Cultra family, viz. Rev. James Chalmers, D.D., Rector of Little Waltham and Wickham St. Paul, both being in the county of Essex. His son was the Rev. Henry Chalmers, D.D., also Rector of Little Waltham.

JOHN RICHARDSON.

12, St. Helen's Place, London.

COINAGE. — In the Sunday Magazine for Nov. 1864 (p. 139), it is stated that, "in round numbers, two millions of sovereigns may be manufactured from a cubic yard of metal." Is this a correct statement? It is further stated, that if we were converting into gold all the silver and copper coinage in the world, and melting the whole into a solid lump, it would not make a block of more than seven yards broad, and long and high. It is immediately afterwards assumed that the solid cube condensed would amount in value to 600 millions of sterling pounds.

Are these statements accurate, or is there any means of ascertaining the value of all the silver and copper coinage in the world?

There was the model of a pyramid of gold at the Great Exhibition of 1862 to indicate the bulk which all the gold of Australia would assume if put into a pyramidal shape. Was such model accurate? What amount of gold did it represent, and what has become of it? J. B. G.

DWIGHT FAMILY.—Can you put me in the way of tracing the pedigree of the Dwight family?

J. L. B.

12, Canning Street, Liverpool.

FRASER EPITAPHS. — William Fraser, Esq., Under-Secretary of State in 1700, was buried at or near Bath; where there is, I understand, a monument to his memory. His son Charles, minister successively at Madrid and the Hague, lies buried at Hove, near Brighton. I shall be very greatly obliged to any one who will kindly copy the inscriptions, and send them to me.

F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

THE INVENTOR OF GUNPOWDER.—Maitre Guérin in the new play of that name, is made to say:—

"L'inventeur de la poudre est mort de son invention. Avis aux inventeurs."

Is this a French tradition? If so, what are its details? H. C. C.

HARRISON FAMILY (3rd S. vi. 274.)—I shall feel much obliged if your correspondent CADET will have the kindness to inform me (a Norfolk man) in what village the Harrisons mentioned by him lived? And where an account of their motto—"Humus sumus"—can be found.

FRED. HARRISON.

London: 15, Carlton Villas, Maida Vale.

LEIGH HUNT'S DESCRIPTION OF A CLASSICAL WASHERWOMAN.—

"There is a rock from whose deep base
The bubbling fountains flow;
And from the top we sink the vase
To reach the stream below.

"I have a friend who thither brought Rich vests with radiant purple wrought,
To bathe them in the crystal dews,
Then on the rock's steep ridge display,
To the warm sun's ethereal ray,
The gaily tintured hues."—P. 151.

(Specimens and Notes on Living English Authors, Boston, 1845, 12mo, pp. 204.)

I cannot find the above among Leigh Hunt's poems, and he was careful that none should be lost. Is it a stray, or a burlesque? The author of the above-mentioned work treats him with half-contemptuous praise. E. S.

JACK-STONES. — In Ireland, as in almost every country of Europe, a domestic game is played with five pebbles, or five small bones, which are thrown up into the air, and caught as they fall on the back of the hand. The Greeks called these τετράλιθοι, and they seem to have been the original of our dice, when numbers were marked on the several sides. In its primitive form, the pastime is called by the modern Italians, mano in cielo; by the Spaniards, juega de tahas; by the French, jeu des osselets; and by the Irish, jack-stones. What is the origin of the latter word? Ought it to be spelled jack-stones, from the act of throwing them into the air previously to catching them on the back of the hand in their fall? Is the term common in England, as it is in Ireland?

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

MODERN LATIN PRONUNCIATION. — Many years have elapsed since I acquired a tolerable knowledge of Latin, and perhaps new discoveries have been made in this progressive age as to the pronunciation of words. Can any of your correspondents give me a satisfactory reason for what is taught, in the Edinburgh Academy, as to the proper pronunciation of the genitives of domus and fructus? I am now told that do-muse and fruc-tuse have superseded domus and fructus. J. M.

LELAND'S "ITINERARY," AND ST. SARIC. — In Leland's notice of Sonning, or Sunning-on-Thames, near Reading, is the following: —

"There is an old chapelle at the east end of the church of St. Saric, whither of late tyme resortid in pilgrimage many folkes for the disease of madness."

I am very much interested in the detection of the word canonized under the name as above, and should heartily thank any one who enabled me to lay hold of him. I have searched in vain in the library of the British Museum. There is no trace of the saint in Sonning church of the present day, though the fabric in Leland's time must have been mainly as it is now, excepting the embellishments, which were added a few years ago.

H. E. V.

"LIMEHOUSE," unde deriv.? — The three following extracts occur in Cunningham's Handbook of London, 1850: —

"Lime-hurst or Lime-host, corruptly called Lime-house." Spec., p. 157.

"At last they left Greenwich; the tide being at great low fall, the watermen get afraid of the crosse cables by the Lime-house." — Tarlton's Jests, 1611.

"[24th Oct. 1681. By coach to Captain Marshe's at Lime-house, to a house that hath been their ancestors' for this 250 years, close by the Lime-house, which gives the name to the place." — Pepys.

Tarlton, Stow's contemporary, it will be observed, adopts the usual spelling of the word, and Pepys actually mentions the "house" as still existing in his time. Stow's etymologies are not always to be trusted. "Lime-hurst" would mean a grove of lime trees; but what would host mean?

JAYDEE.

"MEMOIRS OF THE LIFE OF LORD LOVAT," London, printed for M. Cooper, at the Globe, in Paternoster Row, 1746, sm. 8vo, pp. 88. No author's name. Who was the author of this pamphlet? He states on p. 1, that he had a personal acquaintance with his lordship for many years. F. M. S.

MILTON AND CHARLES II. — In Mr. Mark Lemon's Jest Book, No. 879, there is a statement to the effect, that Charles II. and his brother James called on Milton and insulted him in a most cowardly manner with reference to his blindness. I am anxious to know if there be any foundation for this statement, and where it is to be found.

E. S.

Edinburgh.

EARLY MSS. ON ENGLISH LAW AND GOVERNMENT. — Can any reader of "N. & Q." give the names of any private libraries likely to contain the MS. works of any celebrated writers of the fifteenth century on the Principles of Law and Government in England, most of our public libraries having been searched already? KAPPA.

GENERAL PAOLI'S RESIDENCE IN LONDON. — It is stated in Boswell's Johnson (vol. iii. p. 390, A.D. 1770): —

"On that morning Johnson came to me from Streatham, and, after drinking chocolate at General Paoli's in South Audley Street, we proceeded to Lord Marchmont's in Curzon Street."

We also find, from the Annual Register, that Paoli lived in Oxford Street,* near the corner of the Edgware Road. Can the number, or the exact position of these houses be given?

H. L. J.

ST. DONAT'S CASTLE. — Can any of your correspondents furnish any information relating to a book entitled Venustum Poema, by D. Thos. Leyson, a native of Neath, and afterwards a physician at Bath? It was published in 1560. A transcript of such parts of the poem as describes the castle of St. Donat's, in Glamorganshire, is desired. Is there any foundation for a tradition that Wesley once preached from the fountain, in the centre of the court, at St. Donat's castle? And also, explain why its owners, the Stradlings, who were ultra-royalists, are not in the list of persons who compounded for their estates during the Commonwealth? S. A.

SOCIETY OF INDUSTRY. — I should be much obliged by information as to the nature, and whether still in existence, of a Society who struck a medal of which I give particulars: — Round the edge (face) — "Peace and Plenty are the fruits of industry and subordination." On face: Two female figures; one holding a horn of plenty, and the other an olive branch, with a beehive between them. On reverse of medal is the name of holder, "Mr. Peel, Trustee, 1792." Surrounding the name: "Society of Industry, founded 29 Nov., 1783."† S. C.

WHITBREAD FAMILY IN SUSSEX. — In the Memoirs of the Rev. John James Whitbread, 1854, p. 2, I find the following passage: —

"Mr. W.'s family have resided for several centuries in Schorndorf, and one branch of it is believed to have come to England about the period of the Norman Conquest, who are supposed to have been the ancestors of the family now known in this county as the Whitbreads. An old churchyard in Sussex, not very far from Brighton, contains several tombstones of considerable antiquity erected over members of this family, where the orthography of the name approximates very nearly to the German mode of spelling it."

[* Gen. Paoli's letter, dated "Londra, 10 Dec. 1796," is signed "Oxford Street, No. 200." — Ed.]

[† This Society appears to have been connected with the county of Lincoln. Vide the Gent. Mag., lxi. (ii.) p. 843. — Ed.]

The immigration of an untitled German family into England about the period of the Norman Conquest would be very difficult to verify. The name of Weitbrecht does not appear in Rietstap's Armorial Général. It means "far-shining," and has, therefore, no connection with Whitbread so far as its meaning is concerned. Can any reader of "N. & Q." inform me what "old churchyard in Sussex" is alluded to in the above extract? As for the "tombstones of considerable antiquity," very few stones in open churchyards can show inscriptions more than two centuries old.

JAYDEE.

Queries with Answers.

REREDOS.—I shall feel obliged by one of your architectural correspondents informing me what is the Latin equivalent to reredos, rerdos, reredosse, arrière dos, &c.

Does the Architectural Dictionary contain any philological or etymological matter?

A CORRESPONDENT OF FIFTEEN YEARS.

[The Medieval Latin equivalent for this term is given variously by Du Cange sub voce as dorsale, dosule, dozale, dorsile pallium, and dorsuale. It is a term applied to the back of a throne, or other seat of state, as well as to the hangings behind an altar. Reredos is also similarly applied, and sometimes means the iron back to an old-fashioned fireplace, where the wood is burnt on the old andirons. Some very valuable information is given in Viollet-le-Duc, Dictionnaire de Mobilier, sub voce "Dorsal."

As to the work of which our correspondent inquires, it is the Dictionary published by the Architectural Publication Society. The articles are written by various members of a Committee, to whom they are allotted, or by whom chosen, as seems best. These articles are then put into type in "slip proofs," and circulated through the whole Committee, each member of which sends his corrections or emendations, or further information, as the case may be. The whole is then referred back to the original writer, so that the article may be made as complete and correct as possible. Every statement, authority, quotation, or other similar matter, must be verified with the original: and it is very curious to see that, even in such books of the highest authority as Bingham's Origines, or Liddell and Scott's Dictionary, slips of the pen have been discovered.

As to our correspondent's query we can only say, not only is the philology and etymology of every word carefully given in all the ancient and modern languages, but the chemistry, botany, geology, natural history, and everything connected with any material used in architecture, is fully entered into. The literature of the subject, from Homer downwards—including all incidental remarks in the Greek tragic poets—or in Aristophanes, in Herodotus, in Strabo, or Pausanias—in the Roman writers, particularly Vitruvius and Pliny—in the lexicographers and in the mediæval chroniclers—is also given as fully as possible, and every article illustrated by engravings. The work is rather more than half completed, and bids fair to be the most comprehensive yet published on any branch of art or science. Among the writers, the following names may be recorded: the late Professor Cockerell, Professors Donaldson and Kerr, Messrs. Angell, Ashpitel, Burnell, Gosling, I'Anson, Knowles, Lewis, Lockyer, Nelson, J. W. Papworth, Wyatt Papworth (the active secretary), Smirke, Tite, &c., &c.]

RELICK SUNDAY, ETC.—In the churchwardens' books of St. Martin's Outwich, the following entries occur:—

"Relike Sondag, 1524. Payde for red wyne on Relykys Sondag, 14.

"Puschall, or Hallowed Taper, anno 1525. Payde to Thomas Vance, Waxechandeler, for makynge & renewynge of the beme lyght, and for makynge of the Paskall, wth the tenabur candell and crosse candell, xxs."

Can you give me any information about "Relic Sunday," which, according to Halliwell, is the third Sunday after Midsummer Day? Can you also explain what the "beme light" and the "tenabur candell" were? The extracts are given in Godwin and Britton's Churches of London.

R. B. PROSSER.

[In the Harl. MS. 2247, is a curious collection of Postills, or Homilies, written in the reigns of King Edward IV. and King Henry VII. At fol. 168 b is one entitled "In festo Reliquiarum," commencing "Worshipful friends, on Sunday next coming shall be the holy feast of all relicks (called Relick Sunday), that be left here in earth to the great magnificence, honour, and worship of God and profit to man, both bodily and ghostly, for inasmuch as we be insufficient to worship and reverence singularly all reverent relicks of all saints left here in earth, for it passeth man's power. Wherefore holy church, in especial the Church of England, hath ordained this holy feast to be worshipped the next Sunday after the translation of St. Thomas of Canterbury, yearly to be hallowed and had in reverence."

For some notices of the Tenebræ office of Wednesday, Holy Thursday, and Good Friday, consult "N. & Q." 2nd S. viii. 32.]

"THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND AND IRELAND."—When was this designation first used? See Procter's Book on the Common Prayer. O. T. D.

[That unmeaning clause, "The United Church of England and Ireland," which occurs on the title-page of The Book of Common Prayer, was first used at the commencement of the present century. The authority for this phrase is the fifth article of the Union of 1800: "That the Churches of England and Ireland be united into one Protestant (!) episcopal Church, to be called 'The United Church of England and Ireland.'" Of course, churchmen are not responsible for the theology of Acts of Parliament, especially those passed during the dark ages of the Georgian era. We cannot see that in reality the Church of Ireland has been in any respect more united with the English since the Union than before it. It is still perfectly independent as to jurisdiction. It still has its own proper Book of Common Prayer, its own Convocation, and its own peculiar customs. The Irish service book contains a prayer for the Lord-Lieutenant; an Office for Visiting Prisoners; and a Rubric concerning the time of publishing banns, which are not found in the English Prayer Book. The late Archbishop Magee, in one of his published Charges, very distinctly asserted the authority of the Irish Prayer Book. As regards doctrine and general discipline, it has always been united with the Church of England.]

TITLE OF MAJESTY.—When was the title of Majesty appropriated to English sovereigns. It was occasionally used at an early period; but was at first almost confined, as a title, to the Emperor.

HISTORICAL.

[We believe Henry VIII. was the first English sovereign who was styled "His Majesty." The titles of English sovereigns have undergone many changes: Henry IV. was "His Grace;" Henry VI., "His Excellent Grace;" Edward IV., "High and Mighty Prince;" Henry VII., "His Grace," and "His Highness;" Henry VIII., first "His Highness," and then "His Majesty." "His Sacred Majesty" was the title assumed by subsequent sovereigns, which was afterwards changed to "Most Excellent Majesty."]

HILPA AND SHALLUM.—In Frazer's Magazine for January, 1865 (p. 95), occurs the following sentence in an article on Richardson, the novelist:—

"In strong contrast to these boisterous lovers is the gentle and pious Sir Charles, who wooed her in sentences a page long, and by slow approaches, which remind one of Hilpah and Shallum."

What is the allusion here? If it refer to anything biblical—and I know my Bible passably well—I cannot recall it.

O. P.

[Aldison's charming legend of Hilpa and Shallum will be found in the eighth volume of The Spectator, Nos. 564, 565. Hilpa, the Chinese antediluvian princess, was one of the hundred and fifty daughters of Zilpah, of the race of Cain, by whom some of the learned think is meant Adam. Shallum, her lover, "of a gentle disposition, beloved both by God and man," was lord of a manor consisting of a long chain of rocks and mountains, which goes under the name of Tirzah.]

MR. BENTLEY'S HARLEQUINADE "THE WISHER." Was this piece, which Bentley's quondam friend Walpole speaks of as very witty and humorous, till maimed for party purposes, ever played or printed? And if so, is any copy to be got of it? (See Walpole's Letters, Cunningham's edit. iii. 407, 491, 512; viii. 190.)

QUIVIS.

[Richard Bentley's comedy, Wishes, or Harlequin's Mouth Opened, was acted at Drury Lane on July 27, 28, and 30, 1761, and at Covent Garden on Oct. 3, 1761. After being circulated in manuscript, admired and applauded by those who had perused it, it was first privately rehearsed at Lord Melcombe's villa, afterwards Brandenburg House. It was never printed. See Baker's Biog. Dramatica, ed. 1812, and Geneste's Hist. of the Stage, iv. 617. Consult also A Letter to R— B—, Esq., author of the new Comedy, called The Wishes. Lond. 8vo, 1761.]

Replies.

"THE REFORMED MONASTERY."

(3rd S. vi. 456.)

That a copy of this work, dated 1677, exists in the Bodleian Library, may be seen by a reference to the Catalogue under the initials B. (L.). Watt gives it, with the date 1678, under the name Jesus, and makes no mention of the author. In order to facilitate the discovery of the author, it seems desirable to give the whole of the title, which I here transcribe from a copy in the public library of this University, the frontispiece to which has been torn out.

"Clastrum Animæ: The Reformed Monastery; or, THE LOVE OF JESUS. A sure and short, pleasant and easy way to HEAVEN. In Meditations, Directions, and Resolutions to Love and Obey JESUS unto Death. In two Parts. LONDON, Printed for Henry Brome, at the Gun in St. Paul's Church-Yard, the West-End. MDCCLXXVII."

The second part, which has a shorter title, is dated MDCCLXXVI. The Imprimatur is dated "Ex Ed. Lambeth. Febr. 16, 1675-6. The work is dedicated to John [Fell], Bishop of Oxford, who was also Dean of Christ-Church, to whom the author expresses himself under obligations. In the preface to the first part he represents his aim to be "to have every Christian to be really devout and precise, without entering the cloister or the conventicle." In the preface to the second part he says:—

"Not that I would deny that places for Religious Retirement might afford many great advantages, in order to greater devotion and heavenly mindedness; for I bewail their loss, and heartily wish that the piety and charity of the present age might restore to this nation the useful convenience of them. Necessary Reforms might have repurg'd Monasteries as well as the Church, without abolishing of them; and they might have been still houses of Religion without having any dependance upon Rome;"—and more to the same effect, which he concludes thus: "Bene rixit qui bene latuit—he lives best and most safe, who is least acquainted with the world and lives farthest from it."

The Epistle Dedicatory is signed "Your Lordship's most dutiful Son and most humble Servant, L.B." Now I am very strongly of opinion that the author was Luke Beaulieu. We learn from Wood (Athenæ Oxon., iv. 808), that he was a native of France, educated at the University of Saumur, came into England on account of religion about the year 1667; was made divinity reader in the Chapel of St. George at Windsor; was admitted at Christ-Church, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.D.; was a prebendary of Gloucester, and chaplain to Chief Justice Jeffries. He was the acknowledged author of the following works:—

"Take heed of both Extreams; or, plain and useful Cautions against Popery and Presbytery, in two parts. Lond. 1675."

"The Holy Inquisition; wherein is represented what is the religion of the Church of Rome. Lond. 1681."

"A Discourse showing that Protestants are on the safer side, and that their religion is the surest way to heaven. Lond. 1687."

As neither of these works is in our University Library, I am unable to compare their style with that of The Reformed Monastery; but many parts of the preface to the first part of the latter work might well have done the same duty for the first of the three preceding works, "Take heed of both extreams." In one place he writes:—

"Must we retire into Thebais, with the fathers of the desert? Must we confine ourselves to the solitude of a Monastick Cell? Or shall we become Quakers, and profess the sullenness of Melancholy Fanatics? Why, truly in Popish Countreys, the Cloister hath ingross'd the name of Religion, and they that would be, or be thought to be, devout beyond others, do usually put on a Fryer's hood, and embrace the Rule of some Religious Order: and, amongst us, Puritanism hath usurp'd the name of Godliness."

This is so like a caution against "both extremes," that the presumption is thereby greatly strengthened that Beaulieu is the author. E. V. Cambridge.

[We have since discovered a copy of The Reformed Monastery in the British Museum entered under the initials B. (L.) The work no doubt is from the pen of Luke Beaulieu, as it was issued by the publisher of his other works. Beaulieu also translated Bishop Cosin's History of Popish Transubstantiation, Lond. 8vo, 1676. In addition to the few particulars given by Wood, we may add, that Beaulieu was Rector of Whitchurch in Oxfordshire, and Prebendary of St. Paul's. He died in 1728, and was buried at Whitchurch.]

JAMES I. AND MARSTON.

(3rd S. v. 451.)

"Consider for pity's sake what must be the state and condition of a prince whom the preachers publicly from the pulpit assail,—whom the comedians of the metropolis bring upon the stage,—whose wife attends these representations to enjoy the laugh against her husband,—whom the Parliament braves and despises,—and who is universally hated by the whole people."—De Beaumont, 1604, quoted by Von Raumer, ii. 206.

In illustration of the italicised portions, take the following from Marston's What you Will, in the prologue to which the author, who had already been imprisoned for ridiculing the Scots in his Eastward Hoe! says, he—

"Nor once dreads or cares

What envious hand his guiltless muse hath struck.

(1). Quadratus. Why hark, good Phylus (O that thy narrow sense Could but contain me now). All that exists

Takes valuation from opinion.

A giddy minion now.—Pish, thy taste is dull

And cannot relish me. (Act I. Sc. 1.)

(2). Jacomo. Hark! Lorenzo. Celso, the loose Venice Duke,

Is going to bed; 'tis now a forward morn

'Fore he take rest. O strange transformed sight,

When princes make night day, the day their night.

Andr. Come, we'll petition him.

Jaco. Away, away.

He scorns all plaints; makes jest of serious suit.

[Enter the Duke coupled with a lady; two couples more with them, the men having tobacco-pipes in their hands. The women sit; they dance a round. The petition is delivered up by Randolph; the Duke lights his tobacco pipe with it, and goes out dancing.]

Rand. St. Mark, St. Mark!

Jaco. Did not I tell you, lose no more rich time;

What can one get but mire from a swine? (Act I.)

Here the proof that the loose Venice Duke was he whom scandal called Rizzio's son, lies chiefly in the disproof; and the audience are directed to the true aim of the satire by the attribution of acts of marked unlikeliness. The prince is ostentatiously made a smoker and a dancer,—habits which, if need were, would be adduced to show that the tobacco-hating and ungainly monarch was not alluded to.

(3). Lampatho, apropos of nothing, says—

"The Venice state is young, loose, and unknit;
Can relish naught but luscious vanities.
Go, fit his tooth. O glowering flattery,
How potent art thou! Front, look brisk and sleek,
That such base dirt as you should dare to reek
In princes' nostrils. (Act II.)

(4). Ran. Cease, the Duke approacheth: 'tis almost night,

For the Duke's up: now begins his day.

Duke. What sport for night?

Lamp. A comedy entitled Temperance.

Duke. What not elects that subject for the Court?

What should dame Temperance do here? Away!

The itch on Temperance, your moral play!

Quadr. Duke, Prince, Royal blood!—thou hast the best means to be damned of any Lord in Venice—thou great man. . . . I will do that which few of thy subjects do,—love thee: but I will never do that which all thy subjects do,—flatter thee. (Act V.)

(5). Duke. How shall we spend the night?

Quadr. Gulp Rhenish wine, my liege; let our paunch rent;

Suck merry jellies; preview, but not prevent,
No mortal can, the miseries of life. (Act V.)

It should be remembered that there is nothing in the plot which necessitates the introduction of so loose-living a prince, or of such marked satire. The cause, therefore, must be sought in well-known external circumstances. Again, as De Beaumont wrote in 1604, and as Eastward Hoe! was published in 1605 (in three different editions) it is not unlikely that the suppressed passages of this play contained allusions not only to Scotchmen but to the king. This supposition is strengthened by the cutting of ears and slitting of noses with which Marston, Chapman, and Jones were all threatened, and by the story of the poison which Jonson's mother had prepared for her self and her son if sentence had been pronounced against him. It is not likely that punishment deserving of avoidance by poison would have been inflicted on the satirists of Scotchmen merely.

As to Queen Anna's attendance on these representations, Eastward Ho! was played by "the Children of Her Majesty's Revels," the "little yasses who were then the fashion," and that What you Will was played by the same, is shown by the stage direction at the close of the second Act, where "the sweet gallants" are represented by a "company of boys within." If the Queen did not really attend such representations, the fact that they were played by her company of boy actors might have led to the misapprehension, but if Charles I. and his Queen could be praised for their virtue, and the virtuous changes made in the Court, and could yet listen to the Colum Britannicum in which they were thus praised, Queen Anna could not outrage the manners of the times by enjoying a laugh against James. In the Colum Britannicum not only is the language most gross, but the immoralities of James and his Court are typified by all the worst details of the Jovian mythology.

I would add that, as the players changed the Scotch lord in the Merchant of Venice, into "that other lord," so we can now understand why the folio, printed as it was from an acting copy, omitted in Act I. Sc. 4, Hamlet's long speech beginning "This heavy-headed revel." It is not probable that they were purposely levelled at James, but no words could be more pointedly applicable.

B. NICHOLSON.

New Zealand.

PRETENDED SON OF LOUIS XVI.

(3rd S. vi. 473.)

Besides the work translated from the French by the Hon. and Rev. C. G. Perceval, Rector of Calverton, Bucks, 1838, there is a work by A. De Bonacheane, translated by W. Hazlitt, under the title—

"Louis XVII., his Life, Sufferings, and Death: the Captivity of the Royal Family in the Temple," 1853.

This prince was born in 1785, and died June 8, 1795; and his titular sovereignty lasted not quite seventeen months, his father Louis XVI. being beheaded January 21, 1793 (Walter Scott's Life of Napoleon, c. xiii.) His uncle, the Count of Provence, born 1755, succeeded to the title in 1795, but not to the sovereignty as Louis XVIII.

till 1814. I cannot adopt the epithet "pretended" son, given by your correspondent M. A., as the existence of this son is an historical fact, verified by the title Louis XVIII., as the existence of a titular Napoleon II. is verified by the present title of Napoleon III. I have not seen Perceval's translation; but if it be similar to Hazlitt's, it must be treated as historical, although like all history, errors may be detected in it.

T. J. BUCKTON.

Lichfield.

The following extract from The Times of Dec. 22 furnishes an answer to A. M.'s query,—if the statement it contains, that the pretended Dauphin "went to Java in 1853, and died there," be correct:—

"A Paris journal publishes the following strange history of an old Gothic arm-chair, which was sold a few days since at the public auction-rooms in the Rue Drouot. The article in question, at first richly ornamented, was presented by the maker to Maria Theresa, and figured in her boudoir. After the death of the Empress of Austria it was sent, in conformity with her desire, to Queen Marie Antoinette of France, and was subsequently used by Louis XVI. during his imprisonment in the Temple. After the King's tragical death Cléry, his valet-de-chambre, became its owner, and took it to England; where it successively became the property of the Prince Regent, and afterwards of the Duke of Cumberland. The latter took it with him to Berlin, and there sent it to an upholsterer for repair. The workman to whom it was intrusted found in the stuffing of the seat a diamond pin, the portrait of a boy, and several sheets of very closely written manuscript. The man sold the pin, and gave the portrait and papers to a watchmaker of his acquaintance. Some years later the watchmaker, whose name was Naundorff, endeavoured to pass himself off as Louis XVII., and produced the papers and portrait in support of his pretensions. After making some noise in France, and then in Belgium, where he lost his son, who called himself the Duke of Normandy, he went to Java in 1853, and died there. The workman who found the portrait and documents kept his secret till just before his death, when he revealed the whole to his family. One of his relatives, having ascertained that the chair was still at Berlin, purchased it, and sold it to a French traveller, who carried it to Paris; where it ultimately came into possession of an old woman, the inmate of an asylum for the aged, lately deceased. It has now been sold by auction with the rest of her effects."

The cutting, at all events, deserves to be preserved in "N. & Q." It has since been stated that this chair fetched a high price, and is now gone "into a Gallery in Piccadilly."

P. S.

TOURNAMENTS.

(3rd S. vi. 440, 477.)

In Favyn's Théâtre d'Honneur et de Chevalerie (Paris, 1620), tom. ii. 1752-1798, will be found a list of the thirty-six great German tournaments, with the arms in each case of the nobles or princes at whose expense they were held, as well as of the "Quatre Rois du Tournoy."

Favyn professes to correct the errors of Modius, whose book, entitled—

"Pandectæ triumphales, sive Pomparum et Festorum ac Solennium Apparatum, Conviviorum Spectaculorum Simulacrorum Bellicorum equestrium et pedestrium, Nannachiarum ludorumque, denique omnium nobiliorum tomi duo," was printed at Frankfort in 1586. As there are many discrepancies between the dates in Favyn and those given by your correspondent on p. 477, I have made a list of the first twelve tournaments. Favyn says:—

"La première assemblée fut tenue par l'Empereur Henry surnommé l'Oiseleur Premier du nom, Duc de Saxe, le Premier Dimanche d'après les Roys, l'an de Grace Neuf cents trente huit, en la Ville de Magdebourg," &c. &c.

1. Magdebourg	938
2. Rotenbourg	942
3. Constance	948
4. Mertspourg	969
5. Braunschweig	996
6. Treves	1019
7. Halle	1042
8. Augsbourg	1080
9. Gottingen	1119
10. Zurich	1165
11. Cologne	1179
12. Nürnberg	1198

The others agree with the list already given, with the exception of the three following:—

19. Bamberg	1362
28. Würzburg	1474
34. Bamberg	1486

It will be seen that the list above also supplies the omissions in the one given at p. 477, and that it fixes the date of the first tournament eight years later.

Although Favyn professes to correct Modius, the descriptions given by both of them of the arms borne at the earlier tournaments must be received with a good deal of caution. Arms had probably not become hereditary distinctions in those days, and Favyn and Modius appear to have assigned to those who took part in these tournaments the arms which were afterwards borne by their descendants. For example, at p. 1770, the arms of the Counts Palatine of the Rhine in the year 1337, are made to include the golden orb, or Reichs-Apfel, which was not granted until the year 1544. (Vide Spener, Operis Heraldici pars Specialis, Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1717, p. 678.)

The list given by your correspondent appears to be taken from Ruxner's Thurner Buch, published at Siemern about 1530, a copy of which very curious book I met with some years ago; a second edition was published later at Frankfort.

JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

QUENTIN MATSYS (3rd S. vi. 374, 421, 476.)—Your correspondent under the signature of W. H. JAMES WEALE, has shorn Quentin Matsys of some of his most towering plumes derived from the anvil and the pencil. It is, however, to be regretted some works of this great artist were not named, and where they are to be found, and whether "relaid" or retouched. Of the merit of the iron font-crane in the church of St. Peter at Louvain, but little can be said, excepting upon the finial, which certainly is well designed and ingeniously executed.

There is an exceedingly fine piece of ironwork in the beautiful church of Aerschot, a few leagues from Louvain: it is the only iron chandelier in mediæval design worthy of the age. While standing beneath it in fixed admiration, the gruff and busy Swiss growled in my ear, "That, sir, was made by Quentin-Matsys, and designed to hang over the tomb of his wife. It was lately found buried beneath a mass of rubbish, and much damaged; but has just been restored, and placed as you now see it." This is in substance engraved upon the hoop, which forms the basis of the design. Heigh, in his Continental Interiors, in his view of the magnificent screen, has given only a portion of this chandelier.

A tombstone, said on the same authority to have been discovered amongst the wrecks caused by the havoc of the French Revolution, and placed as it now remains, by the south door of the church, is inscribed to a female of the Matsys family.

If your correspondent would furnish a few remarks on this chandelier, on the artist (under whatever name he may be found), or on the tombstone, it is probable he would afford valuable information to your readers.

H. D'AVENET.

GENERAL HUGH MERCER (3rd S. vi. 473, 537.) From MR. EDWARDS's reply to C. W. B., General Mercer appears to have been of the family of Mercers of Knockbally Style, or of Lodge, both in the county of Carlow, one of whom (circa 1725) married a Vigors of Burage. Both these families I suppose to have descended from Colonel William Mercer, a poet and parliamentary officer under the Earl of Essex, who was the son of Mr. James Mercer, parson of Slaines, Aberdeenshire, and was settled at Dublin in 1784. He was five times married. I have always considered General Hugh to have been the great-grandson of John Mercer, whose Chronicle was published some thirty years since by the Spalding Club. He was born in 1721, educated as a medical man, served in that capacity, at the battle of Culloden, and probably finding the climate of Scotland too warm, emigrated shortly after that disastrous event to America.

M.

THE MICKLETON HOOTER (3rd S. vi. 464.)—The following facts may tend to throw light on this Gloucestershire mystery. About a year back sounds closely resembling those described by II., kept the neighbourhood of Brinsty Common, near Bromyard, in Herefordshire, in nightly fear. The noise, as respectable persons who frequently heard it assured inquirers, was "an awful wailing sort of sound," appearing "to rise and fall," sometimes "quite close," and "the next instant dying away in the distance," and resembling nothing remembered in those parts. It was attributed variously to unheard-of beasts, escaped lunatics, foxes, owls, plovers, &c., while supporters of a supernatural theory were not wanting. I believe that some intelligent champions of a fox-origin are not yet satisfied; and it may be conceded that at a time when the good folks were, each night, in painful expectation of a hideous outbreak, a fox's cry may occasionally have been taken for that of the monster. But this much is certain: First, that several well-informed individuals came to the conclusion, after much sifting of evidence, that the sounds must proceed from a bird, and that bird a bittern. Secondly, that after a few weeks, a bittern, a bird very rarely seen in those parts, was shot by a farmer within a short distance of the chief scene of the alarms. Thirdly, that thereupon the reign of terror ended. I may add, that gamekeepers and others, well acquainted with the night music of foxes, were at a loss to account for the noise, until a bittern was suggested as its author, some time before the lucky shot (i. e. lucky for the alarmed rustics, though not lucky as slaying a rare and beautiful bird) was fired. n.

HOLLANDS: CHEERS (2^d S. iii. 169.) — I have just stumbled upon an early allusion to Holland's, which, as I do not find the query asking for any such references has been answered, you may perhaps like to insert.

In a Letter from the Facetious Doctor Andrew Tripe at Bath, 8vo, 1714, p. 27 (a pamphlet which has excited some notice in "N. & Q.") the writer says: —

"But by all means, you must renounce Holland, Geneva, and Brunswick Mum. For one corrupts your Lungs, and the other stupifies your Intellects."

Let me add an instance of the use of "cheers" in our modern sense, — a question debated in "N. & Q." some time since, though I cannot find the reference to it. The Scots Magazine for 1789, p. 356, describing an archery meeting at Hatfield, says, that Miss Harcourt was saluted "with three cheers" as Queen of the Target. H. T.

THE YOUNG PRETENDER (3^d S. vii. 1.) — I am nearly certain that Horace Walpole says that it was in the church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields that the Young Pretender conformed to our Church. I have read that a Book of Common Prayer was always at hand wherever he went. W. H.

OLD INNS OF SOUTHWARK (3^d S. vii. 13.) — A question is asked by D. R. J. respecting the old inns of Southwark, and especially the Catherine Wheel Inn, High Street. I would refer D. R. J. to a paper which I am now printing in the forthcoming part of the Surrey Archaeological Society's Transactions, and which I anticipate will very shortly be published. It is a continuation of, or rather a supplement to, Mr. Corner's paper on the same subject, and will contain much additional information relative to the White Lion Inn; but I have not met with anything about the Catherine Wheel Inn. WILLIAM HENRY HART.

Roupell Park, Streatham.

MUM (3^d S. vi. 434, 503.) — This was a strong sort of beer introduced from Germany at the beginning of the last century. It is sometimes called Hamburgh Mum; sometimes Brunswick Mum. In Playford's Second Book of the Musical Companion, W. Pearson, 1715, is the following —

"Catch in Praise of Mum.

"There's an odd sort of liquor
New come from Hamborough,
'Twill stick a whole wapentake
Thorough and thorough;
'Tis yellow, and likewise
As bitter as gall,
And as strong as six horses,
Coach and all.
As I told you 'twill make you
As drunk as a drum;
You'd fain know the name on't,
But for that, my friend, mum."

In the curious little book, Political Merriment; or, Truths told to some Tune, 1714, is a short poem, "In Praise of Brunswick Mum" (p. 96); and at p. 3 of the same work, "An Excellent Ballad," concluding with the following stanza: —

"Now, now true Protestants rejoice,
Stand by your laws and King,
Now you've proclaim'd the Nation's choice,
Let traitorous rebels swing;
Let royal George, the Papists' scourge,
To England quickly come:
His health till then, let honest men,
Drink all in Brunswick Mum."

Pope also has an allusion to this popular liquor, in the following couplet: —

"The clamorous crowd is hush'd with mugs of mum, Till all, tun'd equal, send a general hum."

EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

Some late articles relating to Mum bring to my remembrance a witty saying of Henry Erskine's, which you may possibly think worthy of notice. There used to be an Act of Parliament annually relative to the duties on "malt, mum, cyder, and perry." Mr. Perry, editor of the Morning Chronicle, being indicted by the Attorney-General for an alleged political libel, conducted his own defence, made an able speech to the jury, and had a verdict of "Not guilty." Not long afterwards Cobbett was indicted for a seditious passage in his Register, and, prompted by the success of the Chronicle's editor, resolved to follow the same course. He did so, but failed; being convicted and sentenced to a heavy fine and imprisonment. Henry Erskine's observation on this was, that Cobbett tried to be Perry, when he should have been Mum.

J. R. B.

JOHNSONIANA: SOLUTION OF CONTINUITY (3rd S. vii. 6.) — In the Dictionnaire de l'Académie the phrase "solution de continuité" is given as an established one in medical and philosophical works. This is in the fourth edition of the Dictionary, and is therefore nearly sufficient to disprove the notion that this phrase was taken from Johnson, though it is true that the said edition was published in 1762, and Johnson's letter was written in 1720. It can hardly have been publici juris till Boswell printed it. But it is immaterial. The phrase is also found in Cotgrave's old Dictionary, 1611.

LYTTELTON.

Hagley, Stourbridge.

PHILOLOGUS may be assured that this expression is far older than the time of Johnson. It will be found in Rabelais, I cannot give the exact reference. The application will not bear explanation in your columns.

A. F. B.

ENGLISH TUNES "ANNEXED" BY THE YANKEES (3rd S. vi. 430.) — The quotation, "Hearts of Oak," &c., is not from Garrick; but is part of Smollett's well-known song, "Come, cheer up my lads, 'tis to glory we steer."

C. B.

[The words of the still popular song, "Hearts of Oak," are by David Garrick (as stated by Mr. PINKERTON). The song was sung by Mr. Champnes in Harlequin's Invasion, in 1759. The tune is by Dr. Boyce. Vide Chapell's Popular Music of Olden Time, ii. 715.—ED.]

Dr. Boyce was the composer of this fine old patriotic song. I have two broadside copies now before me. One is entitled "A Loyal Song, sung by Mr. Champnes in Harlequin's Invasion;" the other "A Loyal Song set by Dr. Boyce." Harlequin's Invasion was a pantomime produced at Drury Lane, Dec. 31, 1759. The dialogue was written by David Garrick, and the plot and machinery were of his invention.

EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

Nolo EPISCOPARI (3rd S. vi. 48, 189.) — Dr. Farmer, it is said, twice refused a bishoprick. The following instance deserves notice from the curiousness of the reply. My authority is Dibdin's Reminiscences (vol. i. p. 173): —

"He (Dr. Andrews, Dean of Canterbury), had a full, strong voice, and is said never to have used it more sonorously and effectively than when, to the Prime Minister's question (I think it was Lord Liverpool's, though Mr. Perceval gave him the deanery), 'whether he would be a bishop,' he answered 'Nolo.'"

P. W. TREPOLPEN.

COMPOSITION AT HABERDASHER'S HALL (3rd S. vi. 266.) — After the royalist party had been subdued, commissioners were appointed by the parliament to compound their estates. These commissioners sat at Haberdashers' Hall. In Cary's Memorial of the Great Civil War, vol. ii. p. 277, will be found a letter from Francis Rous to Sir Harry Vane relative to this commission. Amongst other matters he complains "that there is little hope of despatch at Haberdashers' Hall, they having before them, as a lawyer of the counsel of the trustees told me, fourscore causes when a motion was to be made for this business."

P. W. TREPOLPEN.

MUMMY (3rd S. vi. 267.) — There is in the Museum of the College of Surgeons, Dublin, the body of a woman, which was accidentally discovered in the Bog of Ardee, co. Louth, in 1849. The skin is completely tanned, forming an integument like leather in colour and texture, and thus preserving unaltered the form and proportion of body and limbs, and there is no perceptible smell, or other sign of decay. The tradition amongst the neighbouring peasantry was, that about seventy years previously, a girl named Mary Carcha had poisoned herself (? with arsenic) in a fit of jealousy; and as the peasantry would not permit the body to be interred in consecrated ground, it was buried in the Bog; and now, after a lapse of eighty-five years — seventy beneath the peat, and fifteen exposed to atmospheric influences — the body lies in a glass case in the Museum, having been completely mummied, or rather converted into adipocere, by the tannin and other antiseptic constituents of the peat, which seem to have penetrated every part of the structure; for the bones were at first so soft as to be easily penetrable by any sharp instrument; but after exposure to the air gradually resumed their normal hardness.

J. L.

Dublin.

BYRON'S "DON JUAN" (3rd S. vi. 513.) — Mr. WARREN doubtless refers to the stanzas issued from the Great Totham press, under the following title: —

"Some Rejected Stanzas of Don Juan, with Byron's own curious Notes. The whole written in Double Rhymes, after Casti's manner, an Italian Author from whom Byron is said to have plagiarized many of his Beauties. From an unpublished Manuscript in the possession of Captain Medwin. A very limited number printed. Great Totham, Essex: Printed at Charles Clarke's private Press, 1845."

The pamphlet is a quarto, and contains twenty stanzas complete, except the third, which has the last couplet omitted. The stanzas occupy five pages, being printed only on one side, and the notes (eleven in number) fill two pages. With all my respect for the genius of Byron, I do not find these stanzas at all worthy of him; but keep my copy of them as a curiosity, never having seen this publication elsewhere.

ESTE.

ASSETS M'DIARMID (3rd vi. 507.)—The book-seller at Aberfeldy, who issued the edition of M'Diarmid's pamphlet in 1841, appears to have no feeling for the rough eloquence of the author, and equally little disposition to make allowance for the difficulty he may have felt in the use of what to him must be regarded as a foreign language. On the contrary, the motto chosen for the titlepage indicates a desire to draw down contempt upon the work. I have now before me a copy, of which the title runs thus:—

"Striking and Picturesque Delineations of the grand, beautiful, wonderful, and interesting Scenery around Loch-Earn. By ANGUS M'DIARMID, Ground-officer on the Earl of Breadalbane's Estate of Edinample. Superas se tollens in cæcis, in astra surgens. Edinburgh: printed for the Author by John Moir, 1845."

The dedication to the Earl bears the same date, which seems to mark this as the first edition. In the year now referred to I was myself at Loch-Earnhead, where I saw the book at the inn, and was also introduced to the author, then a fine athletic young man, who, though manifesting abundantly the enthusiasm which prompted him to compose his Delineations, conducted himself with a degree of modesty which, in the society of Saxons, a Gaul of that day could hardly have been expected to maintain. Whatever may be thought of M'Diarmid's style as a writer of English, every candid reader will give him credit for a keen perception of the beauties of natural scenery, and will admire the generous ardour which he displays when describing any act of heroism, or feat of manhood. He may even be commended on the score of his charity: for so unwilling does he appear to judge harshly of his neighbours, that his strongest expression for a robber goes no further than calling him "a man of incoherent transactions." If my recollection serves me, I was informed that the gentleman who put M'Diarmid's work to press was a Colonel Riley, or O'Reilly. I am not certain, after the lapse of so many years, whether the name assumed the English or the Irish form: and as in 1815 "N. & Q." were only in posse, the inducement to record that class of facts, and even the means of doing so, were wanting. It may be presumed that the Colonel, and not the author, is responsible for the Latin motto which appears on the titlepage.

R. S. A.

SCARLETT FAMILY (2nd S. ix. 107.)—A Genealogist is mistaken in regard to Christiana Scarlett's marriage into the family of the Gordons of Earls-ton. Sir John Gordon's first wife was Juliana J. Scarlett. By her he had no family, and Sir William Gordon's mother was an Irving of Gribton.

GAMMA.

ENGLISH SOLDIERS AT THE BATTLE OF LEIPZIG (2nd S. viii. 537.)—I spoke on this subject a few days ago to an old soldier in this parish, who was at the battle of Leipzig. He tells me that the only English there were a troop of artillery armed with rockets, which were then a new invention. He thinks that there were in all about one hundred men under Captain Bogue, and attached to Bernadotte's army. He describes the rockets as most effective, and as, from their novelty, causing great confusion in the French army. The troop remained for some time attached to Bernadotte's army.

GAMMA.

DISCLAIMING (3rd S. vi. 302, 461.)—

"He was born at Wakefield, in Yorkshire, in the year 1653, and notwithstanding the heralds, as appears by their books, thought fit to disclaim his father's pretensions to bear arms as a descendant from the Radcliffes of Dilton, in the county of Northumberland, the chiefs of which family had been knights, barons, and earls from Henry IVth's time to this very day, yet the late Earl of Derwentwater, Sir Francis Radcliffe, acknowledged him for a kinsman, and suffered the son to wear a bend in graille sable, field argent, on his coach, which none of the College belonging to the Earl Marshall thought fit to animadvert on during his life, though they have admonished the University of Oxford not to erect any such escutcheon over or upon his monument."—Life of Dr. Radcliffe (1715) p. 3.

E. H. A.

SARSEN STONES (3rd S. vi. 456, 523.)—I am obliged by the replies I have received, and beg to observe that, though Stukeley was a great antiquary, he was nevertheless a visionary one, and I should be sorry to rely on him as an authority in points of archaeological obscurity. There are very few Phœnician words known, and I question very much whether Sarsen be one of them. It has been too much the custom to attribute to the Phœnicians the origin of things for which no reasonable explanation could be suggested; but I have known the Phœnician hypothesis so completely blown to the winds in one remarkable instance of ancient relics, that I have no great faith in the solution of any antiquarian problem founded upon such an assumption. With regard to the Sarsen stones of Stonehenge, they are not un-hearn, and moreover they afford rude examples of the tenon and mortice joint, therefore the prohibition in Deut. xxvii. 5, 6, and Jos. viii. 30, 31, will not apply to that and similar temples, however it may be thought applicable to such temples as Abury.

W. W. S.

A POEM HAVING ONLY ONE VOWEL (3rd S. v. 526.)—EIN FRAGER's desire for one-vowelled paragraphs may, perhaps, be stayed for awhile by the following poem, which, though probably not of Canadian origin, I have cut from a Canadian newspaper:—

"In the following only one vowel is used, and a very peculiar verse we have in consequence. We do not know who took the trouble to write the lines, but they are curious now they are done:—

'No monk too good to rob, or plot,
No fool so gross to bolt Scotch collops hot.
From Doujon tops no Oronoko rolls.
Logwood, not lotos, floods Oporto's bowls.
Troops of old toespots oft to sot consort.
Box-tops schoolboys, too, oft do flog for sport.
No cool monsoons blow oft on Oxford dour,
Orthodox, jog-trot, book-worm Solomons!
Bold Ostrogoths of ghosts no horror show,
On London shop-fronts no hop-blossoms grow.
To crocks of gold no dodo looks for food,
On soft cloth footstools no old fox doth brood.
Long storm-tost sloops forlorn do work to port.
Rooks do not roost on spoons, nor woodcocks snort,
Nor dog on snowdrop or on colts-foot rolls,
Nor common frog concocts long protocols.' "

ERIC.

Ville-Marie, Canada.

JOHN RALSTON (3rd S. vi. 455.)—John Ralston was a teacher of drawing about forty years ago in Manchester, and the neighbourhood. He was a man of some talent, and of a social disposition. His pictures consist principally of boat pieces, river and coast scenery. The colouring somewhat warm. There must be persons living in Manchester and the neighbourhood to whom he was known, and who could give further information concerning him. I merely speak from the knowledge and impressions of a boy. One of his pictures adorned the walls of "the nursery."

CROWDOWN.

"TAKE MY CAP" (3rd S. vi. 498.)—I have always understood this phrase to mean: "You have surpassed me, you may wear the cap"—as in fighting, the victor wins the belt.

We have the saying quite common: "You have capped me"—gone beyond me. Also, "That caps all."

J. A. G.

Islington.

PORTRAIT OF OLIVER (3rd S. vi. 444.)—The Goodwood portrait was brought to the notice of your readers some years ago (2nd S. ii. 468; iii. 410). On that occasion (iii. 514) I mentioned a portrait of Cromwell that I had seen, many years before, in the Duke D'Arenberg's collection at Brussels; which, to the best of my recollection, answered the description given of the one at Goodwood. And I now beg to repeat the wish that I then expressed, that some correspondent of yours at Brussels would be kind enough to communicate an account of it.

MELETES.

THE VIRGINIA COMPANY (3rd S. vi. 515.)—Much information respecting this Company is given in Mr. Sainsbury's Calendar of Colonial State Papers. Reference may also be made to Smith's History of Virginia; Stith's History of Virginia; Bancroft's History of the United States; Anderson's Colonial Church; and Lives of Nic. Ferrar, edited by the Rev. J. E. B. Mayor.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

"THE TICKLER" (3rd S. vi. 514.)—ABHBA will find, on further inquiry, that The Tickler is ascribed to Paul Hiffernan, an Irish writer, whose name comes to us heaped with obloquy. Your correspondent's query has set me looking over a lot of Irish tracts, mostly political squibs in verse; among which, I find one of those he inquires about, say:

"The Marrow of the Tickler's Works, or Three Shillings' worth of Wit for a Penny, in a Ballad. (To the tune of 'Derry Down.') There is more liquor in a Quart of Small-Beer for an Halfpenny, than in a Pint of Wine for a Shilling. 8 pp. 16mo. Printed in the year 1748."

The burthen of its prose and verse is to ridicule the truisms of the paper in question, which will no doubt be more intelligible to the initiated in the original Ticklers. In the "Dedication to the learned and celebrated Paul Hiffernan, M.D., author of the inimitable Ticklers," signed "Scriblerus," we have a confirmation of the correct ascription of the work. If your correspondent is looking up the satirical squibs "in opposition to the well-known Charles Lucas," I could show him the following if he was on this side the water:

"The Horse and the Monkey: a Fable humbly inscribed to Mr. C—s L—s, Freeman."

"A Scourge for the Incendiary."

"The Chymical Patriot: or, Lucas Awake."

All in verse, published at Dublin in 1749. There are no names of authors; but in some poetical satires of the same period, "B—t B—n," figure on the titles. Perhaps ABHBA can interpret these for me.

A. G.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE (3rd S. vi. 471.)—Your correspondent T. B. will, I doubt not, find the particulars of the case he refers to by looking for the name "Waterhouse" in the index to the Annual Register for 1830, and a year or two before and after that date.

I have not the means myself of referring to the Register, but the particulars, which are incorrectly given in The Examiner, made a lively impression on my mind at the time of the occurrence. The victim of the murder was not a farmer but a clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Waterhouse, incumbent of Stukely, in the county of Huntingdon, and the trial took place at the assizes for that county. He was a very old man with white hair, and the circumstantial evidence which hanged the prisoner was the finding in his cottage of a hatchet or bill-hook, with recent blood clotted on it mixed with a few white hairs. The medical witness at the trial declared that he had examined these hairs microscopically, and that he knew them to be hairs from the head of a human being.

The wounds which produced death were evidently made on the head with a sharp instrument, and the man, who was a very bad character, was convicted, and sentenced to death. Shortly before execution, not hoping to save his life, as supposed, but in order to revenge himself on the medical witness, he confessed the murder, and pointed out the place in which he had buried the instrument with which it was done, and that instrument was accordingly found. The blood and hairs on the hatchet found in the cottage were accounted for by his having killed a sheep with it by a blow on the head a short time before.

No doubt was entertained of the man's guilt before his confession: but, as in Müller's case, it was thought very strange that he had kept by him the evidence of his guilt, and so procured his own conviction.

The moral, however, deducible from this case is not so much the danger of convicting on circumstantial evidence, as the danger of relying upon opinions, on material points, authoritatively given by medical witnesses.

A. P.

Dublin.

I think I can give you a clue to the case of circumstantial evidence here referred to, as taken from a statement in The Examiner.

I have no doubt it refers to the case of Joshua Slade tried at the Summer Assizes at Huntingdon in the year 1827, and reported briefly in the Annual Register for that year at pp. 122 and 140. He was tried and convicted of the murder of the Rev. J. J. Waterhouse, a clergyman of recluse and miserly habits. The proof appears to have been that he murdered the unfortunate man with a hatchet or bill-hook. The judge was not satisfied with the conviction, and the criminal was twice respited.

In his confession he said that he had committed the murder with a sword which he had stolen a few weeks before from a public-house at Huntingdon. In all probability this is the case referred to by your correspondent T. B.

C. R. LITLEDAL.

T. T. C., Suffolk Street, Pall-Mall, E.

HEREFORDSHIRE QUERIES (3rd S. vi. 498.)—It will be interesting to MR. ROBINSON to know that in Sir G. C. Lewis's Provincial Words of Herefordshire (a volume, by the way, out of print), TUMP, i. e. a mound or hillock, is derived from the Welsh, tump. In the same glossary "to tump" is said to be a provincialism for "to put into small heaps." It is, of course, not improbable that the substantive is from the Welsh. Tomen, or tocmen, and tut, are synonyms for tump apparently in this border county. There is a Castle Twt hard by Kingston, and a Tomen Castle a mile or two beyond Radnor. Tut would seem to be akin to tot, as mentioned in your correspondent's letter. Passing over the Carey question, as to which I can offer no light, I would just remark, à propos of the last part of your correspondent's note, that there is no end to the names of places in this district which seem to have an Anglo-Saxon derivation. In the parish of Pembroke (the peneg, "penny," and brygg, "bridge") is a farm called Leen, which is probably derived from lean, A. S. for a reward. The parish of Knill suggests the origin of its name in cnyll, A. S. for "knell," the sound of a bell. Spon, or Spoud, a hamlet of Almeley (which may itself be derived from almes, A. S. for "alms") is not improbably to be referred to span, A. S. for "span." The Rodd, the name of a farm, suggests the A. S. for rood or cross, and so on ad infinitum. The meadow adjoining my lawn is called the Dummercroft, meaning, I suppose, domne-croft, "prædium domini." Any Anglo-Saxon scholar might do a great deal hereabouts in this matter of names and places. I regret my own ignorance and inability to do more than call to my aid and handle very unskillfully Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary. I have two fields, I should perhaps add, called "Great" and "Little Roman Hill," I know not from what antiquity.

J. DAVIES.

Moor Court, Kingston.

MOUTRE (3rd S. vi. 267, 316, 357.)—

"On appelle droit de moute, ce que payent les Vassaux pour mouler leurs blez au moulin banal du Seigneur."—Dictionnaire de Furetière, voc. MOUTRE.

MELETES.

SUPERSTITION OR SYMPATHY, WHICH? (3rd S. vi. 496.)—Nothing is more common than for a man, whose leg or arm has been amputated, to complain of pain in a toe or finger long after the limb is removed. May this not account for the marvels related under the above head? Speaking medically, it might be termed "sympathy."

A. W. D.

Sympathy.—When an arm or leg is amputated, of course the nerves which supply the hands and feet are cut across. This also, and its attendant consequences, keeps up an amount of irritation along those cut nerves, and causes pain; which pain is referred to the parts which before-time were supplied by them, as nerves refer their sensations to their extremities.

PHYSICIAN.

JUVENAL (3rd S. vi. 386.)—

"Eripient somnum Druso, citulisque marinis."
Sat. III. v. 238.

I cannot agree with H. C. C. in thinking that there is, in this line, any allusion that the commentators have failed to catch. Ruperti (whose name your correspondent appears to have inadvertently curtailed into "Rupert") after referring to Pliny for another purpose, proceeds thus: "qui etiam, lib. ix. 13, s. 15, docet, nullum animal graviore somno premi phocis."

A little lower down he goes on to say: "Sententia itaque h. l. est, strepitus curruum aurigarumque tantus est, ut vel animalia somniculosa expergescere queat."

No doubt Juvenal is alluding to seals. But why specially to the seals of Proteus? Sound sleep was a recognised characteristic of the whole race; and surely the object the satirist had in view was not to show himself off as a well-read scholar, but to put his meaning in a strong light by adverting to a fact in natural history well known to the readers of his day. MELETES.

BEAG-BHEUL: MODERN BELIEF IN THE BROWNIE (3rd S. vi. 511.)—The communication of F. A. M. corroborates and supplements my statements relative to the Carskey Brownie (Beag-bheul, or "Little-mouth"), in The White Wife (pp. 250-2). I there showed that the Cantire belief in the Brownie existed in 1863; although Sir Walter Scott had stated that—

"the last place in the south of Scotland, supposed to have been honoured or benefited by the residence of a Brownie, was Bodsbeck in Moffatshire, which has been the subject of an entertaining tale by Mr. James Hogg."

Since the publication of The White Wife, a valued correspondent, dating his letter Dec. 22, 1864, writes as follows:—

"In confirmation of what you say, there is no doubt whatever as to the belief in 'Little-mouth' existing at the present day. The people also believe in the evil-eye, and use charms to destroy the influence. Our friend Miss — has just returned from Carskey, where she occupied a bedroom next to Beag-bheul's room, much to the wonder of the servants, one of whom said to her: 'Eh, Miss! are ye no frichtet to sleep so near Beag-bheul? I wadna do it for a thoosan' poods!' The Laird has had many narrow escapes from accidents when riding, which the country people put down to the credit of 'Little-mouth.'"

This note, coupled with the communication of F. A. M., shows that the belief in the Brownie exists up to the present time in that very interesting Western Highland district, which Sir Walter Scott himself dubbed as "wild Cantire."

CUTHBERT BEDE.

HENRY PIMPERNEL AND JOHN NAPS (3rd S. vi. 110.)—The meaning of the allusion to these names, by ELIA, was asked for in "N. & Q." some months since, but has not been given [see p. 199]. Moxon & Co. announce a perfect edition of Lamb's Works, to console English readers for the exclusion (through the copyright law) of a forthcoming American edition; said to contain many pieces by Lamb, hitherto uncollected. I should have supposed, but for this, that the copyright of all Lamb's writings had already expired. But I would suggest that Messrs. Moxon's editor should enlighten his edition with notes explanatory of the many allusions and quotations scattered through Lamb's Works, that are too recondite for the attainments of "work-a-day" readers. C. B.

GRACE MACAULAY (2nd S. ix. 198.)—Mr. William Smith, ordained minister of Cranston in the Presbytery of Dalkeith, on October 31, 1733, was married on July 3, 1735, to — Macaulay, daughter of Mr. Robert Macaulay, minister at Stirling. They had one daughter, named Beatrix, born March 29, 1736. Mr. Smith married again in Feb. 26, 1742, Joan Baird, daughter of Mr. Baird of Chesterhall. By her he had five sons; one of whom was minister of Gulston—a son of whom is Dr. George Smith, now one of the ministers of Edinburgh. T. G.

THOMAS BARTON (3rd S. vi. 470.)—Edmund Marnion discharged the first fruits of the living of Eynesbury, in Huntingdonshire, on January 3, 1615 (First-fruits Registers, quoted in Gorham's History of Eynesbury, p. 119), and occurs rector, in the parish vestry records, in 1643. Will Messrs. C. H. & THOMSON COOPER give the authority for their statement that Thomas Barton was presented to that living in 1620? JOSEPH RIX, M.D. St. Neot's.

REV. DR. CHARLES LLOYD (3rd S. vi. 473.)—Dr. Lloyd was minister of the Unitarian Chapel at Palgrave in Suffolk, and kept a boarding school in the house formerly occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Barbauld. The Doctor lost his wife at Palgrave, Dec. 11, 1808 (Gent. Mag., Suppl., 1808, vol. lxxviii. pt. ii. p. 1191), and removed to Ilhgate about 1811. JOSEPH RIX, M.D. St. Neot's.

HARRISON'S CASE (3rd S. vi. 388, 423.)—Mr. George Lilly Craik prefaces the narrative of this trial, copied by him into the English Causes Célèbres (Knight's Miscellanies, vol. i. p. 255), by this account of his authority:—

"This is the famous case to which we have alluded in a preceding page (p. 129) in speaking of Sir Robert Hyde, the judge by whom it was tried. We will here give it as it is detailed, with considerable minuteness, and with such accompanying evidences as apparently to remove all doubt as to the facts, in an account first printed in 1676, probably under the direction of Dr. Thomas Shirley, or Sherley, physician to King Charles II., to whom the narrative seems to have been transmitted by his friend, Sir T. Overbury, a magistrate resident in the neighbourhood of Campden."

Mr. Craik here adds Sir T. Overbury's letter, but unfortunately does not mention where he met with the original of the epistle and the narrative.

ARCHIMEDES.

ARMS OF A CONQUERED KNIGHT (3rd S. vi. 483, 540.)—My note at p. 483 purported (as clearly as inverted commas, different type, and reference to volume, edition, and page could make it), to be an extract, without a word of comment, from Burke's Extinct Peerage. MR. ROBERT DYMOND, JUNIOR, is therefore not justified in supposing I have fallen "into a prevalent error." Whether what he alleges to be a mistake is so or not, could have been better judged had he conformed to the rules of "N. & Q.," and cited some authority for his statement.

WALTER RYE.

THE ATHENIAN MISOGYNIST (3rd S. v. 450, 406.) I cannot find the passage mentioned by MR. MALL in the Hippolytus, though in that play Euripides has certainly said enough against women to deserve the title of "the Athenian Misogynist." Aristophanes, though not complimentary to the sex, was not a woman-bater, but I think he is the person so called by the French Essayist.

Χρήματα πορίζω εὐποράτατον γυνή,
Ἀρχοντά τ' οὐκ ἂν ἐξαπατήσῃ ποτέ.
Αἰνὰ γὰρ εἰσὶν ἐξαπατῶν εἰδυμένα.

Ecclesiastus, vv. 236-8.

H. B. C.

U. C. Club.

RESTORATION OF ANCIENT BUILDINGS (3rd S. vi. 424, 538.)—The pleasing intelligence communicated by P. of Her Majesty's desire to restore Holyrood Chapel is what might be expected from the well-known patriotic sentiments of our beloved Queen, and so much the more pleasing that I have no doubt it will some day be carried into effect. The appeal to MR. FERREY is made in the right place; and I should suppose, with all deference, that to no one could the work of restoration be more confidently confided. As to St. Giles's church, I fear that one work of restoration at a time is enough for Scotland; but Her Majesty's example will work wonders. I am ashamed to own that the mass of my countrymen are sunk in utter apathy with regard to the Fine Arts in general, and look, in particular, on the splendid remains of ecclesiastical art that still abound on the historic soil of their native land, with a sort of pious horror, as of so many memorials, not of the Christian religion, but of some depraved form of pagan abominations. It is deplorable that such ignorance, combined with fanaticism, should exist in a country celebrated for the general good sense and information diffused among its people. Scotland was long cut off, both by prejudice and local barriers, from much intercourse with her more civilised neighbour, England, and took a delight in cherishing feelings and practices utterly alien to all sound and rational views. I speak of the common people, not of the nobility and gentry, whose minds were in general highly cultivated by education and foreign travel. The same better influences are now at work to improve the million; and a new leaven is permeating the old and stagnant body, and raising it to a higher, more refined, and more dignified condition. One remarkable symptom of this spirit of improvement is the strong desire expressed in many quarters for a more seemly celebration of divine worship in the manner of the Church of England. IONA.

UNHISTORICAL (3rd S. vi. 532.)—This word will be found in the dictionaries of Webster and of Worcester. No quotation is given, but Park is the authority cited by both.

EDWARD VILES.

15, Carlton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

The Music of the most Ancient Nations, particularly of the Assyrians, Egyptians, and Hebrews; with Special Reference to recent Discoveries in Western Asia and in Egypt. By Carl Engel. With Numerous Illustrations. (Murray.)

The author of this very curious contribution to the history of music, and who very unnecessarily requests indulgence for disadvantages which he fears he may labour under, in expressing himself in a language which is not his mother tongue, tells us that, having for years taken every opportunity of ascertaining the distinctive characteristics of the music both of civilised and uncivilised nations, he soon saw that the latter was as capable of yielding important suggestions, for the science and history of music, as the languages of savage nations in philological and ethnological inquiries. Being more and more convinced, as he proceeded, that in order to understand clearly the music of various modern nations, it was necessary to extend his researches to the music of ancient nations, he directed his attention to the Assyrian monuments in the British Museum. The facts which Mr. Engel has gathered from these studies form an entirely new addition to the history of music, and are put forth in the present volume, which must find favour with musical antiquaries. It is beautifully illustrated; many of the woodcuts, illustrative of Assyrian and Egyptian music, have been copied from the antiquities in the British Museum; while many of the Egyptian musical instruments are derived from Sir Gardner Wilkinson's well-known work.

Ballads and Songs of Brittany. By Tom Taylor. Translated from the "Barzaz Breiz" of Vicomte Hersart de la Villemarqué, with some of the Original Melodies harmonised by Mrs. Tom Taylor. With Illustrations by J. Tisson, J. E. Millais, R.A., J. Tenniel, C. Keene, E. Corbould, and H. K. Browne. (Macmillan.)

Who that takes any interest in the study of Folk Lore but knows the Barzaz Breiz of Villemarqué, and their great value in illustrating the history and connection of popular fictions? These records of the Celtic races of Brittany are of special interest to English antiquaries, and it was with no small pleasure that we heard of Mr. Tom Taylor having undertaken to make them better known to English readers. What he so undertook he has very successfully accomplished; and his version of Astron Nann Hag ar Goorigan—"The Lord Nann and the Fairy"—has all the ring and pathos of an old ballad—of any one of the many similar ballads current throughout Europe. This indeed may be very justly said of all his translations. The book is beautifully got up; and the illustrations are every way worthy of the racy old songs which they are intended to glorify, and of the reputation of the respective artists. We hope Mr. Taylor will be encouraged to give us more of these Ballads of Brittany.

A Selection from the Works of Alfred Tennyson, D.C.L., Poet Laureate. (Moxon.)

This little volume, which is a perfect gem in typography, paper, and ornamentation, is the first of a series of volumes which are about to appear under the title of Moxon's Miniature Poets. It contains upwards of sixty of the Laureate's poems. Could such a series be more worthily inaugurated?

Letters from Sir Robert Cecil to Sir George Carew. Edited by John Maclean, F.S.A. (Printed for the Camden Society.)

We must content ourselves with announcing this volume as one of great value for its illustration of the state of Ireland during the time when Carew was Governor of Munster, and of the personal character of Sir Robert Cecil.

The Public Schools Calendar, 1865. Edited by a Graduate of the University of Oxford. (Rivingtons.)

The utility of a Public School Calendar is obvious. We are glad to see that its preparation has been undertaken by one who, knowing the information which would be sought for in such a work, has obtained it from the best sources, namely, the Reports of the Public Schools Commissioners, and in most cases the authorities of the different schools.

The Berlin Society for the Promotion of the Study of Modern Languages offers two prizes to English, French, and German Scholars. The first prize of 100 Fredericks d'or (85L.) is for an Essay on Shakspeare's Influence on the Development of the English Language. The essay is expected to contain—1. An account of the stage of the development which poetic diction had attained in England in the period immediately preceding Shakspeare. 2. Illustrations of the progressive development of the language in the works of Shakspeare. 3. An exposition of the relation in which the peculiarities of Shakspeare stand to those of his contemporaries. 4. Illustrations of the influence of Shakspeare on the poetic diction of England. The subject of the second essay, the prize for which is to be 34L., is the History of the Criticism of the Shakspearian Drama among the Germans, as also among the Nations speaking the Romance Languages. The essays may be written in German, French, or English, and are to be forwarded to Professor Herrig, the President of the Society (Neue Friedrichstrasse, 16, Berlin), on or before July 1, 1866. Each essay is to be accompanied by a sealed letter containing the author's name and address, and superscribed with a motto, which is also to be annexed to the essay.

A very interesting Shakspearian discovery has been made in Germany. A copy of the Hundred Merry Tales has been found, which is said to be not only of an earlier date than the edition lately reprinted by Mr. Hazlitt, but also perfect, which unfortunately is not the case with that used by Mr. Hazlitt.

English Philologists will be glad to learn that Mr. Way's valuable edition of the Promptorium Parvulorum is all but completed; and that the Third Portion, which concludes the work, will probably be issued to the Members of the Camden Society as one of the books for the subscription of 1864-5.

In England we have journals devoted to the spelling as well as to the reading public; but they beat us in France. A journal has just been started in Paris under the title of Le Baby, "destiné à des abonnés qui la plupart ne savent pas lire."

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

APOLLINARI INTERPRETATIO PSALMORUM, VERBIS HEROICIS. Parisiis, 1568. 8vo.
FATHERMANN'S (DR. WM.) OBSERVATIONS ON THE CLIMATE OF IRELAND, &c. Dublin, 1801. 8vo.
PROCES DES TRAVAUX ANGLAIS, MM. Wilson, Hutchinson, Bruce, &c. Paris, 1815. 8vo.
MILLER'S (GEORGE, D.D.) SECOND LETTER TO THE REV. E. B. PUSEY, D.D. London, 1841. 8vo.

Wanted by Rev. B. H. Blacker, Rokeby, Blackrock, Dublin.

ROUSE'S DOCTRINE OF CHANCES.
BROWNE'S GUIDE TO THE TURF.
DENISON'S PHILOSOPHY OF THE TURF.
KENTFIELD ON BILLIARDS.
GREEN'S BOOK OF THE QUOE.

Any other Works on the History of the Turf, and the Theory of Chances.

Wanted by Mr. Henry Moody, Low Pavement, Nottingham.

NOTES AND QUERIES. First Series. Vol. II.
Percy Society Publications. Nos. 1, 6, and 17.
OSIAN'S POEMS. Perth, 1795. Vol. I.
SCOTTISH ANTIQVARIAN SOCIETY PROCEEDINGS. SM. 4to. Vol. I. Part 1. Vol. III. Parts 2 and 3.
EDINBURGH ROYAL SOCIETY TRANSACTIONS. Vols. III. IV. VI. and VII. Boards.

Wanted by Mr. Thomas G. Stevenson, 22, Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

Notices to Correspondents.

THE INDEX to our last volume will be issued with "N. & Q." of Saturday next.

HISTORICS will find the information which he desires respecting the title "Reverend" in our 1st S. VI. p. 216.

CAUTION TO OUR BOOK-BUYING FRIENDS.—We think it advisable to print the following letter:—

"Rokeby, Blackrock, Dublin, Jan. 6th, 1865.
"The Rev. B. H. Blacker presents his compliments to the Editor of "N. & Q." and thinks it well to mention the following particulars:—

"Three or four weeks since a list of books wanted by Mr. B. was kindly inserted by the Editor; and two or three days after a letter came headed 'Mr. Drummond, Esq., Easton Square, London,' in which the writer proposed to supply an excellent copy of one of the works—Librorum Publicorum Hiberniarum, &c.—for 1l. 5s., and specified a Post Office in the neighbourhood, in case Mr. B. would send an order for the amount. As the writer did not appear to be a regular bookseller, Mr. B. wrote at once to a clerical friend in London, asking him to call on the writer, and to arrange about the payment for, and the transmission of, the books. Mr. B.'s friend went without delay, but could find no such person. The owner of the house stated that many inquiries of the same kind had been made.

"As Mr. B. has reason to think that other Correspondents of 'N. & Q.' have been written to in like manner, he has been induced to trouble the Editor upon the subject."

N. J. H. The conception of the New Zealander sitting on the ruins of Westminster Bridge was no doubt suggested to Lord Macaulay by the poet Shelley, in a passage which occurs in the dedicatory letter of his poem, Peter Bell the Third to T. Brown, l. e. Moore. See "N. & Q." 1st S. IX. 361.

WM. DAVIS. For the bibliography of Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints, consult "N. & Q." 1st S. IX. 360.

T. T. W. There is so much that is conjectural in Dr. Norlane's account of the Rock Banns being connected with the sacrifices of the Druids, that our Correspondent must consult the work itself. The only authority quoted by the Doctor in support of his opinion is La Bel. de Gaul.

A. McNIVEN. Hicks's Hall is on Clerkenwell Green, and is the Sessions House of the County of Middlesex.

R. L. We cannot find in the British Museum an Eclogue on the marriage of Charles I. by Adam Abernethy. There is one in French (4to. 1687) signed J. D. B., and written as a dialogue between Jacques, Robin, and Andriot.—Mr. Patmore's dramatic MSS. will not be available for some weeks.

J. C. H. F. Some remarks on the passage in Milton's Lycidas (lines 158—163) occur in "N. & Q." 1st S. VI. 143. The poem "The spacious firmament on high," is by Addison. Vide our 1st S. v. 515, 548, 567.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for SIX MONTHS forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 1l. 4s., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 32, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., to whom all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

CAUTION.—COUGHS.—The only medicine which gives immediate ease to the most severe Cough, Asthma, &c., is Dr. LOCOCK'S POLMONIC WAFERS, as the shortest trial will prove. In every newspaper and periodical in the kingdom may be seen testimonials of their wonderful efficacy. Observe that the words, "Dr. Locock's Wafers," are in the Government stamp. Sold by all Druggists, at 1s. 1jd., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. per box.

OLD GLENLIVET WHISKY.
J. CAMPBELL has held a large Stock of this Fine Old Malt WHISKY for 30 years, price 20s. per gallon. Old Irish Whisky, 18s.; Hennessy's Old Pale Brandy, 32s. per gallon; E. Clicheot's Champagne, 60s. per dozen; Sherry, Pale, Golden, or Brown—30s. 36s. and 42s.; Port from the wood 30s. and 36s.; old crusted, 42s., 48s., and 54s. Note.—J. C. strongly recommends his Vin de Bordeaux at 30s., and St. Julien Claret at 72s. per dozen, which greatly improves by keeping in bottle two or three years.—Remittances or town references to be addressed JAMES CAMPBELL, 106, Regent Street.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1865.

CONTENTS.—N^o 160.

NOTES:—Sobriquets of Regiments, 49—John Robinson, 50—Shakespeareana: "Hamlet"—The Hundred Merry Tales—"Seung like a Trench"—Passage in Macbeth: "Blanket of the Dark"—Line in Hamlet: "He is fat and sweet of breath," 51—Type Mnemonics, 52—"Bibliotheca Hibernica"—The Ogilvies of Banff and Findlater—Caddy: Man, Bird, and Beast—Tacquet's "Arithmetic," 53

QUERIES:—Laurence Sterne, 53—Jacobite Song, 54—Aizra: Amsel—Cockades—Coronets—Fitzwaryn, Wilts and Dorset—Garrick and Dr. Hill—Goodwyn of Blackheath—Hackney Horses: Afri—Hamilton's "Gazetteer of India"—"Hodagrus Confuted," &c.—Old Almanac—Piazz's Sonnet—"Plain Sermons by Contributors to Tracts for the Times"—Quotations—Thomas George Strev—Swedish Authors—Translations of Virgil, 54

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Who was he?—George Boy—Cottisheart—Dr. Chaplin and "The Whole Duty of Man"—Father Richard Augustus Hay—Venus de Medici, 55

REPLIES:—Daniel Defoe and "The London Review," 56—Babylon, 61—Edgar A. Poe and "The Fire Fiend," 62—Sir Andrew Ramsay, 63—Christmas Waits, 63—Grace Macaulay—Objections to White Paper—Hengist and Horsa—Symbolization of Colours in Heraldry—Sir Thomas Lucy: Saxon Typography—Confirmation of Arms—Guthard Family—Violon: Lock-up—Poem wanted: "The Day and the Shadow"—Donkey—Umbrellas: Pattern—"The Robber's Grave"—Mansueto: Mansuetudo—Antoine Goddeau's Psalms—Robert Brown, &c., 64

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

SOBRIQUETS OF REGIMENTS.

Encouraged by the Editor's kindness in giving insertion to "The Regimental Badges," I send a list of the "Sobriquets of Regiments" as given some time since in a country newspaper, with such additions as I have deemed necessary.

Royal Horse Guards—Oxford Blues.

First, or King's Dragoon Guards—The Trades' Union.

5th Dragoon Guards—The Green Horse. So named from their green facings. At the battle of Salamanca, this corps, when in General le Marchant's Brigade, was particularly noted as "The Green Horse."

2nd Dragoons—Scots Greys, and Second to None. The latter words were for many years on their appointments.

7th Hussars—The Black Horse, so called from their Regimental Facings.

8th Hussars—St. George's, from their Colonel, Richard St. George, 1740-1756.

11th Hussars—Cherubins and Cherry Pickers, having had some men taken while on out-post duty in a fruit garden in Spain.

14th Hussars—It is a curious circumstance that the 14th Hussars had very many years ago the name of Hamilton's Runaways. In India this was brought up against them and made much mischief.

On Sept. 20, 1745, the King's troops, under Sir John Cope, confronted the Scottish insurgents near Preston Pans, and the night was passed in the field. The 14th Dragoons, commanded by Lt.-Colonel Wm. Wright, furnished videttes and patrols on the flanks of the army. Before day-break of Sept. 21, a chosen band of Highlanders advanced through the fog, and attacked the right of the King's troops. Their sudden advance in the dark, their superior numbers, and peculiar mode of fighting, struck with consternation the few men who guarded our artillery, and who faced about and fled. The Dragoons advanced to charge the Highlanders; but seeing the very superior numbers of their opponents, and being discouraged by the loss of their artillery, they made but a feeble effort to stem the torrent of battle, and afterwards retired from the field. Several officers, and a few private soldiers, however, behaved with great gallantry, and among others, Major Richard Bowles, 14th Dragoons, particularly distinguished himself; the few troopers who rallied round him had been cut down and his own horse killed; but he continued to fight on foot: he was surrounded, and had received eleven wounds, when a rebel leader interposed, and saved his life." (Cannon's Record of the Fourteenth Dragoons, page 6.) Thus it will be seen that only a part of this gallant regiment was engaged on this disastrous occasion; and it is most unfair to stigmatise a glorious regiment as cowards because a small portion of the corps was surprised and overpowered in a fog in the Highlands, before the break of day. There is not a braver or more justly honoured regiment in the British army than the 14th Hussars.

17th Lancers—Bingham's Dandies. The Earl of Lucan, when Lord Bingham, was Lieutenant-Colonel of this corps, which was remarkable for the well-fitting uniforms both of the officers and men of the corps.

Grenadier Guards—The Sand Bags. "Sand Bags" is the designation of all Grenadiers, and, par excellence, of the Grenadier Guards.

1st Foot—Pontius Pilate's Body Guard. From a fictitious anecdote of a dispute between Le Regiment de Douglas (now our 1st Foot) in the French service, and the Picardy Regiment, in 1637, as to the antiquity of the Corps; the Regiment of Picardy claimed to have been on duty the night of the Crucifixion, to which Douglas's Regiment rejoined, that "had they been on guard, they would not have slept on their post."

2nd—Kirke's Lambs. From having on their colours the "Paschal Lamb," granted for having been a guard of honour to the queen of Charles II. on her progress to London, and from having been commanded by Colonel Piercy Kirke from April, 1682, to Oct. 1691; it is said that this regiment was employed in enforcing the cruelties devised by the infamous Judge Jeffries, who died in April, 1689; hence (referring to the colours of the Regiment) the ironical title of "Kirke's Lambs."—See Cannon's History of the 2nd Foot. And Sleepy Queen's. At Almeida, by their carelessness, Gen. Brennier effected his escape (after blowing up his works) by Barba del Puerco, May 10, 1811.

3rd—The Nutcrackers and The Resurrectionists. Obtained at Albuera, where the regiment was dispersed by the Polish Lancers, and reappeared shortly after. An officer present at a conversation, among officers of various corps, respecting regimental mottos, on hearing some one ask what motto was borne by the "Buffa," and learning that none appeared, at least in the "Army List," he suggested that the 85th, which bore "aucto splendore resurgo," might present the Buffs with "resurgo," as appropriate to the corps, and retain the "aucto splendore" for itself. The officer was called out for his wit by a captain of the Buffs, but a sensible second made up the matter without a duel.

These sobriquets were undeserved. "The Buffs" is a gallant veteran regiment, bearing on its colours the names of ten general engagements where it covered itself with glory. The corps has a well-deserved motto—"Veteri frondescit honore."

4th Foot—Barrell's Blues, from William Barrell, Colonel of the regiment from August, 1734, to August, 1749.

5th—The Fighting Fifth. Although no regiment in the British Army could better deserve the appellation of "The Fighting Regiment" than the gallant "Fifth," still it is well-known that this designation was justly conferred on the "Fifth Division" during the Peninsular War, and not on any particular corps. In fact, where every British regiment behaved itself nobly in face of the enemy at all times, it would be alike invidious and unjust to designate any single regiment as "The Fighting Corps."

6th—The Saucy Sixth, or The Warwickshire Lads, or Guise's Geese. Alliteration is the cause of two of these sobriquets. "Saucy Sixth," is one; "Guise's Geese," another. Colonel John Guise (pronounced "Gees") was Colonel of this distinguished corps from November 1, 1738, to the period of his death in June 1765.

9th—The Holy Boys, from their selling their Bibles, for drink, in the Peninsula, and passion for sacking Convents.

10th—The Springers. So called from their readiness for action, whenever their services were required—a character which the corps will, we are certain, always deserve. This title has also been given to the 62nd Regiment.

11th—Was styled "bloody," from being nearly annihilated in action on several occasions, owing to its distinguished bravery; witness Alamanza, Fontenoy, Roucoux, Ostend, and Salamanca.

14th—The Old and Bold, and Calvert's Entire (having had three battalions kept up, for the good of the then Adjutant-General, Sir Harry Calvert, their Colonel, from February 8th, 1806, to the date of his sudden death, September 3, 1826. The family name is now changed to "Verney.")

17th—The Bengal Tigers, from the badge on the regimental colours. As the badge here referred to happens to represent a green tiger, I leave it to persons more experienced in Indian affairs than I can boast of being, to decide where a green tiger has been discovered in the Bengalee Presidency.

19th—The Green Howards. Styled "The Green Howards" (or "Howard's Garbage"), in order to distinguish it from the 24th regiment, known at that time as "Howard's Greens;" the Hon. Charles Howard being Colonel of the 19th Regiment from Nov. 1738 to March 1748, and Thomas Howard being Colonel of the 24th Regiment about the same period, viz., from September 1717, to June 1737.

20th—The Two Tens and The Minden Boys, and Kingsley's Stand; the last-named honorable title was given to the regiment in consideration of its conspicuous bravery at Minden, August 1, 1759, where it repulsed every charge of the enemy. It formed part of the brigade commanded on that occasion by Major-General Wm. Kingsley, who was Colonel of this distinguished regiment from April 9, 1746, to the period of his decease in October, 1760. JUVERNA.

(To be concluded in our next.)

JOHN RICHARDSON.

In the recent biographical sketch of the life of this esteemed gentleman, in the North British Review for November, it is asserted that, in 1811, he married Miss Elizabeth Hill, a cousin of the author of The Pleasures of Hope. That the poet may have been connected with the young lady is possible enough; but it must have been through her mother, for it could not have been through her father.

Miss Hill was the only surviving daughter of Lawrence Hill, Esq., Writer to the Signet in Edinburgh. Her brother, Lawrence Hill, Esq., of Barlanark, is still living; but has, it is understood now retired from business. Their parent, a man of great energy and talent, about the end of last and commencement of this century, managed the Whig interest in North Britain. At that time the voters for Members of Parliament held their feudal estate directly of the crown or prince; and although not so numerous as since the alteration of the franchise, still collectively through Scotland, they presented a pretty formidable front. Now this indefatigable gentleman had what was marily designated in his office as "the book" the "books,"—mysterious volumes, carefully hidden from the prying eyes of the clerks; but which contained a regular list of the voters, from each end of the northern kingdom to the other, with their political predilections; and suggesting means, or inducements, by which their votes might be influenced. What became of these singular volumes—for I have always understood there were many of them—I have never been able to trace; but it is most probable, they ultimately were consigned to the purchases of waste paper: for when the business, which had been continued by his brother Robert, was finally given up, boxes of papers and books, with which the place of business were literally crammed, were disposed of in this way. Mr. Lawrence Hill had also been engaged in the great contest between the sixteen years at the end of last century; and had collected and bound up his searches into the pedigree of those interested in a great number of volumes. These were kept perhaps by the family, as they were not included in the catalogue of Mr. Robert Hill's books which were sold by auction.

Mr. Lawrence Hill died prematurely in the beginning of the present century, at a time when there was every prospect of his making a large fortune: for, unlike many of his profession now-a-days, he was a careful and industrious man. His demise was deeply regretted by all who knew him; and it may be added, that his daughter was not a tocherless bride. J. M.

Shakspeariana.

"HAMLET," Act III. Sc. 2 (Quarto, 1604).—

"For thou dost know, oh Damon deere,
This Realme dismantled was
Of Jons himselfe, and now raignes heere
A very very palock."

If one of the commentators had showed himself contented with the different readings (palock, plocke, pajock, paddock, peacock, bajocco), I would not add a new word to the rather sufficient number; but since the question is yet an open one, a new combination will not be out of place.

What I give is only a possibility, without the least support of an authoritative character, and I would not even mind it if one of the other readings would "suit the word to the action."

Hamlet means "ass," and does not intend to weaken what he means by supplying it by such an innocent word as "peacock," "paddock," &c. He says, "A very, very" and then he says nothing more, but hems only in a rather characteristic way; and so gives to the hearer the opportunity to supply by rhyming what he has left unsaid.

And so I suppose the word in question did not belong to the verse, but was a stage direction, which I should like to understand as—"hiccup" (hiccough.)

"A very, very [hiccup]." F. A. LEO.

4, Hafenplatz, Berlin.

THE HUNDRED MERRY TALES.—I am happily able to lay before the readers of "N. & Q." a few further particulars of the recently discovered copy of this curious Shakspearian volume. It was found in the Royal Library at Gottingen, and consists of twenty-eight leaves in folio, of which, however, only twenty-six are numbered, the title-page and the last of the tales being without numbers. It contains four tales more than are to be found in the later editions.

On the back of the last leaf there is the following colophon:—

"§ Thus endeth the booke of a. C. mery talyv. Empryntyd at London at the sygne of the Merymayd At Powlys gate next to chepe syde. § The yere of our Lorde. M. v. C.
. XXVI. § The . XXII.
day of Novēber.

Johannes Rastell.

§ Cum privilegio Regali."

The name of John Rastell forms a portion of his woodcut device (which is copied in Mr. Hazlitt's reprint).

I am glad to add that this earliest edition of the "C. Mery Tales," is about to be reprinted under the editorship of Dr. H. Oesterley.

T. H. M.

"STUNG LIKE A TENCH" (3rd S. vi. 324.)—In the revised issue of the Pictorial Edition of the Works of Shakspeare, edited by Charles Knight, I find the following note on this subject:—

"The second carrier appears to have had some popular knowledge of the natural history of fishes. The tench which is stung, and the loach which breeds fleas, appear to be allusions to the fact that fish at particular seasons are infested with vermin. The particular charge against fleas of troubling fish as they do lodgers 'within victualing houses and inns,' is gravely set forth in Philemon Holland's translation of Pliny" (vol. i. of "Historical Plays," p. 196).

The above does not appear to me to be a very satisfactory explanation; but perhaps a reference to Pliny might throw further light on the subject.

H. FISHWICK.

PASSAGE IN MACBETH: "BLANKET OF THE DARK."—It has occurred to me that the much-vexed question of the meaning of the expression used by Lady Macbeth in her speech after reading her husband's letter—" . . . nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark," &c.—might be set at rest by substituting blankest for blanket. I believe that the s was omitted through the carelessness of a transcriber, or an error of the press. The word blankest conveys the idea of the most intense darkness, is a word such as Shakspeare would use, and adds to the power of the passage. The correction is a very simple one, and does away with all necessity for ingenious speculations upon the unhappy blanket.

JOHN JESSOPP,
Chaplain of Surrey County Gaol.

[This suggestion has never, we believe, been made. Coleridge proposed blank height. Mr. Collier's MS. Corrector, blankness.—ED. "N. & Q."]

LINE IN HAMLET: "HE IS FAT AND SCANT OF BREATH."—In these days of Shakspeare-worship, every line the poet ever wrote, good, bad, and indifferent, is undergoing such rigid scrutiny, that one hardly dares to propose the most trifling verbal emendation, for fear of suggesting something which has been already published. I would, therefore, humbly deprecate the wrath of critics, while noticing the line in Hamlet, where the Queen says of her son, "He is fat, and scant of breath."

Commentators have been struck with this ludicrous description of one who is elsewhere spoken of as "the glass of fashion, and the mould of form," and they have got up a very improbable story about a certain corpulent performer who used to act the part of Hamlet. Can we suppose that Shakspeare was so short-sighted as to have written his plays with an especial eye to the bodily peculiarities of his contemporaries?

May not "fat" be a misprint for faint? If the latter word were written in the original MS. in the contracted form of fait, with a stroke above the letters, the mistake might easily occur.

Have I been anticipated in this suggestion?

J. DIXON.

[Mr. Dixon's proposed emendation is not, we think, to be found in any commentator.—ED. "N. & Q."]

TYPE MNEMONICS.

Last St. Valentine's week the New York correspondent of The Standard sent over for the amusement of his readers here the following score of "typographical symbols." He copied it from the pages of the Philadelphian Advertiser—a paper which contains typefounder's advertisements of all sorts. As it is ingeniously arranged, and many of the associations cleverly hit off, I think it should have a niche in "N. & Q." Some of these types are essentially American however!—

"The type of a Glasier should be Diamond.
The type of an Oyster should be Pearl.
The type of a Jeweller should be Agate.
The type of an Honest Man should be Nonpareil.
The type of a Citizen should be Bourgeois.
The type of a Schoolmaster should be Primer.
The type of a Bull should be English.
The type of Freedom should be Columbian.
The type of a Maiden should be Paragon.
The type of a Mother should be Double Paragon.
The type of a Soldier should be Canon.
The type of an Author should be Script.
The type of a Preacher should be Text.
The type of Aristocracy should be Title.
The type of a Baby should be Small Caps.
The type of a Hussey should be Boldface.
The type of an Alderman should be Extended.
The type of a Drunkard should be Backslope.
The type of a Barber should be Hairline.
The type of our Foundry should be Excelsior."

With a view of making the series more complete, I have added a score of lines embracing some of our more common English founts. I believe even a couple of readings of the two will benefit many of your readers, who have hitherto been unable to master the trade names of our typefounders and printers. The Memoria technica here used will not help one to the relative sizes of the types, but that is soon learnt afterwards:—

The type of a Book-keeper should be Contra.
The type of an Artist should be Ornamental.
The type of a Ploughboy should be Rustic.
The type of a Servant should be Minion.
The type of a Clown should be Grotesque.
The type of a Freemason should be Relief.
The type of a Mummy should be Egyptian.
The type of a Painter should be Perspective.
The type of an Engraver, should be Outline.
The type of a Beadle should be Church.
The type of an Antiquary should be Grecian.
The type of a Penny-a-liner should be Condensed.
The type of a Wineseller should be Body.
The type of a Poet should be Elizabethan.
The type of a Fool should be Reversed.
The type of a Gentleman should be Open.
The type of a Tomb-writer should be Skeleton.
The type of a Roman should be Italic.
The type of a Lady's lips should be Ruby.
The type of Notes and Queries should be Brilliant.

W. E.

"BIBLIOTHECA HIBERNICA."—Being engaged in compiling a "Bibliotheca Hibernica" on a very comprehensive scale, on which work I have been occupied many years, I would feel very much obliged to any of your readers for notices of rare books, pamphlets, broad-sheets, &c., written by Irishmen; or of works published in that country on any subject. Also, for notices of works by Irishmen, or relating to Ireland, published abroad. Biographical notices of authors, and bibliographical notes of their works, will be also very acceptable, and thankfully received by JOHN POWER.

3, Grove Terrace, St. John's Wood, N.W.

THE OSILVIES OF BANFF AND FINDLATER.—There can be no doubt that, at least as regards the Barony of Banff, the patent extends to the next heir-male; and the only question is, who that heir-male may be?

The writer of this note has in his possession the original case for the late Baronet, in MS.; which would have been lodged, had the further prosecution of the claim, in the absence of sufficient pecuniary means, been considered advisable.

The earldom of Findlater went in a different line: and it is believed, in consequence of a second patent, that this peerage may not be extinct.

The father of the baronet took both the titles of Earl of Findlater and Baron of Banff. He procured a loan in London to enable him to prosecute his claims; but in place of applying it for that purpose, he threw it away, and lost the opportunity of putting himself on a proper footing in the House of Lords. He died in absolute penury.

J. M.

CUDDY: MAN, BIRD, AND BEAST.—In the north of England, where Cuthbert is a tolerably common Christian name, it is familiarly abbreviated to "Cuddy." Perhaps the most illustrious possessor of the name in modern times was the grand old admiral, Cuthbert, Lord Collingwood, who was affectionately known in the navy as "Old Cuddie." Now we know that "Neddy" or "Edward" (teste Dickens in Our Mutual Friend), is, in the midland and southern counties, the popular name for a donkey—or, rather, for an ass: for the word "donkey" is not to be found in a dictionary, unless it be that of Mr. Hotten. Why an ass should be called "Edward" or "Neddy," appears to be a query equally as hard to be satisfactorily answered as the inquiry that I now make: Why should an ass be called Cuddy? for, in northern counties, "Cuddy the ass" is a household word.

"Hast got thy breakfast, brother Cuddy?"

is the first line of "The Address to an Ass," in David Wingate's Poems (1862). And yet, although "cuddy" is an ass in Northumberland and the North Country, yet, in Yorkshire, "cuddy" appears as a hedge-sparrow (the "cuddy" or "cuddy hedge-creeper"); and elsewhere, "cuddy" becomes a moor-hen. I am not aware if the "St. Cuthbert's ducks," that visit the Northumbrian seaboard, are ever called "cuddies;" but the above-mentioned widespread application of the familiar word "cuddy" to man, bird, and beast, seems to me somewhat remarkable.

CUTHBERT BEDL.

TACQUET'S "ARITHMETIC."—The first edition of this book appears to be Lovanii, 1656. There is an edition of Antv., 1685; again, 1680, 1682, 1683, 1704, and Naples, 1732; and, lastly, Venice

1740. The "Cylindricorum" (lib. iv.) was Antwerp, 1651: and "Liber Quintus" added 1659. I cannot find anything of 1655, as given in Cyclopædia of Biography, article "Tacquet."

W. DAVIS.

Queries.

LAURENCE STERNE.

It is stated, both by Sir Walter Scott and by Mr. Fitzgerald in his Life of Sterne (vol. i. p. 188), that the illustrations to Wodhull's Poems—bearing in the corner the name of "L. Stern del. Romæ"—were designed by the author of Tristram Shandy. Some confirmation of this statement would be very satisfactory. If the sketches were really drawn by Sterne, it must have been when he was at Rome, in the spring of 1768. Where was Mr. Wodhull at that time? What authority is there for supposing that he ever was—as Mr. Fitzgerald styles him—a friend of Sterne's? I am not aware that any Life of Mr. Wodhull has ever been published. But have none of his papers been preserved at Thenford? If they have, I should think they could hardly fail to clear up these points.* If it could be ascertained, that in the year 1768 Sterne really employed his pencil in drawing illustrations, the question naturally suggests itself: How came it that he drew none for any of his own works? The two frontispieces to Tristram Shandy were by Hogarth. What then were the relations between Sterne and Hogarth? This is a point that is of more interest than may be at first apparent. The portrait of Mrs. Sterne, signed "Pigrich, f."—to which I drew the attention of your readers in a former communication (2nd S. xii. 369)—would, as I conceive, require no further authentication if the artist could be identified. In character of execution, the sketch of Mrs. Sterne is very like Hogarth's "Politician." Is it possible that, under the assumed name of Pigrich, Hogarth may lurk in disguise? The conjecture derives confirmation from a comparison of the signature with those annexed to some of Hogarth's etchings. The similarity in the character of the letters is striking, and such as in my mind to leave little doubt upon the point.

One word more respecting the Wodhull illustrations:—

"Dr. Johnson told Sir John Hawkins that on the only occasion he had been in Sterne's society, the latter (i. e. Sterne) had exhibited a very indecent print."

[* May not the artist have been Lewis Stern, a Roman painter, born in 1708, and died in 1777? He painted game and other birds, flowers, fruit, and scriptural subjects, in admirable style. Wodhull's three illustrated poems, although not published until 1772, are dated 1760 and 1762.—ED.]

In commenting on this statement (vol. ii. p. 393), Mr. Fitzgerald says:—

"Even one of the pictures with which Sterne illustrated his friend Woodhall's (sic) Poems—conceived as it was in a classical taste—might deserve Johnson's severe censure."

I have looked through the three illustrations from first to last, and back again from last to first, and as Mr. Fitzgerald is a contributor to "N. & Q.," I hope he will have no objection to state which of the three he alludes to in the passage that I have quoted.

P. S. C.

JACOBITE SONG.

Can any of your readers give a more correct version of the accompanying song? I copied it from the dictation of a friend many years ago, and have never met with it in print. There is another verse as my friend sang it; but as the whole of the stanzas relate to the 1745 rebellion, and this verse mentions the names of those who figured in the former rebellion of 1715, I give it separate:—

"The Earl of Mar rode in the front,
With the Lords Kilmarnock and the brave Glengarry,
Glen Grigor, Glen Gyle, and the brave Lochiel, Fought manfully to keep the Plaidie."

I shall be glad to receive any further information.

"THE TARTAN PLAIDIE."

"Our brave young Prince rode through the North,
With the manly looks of a Highland Laddie;
Gart* a' our Scottish hearts for to warm,
And to love the lad wi' the Tartan Plaidie.
"Its when we came to bonnie Aberdeen,
Where ilka ane was making ready,
For to overthrow our brave young Prince,
And to catch the lad wi' the Tartan Plaidie.
"When Geordie heard the news was come,
And he was come to heir his daddie,
He says 'I'll give you the plunder of bonnie Edinbro',
If you'll catch the lad wi' the Tartan Plaidie.'
"Then Charlie said to encourage his men,
'Your hearts of gold be true and steady;
If you this day will fight for me,
I'll make you a nation free, and keep the Plaidie.'
"We were a' drawn up at Preston Pans,
Where mony a babbie lost its daddie;
We made them to fly like the wind in the sky,
Every shake that we gave the Tartan Plaidie.
"We all fought on with might and main,
Regarding neither man nor bodie;
Our brave young Prince rode on the right,
For he thought it no shame to wear the Plaidie.
"There were feather beds and carpeted rooms,
They could na please a Hanover Geordie;
But a far better Prince than ever he was,
Could lie on the ground wi' his Tartan Plaidie."

JAMES GIBSON.

28, Spring Gardens, Bradford.

* I am not sure whether this is the correct spelling for the Scotch word gart, or gar'd; it means in English made, only more expressive in Scotch.

AZIZA: AZAZEL.—Captain Burton describes a fabulous inhabitant of the woods in Dahome in these terms:—

"The Aziza, for instance, is a sylvan beast—erect, man-like, and loud-voiced: it teaches the hunter fetich, and makes him wondrous brave."—A Mission to the King of Dahome, vol. ii. p. 296.

To me the passage at once suggests the Azazel of Leviticus xvi. 8. Aziza is a supernatural being in the mythology of the Dahomans, and the scape-goat has been considered by some as a sacrifice to the Devil, under the name of Azazel. In fact, no one knows what Azazel means. It can do no harm to ventilate the question. A. B.

COCKADES.—Wanted, some information on the subject of the origin of cockades:—

1. When were they first used?
2. Is there any duty payable on the use of them?
3. What regulates the pattern for individual use?
4. To what books can I refer, or to whom apply, to find an ultimate authority on the subject?
5. What is the correct manner of discovering the diplomatic cockade suitable for, or belonging to, any given county?
6. Is the Herald's College a likely place to obtain information?

ROBT. W. ARTHUR GORDON-JERNINGHAM.

5, Belgrave Square.

CORONETS.—Will any correspondent state the period when coronets were first adopted to denote different ranks in the peerage? For a long time fancy coronets were worn. HISTORICUS.

FITZWARYN, WILTS AND DORSET.—I am desirous of proving the descent of the Fitzwaryns of Wilts and Dorset from the baronial house of Whittington; but have not met with anything to help me in the British Museum, or elsewhere. As there is no pedigree of this branch in any published work or MS., I append a short sketch.

Nicholas Fitzwaryn and Agnes his wife, occur 12 Edw. III.; Sir William Fitzwaryn (his son), and Matilda his wife, 21 & 23 Edw. III. "Magister Peter Fitzwaryn" (brother of this William), and a Reginald Fitzwaryn and Margery his wife; deeds of all these parties concerning lands in Bratton, &c., are recited in the Cartulary of Edington (Brit. Mus.) Sir Philip Fitzwaryn (probably son of Sir William), and Constance his wife, also occur 1360. Harl. MS. 5184 (fol. 1.) says he was "borne at Bratton by Edynton," and Constance his wife was cousin of Bishop Wyvill, widow (1.) of Sir Henry Percy, Knt., of Great

[* Several articles on the origin and use of the cockade appeared in our 1st S. iii. 7, 42, 71, 196, 293; vii. 329, 484, 618; xi. 186, 281; and for those in servants' hats, 2nd S. vols. vii. viii. ix.—ED.]

Chalfield, who left her a life interest in his estates; and (2.) of John Perceckay, of Little Chalfield, Esq. By Sir Philip she had two daughters and co-heirs: Isolda, wife of John Rous, lord of a moiety of the manor of Immer; and Joan, wife of Thomas Bewshin of Cotels Atworth, co. Wilts, and Bewahyns-hayes, co. Dorset. In 1404, Sir Philip was not only dead, but his wife, the widow of a fourth husband, Sir Henry de la Ryver, Knt.; and she presented to the living of Great Chalfield in 1419, about which time she must have died very aged. This clears up the confusion of the account of the manors of Folke and Upeme in Gough's Hutchins's Dorset, where for Philip Fitzwarne, should be read Fitzwaryn. William Rous, Esq., son and heir of John Rous and Isolda, conveyed his moiety of the manor of Folke to Walter, Lord Hungerford, by fine, 16 Hen. VI. Ralph Bushe, who held the manor of Upeme of Walter Hungerford and Thos. Bewshyn, was the second husband of Alianor, daughter and heiress of Ivo Fitzwaryn. Sir William Fitzwaryn, the father of Ivo, was a baron by writ, and styled "le frere;" from which, we may presume, he had another and elder brother of the same name. This brother was, doubtless, Sir William, the father of Sir Philip. According to a MS., passim Sir Tho. Phillipps, transcribed in Coll. Top. et Gen. (i. 247), the baron had "John, Philip, Eve (Ivo?), and Johanna, wiff of Edmund Cheney." Brompton. A. S. ELLIS.

GARRICK AND DR. HILL.—I have a letter, dated March 20, 1759, from Garrick to Dr. Hawkesworth, in which he says, referring to the notorious Dr. Hill:—

"Such a villain sure never existed: his scheme now is done, and he talks of a paper call'd y^e Theatre, in which his Pen will be as free as my crabstick whenever I meet in worship."

Did Hill ever carry out his threat of publishing The Theatre? BEARLEY.

GOODWYN OF BLACKHEATH.—It is well known that this gentleman left at his death an enormous mass of arithmetical calculations, which were purchased by the Royal Society. I call the attention of the members of the Decimal Association that Mr. Goodwyn says he was not a decimakis, though engaged in calculation, and on the very subject of the comparison of the yard and metre. Goodwyn published a Centenary Table in 4to, which is in the Museum fortunately; and an 8vo tract on Circulators as far as 1000, which is not. Now, at the end of Gauss's Disq. Arithmet., there is a similar table as far as 100; and Gauss says that he has himself carried this particular matter as far as 1000. Now, can any of your readers connect in any way the labours of Gauss and Goodwyn? It would have saved the more learned of these mathematicians a good deal of labour, had he known of the work of the latter, and they were working contemporaneously. Again, it is a well known problem of the higher arithmetic to detect whether a given number is prime or not; and Gauss, after Euler, has given two solutions of the problem. And on this matter, Mr. Goodwyn also has furnished some criteria. WM. DAVIS.

HACKNEY HORSES: AFFRI.—Much has been said of the antiquity of the term hackney. The following is extracted from the "Status Domus" of Jarrow Monastery, anno 1313, in vol. xxix. of the Surtees Society's publications, p. 11:—

"¶ Item in stabulo sunt ij palefridi, de domo Dunelm. et j hakenay."

And in p. 15, anno 1326—

"In stabulo j equus pro monachis, j hakenney, iiii affri pro carectis."

What English word shall be used for affri?

J. M. ON.

HAMILTON'S "GAZETTEER OF INDIA."—Can any one of your readers give me any particulars about the author of the above work, or his family, or the addresses of any of them? K. M. N.

"HODEGUS CONFUTED," ETC.—Can you oblige me with the name of the author of an octavo pamphlet, published in reply to Mr. Toland, and entitled Hodegus Confuted, &c., London, 1721?

ABEBA.

OLD ALMANAC.—This is one of that rare and interesting class of books: English books printed abroad—Almynack and Pronosticatio of Gaspar Laet the younger, for 1530, printed at Antwerpe. It is on a large single sheet:—

"The declaratio of this Almynack. The Golden Number XI. Inditio iiii. The cicle of the Sunne xxvii. The Sunday letter B. Moreover ye shall finde, after oure old custum, upon what Day that the Sun changed her Syne. And also in what sine and degree that the Mone is from day to day at none. Ye shall also find the newe Mone and full Mone, with her quarters written all along upon what day, houre, and minute that they shall be, with her effectes. This yere we shall have an Eclipse of the Sun, which shall be the 29 day of March, 6 hours and 49^m before none. And the beginning shall be upon the same day 5^h and 51^m, the end thereof the 7th hour and 47^m before none. We shall likewise have an Eclipse of the Mone 6 October, 12^h 6^m after none: begins 6^h 14^m after none, ends 7th day 1^h 54^m before none."

After describing the meaning of the various columns in the Almanac, he says: "ye shall find the number of dayes of every month, with the correspondant to the same number." Will any of your learned readers tell me what is a "correspondant?" WM. DAVIS.

PISCIS FLUTANS.—Among the Records in the custody of the Master of the Rolls is an inquisition of the 32nd year of the reign of King Henry III., setting forth the ancient customs of the island of Guernsey and the laws instituted by King John.

In the latter part of the inquisition the following passage occurs:—

"Constitutum similiter fuit quoddam batellum dictæ Insulæ portans piscem flotantem in Normanniam pro quolibet turno daret duodecem solidos."

What was piscis flotans?

P. S. C.

"PLAIN SERMONS BY CONTRIBUTORS TO TRACTS FOR THE TIMES."—In vol. x. of the above work, there is an appendix which states that the Sermons were contributed by seven writers in various proportions: A. was, I believe, John Keble; B., Isaac Williams; C., Dr. Pusey; D., J. H. Newman; E., Thomas Keble. Can any of your correspondents tell me who F. and G. were? Was F. Dr. Manning?

GAMMA.

QUOTATIONS.—Where can I find the following lines, quoted by Tennyson in his "Sea Dreams," a poem included in the same volume with Enoch Arden (p. 106)?—

"With all his conscience and one eye askew,
So false, he partly took himself for true;
Whose pious talk, when most his heart was dry,
Made wet the crafty crowsfoot round his eye."
[And eleven following lines.]

Also, who is the author of a beautiful hymn, beginning thus?—

"In the hour of trial,
Jesus, pray for me;
Lest, by base denial,
I depart from thee," &c.

It is to be found at length in Mercer's Hymn-book, No. 265.

T. J. G.

Can any of your correspondents tell me where the following beautiful lines occur?—

"I never see a castle old,
Which time has changed to iron grey,
Whose high crenelles o'ergrown with mould,
Are crumbling silently away,
But comes the thought that years before,
Now hid by Time's obscuring pall,
Some tiny foot hath tripped the floor,
Some silver voice hath filled the hall."

In what song, which I lately heard sung, do the following lines occur?—

"O why wer'n't you cunning, O why wer'n't you 'cute?
Why didn't you run away from the Frenchman's shoot?
O how did it happen, at all and at all,
That you didn't run away from the big cannon ball?
An open war I will proclaim,
Against Bonaparte and the King of Spain:
And dearly I'll make them to rue the time,
That they shot away the shins of a son of mine."

GAMMA.

"Ocean of Time! thy waters of deep woe,
Are brackish with the salt of human tears."

A. H.

Digby.

"When just as the clock on the turret struck one,
He jumps up and cries, 'There, you Devil, you're done!'"

J. H.

THOMAS GEORGE STREET was author of—

1. "Aura, or, the Slave; a Poem in Two Cantos. 4to. London, 1788."

2. "The History and Reign of Louis XVI., King of France. London. 8vo. 1795." [One volume only published.]

3. "Vindication of the Duke of Bedford's Attack on Mr. Burke's Pension, in reply to a Letter from Edmund Burke to a Noble Lord. London. 8vo. 1796."

In the Biographical Dictionary of Living Authors, 1816, he is termed one of the proprietors of The Courier newspaper. Dr. Parr made the following note on Street's History of the Reign of Louis XVI.:—

"The 2nd and 8rd vols. were never published. Street, after being a republican, became an apostate; and by defending the opinions he formerly opposed, he made a large fortune."—Bibliotheca Parriana, 388.

Street, proprietor and editor of The Courier, 1799—1822, is mentioned in Mr. Alexander Andrews's History of British Journalism (ii. 3, 63, 64, 113), but in the Index he is called James Street.

According to Mr. Jerdan (Autobiography, i. 92), Street, who had led a sumptuous and gay life, ultimately died in poverty; the date or place of his death being unknown to those his former bounty fed. It is perhaps, therefore, hardly probable that the date of his death can now be recovered; but should any of your correspondents be able to give information on the subject, I shall be obliged.

S. Y. R.

SWEDISH AUTHORS.—1. Hans Olffsen, author of The Three Wise Men, a drama, 1635. Is anything known of this author's history?

2. Prytz, Bishop of Linköping, about 1650—1660, a Swedish dramatist. What are the titles of his dramas?

3. Hjarn, Beronius, Kolmodin, Wellander: these four Swedish dramatists belong to the middle, or end of the seventeenth century. I would like to know the titles of their dramatic works, or any particulars regarding the authors.

4. King Lear, a tragedy; translated from Shakespeare, 1818, Upsala, Anon. The Tempest; translated from Shakespeare; Stockholm, 1838. Anon. Who are the authors of these translations?

R. I.

TRANSLATIONS OF VIRGIL.—Will MR. DAVIES, or any other correspondent of "N. & Q.," kindly give me the date of the publication of Miller's translation of Virgil; accompanied with a reference to any critiques on the same which may have appeared in papers, reviews, or magazines? Also the date and general description of a version of Virgil, formed upon the same principle as Mr. Ring's, and published, if I recollect rightly, in Edinburgh some thirty years ago; with the publishers' names of both works?

W. J. B.

Queries with Answers.

WHO WAS HE?—In Trapp, the Puritan's Com-mentary on 1 Peter, iii. 20, he commemorates—

"The Prior of St. Bartholomew's in London, who upon a vain prediction of an idle astrologer, went and built him a house at Harrow-on-the-Hill, to secure himself from a supposed flood, foretold by the astrologer."

Has the name of this worthy descended to posterity? X. Y. Z.

[An amusing story is related by Hall and Speed, but doubted by the worthy John Stow, of William Bolton, Prior of St. Bartholomew, who on the 23rd of September, 1522, succeeded Cuthbert Tonsal as Rector of Harrow. It is related that Prior Bolton, with all the brethren of the priory, with wagons full of provisions as well as boats, fled to a house built by the Prior at Harrow, that being the highest ground in Middlesex, for the purpose of obtaining an asylum during the prevalence of a great flood, which was expected to happen in the year 1524. This story was probably fabricated at the time, as a joke on the presumed credulity of cloistered ecclesiastics, though gravely repeated by several chroniclers. The relators of it do not seem to have been aware, that Prior Bolton, who was a great builder, had the rectory of Harrow as early as 1522, and was very likely to rebuild the parsonage-house, called by Stow a dove-house, whether a flood was prognosticated or not.

Stow informs us that William Bolton "builded of new the manor of Canonbury at Islington, which belonged to the canons of St. Bartholomew;" and the old brick tower which still remains was doubtless erected by him, as his rebus (a bolt in a tun) was some years ago visible in several parts of the wall originally connected with the tower, and which is evidently of the same materials and workmanship. The priory of St. Bartholomew, also, and the parish church adjoining (now about to be restored) with the lodgings belonging to the priory, were all either rebuilt or completely repaired by him. Camden, in his Remains, remarks, "It may seeme doubtfull whether Bolton was wiser when he invented for his name a bird-bolte through a tunne, or when he built him an house upon Harrow-hill, for feare of an inundation after a great conjunction of planets in the watery triplicate." Bolton, who luckily escaped the predominance of Aquarius, died at his parsonage at Harrow on April 15, 1582, and was there interred. Both Stow and Weever mistake in calling him the last prior of St. Bartholomew's; for it appears, he had a successor, Robert Fuller, abbot of Walden Holy Cross, who was elected in 1592, and held the priory with his abbacy.]

GEORGE MORE.—There was printed at London, 1629, small quarto,— "Principles for Yong Princes collected out of Sundry Authors, by George More, Esquire. Prov. 19. 'Heare

"On the outside of that wall which faces Wells' Row, the bolt in tun is cut in stone in two places. The tun lies in fact, and the bolt runs through it." (Nichols's History of Canonbury, 1788, p. 8.) This part of the wall has been long pulled down.

counsell and receive instruction, that thou mayst be wise in the latter end."

An address "To the Reader," of eleven lines, follows the title. It mentions that the author had no intention originally of publishing "this collection;" but that, upon reconsideration, he had changed his mind, thinking it "fit for yong noblemen and gentlemen to read." There is no dedication, and no notice is taken of the publisher or printer. The anecdotes are numerous, and indicate a vast extent of reading.

Who was George More? And was this work ever published? J. M.

[Two editions of this work were published; the first with the imprint "London, Printed by Nicholas Oken, dwelling neare Holborne Bridge, 1611." 18mo. To this edition is prefixed a Dedication "To the Most Noble, Mightie, and Hopefull Prince, Henry, Prince of Great Britaine," in which he reminds the Prince, that "it is more than thirty yeares ago that I dedicated my poore service to your Highnesse Grandmother, which by my best endeavours I have ever continued to His Majesty, and will never faile to yourself." This Dedication is omitted in the second edition, "Printed at London, 1629," 4to. At first we were inclined to attribute this work to the celebrated Sir George More of Loseley House, in Surrey, who was from 1604 to 1610 Treasurer or Receiver-General of Prince Henry's revenues, but he received the order of knighthood as early as 1597. Consult Wood's Athenæ (Bliss), ii. 364; Birch's Life of Prince Henry, p. 229; and Manning and Bray's Surrey, i. 95.]

COLTHEART.—There is a work mentioned by a person of this name, entitled The Quacks unmasked, London, 1727, 8vo. It would be very obliging if a full copy of the title of this book could be furnished, or a very brief notice of what it is about.

J. M.

[The title-page gives the contents of this work: "The Quacks Unmask'd: which detects, and sets in a true Light their Pernicious and Destructive Practice, with some Reasons why it ought to be entirely abolished. By P. Coltheart, Surgeon. 'Sine me, liber, ibis in urbem.' Ovid. London, Printed for the Author, and sold by the Booksellers of London and Westminster, 1717." The author's protest will not be considered inapposite even at the present time. He says, "The fruits of encouraging such pretenders, whose advertisements fill the daily papers, may be observed from the wretched condition of those patients who have escaped out of their hands with life, and are a sad memento to those who look upon those subjects of their experiments, to be seen in the streets, like so many walking spectres, and whose looks seem to cry aloud, Beware of Quacks!"

DR. CHAPLIN AND "THE WHOLE DUTY OF MAN."—One of the persons to whom the authorship of The Whole Duty of Man has been attributed was Dr. Chaplin, of University College, Oxford. What are the reasons for supposing that he was the author? Is the subject mentioned by any contemporary writer? The examination of the numerous claims which have been made to the authorship of that work has not yet been thoroughly instituted.

LEALLAWG.

[The authorship of The Whole Duty of Man was attributed to Dr. Chaplin by Evelyn. In his Diary, under the date July 26, 1692, he says, "I went to visit the Bishop of Lincoln [Dr. Tenison], when, amongst other things, he told me that one Dr. Chaplin, of University College in Oxford, was the person who wrote The Whole Duty of Man; that he used to read it to his pupils, and communicated it to Dr. Sterne, afterwards Archbishop of York, but would never suffer any of his pupils to have a copy of it." In Pickering's edition [1842] is a valuable Preface on the authorship of this work by the Rev. Wm. Bentinck Hawkins, M.A., F.R.S. of Exeter College, Oxford. Consult also "N. & Q." 1st S. ii. 292; v. 229; vi. 387; viii. 564; ix. 551; 2nd S. i. 135.]

FATHER RICHARD AUGUSTUS HAY.—Mr. Chambers (History of Peeblesshire, p. 321) cites Genealogie of the Hayes of Tweeddale, by Father Richard Augustus Hay; printed from MSS. belonging to the Faculty of Advocates: Stevenson, Edinburgh, 1835. I have not been able to meet with a copy of this work, and shall therefore be thankful for any account of the author.

S. Y. R.

[Of Father Richard Augustine Hay some account will be found prefixed to the Genealogie of the Hayes of Tweeddale, 4to, 1833, a copy of which is in the British Museum. Being himself a descendant of that family, and in direct succession to a part of the honours, his Memoir down to the year 1700, in the latter portion of the Genealogie, is, from its minuteness, of considerable importance. Mr. Hay was Canon Regular of St. Genovefs of Paris, and Prior of St. Hieronym. He died in reduced circumstances in the year 1733 or 1736.]

VENUS DE MEDICI.—Can you tell me the exact height of the Venus de Medici?

A. M'NIVEN.

[The height of the figure itself is 4 feet 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ in. English measure; if the figure stood erect it would be 5 feet 2 in.]

Replies.

DANIEL DEFOE AND "THE LONDON REVIEW."
(3rd S. vi. 527.)

The absence of all party spirit in the consideration of historical subjects is a peculiar characteristic of "N. & Q." Supported by a large body of unconnected contributors, differing in religion and politics "wile as the poles," its columns rarely contain even an expression capable of giving offence to any reader. So may it ever be! The whole nature of society is more than sufficient for this operation by "unstable wind." Beneath, where we gathered "the multitudinous relics of the past," there is rest; and the gatherers up of "buried treasures" should be reverential, sober men.

This reflection has been induced by the contrast between the introduction of the recently discovered letters of Daniel Defoe to the readers of "N. & Q.," and the objectionable manner of their earlier introduction in the London Review.

The following was written before I knew that the letters would be reprinted in "N. & Q.;" and I have to thank the Editor for allowing me since to revise.

I propose at present to condense, into as small space as I can, the "history" contained in these letters of Defoe, and to make some remarks on the criticism of the London Reviewer.

What Defoe did, under his engagement with the government, and the morality or otherwise of his conduct, I reserve for another, and I hope shorter communication.

The letters were all written within the space of two months (in 1718), and clearly disprove the statements of his biographers, that his political life closed in 1715. They also point to the materials for an entirely new chapter of the History of Defoe's Life and Times.

In 1716, Lord Chief Justice Parker urged upon Lord Townshend (then in the ministry) the misrepresentations under which Defoe had suffered; the claims he had upon the government, to which he was sincerely attached; and the valuable services the administration might derive from his pen. They were then much harassed, internally by symptoms of dissension, and externally by attacks from the Tories in public journals, which had become so virulent that not even the king escaped. Lord Townshend sent for Defoe, and proposed to him to write as if still under displeasure, so that he might be more serviceable than by appearing openly in support of the Government. A weekly journal (in opposition to a scandalous paper called Shift Shifted) was first intended, but laid aside; and Defoe engaged himself in Mercurius Politicus. Dyer, the news-letter writer, dying about the same time, Defoe had an offer of a share in the property and its management. Lord Townshend, being made acquainted with the proposal, strongly approved of it, as the publication had been "very prejudicial to the public" (i. e. the ministry). Defoe therefore completed the arrangements, and was still conducting the journal, as part owner and sole manager, at the time of writing these letters in 1718. The style of the paper continued Tory, but furious attacks on government, by correspondents, were suppressed; the sting was taken out; the party was amused, and did not set up another paper, which would have destroyed the design.

It does not appear that, in the first instance, Defoe received anything more from the government than a promise that his services should be considered. After a year's employment, however, in thus moderating party rancour (without compromise or change of the political principles he had always firmly held), he was rewarded by the noble lord with an "appointment" (probably some small sinecure), "with promise of further allowance as service presented." Shortly afterwards (1717) occurred the defection of Walpole and Townshend from the ministry, and the appointments of Lords Stanhope and Sunderland as their successors. The latter knew Defoe thoroughly, having, when in office many years before, secretly commissioned him to Scotland on government business. Both these noble lords, therefore, approving the "appointment," continued his services. With Lord Sunderland's approbation, Defoe now similarly introduced himself into the management of Mist's Journal, but without any share in the property. Mr. Mist was fully aware that he was liable to government prosecution for the violent Tory articles that had appeared in his paper; and convinced that abstention from treason and libel, under Defoe's advice, saved him from ruin.

Defoe states the abhorrence he feels at all the "traitorous expressions and outrageous words" he has to hear "against his Majesty's person and government," and "the scandalous and villanous papers" that come to him for insertion; but by suppression and moderation, he says—

"Upon the whole the weekly Journal and Dormer's Letter, as also the Mercurius Politicus, will be always kept (mistakes excepted) to pass as Tory papers, and yet be disabled and enervated, so as to do no mischief or give any offence to the government."

It is a curious fact, that in the letter of May 22, he wishes the government to know that he had no hand in a paragraph inserted in Mercurius Politicus, from another printed paper, of a person hanged at York for three halfpence. The offensive words were, that it was a piece of justice unmixed with mercy. For reprinting this, Morpew, the publisher, was committed to prison.

In the prefatory remarks of the London Reviewer, Defoe is assailed on account of these letters with the epithets, "baseness and dishonesty"—"if he had any principles"—"rascality"—"dirty and disreputable work"—"a traitor on all sides"—"his death in 1731 in a spunging-house, or something like it"—"dishonest"—"corrupt writer"—"contrived to insinuate himself"—"prostitute." I leave for others to determine the competency of such a writer—in respect of temper—to deal with a subject of historical interest.

The scope of the London Reviewer is, that Defoe was always universally unpopular with his contemporaries; that he was so because he was utterly dishonest, and worse; that his modern biographers have been unable to offer anything more than speculation and ingenious apologies for him; and that upon this anonymous reviewer (with the key of the letters "now first published"), has devolved the duty of opening the arcanum of Defoe's inner man, and consigning his memory henceforth to the limbo of perpetual execration.

The reviewer says of Defoe, "As a party-writer he had done much to deserve it, not an iota of favour fell to his lot." Defoe stood high in the personal favour of King William III., and of Queen Mary, and was both employed and rewarded immediately after the publication of The True born Englishman until the death of the king. He stood high in the favour of Queen Anne and of her ministers, Harley and Sunderland, and was employed and rewarded, from early in 1706 to 1709, when his History of the Union was dedicated to the Queen. The letters, "now first published," show him to have been employed and rewarded by the government of King George I. Other occasions of his employment and favour might be mentioned, but these will suffice.

The reviewer goes on:—

"His modern admirers, wiser than his contemporary, have discovered that what the latter took for serious was banter; and Defoe's political writings must be interpreted by the rule of contrary," &c. "We are inclined to think that his contemporaries were not wrong in their estimate of his character,—that what they took to be serious was serious in Defoe's primary intentions, though it afterward suited his purpose, when parties changed, to avoid the charge of tergiversation and political apostasy, to represent his meaning as irony and banter. Gross as this conduct may appear," &c.

It is scarcely necessary to inform the readers of "N. & Q." that the above has reference to the celebrated tract, The Shortest Way with the Dissenters: considered by many accurate critics, contemporary and modern (including Sir Walter Scott and Charles Lamb), to be the most exquisite piece of irony in the English language.

The above quotation contains a remarkable example of debased criticism:—1. The suggestive: "We are inclined to think." 2. The assertive: "When parties changed." 3. The conclusive: "Gross as this conduct may appear."

The answer is short. There was no delay or change of parties. The Sacheverellites immediately adopted the pamphlet, as expressing their own views: and this being the mark Defoe aimed at, he as quickly published, to their great consternation, A Brief Explanation of a late Pamphlet, entitled The Shortest Way with the Dissenters—showing that it was only a satire on their persecuting principles. Both the Shortest Way and the Explanation were published in the year 1702.

In order to make Defoe appear "a traitor on all sides," the London Reviewer proceeds to say:—

"Walpole and Townshend, by one of those intrigues which prevailed in the time of the first George, were ousted from favour, and Stanhope and Sunderland took their places. To the latter Defoe now addressed himself, avowing his base connection with their rivals, and claiming his promised reward."

The logical inferences are, that there was a change of government from one great party in the state to its rivals—the opposite. And that Defoe, who had before prostituted his pen for money, in proving that black was white, hastened to offer himself to the new ministry to write for pay that white was black.

Again, the answer is short. Walpole and Townshend (differing from their colleagues as to an appointment) seceded from the government; and Lords Stanhope and Sunderland took the vacant places. It was the same Whig government as before. Its principles remained entirely unchanged, and no alteration was made with respect to the services of Defoe.

A Mr. Buckley appears to have been the medium through whom the government communicated its instructions to Defoe; and in the fifth letter, Defoe writes:—

"The liberties Mr. Buckley mentioned, viz. to seem on the same side as before, to rally The Flying Post, the Whig writers," &c., &c.

In the very same column, the London Reviewer thus comments:—

"For fear his meaning should not be clearly understood, or his services duly valued, Defoe explains his plan of operations more fully. It was 'to seem to be on the same side as before (that is, the Tories), to rally The Flying Post (a Whig journal, honoured with a place in the Dunciad), the Whig writers,' &c., &c.

Having so distorted the instructions received from his employers into Defoe's own plan of operations, the reviewer concludes:—

"How much credit is to be attached to the statements of a writer in his other works against his political and religious opponents, when he could thus prostitute his honour and his talents?"

The premises do not warrant the conclusion. But, as Defoe would have said, "of this in its place."

Everybody conversant with the history of the reign of Queen Anne, knows that George Lockhart, of Carnwath, is the reputed author of a book called—

"Memoirs concerning the Affairs of Scotland, from Queen Anne's Accession to the Throne to the Commencement of the Union," &c., &c. 8vo. London, 1714.

It is right to say that the author's name does not appear on the title-page; but the internal and circumstantial evidence is so complete, that it would not have been strengthened by the subscription of his name in full. I affirm that no other man could have written it, for the following reasons:—The Preface states that the book was not intended by its author to be made public until the "obstacle" (the queen) should have been removed (devoutly adding, "and I pray God it may be soon,") and the king (the Pretender) restored. He was so conscious of its treasonable character, that he adds:—

"Common Prudence requires these Memoirs should lie dormant 'till such be out of a capacity to resent the same, either on Myself or Posterity."

The Preface goes on to "declare solemnly" the origin of the Memoirs:—

"I'm now to tell you, having had the Honour to represent one of the Chief Shires in Scotland during the Four last Sessions, I did apply myself to become as useful as I could to my Country. . . . I used, for the most part, to make my remarks on what I thought observable, as they occurred either in or out of the Parliament House. . . . Having followed this method for Four Years (1703 to 1707), I liv'd thereafter some time privately at my House in the Country, and thought I could not divert myself to better purpose than by ranging my Notes into Order."

He states that he knew the rise of the transactions, and was "trusted by the Chief of the Cavaliers and Country Parties" (meaning the Jacobites and Rebels); and that, in the Memoirs:—

"I have not spar'd my near Relations, particular Friends, and intimate Comrades, when I thought them Faulty."

Throughout the whole book the treasonable sentiments of the writer and those of Lockhart are identical.* What the latter said and did, in privacy, is related in full. Whenever Lockhart was present, at the most secret meetings of the traitors, the proceedings are carefully narrated in the Memoirs. The same of his correspondence with St. Germain, preparatory to the Pretender's invasion in 1707. On one occasion, during the opposition to the Union, Lockhart (as a Commissioner) stood perfectly alone; but the Memoir-writer not only endorses his conduct, but explains his motives, and approves. What people told to Lockhart in his own house in the utmost secrecy, and his replies, are contained, apparently verbatim, in the Memoirs. The same may be said of the secret conversations (whilst travelling) between the Duke of Hamilton and Lockhart; and also, between the latter and Captain Straton. Before closing his book, I must quote its author's opinion of a man, in political principles and conduct as in genius, his antipod:—a man who wrote nearly twenty works favouring the Union of England and Scotland; and almost as many against Jacobitism and the Pretender, and in favour of the Revolution, and the succession of the House of Hanover.

At p. 229 of these Memoirs, Lockhart says:—

"That vile Monster and Wretch Daniel De Foe, and other mercenary Fools and Trumpeters of Rebellion, have often asserted that these Addresses, and other Instances of the Nation's Aversion to the Union, proceeded from the false Glosses and underhand Dealings of those that opposed it in Parliament."

* In this I except the Introduction, as being written by another.—W. L.

I now return for the last time to the London Reviewer, who, in a further long paragraph asserts—without even the slightest pretence of evidence—that Defoe himself was the author of these same treasonable Memoirs concerning the Affairs of Scotland: that he collected his observations for the work while employed in Scotland by the Government (in 1706-7), to promote the Union; that the book contains Defoe's real opinions; that it was not ready for publication until 1714, when the Whigs were in power; and that, therefore — “with a baseness, happily singular in the annals of literature. Defoe printed his work and published it anonymously; but to make his peace with the Whigs, he pre-faced it with an introduction, written in the spirit and tone of a Whig.”

The reviewer afterwards, in the same paragraph, quotes from the Introduction; and thereby identifies the book, beyond all question.

The readers of “N. & Q.” will form their own conclusions on this, the first part of my self-imposed task.

W. LEE.

BABYLON.

(3rd S. vi. 533.)

Though many writers suppose that Baltassar (in Authorised Version, Belshazzar) is “the king of Babylon” against whom the prophecy of Isaiah (chap. xiv.) is directed; yet the point is difficult to ascertain with certainty. As Bishop Lowth observes (Notes on Isaiah, vol. ii., ed. Glasgow, 1822), the preceding chapter (xiii.) should be joined with chapter xiv., because thereby the unity of the prophecy is preserved. The words of Isaiah, in the 16th and 17th verses of chap. xiv., seem to be more applicable to Nabuchodonosor, or as rendered in the Authorised Version, Nebuchadnezzar, than to Baltassar, who, it is supposed, only reigned about four years. As Nabuchodonosor conquered Syria, Judea, Phœnicia, and Egypt, the words of the prophet seem very applicable to him: — “Is this the man that troubled the earth, that shook kingdoms?” (ver. 16)—“That made the world a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof, that opened not the prison to his prisoners?” (ver. 17, Doway Version). After his wars were ended, history tells us how he beautified, enlarged, and adorned Babylon, in such a wonderful manner, that he exulted in its magnificence, and exclaimed, when walking in his palace, “Is not this the great Babylon, which I have built to be the seat of the kingdom, by the strength of my power, and in the glory of my excellence?” (Daniel, iv. 27, Doway Version.) His terrible punishment with which he was instantly afflicted for his pride, illustrates very clearly the words of Isaiah: “How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, who didst rise in the morning? How art thou fallen to the earth that did wound the nations?” (chap. xiv. 12).

Part of the prophecy may, however, refer to Baltassar, the last king of Babylon. Several historical difficulties connected with this king, and the last four kings of Babylon, have been cleared up by the discoveries of Sir W. Rawlinson, who dates the death of Baltassar B.C. 538. Rosenmüller (Scholia in Vetus Testamentum, tom. i., Lipsiæ, 1810) makes a plausible remark in his annotations on the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah, viz., that “the King of Babylon” may be poetically used for Babylon itself. These are his words: —

“Qui rex Babylonis hic dicitur, non tam certum aliquem à Babylonis Regem videtur indicare, quam metonymicè et poeticè sub figura ipsum Babylonium imperium,” &c.

Several important works on Assyria, Babylon, Nineveh, and the ancient history of the Jews, have been published during the last few years; such as Layard's Nineveh and Babylon; Rawlinson's The Five Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World; Keith's Evidence of the Prophecies; Nineveh and Persepolis, by Mr. Vaux. Several other works are mentioned in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, under the heading of “Assyria and Babylon.” Rollin's Ancient History was once considered to be the great authority on these subjects; but it is now, though containing much excellent reading, almost useless as a work of reference. Though Milman's History of the Jews may be of great service to your correspondent, H. U., yet the learned author's views and opinions on many points are to be received with caution. As proofs of the literal way in which the prophecy of Isaiah has been fulfilled, with respect to the utter destruction of Babylon, the testimonies of Rich, Sir Robert Ker Porter, Ainsworth, Fraser, and Niebuhr, &c., are abundantly conclusive.

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

The king of Babylon, who is the subject of several verses of the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah, is understood to be Baltassar (Belshazzar, Authorised Version). The denunciations apply to him rather than to Nabuchodonosor, who lived and died gloriously; and, as many are of opinion, was saved. Baltassar, on the contrary, was conquered and slain; and in him the royal race was extinguished, and the city and monarchy of Babylon destroyed.

F. C. H.

EDGAR A. POE AND “THE FIRE FIEND.”

(3rd S. vi. 223, 224.)

Unless another correspondent shall, in the meantime, have better performed the task, I ask you, in justice to the memory of Mr. Poe, to insert the following account of the “Fire Fiend,” which I condense chiefly from a small pamphlet lately published by C. D. Gardette, Philadelphia, 1864.

In the course of a discussion upon Poe's genius which took place in November, 1859, Mr. Gardette was challenged to produce a successful imitation of the style and rhythm of "The Raven."

"Under this challenge, Mr. Gardette composed the 'Fire Fiend,' and its public success being part of the bargain, he sent it to the editor of Harper's Magazine for publication. He, however, while admitting its resemblance to Poe in manner and treatment, considered the magazine an unsuitable medium for its publication, and politely declined it. But, he added, that he had shown it to a literary acquaintance, the editor of the New York Saturday Press."

who, after communication with the author, published it in that paper on the 19th of November, 1859. It was accompanied with the following letter:—

"Philadelphia, November 6th, 1859.

("To the Editor of the Saturday Press.)

"Dear Sir,—The following fantastic poem was written by Mr. Poe, while experimenting towards the production of that wondrous mechanism, 'The Raven'; but considering it incomplete, he threw it aside. Some time afterwards, finding it among his papers, he enclosed it in a letter to a particular friend, labelled facetiously—'To be read by firelight, at midnight, after thirty drops of laudanum.' How it finally came into the possession of the undersigned, he is not at present at liberty to tell. The poem is copied verbatim, literatim, et punctuatim from the original MS.

"Yours, &c.

"C. D. GARDETTE."

This was the first time that the "Fire Fiend" ever appeared in print. It was prefaced on that occasion with the following editorial note in brackets:—

"[We postpone several articles this week to make place for the following communication, which we print with the single remark, that we 'don't see it.']"

"The 'Fire Fiend' then," says the pamphlet, "was written as a hoax, published as a hoax, with an editorial remark sufficiently indicating the fact to any reader of fair perspicacity; and as no money was asked nor received for or by its publication, and no efforts whatever made to disseminate or perpetuate the hoax, either by its publisher or author, I feel no hesitation in pronouncing it, and in believing that my readers will pronounce it, to have been a venial and harmless literary joke."

As it was probably more owing to the direct assertions of the letter above quoted, than to the quality of the piece itself, that the latter has deceived anybody, some readers may be pardoned for not seeing the "joke."

That part of the letter signed M. McCready in the Morning Star of Sept. 1 (quoted by T. B. in "N. & Q."), which relates to the "Fire Fiend" is so obviously taken from Mr. Gardette's note to the Saturday Press, that it is remarkable that the doubt expressed by the editor of that paper is not also referred to. It may be further observed, that the rest of M. McCready's letter, which relates to her conversations with Mrs. Clem, says nothing (unless by implication) about the "Fire Fiend," or any other poem than "The Raven." I agree with T. B. that "honour compels us to do justice to a man who had little but his genius to recommend him;" and it is, I believe, as certain that Poe did write "The Raven" as it is that he did not write the rather feeble and unpleasant imitation which has called forth these remarks.

ST. T.

SIR ANDREW RAMSAY.

(3rd S. vi. 460.)

In the above article there occur certain mistakes which it will be obliging to correct. They refer to a Scottish judge, and are as follows:—Sir Andrew Ramsay was transferred from the civic chair as Provost of Edinburgh, "to the Judicial Bench, as one of the Searchers of the Courts of Justices, when he lost his seat as Lord Abbotshall," &c. Now it should run thus: That the Lord Provost was placed on the Bench as one of the "Senators" of the "College" of Justice, where he "took" his seat "as Lord Abbotshall."

It sounds strange, that a chief magistrate should be placed on the Bench as a judge; and, moreover, keep both places, but such was the case with the individual in question. It might, nevertheless, happen again; for barristers are now eligible to be members of the town council of Edinburgh, and already two of the learned profession have held the civic chair, viz. Sir James Forrest, Bart., of Comeiston, and Francis Brown Douglas, Esq., both advocates; who might either, or both, have been placed on the bench if it had been the pleasure of her Majesty's ministers. A barrister—a baillie, if we remember rightly—was made a judge in Ceylon; and several counsellors have been converted into sheriffs: that is to say, into supreme judges in the Scottish counties, whose decisions could only be corrected by an appeal to the Court of Session—in other words, to use the ordinary law phraseology, by "suspension" or "advocation." What a sensation it would make in England, if the Lord Mayor of London were made Lord Chancellor, an alderman a Baron of Exchequer, and if the Indian judges were selected from the Common Council!

Sir Andrew Ramsay was a shopkeeper: for there were no merchants in Edinburgh in those days, according to the English meaning of the word. Whether he dealt in whisky or woollens is not now known. He may, like the founder of the Kinlochs, have been a tailor; but true it is, and of verity, that he knew well on which side his bread was buttered, for having successfully gratified the chief of the Maitlands by getting for him from the town council the enormous price of 5,000*l.* for the superiority of Leith, Lauderdale was so much satisfied of his judicial capabilities, by the second King of the Bahmani dynasty of Calbarga, and that one of his successors increased the number of instruments from five to nine. (Briggs's Ferishta, ii. 300; iii. 328.)

The distinction of the Naubat has occasionally been conferred on meritorious native officers of the Indian army by the British government. When the Right Hon. Stephen Rumbold Lushington was Governor of Madras, it was granted to Subahdar-Major Mohammed Ghause, commandant of the body guard, with an appropriate jâgir. Part of the ceremony consisted in a pair of silver kettle-drums being fastened to his shoulders, which were beaten by the governor in token of investiture.

During seasons of mourning the Naubat is silent. When the news of Sir William H. Mac Naughten's murder reached India, the late Nawâb of the Carnatic wrote to the Governor of Fort St. George, on January 30, 1844, to say that "H. H. has ordered the Circar Naubat to cease for the usual period, according to the Mussulman custom observed in cases of calamity." ▲

Johnson does not notice the word, but Burke in his copy of Johnson's Dictionary, now in the British Museum, includes it in some MS. addenda at the end of vol. ii. Thus—

"WAIT, n. s. from ye French guet (literally a sentinel on outpost duty). 2. Waits, in ye pl. an old word signifying ye night Guard in ye city of London."

BRIGHTLING.

GRACE MACAULAY (3rd S. vii. 46.)—If T. G. will kindly communicate with me, he will confer a favour. F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

OBJECTIONS TO WHITE PAPER (3rd S. vi. 454).—As then editor of, and writer of the notes on the above subject in, the Ophthalmic Hospital Reports referred to by EIRIONNACH, I am glad to find literary men, par excellence (two contributors to "N. & Q." and Mr. Babbage), confirming my opinion; and that of other medical men, including Dr. Aitken. I may here note, that the exact reference to the Ophthalmic Hospital Report is vol. ii. pp. 117—120 (1859). I refer to it specially because some other objections to modern printing, so much inferior to that of our ancestors, and so much deteriorating even now, are referred to, and may elicit some valuable notes. I wish to observe, that I question if colour is wanted in paper. Is not the common fault in paper that it is bleached, or too much bleached? Is it not the secret charm of old print that, besides a more legible thinner type, and more space, the paper was unbleached? A lemon-coloured paper is becoming common; but to me and some others it is trying to the eyes. "The colour of ripe wheat," is very pleasant. It does not follow, though it may be necessary, that the colour must be added in making the paper; and, therefore, that the paper should be more expensive. Instead of adding colour, I should subtract from the bleaching process of paper-making, and so perhaps cheapen paper, besides making it so much pleasanter in use for readers and writers. I look forward to the day when not only Christmas books, and other splendid publications, but "N. & Q." and other books constantly before our eyes, will be printed on toned (? unbleached) paper. J. F. S.

* I suppose linen rags were more unbleached than they now are.

HENGIST AND Horsa (3rd S. vii. 10.)—Dr. SEWELL's conjecture of horses' heads being carried as standards by the Saxons, is rendered more probable by a passage in the well-known Celtic poem of Y Gododin. This lay records the concluding struggle between the Celts of the second immigration, which then occupied the Lowlands of Scotland, against the Saxons of Northumberland, aided by the Scots and Picts of the North. The campaign lasted for seven years, from 642 to 649. The passage to which I refer occurs in the 35th stanza, and is thus translated by the Count de la Villemarqué, the well-known Celtic scholar:—

"Un chef qui tenait [en guise d'étendard] le quartier de devant d'un loup sans tête à la main."

GEORGE VERE IRVING.

SYMBOLIZATION OF COLOURS IN HERALDRY (3rd S. vi. 394, 395, 479.)—I admit that Wilson de la Colombiere's first book was published in 1639, but it must be borne in mind that this work contained seventy-four plates in folio, all engraved by himself, the work doubtless of several years. Wilson expressly declares that he was the inventor of the system, and that Petrasancta had merely adopted and copied his invention:—

"Afin que le Lecteur se satisfasse entièrement, je luy presente les deux metaux, les cinq couleurs, et les deux pennes gravées en la page suivante, et luy fais voir l'invention de laquelle je me suis seruy au premier liure de blazon, que je fis imprimer pour connoistre les metaux et les couleurs par la taille douce, laquelle a esté imitée et pratiquée par le docte Petrasancta, au liure intitulé Tessera gentilitas qu'il a composé en Latin, et fait imprimer à Rome."—La Science Héroïque, chap. iv. p. 39. Paris, 1644.

Now I ask, is it likely that Wilson, who has always borne a most honourable character, would thus deliberately lay claim to the invention if it were not really his? Is it not much more probable that Wilson may have mentioned his invention to his patron, Cardinal Barberini, and that by him it may have been communicated to Petrasancta, who never claimed the invention as his, nor contradicted Wilson's statement that I have quoted? The Jesuits were surely the least likely body at that time to leave such an assertion unrefuted if the invention could have been proved to belong to one of their order.

As I do not possess the Second Series of "N. & Q.," I am not aware whether these facts have appeared therein.

W. H. JAMES WEALE.

SIR THOMAS LUCY: SAXON TYPOGRAPHY (3rd S. vi. 515.)—The two leaves forming the cover of W. P. P.'s copy of the Funeral Sermon on Lady Lucy, are part of Charles Butler's Principles of Music in Singing and Setting: with the two-fold Use thereof [Ecclesiasticall and Civil]. 4to, London, 1636. Butler, in 1634, had published at Oxford an English Grammar, and also a work entitled, The Feminine Monarchy, or the History of Bees, both printed from the same types as the Principles of Music. In each of the works on Bees and Music an address from the printer to the reader refers to the English Grammar for an explanation of the peculiar orthography used in those works, "and the grounds and reasons thereof." Bagford, in one of the quaintly written notes interspersed throughout his collections, speaking of the three works, says, —

"It is to be noted that a new font of letters was cast at y^e cost of the Author as the comon letter would not serve to y^e spelling, there being two letters together. And as I have heard by Report from y^e learned Mr. Pote it was intended for the printing a bibell with y^e same letters."

I presume the intended Bible never appeared. In the attempt made some years ago to introduce a phonetic orthography, was Butler's system ever alluded to?

W. H. HUSK.

The two leaves, partly in Saxon characters, about which W. P. P. inquires, are from a rare book, of which I have a beautiful copy, entitled The Principles of Music, in Singing and Setting: with the two-fold Use thereof, Ecclesiasticall and Civil. By Charles Butler, Magd., Master of Arts. London: Printed by John Haviland for the author, 1636.

The types, cut expressly for Butler, were first used in the author's Feminine Monarchy; or, a Treatise on Bees, 1623; and are known as "Haviland's" types, being occasionally used by him for other works. They were, I believe, the second set of Saxon types cut in England, the first being those of old John Day. Haviland printed The Paschal Homily of Ælfric, in 1623, with these types.

EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

CONFIRMATION OF ARMS (3rd S. vi. 461, 539.) I cannot at the moment refer to my answer to the query of H. S. G., nor do I recall the precise terms employed by me in controverting his idea that arms stated to be borne by his family, consistently without "legal t." could become the subject of a grant of arms by the College of Heralds.

If it be clearly proved that there has been a grant of arms, and neither the original grant nor the record of it can be found, or if there be proof by immemorial usage, "from time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary" — viz. from the reign of Richard I.—of a prescriptive right to arms, proceeding on the legal presumption of an original grant, in either of these cases it is intelligible that a grant of confirmation should be made by the College of Heralds to individuals proving their right by descent. Nor would there be anything inconsonant with principle in an official instrument by the College certifying, as distinguished from confirming, the right of an individual to bear arms, to which he has proved himself by inheritance or grant to be entitled. But that there should be a grant of confirmation of arms to which a person had already a clear right seems irreconcilable with principle. If the right was clear, what need was there of confirmation? Cui bono? Assuming that the cases referred to by P. P. do not come within the exception I have suggested, they must be very anomalous or otherwise exceptional, and the contribution of some of them in extenso, showing the motive of the grant as set forth in the preamble in each individual case, with a list of others, to "N. & Q." would be interesting to its heraldic and genealogical readers. MIDDLE TEMPLAR.

GUILDFORD FAMILY (3rd S. vi. 455, 543.)—I should have stated that there is on the foot of the chalice at Montaignu a second shield charged with four lozenges in pale, and surmounted by a helmet, having for its crest a unicorn. Are these the arms of Thomas Bodenham?

W. H. JAMES WEALE.

The following note of the baptism of Clara Monson may be useful to M. P. and other readers of "N. & Q.:"—

"Clara, the daughter of Anthony monson (sic), baptized April 1, 1681."—Northorpe Par. Reg.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

VIOLON: LOCK-UP (3rd S. vi. 496.)—I observe in the number of Dec. 17 a cutting from Galignani on the word violon in the sense of lock-up. The following explanation by the late eminent French philologist, Génin, is more to the purpose. I took note of it from a series of papers he furnished some years ago to the Journal de l'Illustration, but it is to be found with many other curious things in his Récréations Philologiques:—

"Mettre au Violon.—Il est constant qu'au moyen âge on disait, au lieu de mettre au violon: mettre au psaltérion. (M. Génin en cite plusieurs exemples.) Psaltérion, sautéron, ne sont autre chose que le mot latin psalterium, accommodé à la française. Les sept psaumes pénitenciaux étaient durant tout le moyen âge une prière d'usage, aussi fréquent que l'oraison dominicale elle-même. C'est au point qu'il en était né une façon de parler proverbiale: le temps de dire unes sept-psaumes, comme on dit encore le temps de réciter un pater. Mettre au psaltérion c'était donc mettre au psautier, mettre en pénitence, en lieu où l'on a tout le temps de méditer sur ses sottises, et de s'en repentir, et de réciter unes sept-psaumes sans risquer de se voir interrompu. Mais le psaltérion était aussi un instrument de musique. Le peuple dans son humeur gauloise profita de l'équivoque, et voyant le psaltérion passé de mode y substitua le violon qui était devenu le roi des instruments. Au lieu de dire mettre au psaltérion il dit mettre au violon, et le calembourg fut sauvé."

DITCHFIELD.

POEM WANTED: "THE DOG AND THE SHADOW" (3rd S. vi. 534.)—It is by the late James Smith, one of the authors of the Rejected Addresses, and will be found in a collection of his minor pieces in two vols. post 8vo, edited I believe by his surviving brother, Horace Smith. The date of publication I am at present unable to supply, having mislaid my copy of the book.

R. S. Q.

DONKEY (3rd S. vi. 432, 544.)—MR. RIX carries back the use of the word Donkey to between the years 1774 and 1785. He omits to mention that Palgrave, where Mrs. Barbauld wrote the mock Eclogue, is in Suffolk. This fact seems to bear out the statement of Pegge and others, that the word Donkey was originally an East Anglian provincialism. MR. RIX's suggestion that the word may have been derived from donker (Dutch for gloomy), presupposes either that the East Anglians were in the habit of using a Dutch adjective to express gloominess, or that they had adopted from the Dutch some ready-made name, derived from donker, as the equivalent of "ass." The only name, however, by which the animal is known in Holland is Ezel.

J. DIXON.

It cannot, I think, be gravely supposed that the name "Dickey" given in Norfolk to an ass can be derived from German, Dutch, or Flemish. It is more likely adopted from "Dick," as in the West of England the animal is called "Neddy," and generally elsewhere a "Jackass." It is also very frequently in Norfolk called "Donkey" by the humbler classes.

F. C. H.

UMBRELLAS: PATTERNS (3rd S. vi. 532.)—A correspondent, who remarks upon some expressions in Gay's Trivia, wishes to know whether umbrellas were formerly oiled. My own recollection goes back to the concluding years of the last century; and I well remember that all umbrellas then in use were made of oiled silk. They were not then used to walk with; that improvement was introduced a few years later; but they had a ring at the top, and a round handle, like that of a hearth-brush. They were usually carried under the arm, but often slung across the back; the ring served to hang them up by, and occasionally for carrying them. Gay was a poet and not a philologist, and his tale of the Lincolnshire yeoman's daughter can only be regarded as a poetical fancy. The Trivia, indeed, is made up of similar conceits. The name of patien is, I think, evidently derived from the French name for a skate, patin; in each case there is a wooden sole raised upon iron.

F. C. H.

Compare Swift's amusing Description of a City Shower:—

"The tuck'd-up sempstress walks with hasty strides, While streams run down her old umbrella's sides."

P. W. TREPOLPEN.

"THE ROBBER'S GRAVE" (3rd S. vi. 498.)—The writer of the volume bearing this title was the Rev. R. Mostyn Pryce, formerly of Gunley, in Shropshire, or Montgomeryshire. He was a preacher of considerable eloquence, and his little book gives token of literary powers, which it is to be regretted he did not employ on any more important work. His testimony is trustworthy, so far as it goes, and I have heard the story frequently in Shropshire.

J. D.

Your correspondent T. B. will find an interesting account of this in that most amusing book, The Season Ticket, published some years ago. Unfortunately I do not possess the book, and cannot refer him to the exact page.

OXONIENSIS.

R. Mostyn Pryce, the author of The Robber's Grave, was a clergyman of the Church of England. He was an agreeable and clever but somewhat eccentric man. He committed suicide at Newton, Montgomeryshire, about 1857. I cannot vouch for the fact of the grass not growing on the grave, but I know the circumstance was credited in the neighbourhood.

Particulars of the trial and case are no doubt contained in the Shrewsbury Chronicle of 1821, the principal or only chronicle of local intelligence of the district at that date.

J. E. DAVIS, Stipendiary Magistrate.

Stoke-on-Trent.

MASSYMOR: MAZMORRAS (3rd S. vi. 530.)—This word, as applied to a dungeon, may perhaps be derived from the Arabic, matmuret, vulgo, matmure, a subterranean granary, a crypt (fovea subterranea, crypta, in qua frumentum reconditur), from the Arabic root, tamr, to fill (replere [cellam]). Another word, mazmer, a hiding place (locus occultationis), approaches more nearly the sound of massymor, but the first word is almost identical both in sound and sense with the French term found in the Dictionnaire de l'Académie, and I am inclined to consider it as the parent of the expressions referred to by J. R. B. In the warmer countries of Asia, the surplus grain is usually stored in pits, or subterranean granaries, which in India are called khaus. The habit was probably introduced by the Saracens into Spain, and so the word may have passed into France. As applied to a dungeon the term may have been brought from Syria by the Crusaders, and may have been very appropriately applied to such a crypt as that in Hermitage Castle, into which Sir Alexander Ramsay was thrust by the Knight of Liddesdale. It was situated immediately under the granary of the castle, and the wretched man, being left without food, prolonged his life for sixteen days by means of the grains which fell through the floor, till death put a period to his sufferings.

Another familiar instance of a word adopted from the Arabic into all the modern languages of Europe, is found in magazine, derived from makhzan, a store (apotheca, cella, horreum), from the root kham (recondere in horreo). W. E.

I am acquainted with the parish of Maismore, in Gloucestershire, a short distance westward of the city of Gloucester. Can there be any connexion between its name and the names above? If so, it would be still more singular to see it in the English language, in addition to the Scotch, French, and Saracenic. F. C. H.

ANTOINE GODEAU'S PSALMS (3rd S. vi. 497.)—Bishop Godeau's translation of the Psalms into French verse were so highly thought of at the end of the seventeenth century, that they almost superseded the version of Marot in family use.

I have now before me a rare little volume, bearing the following title:—

“Paraphrase des Pseaumes de David, en vers François. Par M^{re} Antoine Godeau, Evêque de Grasse et Vence. Dernière Édition, revue exactement, et les Chants corrigés et rendus propres et justes pour tous les couplets. Par M. Thomas Gobert, Prestre, ancien Maître de la Musique de la Chapelle du Roy, et Chanoine de la sainte Chapelle de Paris. Suivant la Copie, A Paris, chez Pierre le Petit, Imp. Ord. du Roy. MDCCLXXVII.”

This work is not mentioned by either Burney or Hawkins; and is, therefore, deserving of being chronicled in the pages of “N. & Q.”

I regret not being able to help my friend MR. ERK in his inquiries about Jacques de Gouy, and his music to Godeau's Psalms. I have examined numerous Psalm Books, printed by W. Penson at the beginning of the last century, without finding a single advertisement of his reprint of Gouy's work.

The true date of Bishop Godeau's death is April 21, 1671. EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

ROBERT BROWN, THE SEPARATIST (1st S. ix. 672.)—Under this title ANAT. relates that, at the time of the marriage of the last descendant of Robert Brown with George, Lord Pomfret, her servants persisted in ringing the bells of the village church, to the annoyance of the vicar's wife, who was recently confined; and that the vicar's pupils drove the servants out of the church, and removed the clappers of the bells; and that the circumstance was made the subject of a very scarce mock heroic poem called the Brunoniad (London, 1792, printed by Kearsley), and that the author was Thos. Foster. After ten years' search, I have at last obtained a copy of the poem, but its title-page is “Brunetta, or the Birthday Battle: printed in the year 1792.” As ANAT. has not been accurate in the description of the poem, nor of the circumstance giving rise to it (for Miss Brown was not married until 1793), I am desirous of knowing what authority he has for attributing the authorship to the Rev. Thomas Foster. Jos. PHILLIPS, Jun. Stamford.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

The Christ of the Gospels and the Christ of Modern Criticism. Lectures on M. Renan's “Vie de Jesus.” By John Tulloch, D.D. (Macmillan.)

These Lectures contain a calm, temperate, and closely-argued refutation of the philosophical and critical assumptions, and untenable historical pretensions of M. Renan's book,—a refutation which becomes the more effective from the absence of all personal criticism.

The Chronological Bible: containing the Old and New Testament, according to the Authorised Version, newly divided into Paragraphs and Sections, with the Dates and Places of Transactions; concise Introduction to the several Books; and Notes illustrative of the Chronology, History, and Geography of the Sacred Scriptures. By Robert B. Blackader. (Simpkin & Marshall.)

The Chronological New Testament, &c. Second Edition, revised and enlarged. (Simpkin & Marshall.)

Ample as this title is, it is far from doing justice to the various ingenious arrangements by which the editor has endeavoured to throw light upon the Authorised Version of the Holy Scriptures. As little can we hope to do so in the limited space which we can devote to it. The text is printed in paragraphs, and on each page are two columns of illustrative notes, including parallel passages printed in full. Introductory notices are prefixed to the several Books: the poetical books are printed rhythmically; speeches are printed with inverted commas; variations of ancient versions are given; quotations in the New Testament of passages from the Old Testament are printed in capitals; and many similar means adopted to render the meaning of the Sacred Text more intelligible. Nothing but an examination of the book can show its value, and such an examination ought to secure for it a very general acceptance and a wide circulation.

In the New Testament, which may be purchased separately, a comparison of the received text with the Vatican MS. B., is instituted by means of a different type. Mr. Blackader deserves great credit for the intelligence which he has displayed, as well as for the time and labour he has expended on his “good work.”

Mornings of the Recess, 1861-4. A Series of Biographical and Literary Papers reprinted, by Permission, from “The Times,” and revised by the Author. Two Vols. (Tinsley.)

Who that has been, during the recess, as agreeably as unexpectedly surprised to find a few columns of The Times rescued from the American war, the Müller trial, or the speeches of Members out of Parliament—and devoted to notices of the best books of the season—has not longed to see those masterly sketches preserved in some permanent and available form? That wish has at length been gratified; and to those who remember the articles contained in these volumes, a mere list of them will be their strongest recommendation. They are between twenty and thirty in number, and treat of—Sir John Elliot; Coins of the Ancient Britons; Forsyth's Cicero; Naturalist of the Amazon; English Engineers; Saxon Leechdoms; Dixon's and Stebbing's Bacon; Fraunce's Cook's Guide; Professor Wilson; Female Life in Prison; Ionian Islands in 1863; Mrs. Trench's Journal and Remains; English Cant and Slang; Lord Lyndhurst; Lady Cowper's Diary; Miss Knight's Autobiography; The Dahomey Mission; English Cathedrals; Works of Alexander Neckam; Modern English Caricatures; The Leadbeater Papers; Vacation Tourists; The Napiers; Omitted Chapters in English History; and Keble's Essays. It is long since two more able or pleasant volumes have come under our notice.

Studies in Biography. By Lionel James Trotter, late Captain in the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers. (Moxon.)

These biographical sketches of Mahomet, Thomas Becket, Frederick II. of Germany, Savonarola, Bacon, Pitt, and Sheridan, reprinted from the Dublin University Magazine, and other high class serials, are well worthy reading. Captain Trotter has a ready pen and a keen appreciation of character; and in his endeavour to combine what have been called the sympathetic and judicial forms of criticism, he does not lose sight of that striving after truth which is the first duty of a biographer; whose admiration for Bacon's intellect, to use our author's own words, "should never lead him to slur over his moral failings; his love of truth, his sympathy with the good that everywhere challenges notice, should force him in spite of a hundred prejudices, to acknowledge with equal readiness the pure asceticism of Savonarola, the essential earnestness of Mahomet, the lofty patriotism of Pitt, and the cloudier, if more taking, brilliancy of Sheridan."

The Herald and Genealogist. Edited by J. G. Nichols, F.S.A. Parts X. XI. and XII. (Nichols & Sons.)

These three parts, rich in every variety of heraldic and genealogical information, complete the second volume of Mr. Nichols's most useful serial. "The Heraldic Chronicle" for 1863, and articles on "The Herald's Visitations of Counties," are among those articles which will be found of more particular interest.

Lord Overston has shown his respect for the late Mr. McCulloch by a very graceful act, the purchase of that gentleman's well-chosen library—rich alike in fine classics, and works on Political Economy, at the price at which he understood the late owner to have estimated it—five thousand pounds.

The long-expected "Vie de Cæsar," by the Emperor Napoleon, is at length on the eve of publication. An édition de luxe of a thousand copies, which, when splendidly bound, are to be presented to the sovereigns, diplomats, and celebrities of Europe will be first issued. There is a question as to who is to translate the work into English. Why should not the Emperor translate it himself? Should his version display a few Gallicisms, they would be readily overlooked in the compliment which England would feel had been paid to her by her great ally.

A General Meeting of the Camden Society was called for Wednesday, for the election of a President in the place of the much-lamented Marquess of Bristol, whose death has been felt as a great loss to the Society. Fortunately the Marquess Camden, who, as President of the Kentish Archæological Society and of the Archæological Institute, has shown great interest in historical and antiquarian pursuits, had consented to be put in nomination, and his Lordship was unanimously elected.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

SPRIT OF THE PUBLIC JOURNAL for 1865. Vol. IX. Lond. 1866.

 Letters stating particulars and lowest price, carriage free, to be sent to Mr. W. G. BAKER, Publisher of "NOTES & QUERIES," 23, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentleman by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

THE REDEEMED ROSE; or, Willie's Rest, by Eliza Rumeby. Hatchard.

Wanted by Rev. J. Maskell, Tower Hill, London, E.C.

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for 1864. Vol. II. GARDENER'S CHRONICLE NEWSPAPERS from June 11 to the end of 1864, in clean and good condition.

Wanted by M. N., 2, St. Leonard's Place, Bishop's Road, Farringdon.

JOHNSTON'S THIEVES AND HIGHWAYMEN. Original folio edition with plates.

Wanted by Mr. Percy B. St. John, Southend, Essex.

MRS. TRIMMER'S FABULOUS HISTORIES; or, Tale of the Robins.

Wanted by Dr. Fisher, 5, Appian Way, Upper Leeson Street, Dublin.

LOUIS XVII. SA VIE, SON ADOPTION, SA MORT, par M. A. D. Beauchamp. THE LOST FAIRIE, by John H. Hanson, published by Putnam, New York, 1854.

Life of ELIZABETH WILLIAMS, by his Son. Supposed to be also an American publication.

Wanted by M. Melland, Kenton, Exeter.

Notices to Correspondents.

We are compelled to postpone until next week our Notes on many Books—among others of Goiderich and Porter's edition of Webster's Dictionary; Dr. Russell's Review of Todleben's Sebastopol; Booth's Reprint of First Folio Shakespeare, &c.

C. L. B. Full information respecting the City of London School will be found in the Public Schools Calendar.

ILLUSTRATIONS. The statement "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," is derived from the expression of Tertullian: "Semen est sanguis Christianorum," which occurs at the conclusion of his "Apologétique adversus Gentes."—The 17th of July, 1554, fell on Monday.

A. F. BARLOW. The first six classical notes are said to have been invented by Guy Arctius, a Benedictine monk, about A.D. 1075; but consult Housley's History of Music, and "N. & Q." 1st S. XII. 361, 353. —For the origin and literary history of The Arabian Nights, see Mr. Lane's Review at the end of the third volume of his edition (1826), pp. 674–686. —For some particulars of Jacqueline comte Nouvelle Biographie Générale, ed. 1854, xxvi. 313; and Biographie Universelle, ed. 1858, xxx. 478. —For the meaning of the terms Objective and Subjective, see "N. & Q." 1st S. v. 42, 141; ix. 170.

CARLETON (CAPE TOWN.) The work Fifty Reasons why Anthony Ulrich, Duke of Brunswick and Lunenburg abjured Lutheranism, 1741, appears to be very scarce. We cannot find a copy in the Catalogues of the British Museum or the Bodleian.

ERRATA.—3rd S. vii. p. 43, col. 1, line 27, for "Gaul" read "Gall." The signature to the article should be "R. S. Q."

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d., or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. BAKER, 23, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., to whom all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

FREEDOM FROM COUGHS IN TEN MINUTES is secured by Dr. Locock's PULMONIC WAFERS.—The most disinterested testimony is constantly offered to the value of Dr. Locock's PULMONIC WAFERS for the cure of asthma, consumption, coughs, colds, and disorders of the throat and lungs. The following is from Mr. J. Floyd, Chemist, Market Place, Great Farnmouth: "I recommend the Wafers, finding them much more speedy and certain in effecting a cure than any other medicine; and though profits are equal, I prefer selling what I think most effective. They have a pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1ld., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d and 11s. per box. Sold by all Druggists."

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 161.

NOTES:—Redflowering Queen Mary's Garden, 69—Sobriquets of Regiments, 70—Invoice of Cargo, 1803: a Business Communication, 73—The Complutensian Polyglott, and Brocar the Printer of it, Id.—Note for Spanish Scholars—Queen Anne Bolteyn—Curious Anachronism.—Bishop King and Dr. John Rainolds, 73.

QUERIES:—Meat and Malt: Morocco, 73—Anonymous—Bell-ringing: Fines for its Omission—Clairvoyance and Mesmerism—Cromwell's Ironsides—Curll's Poetry—Dancing upon Sippets—Edgar and Elfrida—Fords in England: the Catwater—Four-and-Twenty sworn Men of Gossamer—Gaelic Grammar, &c.—Sir Thomas Glover—Old Horse and Groom Inn, Streatham, Surrey—The Inscription on the Cross—Is it a Fossil?—Isabella, Abbess of Amesbury, or of Acornbury—Knights Bachelors—Lancashire: Old Timber Halls—Metrical Sermon—Mistoe—Numismatic—Religious Statistics—Richard John Tetlow, 74.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Rev. John Brabant—Charles I and Donne's Sermons—Mackenzie, Earl of Cromarty—"Complaynt" of Sir David Lindsay—Taynton (Gloucester) Registers—Token: Thomas Johnson—Wm. Dyason—The Rev. Joseph Charles, 77.

REPLIES:—Pretended Son of Louis XVI., 79—Davison's Case, 80—Hagbush Lane, 81—How did the Ancients kindle their Fires?—Cracoe—Boston House, Middlesex—Muriel—The Young Pretender—Sir Richard Braham—Surrey Bellfounders—Style of Cousin by the Crown—To take up one's Cross—Newton and Voltaire—King Nibbs—The Bottle Conjuror—Waking Time—Barley—Irish Song—Hays of Erroll—Latin Puzzle—Hymn to the Virgin—Doddridge MSS.—Irish Expression "Neger"—Hoods, 82.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

REFLOWERING QUEEN MARY'S GARDEN.

Queen Mary's Bower or Garden (for it goes by both names), is thus described:—

"At the Port of Menteith, three-and-a-half miles from the Cardross station of the Stirling and Loch Lomond railway, there is a good inn. Taking boat there, the tourist may visit two islands, Rest and Talla, or the Earl's Isle. The former, which is the larger and more easterly island, consists of about five acres, and contains the ruins of a priory, where Queen Mary resided during the invasion of the English in 1547, before she was removed to France. The priory was founded about 1238, by Walter Comyn, Lord of Badenoch, who became Earl of Menteith by marriage with the Countess."^{*}

After his death, Walter Stewart, brother of the High Stewart of Scotland, inherited the property and title in right of his wife, the younger sister of the Countess of Menteith. A writ was granted by Robert Bruce at this place, in April, 1310, as recorded in the Chartulary of Arbroath; and at the priory of Inchmartho (Inchmacrome), King David II. and Margaret Logie were married, in 1363.[†]

The architecture of the monastic buildings is early English. The archaeologist will see with delight the extreme beauty of the western door, richly moulded and sculptured along its deep retiring jambs. In the choir there are crypt, sedilia, a piscina, and other usual adjuncts of a mediæval church; and an ancient tombstone is supposed to mark the grave of the founder. But what will be viewed with most interest is a recumbent monument of two figures, male and female, cut out of one large stone. The knight is in armour, one leg crossed over the other. A triangular shield with the check fesse proves the bearer to have been a Stewart, but the arms on the shield show that the figure is not that of the founder. The arm of the lady is twined round his neck, and while much of the monument has been defaced, this memorial of affection seems to have been respected. The monastery was built for monks of the Augustine order, and was dependent on the great house of Cumbuskenneth. Here you find large Spanish chestnuts, one lying dead, others standing stark and peeled, like gigantic antlers, and others flourishing in their green old age, whilst in a thicket you see the remains of the monastery of great beauty, the design and workmanship exquisite. You wander through the ruins, overgrown with ferns and Spanish filberts, and old fruit-trees, and at the corner of the ancient monastic garden you come upon a strange and most touching sight—an oval space of about 18 feet by 12, with the remains of a double row of boxwood all round, the shrubs of box being 14 feet high, and 8 or 9 inches in diameter, healthy, but plainly of great age. What is this? It is called in the Guide-books, "Queen Mary's Bower."

^{*} Wynne, ii. p. 398.

[†] For an interesting account of the Earls of Menteith, see Mr. Craik's Remains of the Peers, vol. iii.

"It is plainly the child-queen's garden, with her little walk, and its rows of boxwood, left to themselves for three hundred years. Yes, without doubt, 'here is that first garden of her simpleness.' Fancy the little, lovely, royal child, with her four Maries,* her play-fellows, her child-maids of honour, with their little hands and feet, and their innocent and happy eyes, pattering about that garden, laughing and running and gardening as only children do and can. As is well known, Mary was placed by her mother in the Isle of Rest before sailing from the Clyde to France. There is something 'that tirls the heartstrings a' to the life,' in and looking on this unmistakable relic of that strange and pathetic old time."

Supposing as I do the Fotheringhay Missal to be of the age of her father James V., the account of that remarkable volume which I give says, "No part of the writing proper, or illumination, are by the unfortunate Queen; it is probably earlier than her mature day." It gives the illuminations representing several flowers, which would be

* Three of the Queen's Maries are mentioned in a verse of the ballad of "The Lament of the Queen's Marie," in Sir Walter Scott's Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border:—

"There was Marie Seeton, and Mary Beatoun, And Marie Carmichael, and me."

The fourth "me" was Mary Livingstone.

known in Scotland, at least at the Court of Holyrood House, and therefore might form such as would be planted in the little queen's garden.

The following is the account given by Professor Charles Piazzi Smyth:—

"Among the objects of interest in Russia of which I was enabled to bring away photographic records during my recent visit was a stereograph of Queen Mary's Fotheringhay Missal, a subject which has perhaps sufficient of national interest about it to justify my requesting you to present a copy in a suitable stereoscope to the Society of Antiquaries in Scotland. Although my visit to the great empire of the North-east was mainly connected with science, still, when I heard in St. Petersburg of there being in the Imperial Library of that city a very precious manuscript volume that had belonged to Queen Mary, and which had been written in (some also added illuminated by her) during her English captivity, I could not but be anxious to bring back to her own country some veri-facsimile of the handicraft of one as talented as unfortunate, and as much misunderstood by some as admired by others. This was a matter of considerable difficulty, but at length, through the kindness of a Russian lady, the Emperor's permission was asked and obtained. The book proved to be a moderate-sized quarto of between two and three hundred pages vellum, and bound in dark crimson velvet with gilt clasps. On a careful examination, we found the general description given of it by Prince Labanoff in the 7th vol of his Lettres de Marie Stuart extremely exact. It is described by able authorities as a superb manuscript in the Gothic character, magnificently enriched with arabesque miniatures in gold and brilliant colours of the first order, and must have been the work of distinguished professional hands. No part of the writing proper, or illumination, are by the unfortunate Queen; it is probably earlier than her mature day. The 25th page bears the legend, in the Queen's own hand:—

"Ce livre est à moi, Marie, Royn, 1554."

This was about four years before her marriage with the Dauphin. It is mentioned in the Chartley Catalogue of her belongings in August, 1586, under the name of a Livre d'Heures, and again under that of a matins-book in the 'Inventoyre of the Jewells, &c. of the late Queene of Scottes,' in February, 1587, as bound in velvet with corner-pieces, middle-plates, and clasps of gold adorned with diamonds. It appears to have been her companion through all her varied career, and finally during her long imprisonment in England. Here it was thought she began to enter in it her mournful thoughts, always in French, and generally in verse. Every spare portion of page is thus occupied, and one of the pages in the photographic view, the only originally blank page in the book, is covered with verses and memoranda of various dates, filled in at last sideways and cornerways. Professor Smyth then goes on to prove very skilfully that the book was a gift to the Queen from her royal lover; hence her careful preservation and constant use of it. He also mentions the erasure of numerous coats of arms through the book, and supposes these to have been the arms of England blended with her own, which it is well known were used by her as Dauphiness on the death of the English Queen Mary. An example of such a blank and rudely-rubbed shield exists on the right hand of the photograph. It is gathered from certain entries, that the book was kept about the English Court till 1615. It was then lost sight of until the early years of the French Revolution, when, stript of its costly binding, the volume was bought at a cheap rate in Paris amidst a heap of plunder from the Royal Library there, by M. Dombrousky, then attached to the Russian Embassy in France, and by him transmitted to St. Petersburg. On the right page is a specimen of the illumination; on the left the Queen's manuscript. The miniature represents King David with an open book, and a harp before him, Jerusalem in the distance, and beside him a model of the Temple; in the sky an appearance of the Deity, and underneath the miniature in Gothic character the beginning of the 38th Psalm in Latin. The floral ornamentation is extremely beautiful,—numerous Scottish plants are introduced, the ivy, convolvulus, strawberry, apple blossom, bulrush, &c., and above all the thistle, which the artist has never been tired of reproducing. The Queen's manuscript consists of verses and memoranda, of which the following are specimens near the top of the page:—

"Qui jamais davantage aist contraire le sort;
Si la vie m'est moins utile que la mort!
Et plustot que cha(n)ger de mes maux l'adventure, Chacun change pour moi d'humeur et de nature."
"MARIE R."

Now we have only to suppose Queen Mary's Fotheringhay Missal to have been made in the time of her father James V. to suppose it possible that some of the flowers there depicted were such as might have formed the decoration of the garden of her childhood. W. H. C.

SOBRIQUETS OF REGIMENTS.*

21st—The Earl of Mar's Grey Brecks. Derives its title from the dress worn by the corps, on its formation, in Sept. 1678, when Charles, fifth Earl of Mar, was appointed its Colonel, which appointment he retained until July, 1686.

22nd—The Two Twos.

23rd—The Nanny Goats and The Royal Goats.

24th—Howard's Greens. The 24th has been frequently styled the Bengal Tigers, like the 17th.

25th King's Own—Borderers, or Botherers (raised 1688-9—David, Earl of Leven's regiment—in Scotland.)

28th—The Slashers. This regiment obtained the name of "The Slashers" from their gallantry at the battle of the White Plains, and passage of the Brunx River, Oct. 28, 1777, with the old 35th Regiment.

30th—Triple Xs. The 10th Regiment of Infantry used to bear on its forage caps a single X; the 20th Regiment two XXs, and the 30th Regiment three XXXs, instead of "10," "20," and "30." Hence the sobriquet of the 30th Regiment.

31st—The Young Buffs. The 31st were styled the "Young Buffs," to distinguish the corps from the 3rd Foot, or "Old Buffs." There exists an anecdote, that on one of the numerous occasions when the 31st Regiment distinguished itself in battle, a General Officer exclaimed, "Well done,

* Concluded from p. 50.

Old Buffs." "We are not the Buffs, Sir," replied the officer commanding the regiment. "We are the 31st."—"Well done, Young Buffs, then," exclaimed the General.

35th—The Orange Lilies, from having orange facings.

36th—The Saucy Greens. From the colour of their facings.

38th—The Pump and Tortoise.

39th—The Green Linnets. From the colour of their facings.

40th—XLrs (Excellers).

42nd—Black Watch.

43rd—The Light Bobs.

44th—The Two Fours.

45th—The Old Stubborns, and Sherwood Foresters. The late Colonel Guard, of the 45th Regiment, unsuccessfully applied to have the corps styled "Sherwood Foresters." Not long after, the 45th was brigaded with the 87th and 88th, and when Col. Butler and Duff called their corps to "attention" by their titles "Prince's Irish," and "Connaught Rangers," Colonel Guard shouted out to his regiment, "Nottingham Hosiers, attention!" to the great amusement of the whole brigade, which burst out into a most unmilitary fit of laughter.

46th—The Surprisers. From their conduct in the surprise of Wayne's American brigade, Sept. 20, 1777, after the spirited action of the Brandywine, on the 11th. "Mad Antony," as Wayne was called, was "caught out this time," and paid off by Gen. Grey, notwithstanding the rebuff he gave us at Stony Point.

47th—The Cauliflowers, and The Lancashire Lads.

50th—The Dirty Half Hundred. From the men wiping their faces with their black cuffs, after review and drill, in "sweating times." And The Devil's Royals. No cleaner, smarter, or braver regiment ever took the field.

51st—The Kois. So called from the initial letters of the Regimental title, "King's Own Light Infantry."

53rd—The Brickdusts. From their red facings.

55th—The Two Fives.

56th—The Pompadours, and The Saucy Pom-poms (short for Pompadours). From their purple facings, the favourite colour of Madame Pompadour, the mistress of Louis XV., about 1745: she died in 1764, a Marchioness. (Jane Antoinetta Poisson, her proper name). The 56th wore deep crimson facings, and white lace; pink facings were worn in 1761.

57th—The Die Hards. Received their honourable title from their gallantry at Albuera, where the 3rd Foot, 29th, 34th, and 48th Regiments also highly distinguished themselves.

58th—The Steel Backs.

59th—The Lilywhites. The 47th and 59th Regiments, both having white facings, assumed the distinguished titles above given.

62nd—The Springers. (In taking open order, the word instead of March, was Spring.) Named "The Springers," from the rapidity of its pursuit of the American rebels, after the action at Trois Rivières in Canada, 1776.

74th—The Assaye Regiment. The 74th and 70th derive their titles from the places where they first distinguished themselves in action.

76th—The Hindostan Regiment. Also named The Seven and Sixpennies, from the number of the corps.—J.

77th—The Pot-hooks, from the figure "7."

78th—The King's Men. So styled from their motto. "Cuidich'n Rhi," help the King. This is the second 78th Regiment raised by the Earl of Seaforth's family. The senior corps so numbered was raised in 1777 by William fifth Earl of Seaforth, and was principally recruited from the class of "Caber Feidh," as the Mackenzies were named, from the stag's horns borne on the armorial bearings of Earl Seaforth. Several senior regiments having been disbanded in 1783, the 78th regiment was numbered on December 29, 1787, "the 72nd" regiment, which number it has borne ever since. The present 78th regiment was raised by a letter of service, dated March 7, 1793, and the first colonel appointed to the corps was Thomas Humberstone Mackenzie, whose commission bears date March 8, 1793. He died in the spring of 1796, and was succeeded by Colonel Alexander Mackenzie Fraser. There are now a Major, two Captains, and a Lieutenant of the Mackenzie Clan serving in this splendid National Regiment.

83rd—Fitch's Grenadiers. The first parade of this fine regiment took place in the yard of Dublin Castle, in the Autumn of 1793. The title of "Grenadiers" was originally given in derision, owing to the average smallness of the soldiers who originally belonged to the corps; but the regiment has been for very many years remarkable for the superior height of the men who have been selected as its recruits.

85th—The Elegant Extracts. The motto of the 85th was taken on the corps being reformed by "Elegant Extracts" from the officers of other regiments in Colonel Cuyler's time (1813), when so many courts-martial took place as to induce the commander-in-chief to disperse all the unbroken officers, and form the corps anew.

87th—The Old Fogs. The title is a corruption of the war-cry of the corps, "Fag-an-Bealach," pronounced "Faug-a-bollagh," meaning "Clear the way."

88th—The Devil's Own, Connaught Boys. The 87th being "The Prince's Own," General Picton named the 88th "The Devil's Own," as a complement to their dauntless bravery in presence of he enemy, and their then uniform irregularity in camp and quarters.

89th—Blayney's Blood-hounds, and the Rollickers. This old and excellent regiment received the former sobriquet from its unerring certainty in hunting down and nearly exterminating the Irish rebels in the year 1798, when the corps was commanded by the late Lord Blayney, the eleventh lord.

3rd West India Regiment—Buckmaster's Light Infantry. Mr. Buckmaster, tailor, used to issue "Light Infantry uniforms," for some years, to the officers of this corps, without (as is stated) any authority from the Commander-in-Chief.

JUVERNA.

INVOICE OF CARGO, 1803: A BUSINESS COMMUNICATION.

The enclosed photograph is of an invoice of cargo, dated 1803, reflecting the highest possible credit on the business qualities of our respected foregoers, or perhaps still living grandfathers, which is worthy of a place in "N. & Q." The charming effrontery of its tone is delicious, "marked and numbered as in the margin," 115 males, 64 females; total, 179 slaves. There is no boggling or dodging here, but plain Saxon. "God's grace" has been yoked to strange enterprises, but this I think must be allowed to be about the queerest attachment extant; "and so God send the good ship to her desired port in safety." The "t'other party had more to do with it probably." In the words of an ancient merchant of this place, acting as magistrate, trying a she-thief for stealing tea from a ship's side—"What tempted ye to do it?" It was said to be her first offence.—Prisoner (in a flood of tears): "It was the deevil temptit me."—Magistrate: "The deevil, honest man, had naething to do with it; (sotto voce) at least a never kenn'd he was sicna judge o' tea, for it was the best kist in the ship."

The photograph gives of course the entire of the document, but I send a written copy in case any word should be difficult of decipherment. The interlineation after "Seas," "Insurrection and Mortality" excepted, is too horribly suggestive to be missed. The date is blank Feb., 1803, and the writing is delicate, and evidently that of an elderly man, as the hand shows tremulousness (see word belonging.) I think it is written with a fine crow quill; the means and the end jar strangely. The cargo was for a West Indian plantation, shipped, as stated by the vessel's owners, in their own ship. Where is "Kissing"?—

"Shipped by the grace of God, in good order and well-conditioned, by Messrs Irving & Fraser in and upon the good [ship] * snow called The Ariadne . . . whereof is master, under God, for this present voyage, Capt* [Wm]* Wm M* Bride and now riding at anchor in the Rlopongoes . . . and by God's grace, bound to West Indies . . . To say: . . . One hundred and Seventy-nine Slaves* . . . being marked and numbered as in the margin; and are to be delivered in the like good order and well-conditioned, at the aforesaid port of West Indies . . . (the danger of the Seas [Insurrection and Mortality]† only excepted) unto . . . Order . . . or their assigns, . . . Freight paid Vessel belonging to the Owners . . . with primage and average accustomed.—In witness whereof the master and purser of the said ship hath affirmed to three bills of lading, all of this tenor and date; one of which bills being accomplished, the other two to stand void; and so God send the good ship to her desired port in safety. Amen.—Dated Kissing, Feb^{ry}, 1803.

* The words in brackets are deleted and corrected, in the original.

(Signed) "Wm. McBride."

C. D. LAMONT.

Greenock.

THE COMPLUTENSIAN POLYGLOTT, AND BROCAR THE PRINTER OF IT.

As the REV. S. P. TREGELLES, no doubt, feels a great interest in everything connected with the history of the Complutensian Polyglott, I take the liberty of sending him, through "N. & Q.," a few further observations on the subject.

1. It was in the summer of 1502, when Cardinal Ximenes was residing in Toledo, that he first conceived the plan of his great Polyglott. It was there also that he published his editions of the Mozarabic Missals and Breviaries, the ancient Gothic MSS. having been previously revised by Canon Alfonso Ortiz, who was assisted by three other priests in Toledo. The date of their publication was either 1500, or, according to Gomez, 1504.

2. Who was the printer? Most probably Arnold William Brocar; who was invited into Spain about this period, from Germany, by the Cardinal himself—according to the statement of most Spanish writers. It is, I think, incorrect to call him Brocario, as if he were an Italian. He had a son named John Brocar; who, clad in festal garments, carried the last sheets of the Polyglott to Ximenes, just as he was on the verge of the grave.

3. From Toledo, Brocar and his son John, very probably migrated to Logroño—where the work was printed by the father, referred to by your reverend correspondent (3rd S. vii. 12). It would be very interesting to know the exact year, when Brocar was invited by Ximenes to reside in Complutum (Alcalá de Henares); and also, in what year the New Testament was commenced. We know, indeed, that it was completed January 10, 1514.

* Summed in figures in the margin, thus—

"115 Males
64 Females

179 Slaves."

† The words in brackets are interlineated.

4. The REV. S. P. TREGELLES seems to have some difficulty respecting the chronology being reconciled with the date of Pope Leo's election, who, it is supposed, could not have sent any Greek MSS. to Ximenes, because Leo X. was elected Pope in March, 1513, and the New Testament was completed in 1514. In answer to this apparent difficulty, I may be allowed to observe, that several critics—such as Marsh, Hug, Feilmoser, and Dr. Hefele—are of opinion that Leo X. sent the Greek MSS. to Ximenes before he had been elected pope, when he was only a cardinal; and that Ximenes gave his Holiness public thanks, in the Preface, for the loan of those MSS. after he had been chosen pope. (See Der Cardinal Ximenes, von Carl Joseph Hefele, zweite Auflage, Tübingen, 1851, xii. Haupt, S. 117.)

5. We cannot, therefore, suppose "that the writers of the Polyglott spoke inaccurately, when they express their thanks to Leo X. for his aid in having sent Greek MSS. for the New Testament." I sincerely hope that the REV. S. P. TREGELLES may one day publish a "History of the Complutensian Polyglott;" and do full justice not only to the illustrious Cardinal, at whose sole expense it was published, but also to the great scholars who assisted him—such as Antonio de Lebrija, Demetrios Ducas, Lopez de Zuniga, Nuñez de Guzman; and the learned Jews, Alfonso of Alcalá, Pablo Coronell de Segovia, and Alfonso de Zamora. (See Gomez, De Rebus Gentis, &c., Complut., 1569, p. 37.) J. DALTON.
Norwich.

NOTE FOR SPANISH SCHOLARS.—While comparing the text of the first edition of the Second Part of Don Quixote, the proof sheets of which must have been revised by Cervantes, with the edition published by Clemencin, I find after the words "por tan poco precio" (p. 241), the following sentence omitted:—

"I advierta, Sancho, que las obras de caridad que hacen tibia y floxamente, no tienen merito, ni valen nada."

"And know, Sancho, that the works of Charity are not to be done slow and lazily, for they merit nothing, and are of no value."

W. PLATT.

Conservative Club.

QUEEN ANNE BOLEYN.—Mr. J. B. Heath communicated to the Philobiblon Society in 1863, "An Account of Materials furnished for the use of Queen Anne Boleyn and the Princess Elizabeth, by William Loke, 'the King's Mercer,' between the 20th Jan. 1535 (27 of Henry VIII.) and the 27th April, 1536." This would lead a casual reader to suppose that the account extended over more than a year, but being O. S., it is really for two months only. There is some little confusion or error about the commencement, as some items are dated the 14th and 17th of January; but it may be worth mentioning that the total of this ten weeks' bill is 124*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*—rather a large sum if translated into its equivalent in our present money. JOB J. B. WORKARD.

CURIOUS ANACHRONISM.—I read in a newspaper lately, an account of the erection of a memorial window in a church at Birmingham. This window is described as "representing David playing before Saul, under the inspiration of St. Cecilia."

Surely, after this, we may expect some painter to favour us with a representation of "Henry VIII. consulting George IV. as to the disposal of one of his wives." W. H. HUSK.

BISHOP KING AND DR. JOHN RAINOLDS.—MR. GROSART has just edited for Mr. Nichol's Series of Commentaries, the lectures of Dr. King on Jonah, and of Rainolds on Obadiah and Haggai. Biographical notices are prefixed to each. In the first, reference is made to the fiction which was circulated affirming that Dr. King had professed himself a Roman Catholic. Allow me to add a reference to those which MR. GROSART has given. Some account of the matter may be found in—"The New Art of Lying covered by Jesuits under the Veil of Equivocation; discovered and disproved by Henry Mason, Parson of St. Andrew's Undershaft, London," 12mo, 1634, p. 206, &c.

The same book also contains an interesting anecdote concerning Dr. Rainolds (pp. 199—206). It appears that a stupid report was set afloat about Dr. Rainolds; and to prepare against anything worse, his friends drew up for him a confession of faith, which he was too weak to write himself, but which he signed; and which was witnessed by nine persons, May 20, 1607. You may not wish to have the document, but here are the names: Henrie Airay, Vice-chancellor; Henrie Wilkinson, Edward Rilston, Richard Taylor, Henrie Hindle, Daniel Faireclough, Henrie Mason, Alexander How, and John Dewhurst.

Mr. Mason adds, that he was in possession of the original, from which he makes "a faithful transcript." Of this Henry Mason, I have no further information, except what Wood says in Athen. Oxon., ii. 56, ed. 1691. B. H. C.

Queries.

MEAT AND MALT: MOROCCO.

I was present some time since at a conversation in Cumberland, when a drink peculiar to a place called Levens Hall, in that county, the seat, I believe, of a branch of the Carlisle family, was mentioned, and described as extremely strong ale, in the brewing of which beef or meat was introduced. Having repeated this to some friends a short time since, considerable doubts were expressed as to the probability or possibility of combining meat with malt and hops, and I consequently wrote to my friends in the north, but have only been able to collect the following accounts. One friend writes:—

"Morocco is the name of the drink; it is brewed at Levens near Milnthorp, from a recipe found wrapped up in lead near an evergreen in the old garden. Flesh is certainly introduced, as I believe it to be in the Durham University strong beer. The exact recipe for brewing Morocco is kept strictly secret. There is a legend that the secret was brought by a Crusader Howard, and during the Civil Wars buried where it was found as above some years ago. Helpless, truly, is the state of that man who stoops to drink inferior liquor after imbibing the mighty Morocco. It is almost dark, pours like oil, and tastes mild as milk in its treachery."

Another gentleman writes to me:—

"Some time ago I walked over with a friend from G— to Levens Hall, for the express purpose of tasting this Morocco, and after tasting it the conversation turned upon the method of making it. The old gardener who was living at that time (called Forbes) informed us that the receipt was found attached to a bottle, which was found buried under a tree in the grounds; and as far as I can remember, he stated that meat was used in making it, but in what state he did not mention. I fancy the making of it is a family secret. I have been given to understand that the man who brews it is sworn not to divulge the secret. I have heard of raw beef being put into ale, but for what purpose I cannot say."

Another gentleman confirms what I have above quoted with regard to the Durham ale, viz., that flesh is or was used.

The use of meat in brewing is curious and very little known. If you will give the above extracts a place in your valuable publication, I have no doubt we shall soon be well informed on the subject.

C. C. P.

ANONYMOUS.—Who was the author of following?—

"Three Discourses:—1. On the Use of Books. 2. On the Result and Effects of Study. 3. On the Elements of Literary Taste. Delivered at the Anniversary Meetings of the Library Society at Chichester, Jan. 1800, 1801, 1802. By the President. London. 8vo. 1802."

My copy has the book-plate of "R. J. Harper, F.S.A."

WILLIAM BATES.

BELL-RINGING: FINES FOR ITS OMISSION.—In the Churchwardens' Accounts of Bray in Berkshire for 1601-2 we read:

"It payd for not ringing when the Queen dynd at Folly John iij. iiijd."

And in the accounts of St. Lawrence, Reading, for the year ending Michaelmas, 1529:

"It to the qwen's amersmt for that the bells wer not rong at her comyng into the town viijd."

And in the accounts of St. Mary, Lambeth, for 1517-18:

"Itm. paid to yem a amyner ffor defawtts off the ryngyng off the bells at the kynges comyng iij. iiijd."

Query, by what law were these fines imposed? And has it ever been repealed? A. D. T. Merton College.

CLAIRVOYANCE AND MESMERISM.—Are clairvoyance and mesmerism recognised and acknowledged as sciences by the Académie des Sciences at Paris? J. W.

CROMWELL'S IRONSIDES.—It is said that the cuirasses that have been in use in the Household Brigade of Cavalry since the coronation of George IV. up to within a very recent period were those that were worn by Cromwell's celebrated "Iron-sides." Can any one of your numerous readers corroborate that report as being a fact, or, on the contrary, prove its incorrectness? W. B. C. Florence.

CURLL'S POETRY.—Amongst several Collections of miscellaneous and indifferent poetry, published by Curll about 1727, and bound up in one volume, occurs a collection, 52 pp. in length, without a title-page. The first poem is "The Stamford Toasts." I shall be obliged if any of your correspondents could give me the title-page in full, and the name of the author.

JOS. PHILLIPS, Jun.

Stamford.

DANCING UPON SIPPETS.—In Evelyn's Mundus Muliebris, 1690, is this curious expression:—

"They danced the Canarys, Spanish Pavans, and Selinger's Round upon sippets, with as much grace and loveliness as any Isaac, Monsieur, or Italian of them all can teach with his fop-call, and apish postures."

Can any of your readers explain this phrase? Can it be a corruption of "chopins," or high-heeled slippers? A. A.

Poets' Corner.

EDGAR AND ELFRIDA.—I should like to ascertain what different places in England have laid claim to having been the scene of the tragedy connected with Queen Elfrida. Local tradition points to Harewood Forest (Herefordshire) as the spot in which Ethelwold concealed Elfrida, and was afterwards himself assassinated, and Mason has followed this account in his once well-known drama. Some vestiges of an ancient castle are still visible in Harewood, and a farm bears the name of Elvaston or Elverston (Elfrid's town).

C. J. R.

FORDS IN ENGLAND: THE CATWATER.—Mr. Taylor, in his work on Names and Places, draws attention to the fact that some inlets from the sea on our coast still retain the name of Ford, derived from the Scandinavian Fiord. He instances, if I recollect right, Helford in Cornwall, Milford in Wales, and Wexford in Ireland. I am curious to know if the Catwater at Plymouth

"Henry Plantagenet, Lord and Baron of Monmouth, who after his eldest brother's decease, was Earle of Lancaster and Derby, &c., and married Maud, the sole daughter and heiress of Patrick de Caducis or Chaworth, Knight. They had a daughter named Isabell, whom many writers call Abbess Almesbury (not Ambesbury), corruptly for this Alcornebury."

"The Chartulary of Aconbury Priory" (printed in the 8th Report of the Dep. Keeper of Public Records), proves that Henry of Lancaster was a benefactor to the house, but at that period (7 Edw. I.), and also as late as 1309 (3 Edw. II.), Catharine de Geniville appears to have been prioress.

In the absence, therefore, of any direct evidence in its favour, I think the anonymous writer's statement must be dismissed, though I should still be glad to obtain some further and more definite information before accepting the counter-statement.

C. J. R.

KNIGHTS BACHELORS.—It is wished to ascertain whether the undermentioned Knights Bachelors are still living, and if not when and where they died:—

Sir Daniel Williams, Chief Magistrate of Lambeth Police Court, knighted in June, 1802.

Sir William Alexander Fletcher, knighted by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Sept. 9, 1811.

Sir Alexander Wilson, M.D., knighted by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, May 10, 1813.

Sir Thomas B. Marshal, knighted in 1837.

Sir Francis William Smith, M.D., knighted by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, March 8, 1837.

The knightships of Sir Daniel Williams and Sir Thomas B. Marshal do not appear to have been gazetted, but their names appeared in the Royal and Imperial Calendars.

L. H.

LANCASHIRE: OLD TIMBER HALLS.—I have lately met with ten etchings of old timber halls, "post and petrels," which were "drawn, engraved, and published by G. N. Philips of Chatham Street, Liverpool." They comprise Garston Hall, Ince Hall, Dinkerley Hall, Clayton Hall, Garrat Hall, and several others. No letterpress accompanies them, nor do I find any reference to these plates in any work I have consulted. Is anything known of them?

T. T. W.

METRICAL SERMON.—An octogenarian informs me that he has heard his mother, upwards of seventy years since, repeat the following singular lines, which she stated she heard in a Derbyshire church on the occasion of the clergyman having forgotten his sermon:—

"Our ingress to the world is naked and bare,
Our progress through the world is trouble and care,
Our egress from the world nobody knows where;
But if we do well here, we shall do well there,
And I can tell you no more if I preach the whole year."

I should feel much obliged if any reader of

"N. & Q." can inform me, what the above lines are taken from, and if this is a correct version.

W. D.

Kennington, Surrey.

MISTLETOE.—What is the derivation of this word? Dr. Bosworth writes it "mistel-ta," and refers it to German, Danish, and Swedish, without further explanation. Richardson derives it from mist (A.-Sax. misen, dung), and ta or toe, "that part of the foot by which the bird is caught by the viscus, or bird-lime." This does not seem a very satisfactory etymology; what mist has to do with dung, or the latter with bird-lime, does not appear clearly.

The word is but once used in Shakspeare, Titus Andronicus, Act II. Sc. 3:—

"The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and bare, O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe."

Why should the most discerning of all poets, in matters both of natural history and folk lore, give the plant so sad a designation; and why, and at what period, did it begin to take so prominent a part in our Christmas festivities? When we read in The Times that tons upon tons of this parasitical plant, are sold every year, the query may not seem out of place. A well known passage in Pliny (Nat. Hist., lib. xvi.) tells us, that nothing was more sacred among the Druids than the mistletoe. How came it in Shakspeare's time to be considered "baleful," and in our days the most "mirth-provoking" of all plants? A. A.

Poets' Corner.

NUMISMATIC.—A gold coin, about the size of half-a-crown, thin and unmilled, was lately found in the soil at Bexhill, on the coast, about five miles from Hastings. The superscription, in old Celtic letters—"Phillippus Dei Grat: Francorum Rex"—surrounds the king, enthroned and crowned, the drapery behind being covered with fleur-de-lis. On the obverse are a cross, with roses and four crowns between its arms, and the legend, "imperat—regnat—vincit." Three characters, being no doubt the date, are repeated before each of these words. The first character is the Greek chi, somewhat in the form of the fyfot; the second is rho, thus making 1100; but the third character is similar to the c in vincit, the value of which as a numeral I cannot find, and only guess it to stand for 5.

I hope, therefore, to be informed, through "N. & Q.," what is the actual date of this coin? Is there any reason in the history of this first "Philip, by the grace of God, King of the French," why the date should be repeated before each verb, "He rules, he reigns, he conquers?" Also, what were the circumstances under which this finely finished and perfectly preserved relic of that king was coined?

GEO. MOORE.

Hastings.

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS.—What is the proportion, I mean the relative numbers, of the various Christian sects and churches? In one of the leading Quarterly Reviews, I have seen a statement on the subject, which a moment's thought proved to be most erroneous, but I do not know where to obtain correct information. F. H. M.

RICHARD JOHN TETLOW, of Knottingley, attorney-at-law, published An Historical Account of the Borough of Pontefract, Leeds, 8vo, 1769. Dr. Miller, in his History of Doncaster (published 1804), mentions at p. 34 the late Mr. Richard John Tetlow of Ferrybridge, a celebrated antiquary: and at p. 35, gives a letter from Mr. Tetlow to Thomas Seaton, Esq., the Mayor of Doncaster, dated Ferrybridge, May 21, 1781. In the Addenda (p. xlv.) it is stated that all the charters were translated, and the notes to them written, by the late R. John Tetlow, of Knottingley, Esq., a celebrated antiquary.

I hope, through your columns, to obtain further information respecting this gentleman; at any rate, the time of his decease. S. Y. R.

Queries with Answers.

REV. JOHN BRABANT.—In the churchyard of Bishop Middleham, co. Durham, on an altar-tomb near the south wall of the chancel, is the following inscription:—

"Johannes Brabant, Vicarius, obijt 28 Junii, A^o Dñi 1683.

Nuda Sacerdotis docti bene credere inertem.

Verba docent PoPulum, vivere vita docet.

Elizabeth his wife died the 4th of August, 1684.
Blessed are the departed which die in the Lord."

Will any correspondent be kind enough to help me to a translation of the first line of the epitaph? Is there any meaning in the second capital P in Populum, or is it simply a freak of the stone-cutter?

John Brabant was at first one of the intruding Puritan divines. The earliest entry in the parish register that can be traced as made by him is the baptism of his son John, Aug. 16, 1653. In 1660, the ejected incumbent, Thomas Bedford, was restored. He did not long enjoy the living, as he died in Sept. 1660, and was buried the eighth day of that month in Middleham church.

Up to the time of the restoration of the church there existed, to the north of the altar, a wooden tablet, on which was the following inscription:—

"Thomas Bedford, Vicar of Bishop Middleham, departed this life Sept. 1660, aged 72, who married Alice, the daughter of Bryan Frisell, and had by her Aman, Robert, Thomas, and John, Elizabeth, Alice, Mary, and Bridget. Also, the relict of Thomas Bedford, departed this life in October, 1680, aged 74 years. She was mother, grandmother, and great grandmother to seventy-four children, besides embryos."

This tablet has disappeared. The inscription is preserved in Surtees' History of Durham.

JOHNSON BAILY.

[Nuda in the first line agrees with Verba in the third. As the four lines taken together are in fact a hexameter followed by a pentameter, it will only be requisite to exhibit them in that character, and to dismiss the full stop improperly inserted after inertem; the true sense of the passage will then be manifest.

"Nuda Sacerdotis docti bene credere inertem Verba docent PoPulum, vivere vita docet."

That is, Nuda verba Sacerdotis docti docent inertem populum bene credere, vita docet vivere; or, The bare words of the learned Priest instruct the people how to believe, his life instructs them how to live.

With respect to the second capital P, it is by no means impossible that, as the wrong insertion of the full stop would seem to have been due to the stone-cutter, this reduplication also, as our correspondent suggests, may have been due to the same party. If, however, the P P be deemed intentional and significant, the difficulty will then lie in making a selection from the great variety of meanings borne by P P in Latin inscriptions, both old and mediæval. It may have been populum; it may have been populum plebem; it may have been one of many other words or expressions having a plurality of ps.

It may be remarked, however, that P sometimes stood for 7, and that the age of John Brabant is not given, apparently, elsewhere in the inscription. P P, therefore, may have been meant to convey the information otherwise wanting, and to signify that he died aged 77. This method of indicating numbers, especially dates, by letters larger than the rest of the text, is Jewish, and may be seen repeatedly in Jewish books.]

CHARLES I. AND DONNE'S SERMONS.—I have seen it stated that the king had such a high opinion of the dean as a preacher, that he offered a large reward (9000*l.*) for the publication of his Sermons. What is the foundation for this statement? I recollect nothing of the kind in Walton's Life of Donne. C^{PL}.

[From the following Advertisement prefixed to the second volume of Donne's Sermons (fol. 1649) it appears that his son, John Donne, LL.D. received a douceur of some kind from the government on their publication:—

"For the Right Hon. Bolstred Whitlock, Richard Keeble, and John Lelle, Lords Commissioners of the Great Seale.

"The reward that many yeares since was proposed for the publishing these Sermons, having been lately conferred upon me under the authority of the Great Seale, I thought my selfe in gratitude bound to deliver them to the world under your Lordships' protection; both to show, how carefull you are in dispensing that part of the Churches treasure that is committed to your disposi-and to encourage all men to proceed in their industry, when they are sure to find so just and equall Patrons, whose fame and memory must certainly last longer than Bookes can find so noble readers, and whose present favors doe not onely keep the living alive, but the dead from dying.

"Your Lordships' most humble Servant,
"JO. DONNE."

This Advertisement must have been written a few weeks after the martyrdom of Charles I.

Again, in an address "To the Reader," prefixed to the third volume of Donne's Sermons (fol. 1661) by his son, we read, that "upon the death of my father, Dr. Donne, Deane of Pauls, I was sent to, by his Majesty of Blessed Memory, to recollect and publish his Sermons: I was encouraged by many of the nobility, both spiritual and temporal, and indeed, by the most eminent men that the kingdom then had, of all professions, telling me, what a publick good I should confer upon the Church. . . . The first volume that I published, consisting of Fourscore Sermons, I dedicated to his Majesty [Charles I.] then living, by whom it was not only graciously received, but I had fresh encouragements to proceed. For the Second Volume, I was forced to take protection from those that were then in authority."]

MACKENZIE, EARL OF CROMARTY.—I am anxious to know as much as possible of Sir George Mackenzie, of Tarbatt, created Viscount Tarbatt and Earl of Cromarty, circa 1700, his private life, opinions, &c. &c. Can any one help me with a reference? F. M. S.

299, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

[A most ably drawn and full compendium of the principal events in the life of the Earl of Cromarty will be found in Brunton and Haig's Historical Account of the Senators of the College of Justice, p. 856, published in 1832 by Clarke of Edinburgh, and Saunders and Benning of London, where all the printed sources of information are referred to. If further details are required, our correspondent must sweep the admirable Indexes of The Acts of the Parliament of Scotland, published by the Record Commission, and consult such manuscript collections as the Lauderdale papers in the British Museum, and those of Wodrow and others of the time in the Advocates' Library.]

"COMPLAYNT" OF SIR DAVID LYNDSEY.—I shall be much obliged for an explanation of the following line in "The Complaynt of Sir David Lyndsay of the Mount, directed to the King's Grace,"

Sir David was reminding the king of the incidents of his childhood when he used to amuse him: he says—

"The first syllabs that thou didst mute,
Was pa da lyn upon the lute."

These three words evidently mean, as they appear to me, "Play, David Lyndsay," just as a child might express itself. A better philologist than I am being of a different opinion, I beg to trouble you with this letter. L.

[Our correspondent's explanation of the phrase is clearly the right one. Although Gawyn Dunbar was preceptor to the young prince [James V.], Lyndsay was in attendance on him as a page of honour, and entrusted with his amusement. Lyndsay himself in his Complaynt, after telling that he "lay nichtlie by the king's cheek," goes on to relate pleasingly:—

"How as ane chapman beris his pack,
I bure thy grace upon my back;
And sumtymes stridlingis on my neck
Dansand with mony bend, and beek;
The first syllabis, that thou did mute,
Was pa—da—lyn, upon the lute;
Then playit I twenty springs, perqueir,
Quhilk was great plesour for to heir;
Fra play, thou leit me never rest,
But, gynnertoun,* thou luffit ay best;
And ay quhen thou come from the scule,
Then I behuffit to play the fule."

Such were Lyndsay's playful occupations with the boyish prince, whereof he delighted to sing.]

TAYNTON (GLOUCESTER) REGISTERS.—I find that the registers of this parish go back to Sept. 1538. Is not this very unusually early? Perhaps some of your correspondents can tell me. On the inside of the cover of this early register is pasted the following notice:—

"Año Dom. 1606.

"This parchment register was copied out of the old register in the month of August, in the year of our Lord God one thousand six hundred and six, and in the fourth year of our Sovereign Lord James, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith. The said old Register was for — (word illegible) years before very ill — (word illegible) and carelessly kept. As much as was found in 'him' is herein included."

C. G. CRAWLEY.

Taynton Rectory.

[By the Parish Register Abstract of 1830, it appears that there then existed in England no less than 812 registers commencing in 1538, when, as Bishop Prideaux says in his Directions to Churchwardens, "Parish registers were first ordered by the Lord Vicegerent Cromwell in the 30th year of King Henry the Eighth, 1538, and from thence all parish registers had their beginning." See upon this subject Mr. Burn's valuable History of Parish Registers in England, 2nd ed. 1862.]

TOKEN: THOMAS JOHNSON.—I met with a copper coin the other day about the size of a penny piece. The obverse presents the bust of a man, with the legend "Thomas Johnson;" the reverse has the words, in three lines, "Bella! Horrida Bella!" surrounded by the legend—"Science and Intrepidity," with the date 1789. It is evidently one of those tokens, of which so many were put into circulation by private individuals about that date;

* The name of a Scottish tune.

we may imagine to have been the persons invited with Alexander. Though not mathematically proved, few persons, who know the villanous history, doubt that the Duke of Berri was a victim of his lively sympathy for Louis XVII., in whose favour he spoke warmly to Louis XVIII.—in whose ante-chamber a dreadful scene was once heard between the uncle and the nephew a few days before the Duke was murdered."

GEORGE VERE IRVING.

There have been five persons who, at different times, have put forth claims to be recognised as the Dauphin, long supposed to have died in the Temple.

The first in date was Hervagault. He was first heard of in 1802, and died in 1812.

The next was Naundorff, who put forth his claim in 1812.

The third was Bruneau, who appeared before the public in 1816. His story excited but little attention. The date of his death is uncertain.

The fourth, Hébert, was perhaps the best known. He lived for some years in England. He died in 1845.

Finally came Eleazar Williams, a dissenting minister in America, who died in 1858. F. M.

DAVISON'S CASE.

(3rd S. v. 399; vi. 539.)

The case referred to by T. B. took place in the Northern Circuit in the last century, and was tried by Lord Mansfield. It is reported from the note book of a deceased lawyer, in a publication named the Story Teller. A person, supposed to be a stranger, called one evening at a gentleman's house, and was hospitably entertained. He slept there, and was found dead in his bed in the morning, but without any marks of violence; so that the coroner's jury returned a verdict of "Died by the visitation of God." Suspicion, however, fell upon the master of the house, in which he kept only a housekeeper, and a man-servant, the latter of whom slept in an outhouse adjoining the stable. The only evidence was that of a man, who happened to pass by the house at about three o'clock in the morning, observed a light moving about the house, and saw a figure holding a light go from the room where the master slept to the housekeeper's room; and then saw two persons come out of that room, when the light disappeared for a minute. They returned, passing along to the master's room again. In about five minutes the light disappeared. Before it was extinguished, however, he had twice perceived some dark object come between the light and the window, as if a door had been placed before the light. But in the room there was nothing to account for this object: there was neither cupboard nor press in the room. The only other fact adduced was that there had been found in the house the stopper of a small bottle of a singular description, and apparently of foreign manufacture.

The judge, when the case was closed, thought there was hardly sufficient evidence to call for a defence, and the jury consented that the case should be stopped. A verdict of acquittal was about to be taken, when the prisoner requested to be allowed to call a witness to clear his character, and explain those circumstances which seemed to make against him. Lord Mansfield, though against his inclination and usual habit, consented. The prisoner then gave his own account of the affair—that he had been taken ill in the night, and had gone to call up his housekeeper to make him a fire; but that after some minutes, finding himself better, he had dismissed her, and gone to bed again. The housekeeper was called, and of course repeated the same story. But the counsel for the prosecution had attached much importance to the statement of the previous witness, that while the two were in the room, something like a door had intervened between the candle and the window, and he suspected some secret closet. He therefore asked her, in a tone and manner not likely to awaken any suspicion, whether while the candle stood in the middle of the room, the closet or cupboard opened once or twice? To this she gave no answer. He then said he would call it to her recollection, and he asked if, after her master had taken the medicine out of the closet, he shut the door. She answered "Yes."

"Then," said he, "it was opened again for the purpose of replacing the bottle, was it?"—"It was."

"Do you recollect how long it was open the last time?"—"Not above a minute."

"The door, when open, would be exactly between the light and the window, would it not?"—"It would."

"I forget whether you said the closet was on the right or left hand side of the window."—"The left."

"Would the door of the closet make any noise in opening?"—"None."

"Can you speak positively to that fact? Have you ever opened it yourself, or only seen Mr. S. open it?"—"I never opened it myself."

"Did you ever keep the key?"—"Never."

"Who did?"—"Mr. S. always."

At this moment she happened to turn her eyes towards the prisoner, who looked pale as death, with a cold sweat upon his brow. The consequences of her answers flashed across her mind; she shrieked and fainted, and the court was adjourned till between four and five o'clock, when the counsel again addressed the housekeeper thus: "I have very few more questions to ask you; but beware that you answer them truly, for your own life hangs upon a thread."

Survey of London and the Country about it, 1748, will enable them pleasantly so to do. By such means and at such a time, to see how near the fields approached to Hyde Park Corner, St. Giles's Pound, Holborn Bars, London Bridge, or even the Standard in Cornhill, is enough to make the most devoted lover of his country feel sad at heart. But there are things worthy of note in Rocque's map. Hagbush Lane, to the north of the present Camden Road, is called "Hague Bush Lane," while the portion nearer London is marked as "Copenhagen Lane," and is, in fact, represented as curving round to Copenhagen House. A lane occupying apparently the present Camden Road from Hague Bush Lane down towards Holloway, is called "Maiden Lane," while the Maiden Lane of my youth — re-christened the York Road — is by Rocque entitled "The Black Lane."

EDWIN ROFFE.

Somers Town.

HOW DID THE ANCIENTS KINDLE THEIR FIRES? (3rd S. vi. 472, 535.) — None of the published replies to this query contained any allusion to the burning glass, which is mentioned as a means of kindling fires in Aristophanes' Nubes, line 766.

A. D. T.

Merton College.

CRACCHE (3rd S. vii. 21.) — The word cracche is found in Wycliff's translation of the second chapter of St. Luke's Gospel, vv. 12 and 16: —

"And this is a token to you, ye shulen fynde a 3unge child wlapid in clothis, and leide in a cracche; and they hysyne camen; and founden Mari and Joseph and the 3ung child leid in a cracche."

I think it is in the town of Nottingham that you may find, at the present day, stables behind the dwelling houses, hollowed out of the living rock. In Derbyshire it is common enough to see, not only out-houses but dwelling-houses hewn out of the stone; near Buxton and in Dovedale such examples occur.

A. H.

BOSTON HOUSE, MIDDLESEX (3rd S. vi. 247, 542.) — Bordeston, or Burston, commonly called Boston, was part of the possessions of the Prioress of St. Helen's, Bishopegate. Edward VI., in 1547, granted it to Edward, Duke of Somerset, on whose attainder it reverted to the crown. It successively passed through the hands of Robert, Earl of Leicester; Sir Thomas Gresham; Sir William Reade; and Sir Edward Spenser. One of James Howell's letters, dated Sept. 20, 1647, is addressed to the latter "at his house near Brainford, Middlesex."

A fire took place, about 1665, when the greater part of the old mansion was consumed, destroying all the ancient Court Rolls. It was rebuilt in 1671, as appears by the dates of the pipes, ceilings, &c.

The most remarkable features of the existing mansion have furnished several plates to one of the interesting works on Ancient Architecture, published by C. J. Richardson, F.S.A.

The trees about the old mansion are chiefly elms, of a large size; many of which may be considered to have been planted in the time of Charles I.

EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

MURIEL (3rd S. vi. 200, 239, 278.) — With regard to the period at which the word Muriel was used as a Christian name in England, I observed in the Harl. MS. 1500, fol. 63, that Muriel Hastings, married to Sir Ralph Eure, had a son William, created Baron Eure 1544, who named one daughter Muriel. His grandson also named a daughter Muriel. It might be useful to notice the discovery of Seiraphenia as a Christian name in Harl. MS. 5058, fol. 252.

J. W. P.

If your readers will look into the works of the Abbot Trithemius, or into Barrett's Magus, they will find this to be the name of the Angel presiding over the sign Cancer. Persons born under this sign were called Muriel, just as those under the sun are named Michaël, or the moon Gabriël. The name is generally supposed to signify "the healing of God," from מור, and to be an auspicious appellation.

PHILO-MATHEMATICUS.

THE YOUNG PRETENDER (3rd S. vii. 1.) — The following extract from the Caledonian Mercury, 1726, No. 983, is worth preserving in "N. & Q." :—

"Rome, July 13, 1726. The Chevalier de St. George, who has dismissed the major part of his servants, still persists in causing his eldest son to be educated in the persuasion of the Church of England, to the great grief of the Princess Sobieski; who is the more concerned at it, because that the young gentleman begins to profess it publicly: of which they give this one instance, that, as he passed by a church, attended with the Duke of Inverness, as they stile him here, he did not kneel down at the singing of the Ave Maria."

Such scraps are valuable to the future historian.

T. P.

SIR RICHARD BRAHAM (3rd S. vii. 9.) — On Feb. 16, 1676-7, the House of Commons ordered the Speaker to issue his warrant for a new writ for the election of a member for New Windsor, in the room of Sir Richard Braham, Knight, deceased (Commons' Journals, ix. 383). Notwithstanding the terms of this order, it is clear that he was a baronet. He is mentioned in Messrs. Tighe and Davis's Annals of Windsor, on pages not specified in the index. Particulars respecting him may also be derived from Ashmole's Berks, iii. 61-64; Lords' Journals, xi. 299; Green's Calendar of Domestic State Papers, Charles II., i. 113, 250, 526; ii. 326; iii. 253; v. 139, 208.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

S. Sharpe's Early History of Egypt, p. 85. (Lond. 1836, 4to.)
JOSEPH RIX, M.D.
St. Neot's.

THE BOTTLE CONJUROR (3rd S. vi. 531.) — The original advertisement of the celebrated hoax, given by your correspondent O. M., is printed in the New Foundling Hospital for Wit, No. 6, 1749. To it is appended, along with other curious matter, an account of what took place at the theatre upon the evening advertised, which we are told was crowded with dukes, duchesses, lords, ladies, &c. I have copied the paragraph as a pendant to the preparatory announcement: —

"Last night, viz., Monday, Jan. 16 (1749), the much expected drama of the Bottle Conjuror of the New Theatre in the Haymarket, ended in the tragi-comical manner following: — Curiosity had drawn together prodigious numbers. About seven, the theatre being lighted up, but without so much as a single fiddle to keep the audience in good humour, many grew impatient. Immediately followed a chorus of catcalls, heightened by loud vociferations, and beating with sticks, when a fellow came from behind the curtain, and bowing, said, that if the performer did not appear the money should be returned. At the same time a wag crying out from the pit, that if the ladies and gentlemen would give double prices, the conjuror would get into a pint bottle. Presently a young gentleman in one of the boxes seized a lighted candle, and threw it on the stage. This served as the charge for sounding to battle. Upon this the greatest part of the audience made the best of their way out of the theatre, some losing a cloak, others a hat, others a wig, and others hat, wig, and swords also. One party however staid in the house, in order to demolish the inside, when the mob, breaking in, they tore up the benches, broke to pieces the scenes, pulled down the boxes, and in short dismantled the theatre entirely, carrying away the particulars above mentioned into the street, where they made a mighty bonfire, the curtain being hoisted on a pole by way of a flag. A large party of guards were sent for, but came time enough only to warm themselves round the fire. We hear of no other disaster than a young nobleman's chin being hurt, occasioned by his fall into the pit, with part of one of the boxes, which he had forced out with his foot. 'Tis thought the conjuror vanished away with the bank. Many enemies to a late celebrated book, concerning the ceasing of miracles, are greatly disappointed by the conjuror's non-appearance in the bottle; they imagining that his jumping into it would have been the most convincing proof possible that miracles are not yet ceased."

EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

WAKING TIME (3rd S. vi. 534.) — This word also means sitting up with a sick person when death is hourly expected. May the words not then be a corruption of "watching time"? "They have waked with him for several nights," is a common expression in Lancashire. I have heard the phrase associated with the Irish custom of waking with the dead; because in both cases candles, or other lights, are used. T. T. W.

BARLEY (3rd S. v. 358; vi. 481.) — The Lancashire use of this word is correctly explained in Halliwell's Dictionary. When a boy I used to ramble on the moors with my companions, and always shouted Barley when I found a well-stocked blackberry, or whinberry, bush. After this caution had been pronounced, no one was allowed to share in the find. In our country games, too, we always called out "barley" when we did not wish to continue the play, or desired to avoid payment of forfeits. T. T. W.

Halliwell is quite right in saying Barley means "I bespeak" in Lancashire; but the phrase is invariably "Barley me." Now that I am grown up I say "I bespeak," but when I was a young one I said "Barley me," as other young Lancastrians are wont to do. P. P.

IRISH SONG (3rd S. vii. 10.) — I think, from my recollection of the chorus, the song appeared in a worthless serial called Life in Ireland (or Dublin): an imitation, or supposed continuation of Life in London, wherein Tom, Jerry, and Logic visited the Sister Isle at the time it was honoured with the presence of George IV. J. H. L.

Perhaps, Mr. Editor, neither C. D. nor your honoured self, ever heard the variation made by a Teetotaller for the latter part of the first verse of the Irish song at the above reference: —

"To your kill me now, Arrah! dow, wid' your vile whiskey now;

Whiskey's for sots and for fools to regale.

Wellington beat poor old Boney at Waterlow,

Whiskey had killed him as dead as a nail."

(Cetera desunt.)

F. C. H.

HAYS OF ERROLL (3rd S. vi. 545.) — Is the date of the "Tabill" correctly given as "circa DCCCCLXXX," if it were the work of Sir David de Haya, who was slain 1346? I beg to call Mr. Davidson's attention to this seeming error. H.

LATIN PUZZLE (3rd S. vi. 398, 443, 503.) — My friend BIBLIOTHECARIUS CHETHAMENSIS appears to be quite on a wrong scent, in reference to Lipsius's letter —

"Aio Locutio tu lita ego fidei strenue," — proposed as a puzzle by Scioppius. Its meaning has no relation whatever to Lipsius's Catholicism, nor to his "Diva Hallensis," nor to his "Diva Aspricollis." "Aio Locutio tu lita," is merely speak (or write); and "ego fidei (litabo) strenue," — "and I will punctually, and without failing on my part, answer;" or, to paraphrase it in verse: —

Pray break thro' your silence, you bad correspondent;

And you'll find me a faithful, hardworking respondent.

JAS. CROSSLEY.

Amongst the farrago of fun and nonsense dished up by the wits of the day, for the entertainment of Tom Coryate's guests at the Odcumbian Banquet, are some verses by Donne which have never been printed in his works. I may be very stupid, but they have puzzled me quite as much as any

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 162.

NOTES:—Lady Cowper's Diary, 87—Lord Derby's "Iliad," 88—Sir Matthew Hale, 16.—An Account of the Great Bell of St. Lawrence, Reading, called Harry Kelsall, 89—Epigrams—The late Emperor of Russia and the Actor—Wills published—An Old Soldier—Certificate relative to Royal Touch—Protestant—The Female Franchise, 91.

QUERIES:—Pepys's Diary, 93—Apocryphal Works honoured by the Institute—"Bailler aux Corneilles"—Bankers and Goldsmiths—Duke of Buckingham: Countess of Suffolk—"Caledonia"—Court of Louis XIV. and XV.: Grandees of Spain: Privileges, &c.—Dissolution of Religious Houses—Sir Thomas Fortescue, Knt.—"Hard Cash:"—"O Jupiter aid us"—Heraldic—"Jonas Redux" by Jonas Anglicus—Lady Masham—Inscription to Samuel Massey—Mayo Queries—Mortimer, Earl of March—The Rev. Stephen Street—St. Andrew, Woodthorpe, in the City of London—History of the Turf, &c.—Traditions of an Antient World—Lord Willoughby—Winthrop: Llanaz: Vize—Yew Trees called Palms, 94.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Duncanson Family of Cantire—Seventh-day Baptists—Cedrenus—Epigram against Architects, by whom?—Anderson—"The Life of Captain Robert Boyle," 96.

REPLIES:—A London Book Auction, 1698, 98—The Blue-coat School, 99—"The Irish Tutor"—Rev. John Ripon and the Oratorio of the "Crucifixion"—Gladys: Gwladys—Arms of Sir Walter Raleigh—Mum—Pattens—Herefordshire Queries—Passage in "Don Quixote"—"Persepolis," &c.—Leycester's Progress in Holland—Princess Charlotte of Brunswick—Colours in Heraldry: Arms of the Family of Ximenes de Cisneros—"Sedes Stercoraria"—Caskets—Romney's Portrait of Wesley, &c., 99.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

LADY COWPER'S DIARY.

The Diary of this lady, published last year, has only a short time ago fallen into my hands, or it would have obtained an earlier notice in your pages. It is of so interesting a character—such a vein of good sense and honest simplicity based upon religious principle pervades the whole of it, that one cannot but regret the loss of any portion of it, that, we are told, once existed. She and her excellent husband, the Lord Chancellor Cowper, were indeed striking examples of wisdom and integrity amidst a corrupt and odious court, and shine to us from afar as bright luminaries in the "naughty world" of their day. She was a widow and he a widower when they married, and though the circumstances that led to their union were by no means romantic, the secrecy that accompanied it has puzzled all those who have discussed the subject, and has never been explained.

The editor of her Diary informs us that "her introduction to her future husband arose out of some law business on which she had occasion to consult him at his chambers, and the marriage, which very speedily followed, was for some time kept secret, as the readers of Lord Campbell will doubtless call to mind. Lord Cowper, in a letter to his wife of December 28, 1706, as quoted by Lord Campbell, says, 'I am going to visit my mother, and perhaps shall begin to prepare her for what she must, I hope, know in a little time.' Lady Cowper herself alludes to the secrecy which accompanied the marriage, in a passage relating to Lady Harriet Vere, and her designs on the heart of the Chancellor in p. 33 of the present Diary. Yet no sufficient reason is given for the concealment either by Lady Cowper or any other person."

The solution of this mystery is manifestly of no great importance; nor will what I have to produce tend to effect it. Some, indeed, may be of opinion that it involves it in still deeper obscurity. Be this as it may: considering the high character of the parties, and the deliberation with which they formed their several resolutions in the choice of each other, we may fairly give them credit on this head for motives of the most valid kind.

When I read the passage above quoted from the introduction to the Diary, it brought to my mind a letter of this lady, which I met with and copied many years ago. It has the advantage of being endorsed by his lordship's own hand. The firmness of thought and delicacy of expression that it exhibits on her side, do justice to the self-gratulatory sentiments expressed by him to whom it was addressed; and the act of endorsing and preserving it are proofs of the deep impression it made upon his mind. He chose her deliberately as a partner fit to accompany him in his meditated retirement, and he was not disappointed. Altogether it appears to me such a favourable exposition of character, that I have thought it a pity it should be suppressed. It is as follows:—

"Sept 21, 1706.

"My L^d—

"I'm this minute come to town, and y^e first thing I met wth was y^r letter,* wth y^e welcome good news of y^r being got safe to y^r own house. I'm very much concern'd y^t you shou'd meet wth so bad a journey, but more so at y^r having given me a testimony of y^r affection to me, w^{ch} might possibly endanger y^r affairs so much as y^t of wednesday wou'd do shou'd it be suspected. I shall take all y^e care I can to prevent it, but at y^e same time you must give me leave to tell you, y^t had I known it before I wou'd have put it out of y^r power to have made me so dangerous a complim^t, however unhappy I had made my Self by it. I can't help taking notice of y^e satisfaction y^t p^t of y^r letter gave me where you seem to believe y^t greatness is no temptation to me: You are very just to me in y^r particular, for now I may tell you y^t no body but you cou'd ever have tempted me

[* Lord Cowper's Letter, which is dated Sept. 19, 1706, is printed by Lord Campbell in his Life of Lord Chancellor Cowper. (See Lives of the Chancellors, vol. v. p. 261, ed. 1857.) It is indorsed, in the handwriting of Lady Cowper, "My L^ds first letter to me after that we were marry'd."—Ed. "N. & Q."

"Origin of Mankind" was translated into German in 1683. "Der erste Anfang, oder das ursprüngliche Herkommen des menschlichen Geschlechts. Samt einem Vorrede von dem Atheismo, teutsch herausgegeben von H. Schmeltz. Cölln. a. d. Spr." fol. A Preface to his tract on the Lord's Prayer (Fabricii Vita, 198.) See further, beside Burnet's Life of Hale (abridged in Sam. Clarke's Lives of Eminent Men, 1683), the biographical works of Welsby and Foss. The following notes may, it is hoped, elicit notices of other annotated copies of Burnet:—

BURNET'S "LIFE OF SIR MATT. HALE." ED. 1682. (Brit. Mus. 1130. e. 15.)

(Notes by Francis Hargrave.)

Title page—See further concerning the Life of Lord Hale. Athen. Oxoniens. ii. 424. Baxter's Additional Notes on his Life and Death.

Under the Portrait—"Anno 1679." A mistake, for Lord Hale died Christmas, 1676.

"1643. Nov. 13. Archbishop Laud bro't to his trial. His counsel, Mr. Chute, Mr. Herne, and Mr. Hale, having spoken to the points of law, the Lords adjourned. Whitel. Memor. 77. See State Trials.

"1646. July 12. The eleven members charged by the army to parliament ordered by the Commons to bring in their answers within a week, and Mr Chute, Mr. Glover, Mr. Prynne, and Mr. Hales to be of counsel for them." (Note. Hollis and Glynn were two of the eleven members, and the former at this time had fled abroad. Whitel. Memor. 258.)

"1648. Feb. 13. Earl of Cambridge (i. e. Duke of Hamilton) bro't to bar of High Co. of Justice, and required to make good his plea; and on his desire Mr Chute, Mr. Hales, and Dr A. Walker assigned to him for counsel. Whitel.

"1648. Feb. 15. Whitel. 381.

"1651. Jan. 20. Ib. 253, 256, 258.

"1651. July 1. Ib. 497, 2 St. Tr. 159.

"1660. May 22. Parl. Hy. 267, 256. (258?).

"— Aug. Ib. 417, 424."

On p. 33—"No such thing appears as far as I can find, upon the Journals of the Lords. Mr Lane and the then recorder of London were the two counsel, who spoke on matter of law for Lord Strafford. But other counsel appear to have been consulted by him; tho' their names are not mentioned, and Lord Hale might be one of them."

P. 36. line antepenult. See, however, 2 State Trials, 493, where on Mr. Love's trial in 1651, Lord Hale, then counsel for the prisoner, is stated to acknowledge having taken the engagement.

P. 51. Parl. See 22 Parl. Hist. 256, 258, 267, 417, 424. Kennet's Reg. 130.

P. 190, after 8. "A Discourse of the Knowledge of God and of ourselves. I. By the Light of Nature. II. By the Sacred Scriptures. With Brief Abstract of the Christian Religion, and Considerations seasonable at all times for the cleansing of the Heart and Life. Printed in 8vo, in 1668. Note. The Preface to this Book contains some matters relative to Lord Hale deserving of attention."

Among MSS. 2. "In vol. iii. of the Collect^a I had from Mr Jekyll there is a copy of the chapters of Lord Hale's books de Deo, which I take to be what is here intitled concerning religion. The title seems to be Lord Hale's own title, for it is, 'Capita Librorum meorum de Deo.'"

P. 191. No. 6.—"I have lately bo't a fair copy of this volume. My copy is in three volumes. I have given it to Dr. Parr, and hope that he will find time to publish it."

No. 11. In Mr. Jekyll's Collect.

P. 192. No. 13. "Published."

— Nos. 14-18. "In Mr. Blagden's possession."

No. 19. "Mr. Hardinge's MSS. now mine."

Nos. 20, 21. "Do. and now printed."

23. "Printed."

P. 193, after No. 28.—"A tract on naturalisation, said to be by Lord Hale, and a continuation tho't to be by Sir Wm. Temple. Ex informat. Thom. Astle, Armigeri."

{ Concs } Mr. Jekyll

{ of the am. } Mr. Jekyll

Touching. Printed.

Upon. In Mr. Jekyll's Coll^a.

P. 202. Hist. of the Marches. "I understand this book to be wanting at Lincoln's Inn Library."

JOHN F. B. MAYOR.

St. John's College, Cambridge.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE GREAT BELL OF ST. LAWRENCE, READING, CALLED HARRY KELSALL.

Some time ago a list appeared in the pages of "N. & Q." of bells that have been cracked by attaching the rope to the clapper for tolling. This is no modern introduction, for as early as 1504 the practice was forbidden by the parishioners of St. Lawrence, Reading, at which time a bell-founder, Joseph Carter, was one of the churchwardens. The great bell had probably been cracked by it, for in the next year it was recast. The actual entries in the churchwardens' account-book are as follows:—

"Michaelmas, 1594.

"Whereas there was through the slothfulness of the sexton in times past a kind of toling ye bell by ye clapper rope: yt was now forbidden and taken awaye: and that the bell should be toled as in times past and not in anni such idle sorte. J. SMITH" (the Vicar.)

Then at giving in the accounts, at the end of a year, in 1595, we find—

"By this accompt also yt was agreed that our gret Bell should be cast againe, and not so much the Tune of the Bell was cared for, as to have yt a lowd bell and hard ffar, and the churchwarden Joseph Carter consented and agreed to cast yt before midsommer following, and so he was chosen again churchwarden the second time."

The accounts of recasting the bell were given in on Dec. 29, 1596, by Joseph Carter and Robert Malthus, the latter being the accomptant—

"Kelsall.—The accompt concerning the gret Bell.

"The gret bell waied when he was first taken downe, 34^s 38^u.

"The same bell hanged up againe ys increased in mettall to 36^s 49^u.

"So the overplus of metall ys 2^s 11^u, for w^e ys allowed to Joseph Carter at vij^d the pond vij^u xvij^s i^d

"(N.B., the 211^u should be 2^s 11^u, i. e. 235 lb., for which the price is paid).

"Also he ys allowed for the casting of the bell by the first bargain . . . vij^u

"And for as much as yt fell out that he was enforced by misfortune of a fall, in the first casting, to cast him twice againe. Therefore there ys allowed in curtesie to the sayd Joseph being o^r neighbour above his bargain of increase . . . xl^s

"So the somme of the whole . . . xv^u xvij^s id

"Whereof paid by the arreraiges of the last account remaining in his owne hands . . . iiij^u vij^s id

"Rest due to him . . . xj^u x^s."

Other items in the expenses of the year are,

"Paid to Howse the carpenter for taking down and having up the gret bell . . . xx^s

"Given to the belfounders workmen that cast the gret bell . . . xij^d

"Paid to those that drew the gret bell to the church from Jo^s Carter's howse . . . ij^s."

The debt of xj^u x^s was paid the next year.

The bell is frequently called the Kelsall in the accounts, having been given by one Harry Kelsall apparently in 1499. The Churchwardens' Book begins with the accounts given in on the Feast of the Annunciation in that year, and one of the items among the payments is —

"Itm. payed for haloweng of the grete bell namyd Harry . . . vj^s viij^d

"And mem. that Sir Willm. Symys, Richard Clech, and maistres Smyth, beyng godfaders and godmoder at the consecracyon of the same bell and beryng al or costs to the suffrygan."

This was apparently the usual fee for consecrating a bell. A brass in Week church, in Hampshire, erected in memory of William Complyn, records that he gave 10*l.* to make new bells for the church, and vj^s viij^d to the hallowing of the greatest bell.

It is not stated who cast this bell in 1499, but it was probably made by William Hasyllwood, a bellfounder then living in the parish. After the addition of this bell, until 1662, the number of bells in the tower appears to have been five.

The next interesting entry regarding this bell is in 1516, when we read —

"Ordinacō. Hit is coveñtyd and agreyd by the assent and consent of all the pyashe that what pson wyll have the grete bell of the gyfte of Harry Kelsall to be rong at the knyll or any other timent or obyte, all such psons to pay for the same bell so ryngyng at any tyme xij^d to the church wardens for the use of the same church. And to eny pson that wyll have hym tyllid to paye iiij^d. And that the said bell be rong or tylyd for no pson but he pay as ys above expsed.

"Prydyd allwey that the said bell to be rong or tyllid at all tymes for the obite or mynde of the said Harry Kelsall (to be kepte). And also at the obite and mynde to be kepte for M^r Thoms Justice Vicar of the pish church of saynt Lawrence wtout paying eny money therfor but to have the said bell rong and tyllid for the seild ij psons at all tymes free."

The distinction between ringing and tolling here is important, especially when we compare it with the order forbidding tolling to be performed by pulling the clapper. The men that drew up these orders must have considered that tolling a knell consisted in chiming single blows. In illustration of this I may mention that the parishioners of St. John's, Winchester, in 1557, passed a resolution, by which "It is ordyned at this accompte that no man dwellinge withoute the pisse shall have any dowble knyll with five bells, but that there shalbe paid therfore to the Church ij^s, and to stand to the charge of the ryngers."

A "dowble knyll" must mean ringing, in which the clapper strikes both sides of the bell, as opposed to chiming, in which it strikes only one.

At the time of the reformation, the great bell narrowly escaped the fate of the candlesticks, crosses, images, holy-water pots, handbells, and apparel of the "mores dawnes." The churchwardens for one of the years in which this demolition was going on, and for which period the accounts are imperfect and confused, concluded a bargain for selling the great bell. Fortunately, however, the parishioners interfered in time to save it; they bought the bell back, and made the churchwardens pay the costs. In a list of debts due to the church in about the year 1556, there occurs —

"It. upon Robt. Sylley and Wm. Lipscombe for redemyng of the great bell sold by them as appereth uppon ther accounts . . . xxxiiij^s iiij^d."

The neighbouring church of St. Mary, Reading, was less fortunate upon this occasion. Its two greatest bells, weighing 38 cwt. 14 lb., were sold for 57*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, and only replaced seventy years afterwards at the cost of about 150*l.*

The parishioners of St. Lawrence, also, though saved from this wholesale loss, were put to great expense about their bell, which had to be recast three times, before the end of the sixteenth century. The first occasion was in 1567, the total charge being xj^u vij^s v^d, which was raised by subscription in Reading and its neighbourhood. Among the expenses are —

"Impmis to Willm. Knight for casting the same bell . . . vij^u vi^s viii^d

"Itm. for drinke for the that tooke paines to take up and downe the same bell . . . xx^d

"For makinge the obligacon wherein the bellfounder stode bound to ye pish . . . viij^d

"For xlii foote of boorde for ye sowth window in the steeple where the bell was taken out and in, and one hondreth and a halfe of nayles . . . ij^s vj^d."

The second occasion was in 1581. Three of the other bells were also recast at this time, all by Joseph Carter; so that the accounts for the years 1579-1585 are full of collections to defray the expense, and payments to the bellfounder, and for taking the bells down and putting them up, making

" Says Chloe, 'Though tears it may cost,
It is time we should part, my dear Sue;
For your character's totally lost,
And I've not got sufficient for two!'"

Nothing surely can be neater than this other by Lord Holland, being literally an epigram—that is, an inscription—written by him, and still to be seen in a summer-house in the grounds of Holland House; in which the poet of Memory often rested:—

" Here Rogers sat, and here for ever dwell
To me, those pleasures that he sings so well."

K.

Paris.

I hope the hint in the last Quarterly, that the many good modern epigrams, now slumbering in "many a drawer in a scholar's escritoire," should be communicated to "N. & Q." will not be lost sight of. Pray call the attention of your readers to the suggestion; and in the mean time accept, what I believe to be an unpublished epigram upon an epigram:—

" An epigram should, like a pin, conjoint
In its small compass, show both head and point."

Which describes, however, rather the English than the Greek epigram. M. N. S.

THE LATE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA AND THE ACTOR.

The following anecdote has been sent to me from an undoubted authority, and I forward it as exhibiting a somewhat new feature to us in the character of the late autocrat of all the Russias; and also as recording one of the most happy escapes from an awkward position that wit and presence of mind might afford. Some years ago there was a very celebrated comic actor at St. Petersburg named Martinoff. He had most extraordinary powers of imitation, and was so great a favourite with the public, as sometimes to venture interpolations of his own, instead of following the advice of Hamlet to the players to "speak no more than is set down for them." The emperor at the same time had a high chamberlain, or personage filling a similar office, named Poloffsky. Whether for fun or malice, Martinoff while performing contrived to let fly some puns against this great man, which were warmly received by the audience. The consequence was, as soon as the play was over, the actor found himself in the custody of a guard of soldiers, who took him to prison, where he was told he was to be confined for a fortnight. Not contented with this, Poloffsky either told the emperor himself or contrived that it should come to his ears, that the player had actually had the presumption to indulge in imitations of his Imperial Majesty.

On his liberation, Martinoff went to court to pay his respects as usual, and the emperor told him of this accusation, which he denied. "Well," said the emperor, "if you never did so, let me have an imitation of myself now. We know you can do so if you choose." This was an awkward and dangerous position for the poor actor, who felt he should get into trouble for either falling short of, or overdoing the character. Still the autocrat was determined; there was no escape. Suddenly a bright thought struck the player, and drawing himself up, he assumed the exact bearing and manner of the emperor, and, in a voice so like that it made every one present start, said "Poloffsky! give Martinoff [himself] a thousand silver roubles!" "Stop," said the emperor, "I have heard quite enough. The imitation is admirable, but the entertainment promises to be too expensive. Give him the roubles, Poloffsky; and now mind, sir, let this be the last time you ever dare to mimic me here or elsewhere." It is of course unnecessary to say Martinoff was too glad to pocket the money, and escape so well. A. A.

Poets' Corner.

WILLS PUBLISHED. — I beg to add two to the lists already noted:—

"1558, May 18. Will of Richard Almoke of Sandhuton, co. York, proved at York, 16 Sep. 1558, by John Almoke, the son.

"1558, March 4. Will of John Almoche, the son of Sandhuton, proved at York, 10 May, 1559, by Thomas Almoche and Robert Almoche his brothers."

These were published in the Archæological Journal, vol. viii. p. 116, with very elaborate and learned notes.

The material point as to dates appears to have been overlooked by the editor. The 16th Sept. 1588, when the son proved his father's will, was previous to March 4, 1588 (O. S.), when he made his own will.

The importance of this is shown in the form of the wills. The testators "died in the days of strong religious reaction," as the editor of the wills truly says, and it is on this point that they are interesting.

The first attesting witness to both is "S^r Bartholmew Smith," and no doubt he was the priest who made them both. In the father's will he requests "to be buried within the Pshe Church earth of our Blessed Lady in Thriske;" and he gives to "S^r Bartholomew Smithe" a very small legacy "to pray for my soull, and all Christen soules." This was very right and lawful in May, 1558, the last year of Queen Mary.

In the following March of the same year (O. S.) when "Sir Bartilmewe" makes a will for the son, Queen Mary had been dead about four months; and, although he repeats the words as to being "buried in the pishe church of our Ladye in Thriske" (Thirske), and the legacy to a somewhat larger amount to "S^r Bartilmewe Smyth," he ends there, and does not venture to say a word about praying for souls. Elizabeth was queen, and the priest was prudent.

characteristic passages which occur in the third edition having been omitted from the first and second. Every literary inquirer would, I feel assured, be glad to possess an unmutated transcript of a work which is alike interesting to the grave historian and the most frivolous "general reader;" and I therefore venture to ask, through your columns, whether there be any prospect of the suppressed passages being made public, excepting, of course, such as are disfigured by indelicacy. The record of the "most trifling occurrence" of Pepys's life would probably cast much light upon the manners and customs of our ancestors who lived under the Merry Monarch.

GAMALIEL EVANS.

APOCRYPHAL WORKS HONoured BY THE INSTITUTE.—In the Foreign Quarterly Review, No. 11, is an article on Caillie's Travels in Africa (Paris, 1830). The editor of this work is rather severely handled by the reviewers, and at p. 119 occur the following remarks:—

"After all, we, like M. Caillie's countrymen, may have been imposed upon. . . . The Geographical Society of Paris will be no worse off than their brethren of the Institute, who, but a very few years since, bestowed their highest honour upon a work which the philosophers of Europe have ever since regarded as apocryphal; and Charles X. will be much in the same situation as our most gracious sovereign, who, by a barefaced fraud, was led to confer the honour of knighthood upon a pair of most impudent and consummate quacks."

Query 1. What is the work alluded to as having deluded the Institute? 2. What is the story of the "pair of impudent quacks" honoured with knighthood by our own sovereign? Q.

"BAILLER AUX CORNEILLES."—The French Examiner for the Academy at Woolwich, in the contest of which the result is not yet known, asks the question, "What is meant by the phrase Bailler aux corneilles?"

Now the best phraseological dictionary I have access to gives no such phrase under bailler or corneille, but under the latter word, and also under bayer, there is bayer aux corneilles, with a quotation from Piron. Would the examiner pretend that bailler and bayer are different forms of the same word; or is he right, and the lexicographer wrong? C. W. BINGHAM.

BANKERS AND GOLDSMITHS.—Sir Josiah Child, in his Tracts on Trade, after mentioning the laws by which he considers the Dutch reduced the rate of interest in Holland, and thereby increased their wealth, argues that a legal reduction of interest might be made with good effect in England; "being certain that the goldsmiths in London could have what money they would upon their servant's notes only, at 4*l.* and 4*l.* 10*s.* per cent. before the late emergencies of state" (4th edit. p. 65).

I would ask to what practice of the bankers and goldsmiths of the kind does Sir J. Child in this passage refer? ALGERNON BRENT.

Audit Office, Somerset House.

DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM: COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK. What portraits exist in English galleries, and what engraved portraits have we, of the Duke of Buckingham (Steenie)? And who was that Countess of Suffolk, temp. Elizabeth, to whom a portrait by Zuccaro could be assigned? X.

"CALEDONIA."—About the middle of the last century the packet-ship "Caledonia" plied between Great Britain and America. Is it possible to ascertain from what port in Great Britain she usually sailed? S. W. P.

COURT OF LOUIS XIV. AND XV.: GRANDEES OF SPAIN: PRIVILEGES, ETC.—Grandeas of Spain were divided into first, second, and third classes. How was the honour conferred, or the privilege obtained? St. Simon, in his Memoires, informs us, "that the ownership of the smallest portion of land in Castile made you a grandee." I do not find this confirmed by other writers. If any of your correspondents can give me information on this subject, it will oblige IGNORAMUS.

DISSOLUTION OF RELIGIOUS HOUSES.—Where can I obtain full information as to the subsequent fate of the lesser religious houses? At Harewood, in Herefordshire, there was formerly a preceptory of the Knights Templars, which afterwards belonged to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. The Grants of monastic property (Inventory of particulars in the Record Office) have perhaps two references to it, from which I gather that it was in some degree subordinate to the preceptory or commandery at Dinmore, and that Robert and Hugh Thornhill applied for information about its lands 26 June, 38 Henry VIII. Whether they became its purchasers I have not been able hitherto to ascertain.

In what respects did a commandery differ from a preceptory? C. J. R.

SIR THOMAS FORTESCUE, KNT.—Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Ferdinando Cary (who died in 1638), married, first, Francis Staunton, of county Salop, Esq.; and second, Sir Thomas Fortescue. Who was the latter? C. J. R.

"HARD CASH:" "O JUPITER AID US."—The author of Hard Cash, in giving a translation of a doctor's prescription, in several instances apparently considers the symbol \mathcal{B} , with which such documents commence, as equivalent to the invocation "O Jupiter aid us." Is this his meaning? And if so, what is the authority for the interpretation? It is generally supposed that \mathcal{B} is short for "Recipe." W. B.

idea from study of the Holy Scriptures; and moreover suggests that this same planet, in which we live, had been originally the kingdom forfeited through the rebellion of Satan; and which, on his expulsion, was resolved into the dark and confused chaos, out of the blasted residue of which chaotic materials our present world was organized by the word of God. It would be very confirmatory of Faber's opinion, if there were ancient traditions held by the Jews to the same effect; and, admitting this supposition as at least suggestive of truth, as founded from long study of God's ancient records, may not our geologists be finding vestiges of an antecedent, not merely the laboratory materials and scaffolding of a present earth? May not the "stones cry out" to corroborate God's written word by His works revealed in nature?

H. B.

LORD WILLOUGHBY. — In Mr. Dineley's Notitia Cambro-Britannica, recently printed from the Duke of Beaufort's MS. at Badminton, it is stated —

"His Grace's ancestor, then Lord President of Wales, lay at Gwidir, in Carnarvonshire; which place came to Lord Willoughby of Parham, in marriage with Sir R. Wynne's daughter and heiress — Lord and Lady Willoughby being at that time from home."

Sir B. Burke, in his Peerage and Baronage, informs us, Mary, daughter of Sir Richard Wynne, in 1714, married Bertie, 13th Baron Willoughby of Eresby, and Duke of Ancaster — whose descendant, the present Lord Willoughby, is in possession of Gwidir.

Either Sir B. Burke or Mr. Dineley must be incorrect, and perhaps the two baronies of Willoughby may have confused the Duke of Beaufort's chronicler, Mr. Dineley. Some correspondent may perhaps inform me how a Lord Willoughby came to possess the ancient Gwidir property in 1684, when the heiress, according to Burke, was only married in 1714. THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

WINTHROP: LLAMAN: VIZE. — Can any one give me the names and addresses of the representatives of the above families? A Mr. Winthrop was governor of the Bank of England.

H. O'D.

YEW TREES CALLED PALMS. — In Hunter's edition of Evelyn's Silva, London, 1825 (vol. i. p. 269), in a foot-note, it is said: "the yew trees in the churchyards, in East Kent, are at this day called palms." I have never heard of this designation in West Kent, or the Weald. Is it so used now in East Kent? Perhaps some of your readers can inform us.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

Queries with Answers.

DUNCANSON FAMILY OF CANTIRE. — That somewhat remote corner of the world, Cantire, has been so often mentioned in your pages lately, in conjunction with the well known name of CUTHBERT BEDE, that I am tempted to put a query relating to some people who formerly dwelt there, with the hope of eliciting from him or some one else, something about them. My query, though strictly speaking a family one, may yet have, I hope, a little general interest. The family I allude to is that of Duncanson. They seem to have been in their day people of no small importance, but I do not know if any descendants now exist. They appear to have been faithful adherents of the great family of Argyle. Thus when Argyle made his unfortunate expedition in 1685, and when everything had failed, just before he was taken prisoner, he sent off Sir Duncan Campbell, and "the Duncansons, father and son," to raise new levies, "persons all three by whom he seemed to have been served with the most exemplary zeal and fidelity." (See Fox's Historical Work.)

Again, I find mention in one of Burke's Genealogical works of a "MS. History of the Family of Campbell of Argyle by James Duncanson of Inverary."

Later, in 1692, Robert Duncanson, "Major to the Regiment of Foot commanded by the Earl of Argyle," is mixed up in the horrible affair of Glencoe. He afterwards fell at Valencia de Alcántara in 1705. His arms (arg. a chev. sable between 2 sheafs of arrows in chief gules, and a bugle in base of the 2nd) are registered in the Lyon Register, Edinburgh, in the former year, as descended of the family of Fassokie, Stirlingshire. I presume this is Fasoghie mentioned in conjunction with a James Duncanson, in the Retours, 1620.

Later still, cir. 1750, I find two brothers, James and John Duncanson, the former proprietor of Kiels, near Campbelton, the latter a surgeon at Inverary. They married sisters, Isabel and Barbara Mayne, sisters of William, Viscount Newhaven (created Viscount 1776, o.s.p.; see Boswell's Johnson, by Croker), and daughters of Mayne of Powis (see Douglas' Baronage, voc. "Mayne of Powis").

James left a son John, a captain in the army, who was killed in a duel at Malta. Perhaps your old correspondent M. S. R. can tell us something about him. He left also other children, as did his brother John. Any information respecting these personages, more especially any information tending to show the connection between them, will be most welcome.

F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

[Our correspondent's quotations from Douglas's Baronage as to this family are not quite accurate; for it is there stated (i. 263), that Barbara, the third daughter of William Mayne of Powis, married James Duncanson Keyles, Esq., collector of His Majesty's customs at Campton; and Isabel his fourth daughter John Duncanson, surgeon at Inverary. F. M. S. has therefore made each of these brothers marry his sister-in-law, while he has overlooked the peculiar Scotch phraseology of the Baronage, which shows that the elder was not proprietor, but only tenant of Keyles. Historically the most remarkable member of the Duncanson family was the Rev. John Duncanson, chaplain to James VI., who along with Mr. Patrick Gallo-way, received a grant of the life-rent of the temporalities of Dunblane, which accounts for the name appearing in a Stirlingshire retour. Among the poor scholars of the country of Argyre, to whom a grant was made by the parliament of 1661, there appears the name of James Duncanson. Major Duncanson escaped examination by the parliament as to his share in the massacre of Glencoe by being engaged in military service in Flanders, and the king refusing to recall him for that purpose. A Robert Duncanson was one of the baillies of Dumbarton from 1689 to 1701.]

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.—Having recently, by mere accident, stumbled upon the place of worship of this obscure body of Christians, and having heard therein an excellent sermon, I shall be thankful for direction to any sources of information with regard to their history and principles.

JOSEPHUS.

[The Sabbatarians, as they are called, who are distinguished by religiously observing the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, are a branch of the body of Anabaptists. They object to the arguments which are adduced in proof of the change of the Sabbath to the first day of the week, and say that the change was effected by Constantine. Their views are contained in the three following statements:—1. That God hath required the seventh or last day of the week to be observed by mankind universally for the weekly Sabbath. 2. That this command is perpetually binding on man. 3. That this sacred rest of the seventh day Sabbath is not (by Divine authority) changed from the seventh or last to the first day of the week. As a sect it sprang up about 1670, and is now almost extinct. We have only heard of two congregations in London, one in Mill Yard, Goodman's Fields; the other in Eldon Street, Finsbury; and about nine or ten societies in the West of England, which are kept from dissipation by endowments.]

CEDRENS.—I have seen it mentioned in a biblical work that Adam had thirty-seven sons and twenty-eight daughters, and the reference given for the statement is Cedrenus. Who was the writer, and what authority is due to his works? I believe he compiled a Synopsis of History in Greek.

J. DALTON.

[George Cedrenus, a Grecian monk, lived in the eleventh century, and wrote Annales, sive historia ab exordio mundi ad Iulianum Comnenum usque [A.D. 1057] compendium, Gr.

and Lat.; cum annotationibus et tabulis chronologicis, Gul. Xylandri. Bas. fol. 1566; and again printed at Paris in 1647, 2 vols. fol., with the Latin version of Xylander, and the notes of father Goar, a Dominican. This work, which is not executed with much judgment, is no more than an extract from several historians, and chiefly from Georgius Syncellus, Theophanes, and Thracesius Scylitzes. Vide Dupin, Cave, Fabric. Bibl. Græc., and Moreri.]

EPIGRAM AGAINST ARCHITECTS, BY WHOM?—Who is the "ancient writer," stated to have written the following couplet?—

"If of weak parts the stripling you suspect,
A herald make him, or an architect."

This quotation is from a work of the year 1810. The lines sound like one of Martial's ill-natured epigrams, but after an hour's search, I do not discover it in his work. W. P.

[Our correspondent is correct; the passage is in Martial, lib. v. ep. 56. He is advising his friend Lupus as to the education of his son, and tells him if he wishes to be rich he must neither be grammarian, orator, nor poet:—

"Artes discere vult pecuniosas?
Fac, discat, citharædus, aut choraules;
Si duri puer ingeni videtur,
Præconem facias, vel architectum."

The variorum note says this expression is not meant invidiously against architects, but simply that the occupations alluded to were much better paid than learned men or poets.]

ANDERSON.—The life and times of Anderson of Dumbarton, a fierce northern polemic, attracted considerable attention in "N. & Q." 2nd S. vi. to viii. In vol. viii. 255, he is stated to have been the son of John Anderson, who had fled from Elgin, owing to religious persecution, and settled in Edinburgh. I am anxious to identify this John Anderson with John Anderson, "depute clerk to the Justice Court," circa 1600. F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

[We are afraid our correspondent will fail in his identification. The statement to which he refers is to the effect that John Anderson, a person of some standing, born and resident in Elgin, was persecuted by the Presbyterians as a Nonconformist, and was obliged to leave Elgin for Edinburgh. This could not have occurred later than 1650-1, and as he is said to have been a person of some note at that time, he must have been at least twenty-five years of age when he left Elgin, and sixty-five at the Revolution; an age at which it is by no means probable that he would be appointed to such an office as Depute Clerk to the Justiciary Court.]

"THE LIFE OF CAPTAIN ROBERT BOYLE."—I lately became possessed of a number of old books and papers, and on examining these, I found a small volume, with the above title, on the top of each page. The volume is imperfect, however. It wants the full title-page, and at the end, some leaves are out. The last page remaining is marked 230. The Life itself is quite in the style, &c. of Roderick Random and other similar romances of the middle of last century. Would some of your correspondents have the kindness to state, first, Who was the author? and, secondly, When, and by whom, this book was printed and published?

B. J.

[This work is entitled The Voyages and Adventures of Captain Robert Boyle in several Parts of the World, &c. Lond. 1728, 8vo, and has been frequently reprinted. It is a fictitious narrative, attributed to Benjamin Victor as well as to W. R. Chetwood—most probably by the latter.]

Replies.

A LONDON BOOK AUCTION, 1698.

(3rd S. vii. 6.)

The passage cited will lose much of its value and suggestiveness, when it is known that the Journey to London, of which it forms part, was purely imaginary, and in no way a record of actual observation. It was never "written originally in French by Monsieur Sorbier," or any one else, and consequently never underwent the process of translation; but was the production of the witty Dr. William King, Advocate of Doctors' Commons, in facetious imitation of the Journey to Paris, in the same year, by Dr. Martin Lister, whose records of his trip were thought too minute and trifling for a man of his professional and scientific reputation. This had been preceded about thirty years before by the Journey to London of M. Sorbier, which, the fruit of three months' sojourn in this country, is such a dull and dreary farrago of mistakes and misrepresentations, that it was thought fit and politic to deprive him of his office of historiographer of France, for so malicious an attack upon a friendly nation; while he was not less severely censured by his countryman Voltaire, than by Sprat, Bishop of Rochester, here. The volume appeared in this country under the title of—

"A Voyage to England, containing many things relating to the State of Learning, Religion, and other Curiosities of that Kingdom; as also, Observations by Dr. T. Spratt, &c. London, 8vo, 1709."

Thus this author too appeared fair game to Dr. King, who appropriately ascribed his ironical travestie to him, while it is made to accord, paragraph by paragraph, with the Journey of Dr. Lister. That relating to book-auctions, which corresponds with the passage cited, is as follows:

"I was at an Auction of Books in the Rue St. Jacques, where were about forty or fifty people, most abbots and monks. The books were sold with a great deal of trifling and delay, as with us, and very dear; for Hispania Illustrata And. Sciotti, of the Francfort edition, from 20 livres, at which it was set, they bid up by little and little, to 36 livres; at which it was sold. The next was a Catalogue of French Books, in a thin fol. in an old Parchment Cover by De la Croix de Maine, 8 livres. And so I left them to shift it amongst themselves."—A Journey to Paris, &c. p. 136.

An excellent edition of the works of Dr. King, including the "Remarks on Varillas," "Journey to London," "Art of Cookery," "Art of Love," "Miscellany Poems, &c." was published in three volumes, small 8vo, 1770, with historical notes and memoirs of the author, by the editor, Mr. John Nichols. With this Dr. King, of Doctors' Commons, must not be confounded his namesake and contemporary, Dr. William King, Principal of St. Mary's Hall, Oxford. This latter, "equally eminent as a wit and tory," was author, inter alia, of the celebrated satire against the Countess of Newburgh, entitled The Toast, of which an interesting notice will be found in Bentley's Miscellany, for June, 1857, p. 616. This caution is not unnecessary, as Lowndes has rolled these two single gentlemen into one, and H. G. Bohn, in his new edition, has failed to detect the error; though both properly ascribe to the latter author the Political and Literary History of his own Times, London, 8vo, 1810, thus published half a century after the death of the writer.

It may not be out of place to add that The Toast, and the other pieces of Dr. King, were gathered into a quarto volume, under the title of Opera Gul. King, LL.D., Aulæ B. M. V. apud Oxon: Princip., with a curious frontispiece by Gravelot, in which Lord George Granville is represented displaying the youthful charms of the Countess of Newburgh (formerly Lady Francis Brudenel, sister of the Earl of Cardigan) to Apollo, while a Satyr points with derision to her coquettish airs and ghastly appearance in after life. I have seen a copy of this volume in which was inserted a letter from Dr. Bullock, executor of Dr. King, in which he stated that he had reserved only fifty copies for the Doctor's old friends, and had committed the rest to the flames. It has thus become very rare.

Some sixty years ago the ponderous, hot-pressed quartos of Sir John Carr managed to acquire; I suppose in the dearth of better books, a considerable share of public favour, and were productive of no little emolument to author and publisher. One of these, The Stranger in Ireland, a tissue of puerile and trivial observations, fell under the notice of the witty Edward Dubois, who travestied it, as Dr. King had previously Lister's Voyage, in a volume entitled, My Pocket Book; or, Hints for a Ryghte Merrie and Conceited Tour, in quarto, to be called "The Stranger in Ireland," in 1805, 3rd ed. 12mo, London, 1808. This piece of happy satire spoilt Sir John's market; the public ceased to buy his books, and the publishers refused to embark in new speculations. Hence an action for libel by the worthy knight against Hood and Sharpe (London, 8vo, 1808) which resulted, "without a minute's consultation," in a verdict for the defendants. In the same year appeared also, Old Nick's Pocket-Book; or, Hints for a Ryghte Pedantique, and Mangleinge Publication, to be called "My Pocket Book," 12mo. See also New Monthly Magazine, vol. lxxxi. p. 84.

WILLIAM BATES.

Birmingham.

The account of this auction appears in a Journey to London, in the year 1698, assumed to be "Written originally in French, by Monsieur Sorbiere, and newly translated into English," but in fact written by the humorous Dr. Wm. King, as a quiz on the voyage of Monsieur Sorbiere into England, published in 1664, a work full of scurrility and errors. In the Introduction, Monsieur Sorbiere is made to say, "I might here take the opportunity to beg pardon of the English for my misrepresentation thirty years ago; but it is to be hoped this book will make peace with that nation." This Journey is also intended as a satire on Dr. Lister's Journey to Paris, which was considered to be of a trifling nature. The whole of this assumed Journey to London of Monsieur Sorbiere will be found in the first volume of Dr. King's Original Works in 3 vols. 1776. W. S.

THE BLUE-COAT SCHOOL.

(3rd S. vii. 8.)

The original grant of the monastery of the Gray Friars, for the purpose of founding Christ's Hospital, was in the last year of Henry VIII., viz. 1546-7. Dudley's letter, in application to Cecil for the "preferment of a certeyn free scole," was in February of the following year. The coincidence of dates inclines me to the opinion, that Dudley's application was in relation to that grant. It could not refer to the Charter House School, as that was not established till after 1611—nearly seventy years later. The credit of the latter establishment is due alone to Thomas Sutton, the founder.* In 1609, Sutton obtained an Act of Parliament empowering him to erect a hospital at Hallingbury Bouchers, in Essex. He soon afterwards changed his mind as to the situation of the hospital; and purchasing the then lately dissolved Charter House from the Earl of Suffolk for 13,000*l.*, he petitioned King James, and obtained permission to change the hospital from Hallingbury Bouchers to the Charter House in London, under the name of the "Hospital of King James"—the

* We were perfectly aware that the Charter House School was not established till 1611; but as we conjecturally stated, the Earl of Warwick's letter "may refer to a projected school at the Charter House." The Earl at this time was residing in Ely Place, Holborn.—Ed.]

letters patent for which were duly issued. Sutton died Dec. 12, 1611.

Till that time, I apprehend, there had been no thought of establishing any school at the Charter House. Dudley (while Earl of Warwick) had purchased it from Sir Edward North, merely as a town residence.

Maitland, in his History of London (fo. 1739), says of Christ's Hospital:—

"This is a Royal Foundation, which was granted by Henry the eighth, anno 1547: and in the year 1552, confirmed to the Citizens by Charter of Edward the sixth, who thereby incorporated the Governors of his several Foundations in the City and Liberties thereof by the name of the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London, Governors of the Possessions, Revenues, and Goods of the Hospitals of Edward the sixth, King of England, &c. . . . So hearty and zealous were the Citizens in the prosecution of this good work, that the Hospital was no sooner fitted up, than they took into the same, in the Month of November of the said year 1552, three hundred and forty children; which number, before the end of the year, being increased to three hundred and sixty, the charge thereof in the first year amounted to Fourteen hundred and sixty-two pounds eight shillings and eight pence."

Stow, in his Survey of London by Strype (fol. 1720), says of Christ's Hospital:—

"The Gray Friars within Newgate, and St. Bartholomew's Hospital, belonging antiently to the Priory of St. Bartholomew's hard by, together with St. Nicholas and St. Ewen, two neighbouring parishes, were obtained by the City of K. Henry the eighth, in the 38th year of his reign: All which that King granted to the City for the relieving and succouring of their Poor; one of the last good Acts that King did before his Death.

"He also then founded two Churches out of those two religious houses: the one to be called Christ Church, out of the Gray Friars; and the other Little St. Bartholomew's, out of the Hospital of that name; with Competent Salaries for the respective Vicars and Ministers.

"And as the King had founded Churches on these places, so according to that, his Grant, it lay upon the City to establish here a standing provision for the poor. And accordingly, some part of the site of the Gray Friars they purposed for a large Hospital for poor Fatherless Children; here to be decently maintained and piously brought up, and fitted for Trades and Callings. But it was not before 5 or 6 years after the King's Grant, viz. anno 1552, the Lord Mayor and Citizens fell upon the reparation and fitting up of the Friars for the reception of the Children. And they effected it the same year, and called it Christ Church Hospital. So that in the month of September they took in near 400 Orphans, and clothed them in Russet; but ever after they wore Blue Cloth Coats, whence it is commonly called the Blue Coat Hospital."

(G. A.

Barnsbury.

"THE IRISH TUTOR" (3rd S. v. 479; vi. 542.) With all respect for the authority mentioned by W. J. F. I cannot but think he is mistaken in saying that the part of the Irish Tutor was written for Tyrone Power.

The farce was performed in London for the first time at Covent Garden Theatre on 28th October, 1822, when the part of Terry O'Rourke (Dr. O'Toole) was performed by Connor, an actor, who, although he had previously occasionally performed Irish characters, had been principally employed as the representative of such parts as Pizarro, Count Winterset in The Stranger, and Bedamar in Venice Preserved. Connor's admirable performance in The Irish Tutor led to his becoming the acknowledged representative of Irish characters, to which line of business he was thenceforth almost exclusively confined. He continued at Covent Garden Theatre until the close of the season 1825-26, after which his name is not found in the bills.

I do not know when Power first appeared, but during the season of 1825-26, he was engaged at Covent Garden Theatre, where he performed—not Irishmen, who still continued to be played by Connor, but—a variety of characters of very opposite kinds, and requiring considerable versatility of talent. His name appears to such parts as the Duke Vivaldi in Clari, and I myself well remember seeing him play Robin in No Song, no Supper,—in which piece, I may mention parenthetically, I on the same occasion saw Mrs. Keeley, then Miss Goward, perform the character of Margareta, which I have lately seen played by her daughter Louise.

In the following season (1826-7), Power succeeded to the Irish parts, and commenced that successful career which was so suddenly and sadly terminated. I believe his first original part was O'Shocknessy, in the farce of The £100 Note, in which Keeley so successfully impersonated Billy Black with his almost endless store of conundrums.

Genest (Account of the English Stage), recording the first performance in London of The Irish Tutor, says: "This poor piece was written by a nobleman, and consigned to the care of Abbott, the actor; it came out originally at Cheltenham." Can W. J. F. or any other correspondent say when it was performed at Cheltenham, and who then represented the principal character?

W. H. HUSK.

REV. JOHN RIPPON AND THE ORATORIO OF THE "CRUCIFIXION" (3rd S. vi. 319).—The Oratio of The Crucifixion was not composed by the late Rev. John Rippon, D.D., but by his nephew John Rippon.

JOHN FRANCIS.

GLADYS: GWLADYS (3rd S. vi. 267, 334, 538).—No doubt that Mr. C. H. E. CARMICHAEL is right in identifying the name Gladys with the Welsh Gwladys, the equivalent of Claudia. Any one who translated it "the Welsh maiden," must, I think, have intended to paraphrase what he supposed to be the etymology, as if from gwlad, "country;" he must have treated the name as meaning his "fellow countrywoman." Besides the Claudia of 2 Tim. iv. 21, there is another Gwladys, well known in Cambrian Hagiology, the daughter of Brychan, the wife of Gwynlliw, and mother of Catwg Ddoeth (Catwg the Wise), the same Cadocus to whom two churches in Glamorgan are dedicated, both of which are called in English Cadoxton, in Welsh Llangatwg. This Gwladys is mentioned in the printed volume oddly entitled "Iolo Manuscripts" (Llandovery, 1848), p. 120 (or in the English translation, p. 520). The short pronunciation of the penultimate in this name is, I think, common in South Wales, though it could hardly have been so enunciated by any one who derived it from gwlad, "country," in which the vowel a is necessarily long (pronounced āh, not ay). The natural length of the syllable, according to the best authorities, would be long, and many syllables which are short in South Wales (Dehenbarth and Morganwg) are long in Powys and Gwynedd. In the Vale of Neath two places bear the name of Gwladys: Craig Gwladys, and a beautiful waterfall called Ysgwyd Gwladys. The use of this name in the Herbert family springs no doubt from Wales, the present Herberts, Earls of Pembroke, being descended from the Earls of the former creation (who were themselves of Welsh family), one of whom had an illegitimate son (at least according to English law) by a woman in the west of Glamorgan, to whose son the revived earldom was given by Edward VI. in 1551. When in Wales last year I was glad to find that the elegant Welsh female name, Enid, had come into use again since the publication of Tennyson's Idylls; it is well to keep up such characteristic names, when they are not harsh or offensive. Though not a Welshman I like Welsh things in their places.

LAELIUS.

ARMS OF SIR WALTER RALEIGH (3rd S. iii. 451; iv. 33, 355, &c.)—As the identification of the quarterings on Sir Walter's seal has not been entirely satisfactory, perhaps the following note may be useful. I have now before me a volume of trickings of arms very beautifully executed by William Smith, Rouge Dragon, 1602. The MS. seems to have been dedicated to John Philipott and his friends. The coat of "Sir Walter Rayhley" contains sixteen quarterings, and as they differ somewhat from J. D.'s list (3rd S. iii. 452), and have all the colours displayed, I will repeat them:—

1. Gules, 5 lozenges conjoined in bend, argent.
2. Azure, 7 martlets (2, 3 & 2) or; on a canton of the second, a mullet sable.
3. Azure, 3 garbs or (or argent), a chief of the second.
4. Argent, a fesse between two chevrons sable.
5. Gules, a bend vair between 6 escallops, argent.
6. Barry nebuly of six, argent and gules.

7. Or, three chevrons gules.
8. Azure, a lion rampant or.
9. Gules, 5 lozenges conjoined in bend argent (or possibly or).
10. Argent, on a chief azure, three crosses formée fitchée. (N.B. These crosses are very indistinct.)
11. Sable, 3 garbs or.
12. Azure, an eagle displayed or.
13. Or, three stags' heads cabossed gules.
14. Azure, 3 garbs argent in bend, argent between two bendlets of the second.
15. Or, on a bend cotised, azure, 3 cinquefoils of the field.
16. Argent, on a bend sable, 3 horse shoes or.

It will be seen that Nos. 1—5 are the same in both lists, as are Nos. 13—16. My No. 6 is different, and my Nos. 7—11 are J. D.'s Nos. 8—12. His No. 7 and my No. 12 are peculiar to their respective shields.

As to crests this tricking has four; viz., 1, a fleur-de-lys or; 2, a stag's head cabossed, gules, between the antlers a fleur-de-lys or; 3, apparently a morion, surmounted with three feathers, all per pale argent and gules; 4, a buck trippant (not stantant), proper. Motto, "Amore et virtute."

It is very difficult to decide in one or two of these cases whether the metal of some of the charges is argent or gold. I think the ninth quartering is the same as the first, and is Raleigh; the lozenges or fusils are clearly not ermine, and I feel sure they are not different in form from the first quartering. This contemporaneous evidence may enable J. D. to trace out the marriages by which these arms were inherited.

W. H. WHITMORE.

Boston, U. S.

MM (3rd S. vi. 434, 503; vii. 41.)—Bailey, in his Dictionary, states this to be "a strong liquor brought from Brunswick, in Germany." Ash defines it "beer brewed from wheat." I have, however, a curious old dictionary in 18mo, no name, but about 1700, which says:—

"Mum, a kind of physical beer made (originally) at Brunswick, in Germany, with hush of walnuts infused."

Is this correct? If so, is the manufacture carried on there now; or is there any record of walnuts being used in brewing; and again, is it the green shell, or what part of the fruit? Broom tops formerly were employed in England for giving a bitter to beer, and are so to the present day in Italy. Many sorts of bitter have also been tried. This is the first time, however, I have heard of wainut in any form.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

The following is from a manuscript note-book in my possession, bearing date 1738:—

"Mum is a sort of sweet malt liq^r, brewed with barley and hops, and a small mixture of wheat; very thick, scarce drinkable till purified at sea. It is transported into other countries. Hides and Mum chief trade of Brunswick Wolfenbuttel."

H. FISHWICK.

PATTENS (3rd S. vi. 532.)—This word is probably from the French patin, the sole or cill of a wooden partition, the sole of a shoe, or a skate—"patin de glace." Meige gives patin, a pattin—evidently meaning patten.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

HEREFORDSHIRE QUERIES (3rd S. vi. 498; vii. 45.)—I am obliged to MR. DAVIES for his desire to assist me in ascertaining the derivation of the word "tump," but I seek to trace it beyond the Welsh form twmp, which is but another way of writing the same word. The language of the Celts contained, and contains, many words borrowed immediately from the Latin, and probably still more which are derived from a common origin with it. I suspect that τύμβος, tumulus, twmp, and tomb, descend from the same ancestor, and that perhaps toft and tot are also nearly related to them, but the exact course of descent I am unable to trace.

I observe that in the East of England toft is a common name for a place, e. g., Toft, near Cambridge; Monks Toft, in Norfolk, and Toft-Trees, in the same county. If toft and twmp be identical in meaning, the distribution of the two forms is significant.

I should hesitate about accepting your correspondent's suggestion as to the connection between Rodd and Rood; the former seems to me to be a form of Red.

C. J. ROBINSON.

Harewood, Ross.

PASSAGE IN "DON QUIXOTE" (3rd S. vii. 25.)—I am very much obliged to those gentlemen who have endeavoured to aid me in my difficulty, but am sorry to say it remains unremoved. I think I must give up the notion of mil being used in the sense of immense; but I cannot believe that the nymph could have had several velos, one over the other; for what would be the use when only the outer one could be seen? My conception is that she wore a very large mantilla, which being fastened, as usual, on the top of the head, descended in front on both sides, covering the forepart of her person as she sat; and from its magnitude and its folds Cervantes used the plural—of majesty, as Hebrew grammarians would say. I therefore return to my original supposition that he had written unos, of which the printer managed to make mil. In the description of Ximena's wedding-dress, in the Romancero del Cid, we read that

"De paño de Londres fino
Era el vestido bordado,
Unas garnachas muy justas,
Con un chapin colorado."

("Of fine cloth of London was her embroidered dress, a gown very well-fitting, with red chopinea.")

Here we have the plural for the singular; for she could not have worn more than one cloth dress, and that a close-fitting one (justas) reaching of course from the throat to the feet. Odd enough, in the last line we have the singular for the plural, for she surely had a pair of chopines, or thick-soled shoes. As to the editors taking no notice of mil, they did not understand it, and so, as is their wont, they said nothing about it. It is perhaps for the same reason that I have never met with a note on

"Let's briefly put on manly readiness" (Macbeth, Act II. Sc. 3), for the sense is by no means obvious; and most certainly the late Mr. Singer did not understand it.

THOS. KEIGHTLEY.

"PERFVRIDUM," ETC. (3rd S. vii. 11.)—The well-known phrase, the paternity of which is sought, did not proceed from Buchanan, though it appears to have been first used with reference to him. It occurs in the Jesuita Vapulans of Andreas Rivetus, a Calvinistic minister, and professor of theology at Leyden in the middle of the seventeenth century. The phrase is cited in the following passage:—

"These books I will in some things no otherways commend than Andreas Rivetus, professor of Leyden, did the doctrine of Buchanan and Knox; whose rashness he ascribed præfervido Scotorum ingenio, et ad audendum prompto."—Sir T. Urquhart's Tracts, Edin. 1774, p. 134.

This was in answer to the recrimination of a Jesuit, who affirmed that Buchanan, Knox, and Goodman, had written "as boldlie for the rebellion of subjects against princes, as any of their order at any time had done." (Demands concerning the Covenant, 1638.)

Thus much I gather from Mr. Robertson's entertaining little volume, Delicæ Literariæ, 12mo, 1840, p. 154.

Another work of this same Andreas Rivetus is before me, Suspiria Pœnitentis Afflicti, Solatia confidentis animi, Meditationes in VII. Psalmos, vulgo dictos Pœnitentiales, 12mo. Arnheimii, 1638. This scarce little tome appears to me worthy of note, as containing a letter to a friend on the contagiousness of the Plague, in which occurs a "Dìgressio de sepulturis in Templis, in quâ redarguitur mos cadavera mortuorum in templis sepeliendi," which is interesting from the rational and enlightened views thus early expressed with regard to this most disgusting and abhorrent practice.

WILLIAM BATES.

Birmingham.

LEYCESTER'S PROGRESS IN HOLLAND (3rd S. vii. 14.)—Q. will find an account of Leycester's progress and reception in Holland in the Sydney State Papers, 2 vols. fol. "Life of Robert Dudley;" in the Biographia Britannica by Dr. Kippis, article "Dudley, Robert;" and a very full account in Life of Robert, Earl of Leicester, the Favourite of Queen Elizabeth Drawn from Original Writers and Records, 8vo, Lond. 1727, without any author's name, but written by Dr. Samuel Jebb.

GEO. ADLARD.

Barnabury.

PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF BRUNSWICK (3rd S. vii. 9.)—Many years ago I read a two-volumed French novel founded on the same fact that Lady G. Fullarton has taken as the groundwork of her interesting work, Too Strange not to be True. It was entitled La Princesse de Wolfenbüttel, and must, I think, have been published previous to the year 1817, although I only met with it many years later.

H.

COLOURS IN HERALDRY: ARMS OF THE FAMILY OF XIMENES DE CISNEROS (3rd S. vi. 394, 480.)—Some shading was certainly common in drawing coats of arms before the time when the present system is said to have been invented. In the title-pages of the volumes of the Complutensian Polyglott, the arms of Cardinal Ximenes are given (fifteen squares, three in a row), as if the blazon were alternately vert and argent. As engraved in the title-page of the cardinal's Life by Robles, the blazon is sable and argent. What ought the tinctures to be? It appears to me strange if the seals on the death-warrant for Charles I. are the first place in which we now find heraldic shading; if so, this mode of designating blazon must have started into general use at once; whereas single instances would be far more likely. LÆLIUS.

"SEDES STERCORARIA" (2nd S. xi. 187, 252.)—Without controversy, and as a simple matter of literary curiosity, allow me to add a reference to the list of authorities on this subject. Friar Robert, who wrote in 1291, in the south of France, says he had a vision wherein he was removed to Rome; and, among other things, tells us this:—

"Duxit me Spiritus ad Lateranense Palatium, et posuit me in porticu ante sedes porphyrii; ubi dicitur probari Papa an sit homo: et omnia pulvere plena erant, et vivens ibi non videbatur."

The edition from which I quote is the one which appeared at Paris in 1513 (fol. 25 a). The volume is very rare; and contains Hiermas, Uguesinus, F. Robertus, Hildegardis, Elizabeth, and Mechtildis. The existence of this book has been doubted, but "possession answers all objections."

B. H. C.

COMETS (3rd S. vii. 10.)—I would refer E. V. H. to the following passage in Milne's Life in China (edit. 1859, p. 144):—

"* * * This [the appearance of a comet in the south-west] created some apprehension in the minds of the peaceably disposed citizens of the city; as a phenomenon like this is believed to be an infelicitous omen of warlike invasions, from the quarter where it first appears. After their struggle with the British lion, not only a rumour,

TO PLUCK A CROW (3rd S. vi. 390.)—"I've a crow to pluck with you, and a poke to put the feathers in," is I think the usual North country proverb, the poke for the feathers being rather an important part of the threat, judging from the stress the speaker lays upon it. P. P.

THOMAS BARTON, B.D. (3rd S. vi. 470; vii. 46.)—We subjoin an extract from Mr. Bruce's Calendar of the Domestic State Papers of Charles I. (iv. 101), which will doubtless satisfy DR. RIX that we had good authority for our statement:—

"1629, Nov. 20. Westminster: Presentation of Thomas Barton, M.A. to the rectory of Eynesbury, co. Huntingdon, void by simony. Lat."—Sign. Man. Car. I. vol. xi. No. 45.

The letters patent presenting Barton to Eynesbury bearing date 7 Dec. in the same year, are abstracted in Rymer's Fœdera, xix. 139.

By an error in the Index to the Hague edition of Rymer, Barton's rectory is stated to have been Fillingham in the diocese of Lincoln. The mistake clearly arose from Barton's presentation to Eynesbury immediately following that of Ralph Hollingworth, B.D., to Fillingham.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

PHILIPPINES (3rd S. vi. 501.)—Is "Philippine" exclusively the English word used in this game, if such it may be called? It was introduced to my notice in childhood by an Austrian lady, and she never mentioned any other phrase than "Bon jour, Philippe (or Philippine)." Had this amusement been of German origin, I cannot help thinking that she would have used, in preference, the phrase of her own country. HERMENTRUDE.

ISABEL OF GLOUCESTER AND HUBERT DE BURGH (2nd S. xi. 491; xii. 35, 153, 197, 212, 297, 403.)—I forward two extracts from the Chronicle of Dunstable, which may perhaps be considered conclusive as to the marriage of these old friends of ours. The chronicler certainly appears to know some particulars about Isabel (the place of her sepulture for instance) which I have not been able to discover in the pages of any other writer, though his curious mistake in calling her "Johanna" a little qualifies the weight which might otherwise be given to his assertions. After speaking of the death of Geoffrey de Mandeville at a tournament, he proceeds:—

"Qui paulo ante guerram Johannam, Comitissam Gloucestrie, repudiatam à Johanne, Rege Angliæ (Archiepiscopo Burdegalensi divortium celebrante) duxit in uxorem, licet invitus. Pro cuius maritaggio cavit Regi de decem milibus marcarum et amplius, quas nunquam solvere potuit: pro quarum solutione, destructa sunt nemora, et maneria nullis temporibus impignorata. Cui sine filiis mortuo, successit Willelmus frater ejus, et relictam ipsius duxit Hubertus de Burgo, Justiciarius Angliæ; quæ post paucos dies decessit, et apud Cantuariam sepelitur."—Chron. Dunst., ed. Hearne, i. 74.

The second extract is under the date of 1232:—

"Hubertus de Burgo, Justiciarius Angliæ, conventus super peregrinatione Sanctæ-Crucis, per literas Papæ, per absolutionem Pandulfi Legati tunc Angliæ, se rationabiliter expedit. Super divortio verò tertie uxoris sue, scilicet filie Regis Scotiæ, conventus super eo, quod erat consanguinea secundæ * uxoris sue, scilicet Comitisse Glouerniæ . . ."—Chron. Dunst., ed. Hearne, i. 207.

If it really be the case, that Isabel survived her marriage with Hubert a few days only, it would explain why he never assumed her title; but it still leaves unexplained the fact, that no grant nor reference to the marriage appears (so far as I can discover) in the Close Rolls, or the Patent Rolls.

My sole desire is to arrive at the truth in this matter; and if the authority of the Chronicle of Dunstable can be held to be conclusive, I am ready at once to retract my originally expressed opinion that the marriage is "not proven."

While on this subject, I may just remark, in answer to the observation of S. P. V. (3rd S. iv. 255), that "it was this marriage (to Isabelle of Angoulême) that the King of France advised," that this does not appear to be the meaning of the chroniclers. The Annales de Burton, nevertheless, expressly say that it was the second marriage, and not the divorce, which was "de consilio Domini sui Philippi Regis Franciæ." (Annales Monastici, i. 202.) HERMENTRUDE.

THE BELL INN AND BROADHURST (3rd S. vii. 33.)—In the query on this subject, I was surprised to observe the following statement: "The mansion of Broadhurst, the property of Mr. Lightmaker, has long since disappeared." It is true that nearly thirty "fugacious" years have passed since I spent some very happy months at Horsted-Keynes as its curate, and what sacrilege may have been committed there in this long interval I cannot tell: but I certainly was, at that time, under the strong impression that the gabled old farmhouse at Broadhurst was at least an integral portion of the mansion, in which dear sainted Archbishop Leighton spent his latter days. I copy from a children's periodical, published seventeen years since, a few lines which seem to confirm my impression:—

"We are in the midst of a desert-garden, belonging to an ancient manor-house, now a farm-house. . . . A few straggling roses, green walks, raised up one above another, the plots of ground, the piece of water, all mark where once the garden was, though all is now desolate. There is a shady avenue behind us all overgrown with fern, and at the end a group of aged trees; in this avenue and beneath those trees, the good Archbishop Leighton passed many of his last hours on earth: for this was the place where he spent his last years, and the fern-covered avenue is still pointed out as his favourite resort."

Whether distance, and the pleasant memories of youth "lend enchantment to the view," I

* Isabel was Hubert's third wife, not his second.

promises by-the-bye a new and enlarged edition of his Curiosities of London, gives us a series of pleasant gossiping Essays about everything, from "Sir Richard Phillips" to "Railway London;" while Aleph's contribution is a reprint of some forty articles about City Haunts and City Worthies contributed by him to the City Press.

The Voices of the Year; or, The Poet's Kalendar. Containing the choicest Pastorals in our Language. Illustrated. (Griffin & Co.)

This is a handsome tribute to that love of rural life which is the innate feeling of all Englishmen. A collection of all the best pastorals in our language (and how many and how fine they are this volume sufficiently proves), beautifully printed and nicely illustrated, can scarcely fail to become a popular book.

At the meeting of L'Académie des Inscriptions on the 20th ult., some sharp comments were made on the approaching publication at Berlin of a Monument of the highest interest recently discovered at Abydos by M. Auguste Mariette, and which represents Seti I. accompanied by his son Ramses II. (Sesostris) making an offering to seventy-six kings, several of whom belonged to a period between the sixth and eleventh centuries, and are as yet unidentified. M. Mariette had himself intended to give this to the world, but is said to have been forestalled by this publication, made from a copy surreptitiously obtained, and sent to Germany, where, if this report be true, M. Bismark's axiom, La force prime le droit, seems to be extended from the world of politics to that of science.

According to the Bulletin Bibliographique Espagnol, the lost books of Tacitus have been found in the ruins of a house at Catania in Sicily. We wonder how often similar reports have been circulated!

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

EVANS'S CATALOGUE OF ENGRAVED PORTRAITS. Second-hand will do. Wanted by F. M. S. 279, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

Plates of Fashion (like Ackermann's) of the last century. Wanted by John Nunn, Esq., 23, Euston Square, N.W.

CUDWORTH ON FREE WILL.
CUDWORTH'S INTELLECTUAL SYSTEM OF THE UNIVERSE.
WHITHEAD'S LIFE OF SIR WALTER RALPHIN in the National Illustrated Library, 1851.

Wanted by Rev. J. Maskell, Tower Hill, London, E.C.

THEOBALD'S SHAKESPEARE RESTORED. 4to.
HISTORY OF BRAY, BERKSHIRE.
GARRICK'S CORRESPONDENCE. 2 Vols. 4to.
VAUGHAN'S HOURS WITH THE MYSTICS. Vol. I.
Wanted by Mr. John Wilson, 93, Great Russell Street, W.C.

A POLITICAL AND SATYRICAL HISTORY OF THE YEARS 1756 to 1759. Two Parts. London: For E. Morris, near St. Paul's.
Wanted by Rev. J. C. Jackson, 5, Chatham Place East, Hackney, N.E.

Notices to Correspondents.

H. A. W. The work is of no great value.

H. W. The first Marquis of Winchester, who held office during the reign of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth.

G. FRIDAUX. We presume Duchesne's valuable Historie Normannorum Scriptores antiqui, etc., Paris, 1619, folio, is the work alluded to.

H. B. M. who writes about—

"An Austrian army awfully arrayed," is referred to our 2nd S. viii. 412, 460; xii. 173, 279, 336.

Genl. Defoe's Letter to Dyer is printed in Wilson's Defoe, iii. 185.

GEORGE LEON. The disputed authorship of The Whole Duty of Man has been so frequently discussed by literary antiquaries during the last two centuries, that we feel disinclined to re-open the subject unless some new facts are discovered. Consult Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, the Gent. Mag., and "N. & Q." Mr. Haekins, in his Introductory Essay to the edition of 1822, has ably examined the claims of the principal candidates.—The printed sources of information respecting Abraham Woodhead were given in our last volume, p. 475. The following inscription was on his monument in St. Pancras churchyard: "Elegi obituem esse in domo Domini, et natus in solitudine, non quereas quid mihi utile, sed quid recte." In 1738 a new monument was erected with a different inscription.

P. W. S. (New York.) The Rev. Samuel Tappan's translation of the seven books of Milton's Paradise Lost was never published. Calamy says "He wrote several things, but printed nothing."

IONORAMUS will find the subject "Why Moses is represented with horns" discussed in our 1st S. i. 419, 420.

C. BOOTH (Montrose.) The author of Manrice and Berghetta was Wm. Parnell, M.P. for co. Wicklow. See "N. & Q." 2nd S. iii. 56.

D. thinks it probable that the word, which he read "maltmaker" (2nd S. vi. 434), is "maltmaker." The Diary is in a very crabbed hand.

ERROR. A solution of the enigma is given in "N. & Q." 2nd S. xii. 35.

R. W. B. will also find a solution of the Latin riddle in our 3rd S. v. 199, 209.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

800 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STRAPPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 4d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 25, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., to whom all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

ANOTHER CURE OF COUGH BY DR. LOCOCK'S POLMONIC WAFERS.—"8, Wilson Terrace, St. Leonard's Street, Bromley, E.—I can myself testify that they have relieved me of a most severe cough, so bad that I was unable to lie down, and I shall do my best to recommend them. Wm. NICHOLAS." They give instant relief to asthma, consumption, coughs, colds, and all disorders of the breath, throat, and lungs. Price 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. per box. Sold by all Druggists.

THE OLD DRAMATISTS.

In royal 8vo volumes, illustrated with Portraits, with Introductions, Memoirs, and Notes, by Gifford, Hartley Coleridge, Dyce, and others.

CAMPBELL'S SHAKSPEARE. Illustrated by JOHN GILBERT, 12s.

BEN JONSON, 16s.

MASSINGER and FORD, 15s.

WYCHERLY, CONGREVE, VANBRUGH, and FARQUHAR. 15s.

BEAUMONT and FLETCHER, 2 Vols. 32s.

JOHN WEBSTER. 10s. 6d.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE. 12s.

GREENE and PEELE. 16s.

ROUTLEDGE, WARNE, & ROUTLEDGE,
The Broadway, Ludgate Hill.

THE OLD POETS.

In royal 8vo volumes, with Portraits,

CHAUCER, edited by TYRWHITT. 10s. 6d.

SPENSER, with Memoir and notes by TODD. 10s. 6d.

DRYDEN, edited by WARTON. 10s. 6d.

POPE, edited by CARY. 10s. 6d.

ROUTLEDGE, WARNE, & ROUTLEDGE,
The Broadway, Ludgate Hill.

Just ready, crown 8vo, 6s.

BRIEF NOTES on the GREEK of the NEW TESTAMENT. By the REV. FRANCIS TRENCH, M.A., Rector of Lilip, Oxon.

"These Brief Notes have been composed with one single object in view, viz. that of bringing some contribution towards an accurate perception of the force and meaning of the original Greek in the New Testament. It will be found that with a view of making these Brief Notes available to all intelligent persons, whether acquainted with the Greek and Latin languages or not, all Greek and Latin words are excluded from the body of the page, and placed below, as not essential, although helpful, towards the comprehension of the book."

Extract from Author's Preface.

MACMILLAN & CO., London and Cambridge.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1865.

CONTENTS.—N° 163.

NOTES:—The Battle of la Planta, &c., 107—Stamp of the Cross on Bread, &c., 108—Unpublished Letters of Angelo Kaufman, 109—Congleton Accounts, 10.—Remarkable Coincidence—Extinction of Native Races—Fagg: a Remnant—Passage in Eusebius: Dr. Cureton and the "Quarterly Review"—Lord Bacon and the "Christian Paradoxes"—Autographs in Old Books—Gas—"Heavy Friends," 100.

QUERIES:—Surgeon executed for Murder, 112—The Grave of Cervantes, 10.—Basubend—Barapicklet—Beauville Pies—Brabener—Sir Thomas Browne's "Religio Medici"—Burial in Coffins—The Rev. Richard John Crockley—Chevisance—Dreaming under Triple Trees—Decree of the Council of Nice—Goodwyn of Blackheath—"The Hog's Prayer"—"Joannes ad oppositum"—Lope de Vega—Henry Marten—Medal of 1801—Names and Motives: Thodey and Rough—Preston Oakhills—Portrait of Cardinal Pole—Quotation wanted—"A Register of all the Noblemen of England since the Conquest granted"—Russian Deserters—Stanley—"What's in a Name?" 112.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Luke: Lake: Howell's "Letters"—Bibliographical Queries—Long Melford Church—"For a Year and a Day"—The Court in 1729—"The Bony House of Airie," 114.

REPLIES:—Cary Family, 117—Street Melody, 118—Dickson's Caricatures, 119—Epigram against Architects—Cromwell's Ironsides—Sobriquets of Regiments—Quotation wanted—"O Hasten Man!"—William Bridges—Lunatic Literature—"Bibliotheca Hibernica"—Sir Thomas Overbury—"Memoirs of the Life of Lord Lovat, 1704"—Jacobite Song—The Duke of Brunswick's Fifty Reasons—Reverend applied to Clergymen—Limehouse—Jussieu's Cedar, &c., 119.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

THE BATTLE OF LA PLANTA.

AN ANCIENT HISTORIC BALLAD OF THE VAL D'ANNIVIERS, CANTON DU VALLAIS, SWITZERLAND.

(From the Romande.)

The original of the following ballad is in the Romande of the Val d'Anniviers, a wild ravine in the High Vallais, a short distance from Sierre on the Simplon road. It is a favourite folks-song in the Valley of Anniviers, and its popularity is rather on the increase than the decline. It was not known beyond the valley until Baron Charles de Bon, an accomplished Swiss archæologist and scholar produced a traditional copy before the "Suisse Romande Society." It is now printed in the Society's Transactions. M. de Bon's copy is evidently in a very corrupt state. Some of the verses rhyme, others do not. Some of the lines have evidently been transposed, and there are lines where it is pretty clear that the first portion ought to change place with the conclusion. Translations have appeared in German rhyme and French prose. In the following version (the only English one) I have adopted the metre of the original, ex. gr.:—

— A oui allais vos verd conto?
A oui vos endallas?
Ye ouis allai trovar las tchievres—
Où les tchievres d' han Valli."

If the ballad really relate to the battle of La Planta, we may presume that it was written shortly after the event, which occurred in 1475. It was one of those numerous skirmishes that took place between the Helvetians and the Savoyards, when the latter had for a leader Charles Duke of Burgundy, known in history as "Charles le Téméraire." But the ballad may be older and relate to another battle. M. le Comte d'Angreville de Beaumont of Epinacy, Canton du Vallais, in a communication to me, writes as follows:—

"C'est bien en 1475 qu'a eu lieu la bataille de la Planta, aux portes de Sion, où plusieurs mille soldats et 300 nobles Savoyards et Bas Vallaisans furent tués. La ballade de M. de Bons doit plutôt se rapporter à la bataille de St. Léonard, qui a lieu un siècle avant, soit en 1375. Nous appelons cette guerre, la guerre des Châtillons. La Ballade en parlant du Comte Verd (Amadeus VI.) et la Planta commet un anachronisme. Il est bien vrai que le Comte Verd a eu plusieurs guerres avec les Vallaisans, mais il était mort (1382) lors de la bataille de la Planta (1475)."

I rather lean to the opinion of Count d'Angreville, and am inclined to believe that the ballad is really a minstrel effusion composed on the Battle of St. Leonard, and altered to suit a later event by some one whose historical knowledge was defective, or who was careless how he executed his task. It is only in the last verse that "La Planta" is met with—

"Il y ha commencia a doze,
Et a treichi il y ha feuna;
Et vingte et mill hommes,
Sont restas in la Planta."

It is by no means an improbable conjecture, that the last line may have been tampered with, and that we ought to read—

"Sont in St Leonard restas."

Neither La Planta nor St. Leonard are in or near the Val d'Anniviers. The connection of the ballad with Anniviers is for the reason above stated.

"Whither away so fast, Green Count?
Whither so fast and far?"

'I seek the goats of the Vallais land
That up in the mountains are.'

"By my fay*, my gentle Count,
You may be baulk'd ere long!
Instead of finding the goats you seek,
You may meet with some wild-bucks strong."

"I rede thou com'st from the High Vallais,
Thy tongue is so bold and free!
But let us have less of thy jesting here,
Or thy head may the forfeit be."

"Gramercy! I'll pay down the worth, Green Count,
Of this lubberly head of mine;
Lo! a hundred chues to drink my health
In a bumper of Sion Wine!†

* This phrase Per ma fée occurs twice. We find it in all the old ballads of Scandinavia, England, Scotland, &c. The Vallais formed a part of Celtic Switzerland.

† The meaning of "chuo" is not very clear. There

- "But what are your wills, my noble Count?
 Speak frankly and out, I pray;
 'Twere better than talking of cutting off heads—
 A game at which two can play."
- "I demand Sion, Siérre, Valére,
 And Tourbillon's hall and shrine;
 And that every village to Simplon's height
 Pay tribute to me and mine."
- "You ask too much, my noble Count,
 Least! so doth it seem to me;
 In three days I shall be with my merry men all,
 And it's then shall our answer be."
- "I will but give thee one single day —
 Return thou to-morrow noon;
 Thou wilt find me sat in the capital
 A-taking of my dejeune."†
- "He went alone where the Simplon's snow
 Shone clear in the calm midnight,
 But he was not alone when the towers of Sion Bask'd fair in the mid-day light."
- "Look out, look sharp! my Nephew bold,
 And tell me what you can see?
 Comes any goat from the High Vallais
 A-bearing response to me?"
- "By my fay! my gentle Count,
 I wish we were far away,
 Enjoying the smiles of our loving wives,
 And sharing our children's play."
- "For lo! they come, a countless host,
 And seem a right valiant band—
 I like not the frown of their angry faces,
 Nor the staffs that they bear in hand.‡
- "They look like knights of high degree,
 As the forest lion brave;
 Their heads have helmets, as cauldrons huge,
 Their plumes in the breezes wave."
- "He I met was a cunning huntsman,
 Well aim'd was his dart and true;
 He hath broken my glass, and spilt my wine,
 And our parley I sorely rue."

never was any such money coined by the Prince Bishops of Sion, as may be seen by consulting Count d'Angreville's work, La Numismatique Vallaisanne." The German translator renders the word by "Crutz," the common abbreviation of "Creutzer." A crutz was a trifle less in value than our halfpenny.

* This is certainly more like the language of Amadeus VI. than that of Charles the Rash.

† "Capitula" and "dezunai" are in the original. Sion was of course not the capital of a republican canton either in the days of Amadeus VI. or Charles the Rash; but it was in those times, and long afterwards, the capital of a palatinate presided over by a Prince Bishop. "Dejeune" was the common name for the mid-day meal, used by all the northern nations. It is still in use in Scotland. In one of Hogg's ballads we read, "Taking of her dejeune."

‡ In the Breton Ballad of "Tannedik-Flamm," we read "Do you see any black sheep descending the mountain?" The answer is, "I see no troop of black sheep, but I see an army, who come to besiege Henbont."—BARZAZ-BREIZ, Chants Populaires de la Bretagne, par Th. Hersart de la Villemarqué. Paris, 1846. The resemblance is remarkable. In the Vallais ballad, "goats" is a term of contempt, as "black sheep" is in the Breton ballad. The replies, too, are very much of the same character. Is this accidental? A friend thinks the author may have been a priest to whom ballad literature was not unknown.

"At the hour of twelve the fight began,
 It was over at thirteen,*
 When a thousand and twenty foemen fierce Lay stretch'd on La Planta's green."

D.

Florence, Jan. 6, 1865.

STAMP OF THE CROSS ON BREAD: AND JOUSTS AND TOURNAMENTS PROHIBITED BY ROYAL MANDATE.

I send you two curious articles for your Note Book, which I hope you will think worthy of insertion:—

"Ex Rotulis Clausis, 36 Hen. III.

"Mandatum est Vice Comiti Essex et Hertford quod clamari faciet per totam ballivam suam et firmiter ex parte Regis prohiberi, ne quis pistor, panem faciens venalem, signum Crucis, vel agni Dei, vel etiam nomen Jesu Christi, imprimi faciet in pane suo, ne per culpam pistoris, vel alia casu inopinato, signa predicta vel nomen Domini, quod absit, deturpetur.

"Teste meipso apud Stum. Edmundum primo die Septembr.

"Eodem modo mandatum est aliis Vice-comitibus."

"De Prohibitione Rotunde Tabula ex Rot. Claus.
 36 Hen. III.

"Rex Omnibus ad Rotundam Tabulam faciendam conventuris apud Waleden, vel alibi, salutem.

"Precipimus vobis, quod, in fide qua nobis tenemini, et sub amissione terrarum et tenementorum vestrorum, quod nullam Rotundam Tabulam faciatis apud Waleden, vel alibi in regno nostro, ad torneandum vel ad justas faciendum sine licencia nostra, scituri quod, si super premissis aliquid attemptaveritis contra hanc prohibitionem nostram, taliter ad vos, ut bona vestra capiemus, quod exinde grave dispendium incurretis.

"In cujus, etc. Teste Rege apud Stum. Edmoundum, vi. die Sept."

T. PHILLIPS.

Middle Hill.

[The documents, for which we are indebted to the courtesy of SIR THOMAS PHILLIPS, are certainly very curious. The prohibition to place the "signum Crucis," &c., upon the bread, luckily no longer exists; or, what would become of our "Hot cross buns" at Easter? As for the prohibition of jousts and tournaments, Royal Mandates to that effect are very common in the Close Rolls and Patent Rolls. The king frequently forbade them for political reasons. The "Rotunda Tabula" was a joust. In the Archæologia Cantiana (vol. v. p. 159, note 7), there is a note fully explaining this. At p. 160, there is a pardon granted to Sir Roger de Leyburn for slaying Ernulf de Munteny at a "Rotunda Tabula" at Walden, in 86 Hen. III. The pardon is dated October 19, 36 Hen. III. The Mandate given by SIR T. PHILLIPS, prohibiting the "Rotunda Tabula" at Walden, is dated Sept. 6, in the same year; which looks very much as if De Munteny

* The thirteenth hour gives an old look to the ballad, and induces me to believe that the ancient mode of computing time by twenty-four hours was in use when the minstrel author wrote. Even in the Vallais, a border country to Italy, the present mode of two twelves has been in use for two centuries, and perhaps longer.

murder had induced the king to issue his prohibition, putting an end to the joust. Matthew Paris gives an account of this joust.—ED.]

UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF ANGELICA KAUFFMAN

I have the pleasure of sending to the Editor of "N. & Q." two unpublished German letters, one from Angelica Kauffman to a cousin in Schwartzbach, in the Austrian Tyrol, her father's native village; the other to the same individual from Johannes Kauffman, also a cousin of Angelica, who, on the death of her second husband Zucchi, resided with her at Rome as the manager of her affairs. Of these letters I send translations as literal as I can render.

The letter of Angelica Kauffman is characteristic of the kindness of heart and piety by which she was no less distinguished than by eminence in art and by varied accomplishments. The earnest interest for the temporal and spiritual welfare of her relatives—humble artisans, in an obscure village of the Bregenzer-Wald, exhibited in this letter, written from the "Eternal City" where she was the object of the flattering homage of the great and eminent—is very touching. It manifests an innate tenderness, deepening the sympathy inspired by the cruel wrong inflicted upon her by the unprincipled adventurer by whom she was inveigled into her first marriage. The letter of Johannes Kauffman is amusingly illustrative of the combined simplicity, worth, and shrewdness—prominent features then, as now—of Tyrolean character. To the cousin to whom Angelica's letter was addressed, she by her will, of which I possess a copy, left her sketches and drawings; and by the son of this individual some of them, with the letters in question, were sold:—

"Rome, 29 June, 1801.

"Much beloved Cousin,—

"I thank you from my heart for your letter, which I received with pleasure. Your good conduct and diligence in your trade has at all time given me joy. I hope that you will always continue striving to turn to account the years of your youth, applying yourself perseveringly to all matters connected with your business, and that you will especially seek to fulfil to the best of your power your duty towards God (from whom we derive our being, and from whom we receive everything), as also your duty towards your parents. He who turns to good account the years of his youth, will in his old age enjoy the fruits. The present times are unhappily very dangerous for those who have little experience. One must commend oneself to God, and seek association with good and pious men, and avoid idleness as much as possible. The reading of good books is very useful; but good books, such as serve to educate the heart and intellect, and teach scientifically; and in this matter, the advice of a righteous man is very necessary; for how many have been deluded by the writings of the philosophers of our day! I do not doubt that you will strive to attain perfection in your trade as much as possible. Cousin Johann will add some lines: here—with I conclude, with the assurance that I shall at all times take the greatest interest in your welfare. God give you his blessing.

"I remain your

"Truly devoted Cousin,

ANGELICA KAUFFMAN.

"P.S. From a letter of your good father, Cousin Casimir, which I have recently received, I learn that he is convalescent, at which I heartily rejoice."

"Rome, July 4, 1801.

"Much beloved Cousin,—

"For the note of 17 May, which you enclosed, and which Cousin [Angelica] gave to me, I thank you. In the meantime I have received letters from your father informing me that his arm is better, at which I rejoice, and that he intends putting off establishing a workshop until the spring, in which, in my opinion, he does wisely; for between this and the spring so many [political] changes may take place, in conformity with which an unfettered man may set his sail according to the wind. Would to God that brother Joseph Conrad would also wait and look on; but, on the other hand, if he means to marry he certainly has no time to lose. May God give him enlightenment and his blessing in his undertaking.

"An interesting Courier has arrived here from Paris, but up to this date the dispatches he has brought are kept secret. We have no news. As on a former occasion, I send this letter to your father because you have omitted to indicate your address.

"Pray give my greeting to brother Conrad. I assure you all that your letters will be pleasing to me at all times, that I may be informed of your prosperity, which I always heartily wish. With best greeting,

"Your affectionate Cousin,

"JOHANNES KAUFFMAN."

The Editor will be pleased to exercise his discretion as to printing the original letters, or the translations, or both.

PHILIPPA SWINNERTON HUGHES.

CONGLETON ACCOUNTS.

Judging that a few extracts from a MS. vol. in my possession from the cash books of the borough of Congleton, in the county of Chester, will not be unacceptable to readers of "N. & Q." I send them. I should indeed be much obliged to any correspondent who could inform me what were the precise duties and office of the Reader mentioned several times in them. I presume that he was not licensed to preach, as that portion of duty was supplied by the curate:—

1588. £ s. d.

Paid W ^m Tilman, Schoolmaster, his Quarter's wage	:	:	:	2	0	0
Thos. Davenport, the Reader	:	:	:	1	0	0
To Smith tending the Wood, a Yrs. wage	:	:	:	0	10	0

1589.

Sir Roger, the Curate, his Q ^r 's wage	:	:	:	1	13	4
P ^d M ^r Trafford's man, the Bearward	:	:	:	0	4	4
To Thos. Ward for going to Holmes' Chapel to fetch Wine to treat the Earl of Derby when here	:	:	:	0	0	9

	1590.	£	s.	d.
Boards for the School House . . .		1	0	0
Mr. Tilman, Schoolmaster, towards his Wage . . .		0	16	0
Do. his Q ^r Wage, and part of another . . .		5	0	0
Remains unpaid to him 1 l . 13 s . 4 d .
Sir Humphrey Phithion, the Minister, his Quarter's wage . . .		2	10	0
Leading Clods for the Cockpit, and mending it the third time . . .		0	2	0
To Sir John Hollworth's Bearward . . .		0	2	0
Bestowed on Mr. Cawdwell, Sc. when he preached at the Chapel . . .		0	7	4
[I now go on to] 1599.
Mr Carr of Middlewich for preaching of 4 Sermons . . .		0	5	0
Mr Tanington, the Schoolmaster's, wage . . .		8	6	8
The Reader his Quarter's wage . . .		1	13	4
6 Gallons of Dirt to blend Mortar with at Dane Bridge . . .		0	1	0
To a preacher who preached on Saturday, and on St. Martin's Day . . .		0	5	0
Wine and a Gallon of Sack bestowed on Edw ^d Fitton, Esq.		0	4	8 1600.
Rich ^d Green, Sen ^r , the Reader, Q ^r Wage . . .		1	13	4
Candles at Morning Prayers this Quarter . . .		0	1	10
Second Quarter, Mr Shenton, Schoolmaster, Paid Jas. Brooker to fetch Shenton's Books and Apparel from Oxford . . .		1	6	8
Given to the Bearward at the Great Cockfight the 5 th , 6 th , and 7 th May . . .		0	6	8
Clods, 19 Load, to make Butts at the Wakes on the Bearward Green . . .		0	4	0
Spent on Sir John Savage, and Lord Keeper's Son . . .		0	8	7
Dressing the School at the Cockfight . . .		0	0	4

From these extracts I gather that there were four distinct names given to those who officiated in the chapel at Congleton—viz. Reader, Minister, Curate, and Preacher; and it would almost seem from the item of Candles at Morning Prayer as if there was an early, perhaps a daily, service. Again, I note the prefix Sir—a title given in those times to clergymen. It is not, however, assigned to the Reader.

It is almost needless to add, as the Shakspearian illustrations of this prefix, Sir Hugh Evans in the Merry Wives of Windsor, and Sir John Hume in King Henry the Sixth, Part II. OXONIENSIS.

REMARKABLE COINCIDENCE.—When I was at Florence in 1835, there occurred an accident so similar in most particulars to that which happened at Westminster on the 26th ult., that one account might almost read for the other. On March 19, 1835, at the festa of San Giuseppe, a great number of persons were collected in the house, No. 2967, Via della Chiesa, in Florence. They had assembled on the second piano of the house, to celebrate a religious ceremony styled "La Passione di nostra Signore," when the floor suddenly gave way, and to increase still more the calamity, the first piano, inadequate to the super-incumbent pressure, also sunk, precipitating the unfortunate congregation to the ground floor. From this catastrophe eight lives were lost, and from sixty to seventy severely wounded. The account of this melancholy accident which I drew up at the time was forwarded to the Courier newspaper, and appeared in the impression of April 4, 1835. *

EXTINCTION OF NATIVE RACES.—The gradual, and, alas! apparently inevitable decay of the dark skins before the advance of the white man is affecting illustrated in the following incident, recorded by the Hobart Town Mercury of October 20th, 1864:—

"At the last ball at Government House, Hobart Town, there appeared the last male aboriginal inhabitant of Tasmania. He was accompanied by three aboriginal females, the sole living representatives of the race besides himself, but not of such an age, or such an appearance, as to justify the expectations of any future addition to their number. The Tasmanian natives, as a race, are now virtually extinct."

In all the Australian continental colonies the aborigines are diminishing in numbers with greater or less rapidity, according as European settlement proceeds. D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

FAGG: A REMNANT.—In some interesting extracts from the archives of the city of Worcester, now being published in The Worcester Herald by Mr. J. Noake (a former correspondent of "N. & Q."), mention is made, in the Herald for Jan. 14, 1865, of a bequest of John Chappell, a Worcester clothier, who leaves to his sister-in-law a "fagg" to make her a petticoat; and "to Roger Massye, our Curate, a white fagg to make him a coat." In a note, Mr. Noake says, "This perhaps meant a remnant; we still use the term 'fag-end.'" CUTHBERT BEDR.

PASSAGE IN EUSEBIUS: DR. CURETON AND THE "QUARTERLY REVIEW."—When remarks are made condemnatory of the statements of scholars, sufficient explanation should be given so as to make the strictures intelligible, that we may test their accuracy. In the very interesting and valuable paper on Syriac MSS. in the number of the Quarterly Review which has just appeared, the anonymous writer says of Dr. Cureton, p. 168,—

"His critical remarks on Syriac are always valuable, but we cannot accord the same praise to his remarks on Greek, which occasionally betray very great want of care."

In proof of this a foot note is subjoined,—

"E. g., in his Martyrs of Palestine, p. 64, he mistakes a neuter plural, ἀδελφά, for a feminine singular, ἀδελφή. Comp. Eus., De Martyr. Pal., c. viii. (p. 114, ed. Heinichen), with his note."

I suppose, from the form of the sentence, that "his note" means that of Dr. Cureton, and not one by Heinichen; if anything depends on that particular edition, or on a note by that German scholar, we ought to be told so. Dr. Cureton's note is,—"The Greek gives no name, but only ἡ ἀδελφή, the sister." Now I neither have the edition of Heinichen, nor yet the opportunity of examining it; but I have before me the edition of Burton, with various readings (1838), and the text reprinted from it in 1845. In each of these, in De Mart. Pal., c. viii. 7, occur the words αὐτὴν τε ταύτην ἑμα τῇ πρὸς αὐτῆς ἀδελφῇ προσαγορευθείσαν, "her own self, together with her whom she called her sister;" to this and to a former passage, τὴν ἑμὴν ἑμῆς ὅπως βασιλεύεις ἀδελφὴν, Dr. Cureton evidently referred, and not to ἡ δὲ ἀδελφὴ ταύτῃ πρᾶτοσαν, the words which seem to have caught the reviewer's eye, and on which he charges Dr. Cureton with "very great want of care." These words refer to Valentina herself, and not to the virgin whom she called her sister, who in the Greek has no name mentioned, as Dr. Cureton rightly says.

In Cruse's translation of Eusebius's Ecc. Hist. ("third edition, carefully revised," Bagster, 1842), the mistake is made which the reviewer charges on Dr. Cureton; for "her sister remaining the same," is given as the translation (p. 393). "Tum vero illa sui similis," is the rendering of Valesius, a reprint of whose text I have before me, as well as those of Burton. LÆLIUS.

LORD BACON AND THE "CHRISTIAN PARADOXES."—A critic in The Reader of Jan. 21 (p. 69), says:—

"Somebody—who is always doing something wrong—put the tract into Bacon's Remains, and everybody else thereupon accepted it as his; until at last Mr. Spedding, knowing well Bacon's style, suggested that the Paradoxes could not be his."

The writer then descants on "the wonderful ignorance of educated Englishmen of their own earlier literature," and on "the carelessness of our editors," &c. He himself being quite unconscious that Montagu, in his Life of Bacon (1834, p. 437), says:—

"There is a tract, entitled The Characters of a Believing Christian in Paradoxes and seeming Contradictions, which is curious."

Thanks to MR. GROSART and "N. & Q.," we have now proof of the correctness of Montagu's assertion, and of the utter want of sagacity, if not intentional injustice, of Lord Campbell, who, in his Lives of the Chancellors (vol. i. p. 436), says:—

"Notwithstanding the stout denial that he (Lord Bacon) was the author of the Paradoxes, I cannot doubt that the publication is from his pen; and I cannot characterize it otherwise than as a profane attempt to ridicule the Christian faith."

Allow me to add a query: When may we expect a continuation of Mr. Spedding's valuable Life of Bacon? The first volume was published in 1861; the second, in 1862. And to point out an error: in Bacon's Works, cited by Spedding (vol. vii. p. 289), we are twice told on Rémusat's authority, that the Paradoxes were first published in 1643; but both Rémusat and Montagu say 1645. D.

AUTOGRAPHS IN OLD BOOKS.—I am a devoted hunter of book-stalls whenever I visit London, which, alas! now I rarely do. At the close of last year, however, I spent a day or two in town. Amongst several prizes, the two following volumes seem worthy of a record in your pages.

A fine copy of "Les Commentaires, ou Reportes, de Edmund Plowden un apprentice de le common ley," etc., in Ædibus Richardi Tottell, 1578," folio, with a supplement dated "1584." This is a grand old volume in the original binding; and seems to have belonged to one "H. Darnall," and afterwards to "George Rayson, pret. 17. 6." Darnall had it bound; and at the foot of the title, in a contemporary hand, is written (the writer's name is cut out): "Nil desperandum Christo duce. Opta optima; expecta pessima; fer quæcumque." There is a very curious pen-and-ink sketch, in Elizabethan costume, on the fly-leaf. This noble volume, of some 500 pages, cost me 1s. 6d.!

In passing another stall, the owner of which was placing a volume, price 6d., on his board—the ink on the paper being yet wet—it was Valerius Maximus cum notis S. Pighii, Antwerp ap. Plantin., 1585." I took it up, struck with its neat original binding. On the title, in a beautiful hand, was—"W. Crashawe, 1595: Servire Deo regnare est." Crashawe was the father of Richard Crashawe, the poet; and himself a voluminous writer, though of very different views to his son. Was not this a treasure? And what a motto! What an antithesis to Milton's—

"Better to reign in hell than serve in heav'n."

Surely these mottoes were alone worth the cost of these fine old books. My autograph books accumulate; and I bought several in my last visit, but none more pleasing than these. UPTONENSIS.

GAS.—I do not find in any dictionary a reference to the passage in which this word first appears. Even Richardson contents himself with a quotation from Boyle to the effect, that the word gas was used by "the Helmontians." For want of examining the original passage in Van Helmont, lexicographers, by similarity of sound, have been misled, and have deduced gas from gast A.-S., geist Germ., geest Dutch, &c. Now, Van Helmont expressly states that the word was invented by him. In his Ortus Medicinæ, Amst. 1648, p. 73, a chapter headed "Gas Aquæ," begins thus:—

"Gas et Blas nova quidem sunt nomina a me introducta eo quod illorum cognitio veteribus fuit ignota; attamen inter initia physica Gas et Blas necessarium locum obtinent."

If the lexicographers can find a derivation for gas, what do they make of blas? They who deduce gas from gähren would no doubt form blas from blasen. But in fact both words appear to have been formed in the same arbitrary manner, as were so many of the alchemical terms made use of by Van Helmont, and other fanciful and visionary dreamers. Hutton, in his Philos. and Mathematical Dictionary, states that gas was a term applied by Van Helmont to carbonic acid; whereas, in fact, he used it in a far wider sense, as signifying one of those incorporeal and spiritual agencies which act upon and influence material substances. J. DIXON.

"HEAVY FRIENDS."—It would seem that the author of a proposal for the publication of a new English Dictionary by the Philological Society (see page 9) believed the expression "heavy friend" (= foe) to have originated with Holland, and to have been first employed by him in his translation of Suetonius, 182. It is, however, at least twenty years older. I find in the first English version of Herodotus, London, 1584 (see the recto of fol. 2), the following sentence:—

"Since which tyme they have alwayes thought of the Grecians as of their heauy frendes, esteeming themselves somewhat allyed to Asia and the nations of Barbaria, but the Grecians to be straungers and alyens unto them."

S. W. P.

New York.

Queries.

SURGEON EXECUTED FOR MURDER.

It is much to be regretted that authors, in quoting facts for illustration, do not give full particulars as to name, date, and place where the events are said to have happened, and clear references to the works from which they quote. I see a great many provincial papers, and find that many articles of information are taken from the columns of "N. & Q.," without any reference to the source from which they are derived. In some of the London daily papers, a practice prevails of quoting with no more reference than some such sentence as this—"A contemporary says," or, "One of the morning papers states"—and information circulates very often without acknowledgement of any kind. This is exceedingly troublesome and embarrassing to those who have to collect facts for practical and historical purposes. In relation to a subject upon which I have troubled you with one or two inquiries, I have encountered great difficulty. There are many cases related of innocent persons having suffered the extreme penalty; and these cases pass from one publication to another as authentic, without any of the writers who use them taking the trouble to verify their genuineness.

I have before me a tract, published in Boston, U.S., in 1844, with the following title:—

"Execution of Seventeen Innocent Persons! The Irremediability of Capital Punishment. By Charles Spear."

It appears to have been taken from a larger work by the same author, and comprises the whole chapter on "Irremediability." Many of the cases quoted are familiar to the English reader, having appeared in Chambers's tract on Circumstantial Evidence, and in many other publications. There is one instance which I have heard related by a medical gentleman, on a platform, but which differed in some important particulars from the statement given by Mr. Spear. I should be glad if any of your Dublin correspondents could supply me with reference to the case. The name is not given; but this may have been withheld from motives of delicacy to the survivors. I quote it as it stands in Mr. Spear's book:—

"A gentleman was tried in Dublin on the 24th May, 1728, charged with the murder of his maid servant. An opposite neighbour saw him admitted into his house about ten o'clock at night by his servant, who opened the door, holding in her hand a lighted candle in a brazen candlestick. Not long after, the gentleman made an alarm, exclaiming that his servant was murdered. The woman was found a corpse in the kitchen; her head fractured, her neck wounded so as to divide the jugular vein, and her dress steeped in blood. On further search, the inquirer discovered that the prisoner had on a clean shirt; while one stained with blood, and ascertained to be his, was found in the recess of a cupboard; where also was found a silver goblet, bearing the marks of a bloody thumb and finger. The prisoner almost fainted on being shown the shirt. He was executed.

"His defence on trial was, that the maid servant admitted him as sworn, and went to the kitchen; that he had occasion to call her, but not being answered, went and found her lying on the floor. Not knowing her to be dead, and being a surgeon, he proceeded to open a vein in her neck: in moving the body, the blood stained his hands and shirt sleeves. He then thought it best to make an alarm for assistance; but being afraid of the effect which his appearance might produce, he changed his linen, and displaced the silver cup in order to thrust his bloody shirt out of sight.

"This story was deemed incredible. Several years after, a dying penitent confessed to a priest, that he was concealed in the gentleman's house for the purpose of robbing it, at the moment of the gentleman's return; that hearing him enter, he resolved to escape; that the woman saw, and attempted to detain him; that he, fearing detection, knocked her down with the candlestick she had in her hand and fled unnoticed from the premises."

If any motive existed for the concealment of the name, it must after this lapse of time have been removed. I should be glad to know the actual history. T. B.

THE GRAVE OF CERVANTES.

It is generally believed, that the spot where the remains of Cervantes repose is now unknown. Ford, in his Handbook for Spain (pt. II. ed. Lond., 1855,

p. 738.) intimates that his ashes were scattered, just as those of Velasquez and Murillo were in the time of the French invasion of Spain. He also says, "Cervantes was buried in the Trinitarias Descalzas, Calle del Humilladero; and when the nuns removed to the Calle de Cantaranas, the site was forgotten," &c. (p. 738, sec. xi.)

Now, in reading a short time ago the Life of Cervantes in Spanish, by Navarrete, the writer makes the following remarks:—

"Quando en el año de 1633 se establecieron las Religiosas Trinitarias en el Nuevo Convento de la Calle de Cantaranas, exhumaron y trasladaron á él los huesos de las religiosas que habian fallecido desde la fundacion, y los de aquellos parientes suyos que por costumbre ó devocion se habian enterrado en la Iglesia de su primitiva residencia. Es natural, que los restos de Cervantes fuesen igual suerte y paradero."—Vida de Cervantes, p. 165: Obras de Cervantes, Paris, 1855.

It certainly seems very natural that when the nuns removed from their convent, situated in the street named Calle de Humilladero (where Cervantes was buried), to their new establishment in Calle de Cantaranas, the remains, not only of the religious who had been interred there, but also those of Cervantes himself should have been removed to the new house. His daughter, Doña Isabel, formed one of the community, and made her profession there, together with a daughter of Lope de Vega. Cervantes also was enrolled a member of the third Order of St. Francis about three years before his death. Hence, one would suppose that the authorities in the convent, knowing how devoted Cervantes was to the order of the Trinitarians, would certainly not have allowed his remains to be left in the old building, Calle de Humilladero.

The question now arises, Is the same convent still in existence in Madrid, Calle de Cantaranas? If so, no doubt there is a tradition as to the locality where the remains of Cervantes could be discovered; or some documents may be preserved in the Archives which, if examined, would throw some light on the subject. If Spain has of late years shown such veneration and respect towards the remains of Cardinal Ximenes, Luis de Leon, &c., surely the same honour and respect would not be denied to the bones of Cervantes.

Norwich.

J. DALTON.

BAZUBEND.—What is the meaning and etymology of this word, which, I believe, refers to some article of dress used in Persia and Armenia?

J. DALTON.

BARAPICKLET.—In the New Royal and Universal Dictionary of Arts and Sciences, London, fol. 1770, this word is defined:—

"Bread made of fine flour, and kneaded up with barm, which makes it very light and spongy. Its form is round, about a hand breadth.

Can any of your readers afford information as to this word, particularly as to its etymology?

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

BEATILLE PIES.—In Evelyn's Silva (book i. chap. viii.), he says:—

"We here use chestnuts in stewed meats, and beatille pies, our French cooks teach us."

What is meant by this expression?

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

BRABENER.—The following is one of several inscriptions from the Howff, or old burial ground of Dundee, Scotland, which contains the word "Brabener":—

"Heir lyis ane godlie and honest man Iohne Roche, Brabener and Bvrges of Dvndie, qvha departit this lyfe the 10 of Febrvar, 1616 zeirs, being of age 43 zeiris, vith his spous Evfiane Pye, qva hes cavit this to be made in remembrance of him and thair 14 bearnes."

I have been told that the word "Brabener" refers to a long-since extinct society or incorporate body; and that the name arose from its members having the exclusive right of trafficking between Scotland and Brabant. So far as I have noticed, the word or designation is peculiar to Dundee; and I have heard there that the "Brabeners" were so numerous and influential in the time of Queen Mary, that when the incorporate bodies of Dundee went to assist in the defence of Leith against the French, they mustered more strongly than any of the other of the trades.

Can any reader of "N. & Q." kindly refer me to any work bearing upon the meaning of the word "Brabener" or "Brabender," or authenticate the above statements? The same designation occurs in retours of property connected with Dundee.

A. J.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE'S "RELIGIO MEDICI."—As a new edition of Sir Thomas Browne's Religio Medici is coming out as one of Macmillan's "Golden Treasury Series," can any of the readers of "N. & Q." say what has become of the library of Mr. Simon Wilkin, especially of his collection of old editions of all Sir Thomas Browne's works?

2. Can any one furnish any additions or corrections to the bibliographical lists, contained in the editions by Wilkin and by Gardiner?

W. A. G.

Hastings.

BURIAL IN COFFINS.—In an admirable volume recently published, Burgon On the Pastoral Office, occurs the following:—

"In a remote age, before it was customary to bury in coffins, it was ordered that there should be a careful disposal of some earth, crosswise, on the body of the dead man. Of this, the rubric directing that earth should be cast—not upon the coffin, but upon the body—is a trace which lingers to this day."

About what time did burial in coffins, in case of the poor as well as the rich, arise? DUROTRIX.

THE REV. RICHARD JOHN CROCHLEY. — The late Rev. Mr. Crochley, Master of the Grammar School at Doncaster, who had been one of the tutors at Westminster School, is noticed at p. 142 of Miller's History of Doncaster. Dr. Miller designates him a good scholar, an excellent pulpit orator, and a respectable poet; but adds that he died nearly brokenhearted in distress and misery. The passage has been transferred to Carlisle's Grammar Schools, ii. 796.

I doubt not that the person alluded to was Richard John Crochley, son of George Crochley, who was born in Westminster, admitted at Westminster School, 1737, and elected thence to Christ Church, Oxford, 1742 (Alumni Westmonasterienses, 316, 326.) He took the degree of B.A. (as Richard Crochley) March 18, 1746.

The date of his death will greatly oblige

S. Y. R.

CHEVISAUNCE. — In Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, April (ed. 1579), chevisaunce occurs as the name of a flower: —

"The pretie Pawnee,
And the Chevisaunce,
Shall match with the fayre flowre Delice."

It is passed over without explanation by Todd and Collier in their editions, and I have looked through Lyte's and Gerarde's Herbals without finding it. Can any of your readers tell me its meaning?

W. ALDIS WRIGHT.

Cambridge.

DREAMING UNDER TRIPLE TREES. — In Evelyn's Discourse on Forest Trees (book iv.), he says: —

"Such another foundation was caused by a triple elm, having three trunks issuing from one root. Near such a tree as this was Sir Thomas White, Lord Mayor of London, warned by a dream to erect a college for the education of youth, which he did, namely, St. John's in Oxford; which, with that very tree, still flourishes in that University."

Can any of your readers refer me to any other traditions of dreaming under trees, where three trunks issue from one root?

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

DECREE OF THE COUNCIL OF NICE. — Would some correspondent of "N. & Q." kindly oblige me with an exact reference to the decree, or decrees, in which the Council of Nice forbade any superstitious reverence to be paid to sculptured stones or other relics of Paganism?

I met with a loose reference to the decree (made apparently at second-hand) a short time ago, in a French work on Calligraphie — the exact title of which, and its author's name, have both escaped from my recollection.

JOHN WOODWARD.

New-Shoreham.

GOODWYN OF BLACKHEATH (3rd S. vii. 55). — MR. DAVIS seems to take it for granted that Mr.

Goodwyn of Blackheath is well known. I never heard of him before, nor have my efforts to obtain information about him been successful. May I therefore ask his Christian name, the time of his death, and the dates of his books?

S. Y. R.

"THE HOG'S PRAYER." — At the recent Islington Clerical Meeting, the Rev. Edward Hoare of Tunbridge Wells remarked: —

"Their poor Kentish boys occupying this position [of swineherds] had certain hieroglyphics on their pig-whips, which they used as a sort of charm. It was called in Kent 'the hog's prayer.' He [Mr. Hoare] could never make out the meaning of it, but the boys who tended swine in Kent all knew it by heart, and it was almost their only form of devotion, whether on the week-day or on Sunday."

Can none of your Kentish correspondents procure this curiosity for "N. & Q.?"

HERMENTRUDE.

"JOANNES AD OPPOSITUM." — This saying occurs in a letter written by Archbishop Grindal to John Foxe, when the former was at Strasburgh, December 28, 1557. The words are introduced thus: —

"Nam qui in tota vita præposterissimus (ut ita dicam) fuit, omnium rerum humanarum et divinarum in versor, consentaneum est ut in scribendo etiam præposterum sese ostendet, et, ut vulgo dici solet Joannem ad oppositum." (Parker Society's edition, p. 233.)

Will some of your readers kindly explain the allusion in these words?

W. I. S. HORTON.

Rugeley.

LOPE DE VEGA. — May I ask room for another question suggested by a passage in the Specimens and Notes on Living English Authors, Boston, 1845? —

"Lope de Vega deserves more praise for memory than invention. His Beauty of Angelica, and Jerusalem Conquered, are little more than translations from Ariosto and Tasso, disfigured by conceits. In the latter, Tancred and Elmira talk like Marino's Venus and Adonis; and the only original part is the introduction of the Spaniards, who do more than all the rest of the crusaders, and whose general boasts that they are still greater than when Rome was shaken to her foundations by the conquest of Numantia and Saguntum." — Preface, p. viii.

If any correspondent of "N. & Q." knows the passage, I shall be much obliged by insertion if short, or reference if long. I have often inquired among booksellers for Lope's Jerusalem Conquistada and La Dragonetta, without success.

E. F.

HENRY MARTEN. — What were the arms of Henry Marten, the Regicide?

P.

MEDAL OF 1601. — Can any of your readers tell me the occasion on which a medal bearing date 1601 was struck? On one side a priest anointing a kneeling figure — "SAMUEL ET DAVID H. K." On the other, Romulus killing his brother — "REMUS ET ROMULUS. 1601."

C. S.

NAMES AND MOTTOES: THODEY AND ROUGH.—A member of the Thodey family informed me, that they had a tradition that the name originated thus:—An early ancestor present in the battle-field was selected by the commander to lead a forlorn hope. "Though I die," said he, "I will gladly undertake it." Is there any confirmation of this tale?

Colonel Rough, at the battle of Waterloo, I have been told (probably the story may be in print), was selected by the Duke to perform some service requiring energy and promptitude: "Rough and ready," said the Duke; and the Colonel assumed the words as his motto. J. R.

PRESTON OAKHILLS.—There is in the parish of Preston Candover a large tract of land, stated to be 220 acres in the parish map, but believed to be still more extensive, called Preston Oakhills. It has never been in cultivation; but has always, as far as tradition can inform us, been covered with stunted underwood, which the poor of the parish have cut at pleasure for their own use. It is most productive as copse land, and would under proper regulations be of great benefit to the parish; whereas at present the poor do not obtain much advantage from it, owing to its distance from the parish and the careless way it is now cut. In Duthy's Sketches of Hampshire, it is stated to have been bequeathed by two maiden ladies at a remote period to the poor of the parish for firewood. I should be very glad to obtain any information which might lead to the discovery of any facts concerning the original bequest, or to hear of any other parishes where there may have been land left for similar uses; and the way in which the charity is now administered. I am, Sir, in hopes that some readers of "N. & Q." may be able to help me, either through your most interesting paper or by letter, directed to

SUMNER WILSON.

Preston Candover Vicarage, Micheldever Station.

PORTRAIT OF CARDINAL POLE.—Miss Strickland, in the fifth volume of her Lives of the Queens of England, p. 169, gives the following note:—

"The portrait of Cardinal Pole singularly resembles the most beautiful portraits of Edward III. his ancestor, and the best pictures of Edward IV. his great uncle. Michael Angelo has drawn his portrait in the grand painting of the Raising of Lazarus as the Saviour. This work, which is the joint performance of Angelo and Sebastian del Piombo is in the National Gallery."

Can you tell me if there is any good authority for this statement?—because, if true, it is really a most interesting fact. PICTOR.

QUOTATION WANTED.—

"Boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictionem."

If this maxim is quoted by Sir Edward Coke in any of his works, a reference would oblige

MELETES.

"A REGISTER OF ALL THE NOBLEMEN OF ENGLAND SINCE THE CONQUEST CREATED."—A manuscript of about 150 pages is before me, bearing this title. From the character of the handwriting, but more particularly from the contents, it appears to have been compiled towards the latter end of Queen Elizabeth's time. It commences with short notices of "Edgar Ethelynge;" "Clyton a Saxon, at the conquest time Erle of Winchester;" "Edwyn a Saxon, at the conquest time Erle of Coventry;" "Edwardus a Saxon, at the conquest time Erle of Southampton;" and others. Then, noticing the earldoms conferred by William the Conqueror on Normans who came over with him, it is carried regularly down through each reign to the 40th year of Queen Elizabeth—the last creation noticed being that of Charles, Lord Howard, "Earle of Nottingham." Will any of your readers kindly inform me whether this is likely to be an original production, or only a copy of some known compilation?

The fly-leaves are rich in matter foreign to the main purpose of the MSS., of which I may make a "note" hereafter. JOHN BOOTH, Jun.

Durham.

RUSSIAN DESERTERS.—During the Crimean war a number of Russians deserted to the British. While the war lasted the deserters were maintained the same as prisoners of war. At the peace all prisoners of war were returned home; but what became of the deserters? Did they venture to return to Russia? K.

STANLEY.—I wish to ascertain who was Sir Hastings Stanley, Knight, whose widow, Eleanor, made her will in 1614. She desired burial in the church of Hatfield, co. York, and mentions two sons, Hastings and Piercie. I have inquired at the Herald's College and other places, but nothing appears to be known about the above Sir Hastings. To what family did he belong? C. J.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?"—A few men, all more or less connected with literature, are enrolling recruits of the same genus, in order to form a battery of Volunteer Horse Artillery. At the outset a difficulty—nominal, yet to them only too virtual—stops the way. By what comprehensive, terse, yet perfectly explanatory title shall this presumptuous body, which says non "cedant arma togæ," be known? Several discussions have failed to produce the requisite nom de guerre; so, in despair, the editor of "N. & Q." is humbly invoked to place the matter before his subscribers in order that they may exercise their wits thereon, and thus come opportunely to the aid of a brother littérateur and a LIEUTENANT, R. J. M. ARTILLERY.

Queries with Answers.

LUKE: LAKE: HOWELL'S "LETTERS."—In Howell's Letters, book ii. 72 (p. 399, ed. 1754) there is a letter addressed to "Sir Thomas Luke," congratulating him on his marriage, and speaking of his (the writer's) having contributed to forward "upon occasion of some discourse with my Lord George of Rutland not long before." The date given to the letter is May 1, 1629. The name is spelt Luke in the editions of 1673 and 1688, which are all I have at hand to refer to. Should not this name be Lake; and, if so, was this Sir Thomas Lake (the son of the disgraced Sir Thomas Lake, Secretary, died 1630), who died in 1653? [Burke, sub tit. "Lake."] I find in Burke [sub tit. "Rutland"] that Dorothy, daughter of Sir George Manners, married "Sir Thomas Lake of Canons." Howell addresses another letter to Sir Thomas Lake, dated July 3, 1629 (p. 221, ed. 1754.)

In The Court and Times of James the First (2 vols. 1848) the two following passages occur. In a letter of March 7, 1605-6—"The same day (Feb. 15) Sir Thomas Luke's Bill for assurance of his land from Sir Henry Lofre (?) passed our House" (i. 60.) In a letter, June 24, 1613, Sir Thomas Luke is spoken of as a likely person for the treasurer'ship "jointly with Sir Charles Cornwallis" (i. 248.) Are both these also misprints for Lake? If Luke is right in any of these passages, who was Sir Thomas Luke, and where can I find anything about him?

If Lofre is right in the above passage, who was "Sir H. Lofre," and where can he elsewhere be read of?

HARRY LEROY TEMPLE.

[The name Luke for Lake is clearly a misprint in Howell's Letters, as we learn from Brydges's Collins, i. 477, that a Sir Thomas Lake married Dorothy, a daughter of Sir George Manners, and sister to the eighth Earl of Rutland. Lysons, in his account of Canons (Environs of London, iii. 412) states, that Sir Thomas Lake, the Secretary, died in 1630, and his widow, the daughter of Sir William Ryder, in 1642. It appears, however, that Dorothy Manners married Sir Thomas Lake, the son of the Secretary (Harl. MS. 5801, p. 95).

The letters in The Court and Times of James the First do not seem to have been accurately transcribed. On referring to Birch's manuscripts we find that for Sir Thomas Luke we must read Sir Thomas Lake, and for Sir H. Lofre read Sir Hugh Losse. It appears that at the dissolution of the monasteries the manors of Canons and Wimborowe at Stanmore were granted to Hugh Losse, Esq., whose descendant, Sir Hugh Losse, sold them to Sir Thomas Lake in 1604. Lysons's Environs, iii. 405.]

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL QUERIES.—Is Lowndes correct in speaking of an edition of Farmer on the Demoniacks in 1774?

Who were the anonymous writers of the various replies to the above work mentioned by Darling and others?

Who was T.P.A.P.O.A.B.I.T.C.O.S., the author of An Enquiry into the Meaning of Demoniacks, Lond. 1737, in 8vo?

What is the date of the first edition of Dr. Maitland's Eruvin, published by Nisbet?

A. CHALLSTETH.

Gray's Inn.

[Mr. Hugh Farmer's Essay on the Demoniacks of the New Testament first appeared in 1755, as correctly stated by Watt. This work was attacked by Dr. William Worthington, Vicar of Blodwel, in Shropshire, and by the Rev. John Fell, at that time settled at Thaxted in Essex, and afterwards one of the tutors of the Homerton Independent Academy. Mr. Farmer in his will directed his executors to burn the manuscript of a second volume of The Demonology of the Ancients.—The author of An Enquiry into the Meaning of Demoniacks, 8vo, 1735, was The Precentor And Prebendary Of Alton Borealis In The Church Of Salisbury, i. e., the Rev. Ashley Sykes, D.D. — Dr. S. R. Maitland's Eruvin was published by Messrs. Rivington in 1850.]

LONG MELFORD CHURCH.—Where can I find any description of the Lady Chapel of Long Melford church? It is a very remarkable one, as it has an aisle running completely round it. I may also mention that in this church there is a very good specimen of a "Puritan pew." It is entirely covered in.

W. T. T. D.

[The church of Long Melford is well illustrated in vol. ii. of Neale's Views of Churches, 4to, 1824-5, by six beautiful plates. Consult also Britton's Archæological Antiquities of Great Britain, vol. v. Appendix, p. xx.; Gent's Mag. for Sept. 1830, p. 204, and Addit. MS. 19,078, in the British Museum.]

"FOR A YEAR AND A DAY."—What is the origin of this expression, so common in old romances and nursery tales?

S.

[A Year and a Day (annus et dies) is a time that determines a right, or works a prescription in many cases by law; as in case of an estray, if the owner challenge it not within that time, it belongs to the Lord; so of a wreck. A Year and a Day is also given to prosecute appeals; and for actions in a writ of right, &c., after entry or claim, to avoid a fine. A person wounded must die within a year and a day, in order to make the offender guilty of murder. Consult Bailey's English Dictionary and the Law Dictionaries.]

THE COURT IN 1729.—Where can I see the fullest lists of the Royal Households in 1729, including both the King's and the Prince of Wales's, and giving the names of all the ladies about court?

P.

[Consult John Chamberlayne's Present State of Great Britain, 1729.]

"THE BONNY HOUSE OF AIRLIE" (3rd S. vi. 383.)—Where can I obtain a copy of the ballad of the "Burning of the Bonny House of Airlie?"

Δδ.

[See The Scottish Ballads, by Robert Chambers, p. 82, ed. 1825.]

Replies.

CARY FAMILY.

(3rd S. v. 398; vi. 173, 217, &c.)

After the numerous communications that have appeared in the columns of "N. & Q.," the question put by MR. ROBINSON begins to assume a more definite form; and we may now with some confidence assume that, if there are in existence any male descendants of the first Lord Hunsdon, they are to be looked for in the issue of his third surviving son, Sir Edmund Cary.

Sir Edmund had three sons: Sir Robert, Sir Ferdinand, and another.

The line of Sir Robert may be presumed to have become extinct on the death of William Ferdinando, the eighth baron.

The line of Sir Ferdinando is stated by MR. ROBINSON to have terminated in a granddaughter, married to Sir Bryan Fairfax (3rd S. vi. 173.)

This being the case, the inquiry is limited to Sir Edmund's third son—the one that MR. ROBINSON has hitherto been unable to verify.

Valentine Cary, Bishop of Exeter, has been suggested. His claim seemed a very doubtful one from the beginning; and I think we may now pronounce it to be altogether without foundation. We are informed by MESSRS. C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER (3rd S. vi. 217), that he was matriculated at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1585. From the facts stated by MR. ROBINSON, Sir Edmund Cary, in 1585, could not have been more than twenty-eight. And if so, I think we are fully justified in coming to the conclusion, that he could not at that time have a younger son old enough to be sent to College.

With respect to the parentage of Valentine Cary, it may not be out of place to observe, that Lord Hunsdon was made Governor of Berwick in 1568. Within two or three years afterwards, Valentine was born at Berwick. This is quite compatible with the supposition that he might be the illegitimate son of some member of the family. How old the elder sons of Lord Hunsdon were at the time of Valentine's birth, does not appear. He was himself between forty and fifty. And it is not unworthy of remark, that his wife bore him thirteen children, ten of whom were sons; and when the youngest of his ten sons was born, he was not more than thirty-five. It is clear from this, that he married young; and, as is not uncommon in such cases, his wife was probably some years older than himself. Still, as I intimated in a former communication, I think it probable that Valentine was (as suggested by MR. ROBINSON) the son of some junior member of the Cary family; who, on Lord Hunsdon's proceeding to take possession of his government, followed in his suite to try his fortunes in the north. Probably he died not long afterwards, leaving his orphan son to the protecting kindness of his powerful relations. Unless, indeed, he were the William Cary spoken of by MR. ROBINSON, who, as he did not die till about 1593, must have been alive when Valentine took his Bachelor's degree.

Here let me pause to inquire, whether there is any branch of the Cary family known to have borne a mullet for difference?

Valentine Cary being out of the question, let us now go on with our search after Sir Edmund's third son.

Among some manuscript notes, taken many years ago (on what authority I cannot now say), I have found a rough pedigree of the Cary family, in which—besides two daughters, not named—there are three sons attributed to Sir Edmund, viz. Sir Robert, Thomas, and Ferdinand. Clearly this Thomas is the person we are in search of. Any information, therefore, respecting Thomas Cary would be very much to the point.

In the summer of 1631 Serjeant Bramston, going over to Dublin to marry his second wife, accompanied by his son, fell in at Chester with a Mr. Fountaine and a Sir Thomas Cary, who were on their way to Ireland, where it was their intention to reside. (See Autobiography of Sir John Bramston, printed by the Camden Society, pp. 36, 37.) Who was this Sir Thomas Cary? And what became of him?

The Rev. Henry F. Cary, the translator of Dante, was of Irish descent. Who were his ancestors?

Not being able to give any further information respecting Sir Thomas Cary, I shall take leave to touch on one or two points of collateral interest.

One of Sir Edmund's daughters, unnamed in my rough notes, was probably the Alitha Cary mentioned by MR. ROBINSON (3rd S. v. 398). I cannot give any positive information respecting her husband, described as Sir William Quirinson, Baronet; but is it not possible that his real name might be Lee of Quarendon? I have no means at hand of verifying the conjecture, and this must be my excuse for sending it to you in so crude a state.

The name of Cary turns up incidentally every now and then. For instance, in 1588 there was a Cary, or Carey, Bishop of Killaloe. To what family did he belong? What was his Christian name?

Again, one of the benefactors of New College, Oxford, was a Cary. (I should think not improbably of the Falkland branch.) His arms are to be seen in one of the windows of the warden's lodgings,—the window over the gateway of the College.

There is also in one of the windows of Middle Temple Hall a shield, containing the arms of Cary with other quarterings. This shield I suppose to belong to a member of the Clovelly branch.

To the same branch also, not improbably belonged, a certain Dr. Cary; who, in 1677, having sent to the press a work (supposed to be written by the Earl of Shaftesbury), treating of the illegality of the recent Prorogation, was brought to the bar of the House of Lords; and on his refusing to satisfy their interrogatories, was fined 1000*l.* for his contempt.

On the bishop's throne, in Exeter Cathedral, there is an escutcheon in which are the arms of the see, impaling: Argent on a bend sable, three roses of the first; and on a chief, gules, two crosses pattée or. Am I correct in supposing that these are the arms of the late Bishop William Carey?

MELETES.

STREET MELODY.

(3rd S. vii. 24.)

Many thanks, I trust, will be considered due to MR. JOHN MACRAY, of Oxford, for the kind trouble he has taken with this subject. Also for the opportunity which his communication has afforded our esteemed Editor to indulge his readers in a most essential "N. & Q." want; that is, an occasional strip or two of type music, for the purpose of illustration; this want having been strongly felt, as I happen to know, in the case of a paper on the question of Dr. Arne's Rule Britannia, wherein certain parallel passages had to be alluded to, which might with more perfect satisfaction have been seen! Our thanks are no less due to MR. MACRAY for the nice manner in which he has given us the name of his noter, Mr. Pickard Hall, likewise of the famous city of Oxford. What a much more pleasing practice this is, than hiding behind initials, and unintelligible pseudonyms.

But to return to our "Street Melodies." Although the three cries just printed in "N. & Q." are amongst my own extensive stock of such remembrances, I feel highly gratified to find that others have been interested enough to carry them in their memories also.

The old man who sold the little lambs, and so justly described by MR. MACRAY, as "very neat and clean," I see at this moment most distinctly; that is, "in my mind's eye, Horatio." The old man is standing in the road, about five feet from the lamp-post opposite my own door, and the street is ringing with his attractive cry. But oh! his lambs were indeed something like lambs! Not such miserable lambkins as those now manufactured. A few months ago, the cry of "Young Lambs to sell," being heard in the more distant and newly built parts of Kentish Town, my friend Thomas Coleman Dibdin—fully aware of my parish history intentions—caused one penny to be invested in my service. With regard to the lamb procured for the piece of coined money just mentioned, I may justly say, "Oh! what a falling off was there."

Those who wish to see the kind of lambs which could be obtained of the old man already alluded to, may do so by turning to William Hone's Table Book, vol. i. 395, where also is given an account of William Liston, a wooden-leg seller of lambs, together with his whole-length portrait. The lamb which William Liston holds in his hand is, though so tiny, most accurately drawn; enough so for the purpose of enlargement, a process I shall be compelled to, unless chance should throw in my way, one of those little lambs, as they were manufactured in my childhood. Hone, in his account of William Liston, has preserved the lamb-seller's ten line verse, at the same time adding, "Though it is five-and-thirty years ago since I heard the sailor's musical 'cry,' it still sings in my memory." Short only by four or five years, to an equal period of memory-taxing to that undergone by Hone, I have the "sing," or rather the one note ring, tickling my ears, of "Twenty pence a-piece new pails."

Of this last cry, my father used to observe, that it always rained upon the day "Twenty pence a-piece new pails," made his appearance in the town, and I have a distinct recollection of the exact spot where I saw—about thirty years ago—"Twenty pence a-piece new pails," caught in a smart summer shower. It was immediately opposite the "Marquis of Hastings" public-house, in Ossulston Street, Somers Town. The "cry"—though all on one note, was cheerful in the extreme. As I remember all the melodious cries that have been heard in Somers Town and the rest of the parish from my earliest time, I moved my brother Alfred to note them down for me, deeming "Street Melody" a proper feature to be dwelt upon, in the account of St. Pancras I intend to write, for my native place has been so sadly neglected hitherto.

Although I am dealing with the "Cries" of my own district only, yet London, with its varied parishes, ought to furnish musical materials for an interesting and extensive work of noted cries. One of the most charming pages in William Hone's charming Every-Day Book is that of vol. i. 578, whereon is given the music of the famous "Tiddy Doll's" cry. And I would call the attention of those who love to look at past things, to the engraving on page 807 of the same volume of the Every-Day Book, where is represented the "Buy-translation. The subjoined version is not very elegant, nor does it read anything like so well as the original; but it perhaps conveys the author's meaning more correctly than the one cited:—

"You ask his master, anxiously and sad,
What trade or calling best will suit your lad.
Hear my advice, then, Lupus, for your son!—
All orators and writers let him shun;
Nor open Tully's page, nor Virgil's story;
But leave Tullius to such empty glory.
Should he write verse, the poet straight upbraid;
And bid him learn some money-making trade.
Has he an ear, a fiddler let him be;
Has he a voice, an opera singer he;
Or should a sound hard head his wits direct,
Make him an agent, or an architect."

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

CROMWELL'S IRONSIDES (3rd S. vii. 74.)—That the cuirasses issued from the Tower to the Household Brigade belonged to the time of the Commonwealth, does not admit of a question. How far they were those of the Ironsides is another point. I should very much doubt if the Ironsides were ever so numerous as to supply the necessary cuirasses for the strength of the Household Brigades. The probability, therefore, is, that theirs consist of those of the Ironsides with the additions of others from some other cavalry regiments of the time.

GEORGE VERE IRVING.

SOBRIQUETS OF REGIMENTS (3rd S. vii. 70.)—In the list furnished by your correspondent there is an omission of the 33rd Regiment. In 1814 this regiment bore the sobriquet of Havercake Lads; and in the work published by the talented Mr. George Walker there is a plate illustrative of the sergeant recruiting at the door of a public-house, which bears the sign of the Lord Wellington. The text descriptive of the plate is as follows:—

"33rd Regiment. This regiment was raised during the American War, in the neighbourhood of Halifax, from which circumstance, and that of their recruiting sergeants always preceding the party with an oat cake upon their swords, the men have always been denominated the Havercake Lads. Till very lately the gallant Lord Wellington was the colonel of this regiment."

Did not this regiment bear the title of being the Duke of Wellington's Own?

THOMAS HAILSTONE.

Horton Hall.

Allow me to offer to your correspondent JUVENA my sincere thanks, in which many of your readers will doubtless concur, for the copious and interesting information which he has furnished upon this subject. With regard to the Brickdusts, or 53rd Regiment, they were also called The Old Five-and-Threepennies. The explanation given me in 1814 by an officer of the regiment was this: "Don't you see fifty-three on the men's knapsacks? And don't you know that five-and threepence is an Ensign's daily pay?" My reason for inquiring was, because two days before, instead of ordering his men to "march," I had heard him shout, "Come along, my old five-and-threepennies,"—when in the face of the foe they were about to ascend a hill, from which some of them never came down.

I should feel grateful to JUVENA, or any of your correspondents, who would inform me what regiment it was which formerly bore the sobriquet of The Old Rough-and-Ughies. SCHIN.

QUOTATION WANTED (3rd S. vii. 56.)—

"Ocean of Time! whose waters of deep woe
Are brackish with the salt of human tears."

These lines are by Shelley, and are to be found in his poem On Time. C. K.

"O LISTEN, MAN!" (3rd S. vi. 473.)—The author of the lines commencing,—

"O listen man!

A voice within us speaks that startling word—
Man! thou shalt never die!" &c., is R. H. Dana, an American poet, and they are contained in a poem entitled Immortality. A. E. G. L. will find it, or an extract from it, in a book called the Sacred Harp of American Poetry.

THOMAS C. M'MICHAEL.

WILLIAM BRIDGES (3rd S. vi. 147, 216, 545.)—MELETES rightly supposes that Sir Giles Bridges of Wilton, to whom I referred, was the first Baronet (cr. 1627), and cousin-german to William fourth Baron Chandos. The second Sir Giles Bridges was second son of William, fourth Baron, and was knighted by James, at Theobalds, in 1616. I have no ready means of ascertaining how the Wilton property came into the Brydges family. The marriage of the first Lord Chandos with Elizabeth, daughter of Edmund, Lord Grey de Wilton, might possibly give MELETES a clue to the discovery. S. T.

LUNATIC LITERATURE (1st S. ix. 172.)—During a recent trial in Brooklyn, N. Y., Dr. Brown, superintendent of the Bloomingdale Lunatic Asylum, stated that one of the principal newspapers published in the city of New York was edited entirely by lunatics under his charge; and that Adler's German Dictionary (a standard here) was written by an inmate of the asylum. See the New York Herald for Dec. 25, 1864. P. W. S.

New York.

"BIBLIOTHECA HIBERNICA" (3rd S. vii. 52.)—MR. JOHN POWER is probably acquainted with Harris's Writers of Ireland. But I wish to recommend to his examination the last part of the late Dr. Oliver's Collections concerning the Jesuits, which treats of the Irish members S. J., in which he will find many useful notices of Irish authors, and of their works. F. C. H.

About the year 1840, Mr. Thorpe, of Piccadilly, published two "Catalogues of Books and Manuscripts, illustrative of the History of Ireland from the earliest period to the present time," 12mo, which MR. POWER would do well to consult.

J. Y.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY (3rd S. vi. 542.)—May I express a hope that DR. RIMBAULT will endeavour in his researches to find the answer to the question, What embassy was Overbury offered, the refusal of which led to his imprisonment? I write hastily, but so far as my notes and memory serve me, Winwood says positively (vol. iii. p. 447), that he was offered the embassy either of France or the Low Countries, which he would, and that his refusal was generally considered as the insolence of a pampered court favourite. If he was offered either of these, it seems almost impossible that King James could have wished to banish him, to prevent his disclosing secrets with which he was acquainted. Of course, if he was offered the embassy to Muscovie (Winwood, vol. iii. p. 453), this supposition becomes very probable. Perhaps I may just say, that my own impression is that the bad character of King James himself has been greatly exaggerated.

J. HENRY SHORTHOUSE.

Edgbaston.

"MEMOIRS OF THE LIFE OF LORD LOVAT, 1746" (3rd S. vii. 35.)—The author of this work is understood to have been Duncan Forbes of Culloden, Lord President of the Court of Session in Scotland. There was published in 1746 a reply to it, entitled—

"A Free Examination of a Modern Romance, entitled 'Memoirs of the Life of Lord Lovat,' wherein the Character of that Nobleman is vindicated," &c.

Both of these works are now very scarce.

T. G. S.

Edinburgh.

JACOBITE SONG (3rd S. vii. 54.)—Doubtless there are many versions of this favourite Jacobite song. I send the one which I learned long years ago:—

"Prince Charlie he's come o'er from France,
In Scotland to proclaim his daddie,
May Heaven still his cause advance,
And shield him in his Hieland plaidie.
O my bonnie Hieland laddie!
My handsome charming Hieland laddie!
May Heaven still his cause advance,
And shield him in his Hieland plaidie.
"First when he came to view our land,
The graceful look o' the princely laddie
Made all our true Scots hearts to warm,
And blythe to wear the tartan plaidie.
O my bonnie, &c.

"But when Geordie heard the news,
How he was come afore his daddie,
He thirty thousand pound wad give,
To catch him in his Hieland plaidie.
O my bonnie, &c.

"But tho' the Hieland folks are puir,
Yet O their hearts are leal and steady;
And there's no ane amang em a'
That wad betray their Hieland laddie.
O my bonnie," &c.

I do not give this as a "more correct" version than that furnished by MR. JAS. GIBSON. It differs indeed much from it, though the leading ideas are the same. I think, however, that the pathos of the last verse is far superior to anything in the other version of the song. F. C. H.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK'S FIFTY REASONS (3rd S. vii. 68.)—In your "Notices to Correspondents," Mr. Editor, you observe that this work appears to be very scarce. I have long been so familiar with it, that I was startled at this observation. There may not indeed have been any late reprint of it; but it used to be very commonly in circulation. I have a copy now before me, of which I give the exact title:—

"Fifty Reasons or Motives, which induced His Most Serene Highness Anthony Ulrick, Duke of Brunswick and Lunenburg, to abjure Lutheranism, and embrace the Roman Catholic Religion. London: Keating and Brown, 1822."

F. C. H.

REVEREND APPLIED TO CLERGYMEN.—An inquiry has often been made when the titular affix of Rev. was made to the names of clergymen, and, as far as I know, has not been answered.* On looking over the Acts of Visitation of Bishops of Chichester I find, in 1727, all the dignitaries [the dean, præcentor, chancellor, and treasurer] with the two archdeacons, and all canons of the degree of D.D., B.D., and B.C.L., entitled Venerable, and the rest of the canons "Masters." In 1733, the term "Reverend" is substituted in the case of the former, whilst in 1742 it is used indiscriminately.

MACKENZIE E. C. WALCOTT, M.A., F.S.A.

LIMEHOUSE (3rd S. vii. 35.)—The assertion of Stowe that Limehouse is a corruption, or modernisation of Limehurst, receives some confirmation from the autobiography of Edward Underhill written early in the reign of Elizabeth, and edited by me in Narratives of the Days of the Reformation (Camden Society, 1859). The name is there called "the Lyme hurst" in pp. 134, 140, 153, 156, 157. But a contemporary, Thomas Mountayne, writes it "Lymehouse" in p. 210 of the same volume. Lysons makes no remark on the origin of the name of Limehouse. It was part of Stepney until made a distinct parish by an Act of Parliament passed in 1730. J. G. N.

JUSSIEU'S CEDAR (3rd S. vi. 543.)—Many thanks to M. P. for her satisfactory reply. But how could such a misstatement find admission to the Edinburgh Review? These are the points that shake one's faith in contemporary history, even when recorded in a respectable publication. Some years hence the otherwise excellent paper on "Coniferæ" will be "appropriated," or a Life of Jussieu will be written, and the "pure and simple myth" of the railroad stated as a fact and desecration, the author being too "popular" to be aware of its refutation in "N. & Q." F. C. B.

[* Vide "N. & Q." 1st S. vi. 246; 2nd S. ix. 483.—ED.]

"THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND AND IRELAND" (3rd S. vii. 36.)—Your obliging answer to this query has mistaken the drift of the question, which is specific: not respecting the use of the designation "The United Church of England and Ireland," but "The Church of England and Ireland."

I spent a few hours in the Chapter Library at Cashel, recently, and went through leaf by leaf a copy of Edward VI.'s First Book of Common Prayer, the gift of Bishop Daly to the Chapter—an extremely interesting document. This naturally suggested the perusal of Procter's chapter on that volume; and there, I think (for the book is not now before me), occurred the name, within commas, of "The Church of England and Ireland." Where is that name first found in print? and when was it first used by authority? In point of fact, I wish to know, if there ever was a common designation for the Protestant Episcopal Church in England and in Ireland, as I suspect there must have been before the Union. Had they a common name as early, for instance, as the time of Elizabeth? If so, where shall I find it? as a country parsonage affords few facilities for consulting the more rare or expensive books.

Against the view I am disposed to hold, is the analogue of the Church of Scotland, which is recognised as a distinct church in the Prayer Book of 1637. See Keeling.

I am afraid you will consider me a troublesome querist; but I trust your indulgence will excuse an inquiry prompted by a real desire for information. O. T. D.

POEM WANTED (3rd S. vi. 534; vii. 68.)—Your correspondent will find this poem in the fourth volume of the New Monthly Magazine (1822), where it is called "The Haunch of Venison." But in Barham's Life of Theodore Hook (vol. i. p. 68), he will find this poem attributed, not to James Smith, but to George Colman. The hero of the tale is there said to have been the famous Tom Hill—the "Hull" of Gilbert Gurney, and the Paul Pry of Poole's celebrated comedy. Now this worthy was so well, so intimately known, both to Barham and to Hook, it seems almost impossible they should have been mistaken in the authorship of the poem which celebrated the mishap. A. A.

Post's Corner.

DR. CHAPLIN: DR. ARTHUR CHARLETT (3rd S. vii. 57.)—There never was a Dr. Chaplin of University College, Oxford. Is it not probable that the person whom Tenison named to Evelyn was "that busy man," Dr. Arthur Charlett, Master of University College (the Abraham Froth of the Spectator)? Charlett was elected Master of University College a few days before Evelyn's visit to Tenison; and the latter, when Archbishop, got a royal chaplaincy for Charlett.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

CARICATURE: SIR MITCHEL BRUCE (3rd S. vii. 34.)—J. B. D. will find this print in the third volume of the Antiquarian Repertory, p. 73, with an explanation. It was a humorous drawing by Dr. Stukeley of the punishment he would inflict on Sir Michael Bruce, of Stonehouse, near Falkirk, for having destroyed the curious ancient stone dwelling, called "Arthur's Oven," for the sake of the materials:—

"The demolition of Arthur's Oon is a most grievous thing to think on. I would propose, in order to make his name execrable to all posterity, that he should have an iron collar put about his neck like a yoke; at each extremity a stone of Arthur's Oon to be suspended by the lewis in the hole of them: thus accoutred, let him wander on the banks of Styx, perpetually agitated by angry dæmons with ox-goads, SIR MICHAEL BRUCE wrote on his back in large letters of burning phosphorus.

"WILL. STUKELEY.

"Stanford, Sept. 24, 1743."

C. R. M.

MAESMORE, MAISMORE, MASSYMOR (3rd S. vii. 67.)—The learned and accomplished F. C. H., to whom the readers of "N. & Q." are indebted for so many profound and elegant contributions, inquires suggestively whether there is any connection between the locality of Maismore in Gloucestershire, and the term Massymor, applied to a dungeon, observing that it would be singular to find the word in English as well as in Scotch and Saracenic. Is it to be discovered also in the Cymro-Celtic language? Maesmore is not an uncommon designation for localities in Wales, of which I may cite one in Montgomeryshire, Maesmore Hall; and another in Dinmael, in the parish of Llangwm, Denbighshire, the latter the seat of the ancient family of Maesmore of Maesmore. The name of these localities, derived from the Welsh, maes, a plain, an open field, and mawr, great, large, though presenting in signification no obvious affinity to Massimor, a dungeon, may be referred to as probably identical with the Gloucestershire Maismore, cited by F. C. H., many Gloucestershire territorial names being essentially Cymric, and referrible to the period when the present county formed part of, as it is now contiguous to the principality of Wales.

JOHN HUGHES.

HYMN TO THE VIRGIN (3rd S. vii. 11.)—"Our Lady sings Magnificat" is, with a little variation, the twenty-third verse of "A song made by F. B. P., to the tune of Dima," and begins "Jerusalem, my happy home." It was quoted in the Gent.'s Mag. Dec. 1850. L. C. R.

THE MACE OF KINSALE (3rd S. vi. 159.) — The following paragraph, from the Irish Times, Jan. 19, 1865, is very closely connected with one of my recent communications, and is worthy, I think, of a corner in "N. & Q.:" —

—THE CORPORATION OF MARGATE. — SIR GEORGE BOWYER AND THE ANCIENT MACE OF KINSALE. — Sir George Bowyer, M.P., whose connection with the borough of Margate has given him an interest in the young corporation of the town, on Tuesday presented, with appropriate ceremony, a silver mace to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses assembled in the Town Hall. The mace, which is of massive silver, and three feet nine inches long, weighs 78 ounces, and was formerly the property of the ancient corporation of Kinsale."

ABHBA.

SIR ANDREW RAMSAY (3rd S. vii. 62.) — J. M. is wrong in his conjecture that the letter from King Charles II. to Sir Andrew Ramsay was lost sight of in the recent discussion on the question of precedence between Edinburgh and Dublin. As to the letter, I have observed that it has been usually garbled in the quotation (for it has frequently before been referred to), and I therefore use the freedom to transcribe it correctly from vol. i. p. 400 of Lord Fountainhall's Decisions: —

—The Town of Edinburgh got a Letter from the King in 1667 by Sir Andrew Ramsay then their Provost's procurement, determining their Provost should have the same place and precedence within the Town's precincts, that was due to the Mayors of London or Dublin, and that no other Provost should be called Lord Provost but he."

This shows that so far Dublin had undoubtedly the precedence, but even if the name of that city had not been mentioned, it is not easy to see how that would have affected the general question of precedence. The letter decided the Lord Provost of Edinburgh's position in Scotland, but no more. This subject I happen to observe, was alluded to by another correspondent, S., in a former volume of your miscellany, 3rd S. vol. iii. p. 404.

HIBERNICUS.

J. M. is wrong in supposing that Charles II.'s letter of Sept. 16, 1667, to Sir Andrew Ramsay, the Provost's "procurement," declaring "that the Provost of Edinburgh should have the same place and precedence as the Lord Mayors of London or Dublin, and that no other Provost should be called Lord Provost but he" in that city, was lost sight of in the recent discussion on the question of the relative claims of the Corporations of Dublin and Edinburgh for precedence and preaudience in presenting addresses to the sovereign when before the Privy Council. It was referred to in a Minute minted in the case for the Corporation of Edinburgh, dated November 2, 1875, and extracted from the Register of the Council of the City, vol.

xxviii. f. 114, and likewise by Fountainhall in his Decisions, dated Feb. 16, 1686; but the Lord Advocate during his argument stated that the Letter was not in existence. It clearly proved that the city of Dublin had had conferred upon its chief magistrate the title of Lord Mayor long before the city of Edinburgh, and so far proved the case for Dublin. N. H. R.

TRANSLATIONS OF VIRGIL (3rd S. vii. 56.) — In reply to the first of W. J. B.'s queries, I may inform him that Miller's translation of the Æneid of Virgil in blank verse was published by Macmillan and Co., London and Cambridge, in 1863. It was reviewed not unfavourably in The Reader of Oct. 3, 1863, and in The Athenæum of Oct. 10, 1863. The opinion which a careful examination of it left in my mind is decidedly in its favour. The translation was posthumously published. I know nothing of the other version to which W. J. B. alludes. JAMES BAKES DAVIES.

Moor Court.

ARMS OF COLE, EARL OF ENNISKILLEN (3rd S. i. 309, 435.) — This query escaped my notice at the time; but it is not perhaps too late to say that a pedigree of the family, now in the possession of Lord Enniskillen, which was drawn up in July, 1630, for his celebrated ancestor "the worthy Capitaine and Justiciar, Sir W^m Cole of Eneskillen, Knt., by Sir W^m Segar, Garter," bears witness to the correct description of his lordship's coat armour in Burke's Peerage.

The addition of "a canton sinister, per pale gules and azure, having thereon a harp or, stringed of the field" (arg.), was granted to Sir Wm. for his services in Ireland, and has ever since been borne by his descendants, of whom Sir Arthur Cole, Lord Ranelagh was one. J. E. C.

Temple.

JOHNSONIANA: SOLUTION OF CONTINUITY (3rd S. vii. 642.) —

"This principle of a continuum, cette belle loi de la continuité, as Leibnitz calls it in his lively style, which is even gay for that of a deep philosopher, intent on discovering the composition of the Universe, was introduced by him and first announced, as he mentions himself in the Nouvelles de la République des Lettres de Mr. Bayle, which forms Art. XXIV. of Erdmann's edition of his works, under the title of Extrait d'une Lettre à Mr. Bayle, &c. He dwells upon this law in many of his philosophical writings. 'C'est une de mes grandes maximes,' says he, 'et des plus vérifiées, que la nature ne fait jamais des sauts.' (Natura non agit saltatim.) 'J'appelle cela la loi de continuité, &c., et l'usage de cette loi est très considérable dans la Physique.' (Nouveaux Essais.) Avant propos, p. 198, of Erdmann's Edition.—S. C."

See note, p. 120, vol. i. of Coleridge's Biographia Literaria, edit. 1847. J. MACRAY.

REV. DR. CHARLES LLOYD (3rd S. vi. 473; vii. 46.) — This gentleman was a Unitarian minister at Palgrave, in Suffolk, where I believe he succeeded Mr. Barbauld in his ministry and school.

He afterwards removed to London, where he took pupils of a more advanced age, and had the sons of men of note under his tuition. He died between 1820 and 1830. D.

CURIOUS NAMES (3rd S. vi. 17.)—To the list of those which have appeared in "N. & Q.," I may add, as a remarkable collocation, the following. It is copied from a Yorkshire newspaper now on my table:—A "Public Tea" is announced, "tickets for which may be obtained of Mrs. Argument, Mrs. Egton, and Mrs. Goodwill."

Among baptismal names I think the following may claim precedence for singularity. It occurs in a pamphlet published in 1861, by Mr. Wybrants, a medical practitioner at Shepton-Mallett, under the following title: The Trial of Joseph Hodges for abusing one Maranata Freestone.

J.

"THE WHOLE DUTY OF MAN" (3rd S. vii. 57.) See The Journal of Sacred Literature, vol. xiv. N. S., pp. 185 and 433, in which, to my mind, is satisfactorily established the claim of Dr. Richard Allestree to the authorship of this book.

JUXTA TURRIM.

"PLAIN SERMONS BY CONTRIBUTORS TO TRACTS FOR THE TIMES" (3rd S. vii. 50.)—Your inquirer, GAMMA, is right in his appropriation of the five names to the first five letters of the alphabet; the sixth writer, "F.," was Sir George Provost, Bart., incumbent of Stinchcombe, co. Gloucester, and the newly appointed Archdeacon of Gloucester; the seventh, "G.," was the Rev. Robert Francis Wilson of Oriel.

CROWDOWN.

"CURIOSITIES OF HISTORY" (3rd S. vi. 472.)—The miracle of the fisherman is borrowed from Martial:—

Ad Piscatorem.

"Baiano procul a lacu monemus,
Piscator, fuge, ne nocens recedas.
Sacris piscibus hæ natantur undæ,
Qui norant Dominum, manumque lambunt,
Illam, qua nihil est in orbe majus.
Quid, quod nomen habent, et ad magistri
Vocem quisque sui venit citatus?
Hoc quondam Libys impius profundo,
Dum prædam calamo tremante ducit,
Raptis luminibus repente cæcus
Captum non potuit videre piscem:
Et nunc sacrilegos perosus hamos,
Baianos sedet ad lacus rogator."

Martialis Epig. iv. 30.

On this Mr. Amos says:—

"It is probable that Martial alludes to some wretch whose eyes may have been put out by order of Domitian for fishing in his pond, and who may have been afterwards compelled to act the part of a scarecrow."—Gems of Latin Poetry, p. 211, Lond. 1851.

H. B. C.

U. U. Club.

DAVISON'S CASE (3rd S. v. 399; vii. 80.)—Perhaps "Davison's Case" as first stated by me in 3rd S. v. 399, is only one version of a pervading myth. A MIDDLE TEMPLAR (3rd S. v. 448) pointed out where another might be found. He complied with the request so often made by the editor and many correspondents, of giving a precise reference. May I ask F. C. H. to do the like; and tell me the size, date, volume, and page of the work from which he has quoted? The Story Teller does not bear on its face much legal or historical weight, and The Note Book of a deceased Lawyer, unless his name is given, would not be of a higher authority than The Diary of a late Physician.

AN INNER TEMPLAR.

SATIRICAL ENGRAVING (3rd S. vi. 456.)—I offer a conjecture that the figure fastened to the wall may be Niccolò Machiavelli. On the restoration of the Medici, he was put to the torture, and bore it firmly, confessing nothing. No doubt some portrait of the Cardinal de Medici exists. Had he a nose suggesting that of the caricature? Perhaps some one who is conversant with Machiavelli's works will say whether they contain the lines quoted.

E. F.

"PISCIS FLUTANS" (3rd S. vii. 55.)—In Adelung's Du Cange we are led to infer that thus would be expressed a certain fish, which the French call flets (see under Fletta); which is explained in a MS. Treatise concerning fishes as: "Hippoglossus, quem fletam Galli appellant, quod fluitando natat."

C. W. BINGHAM.

HACKNEY HORSES: AFFRI (3rd S. vii. 55.)—I should translate the word affri, in the document referred to, "farm-horses;" or, taking the whole phrase, "Affri pro carectis"—"cart-horses."

C. W. BINGHAM.

CONFIRMATION OF ARMS (3rd S. vi. 461, 539; vii. 65.)—It was my intention to have replied in extenso to the remarks of A MIDDLE TEMPLAR, but engagements of a pressing nature which I could not relieve myself of, prevented this. Time sped on; and now, to use a homely expression, the subject is stale. However, I may perhaps be permitted to make a few hurried observations upon your correspondent's remarks in 3rd S. vii. 65.

Probably, in my communication (which I have not at hand to refer to) I expressed myself somewhat rapidly, but I certainly never meant to admit that my family arms were borne without legal right. What I intended to convey was, that in consequence of the loss of the grant, and of the absence of the baptismal name and residence of the grantee from the record of the grant preserved in the College of Arms, I could not fulfil the requisitions of heraldic law.

It was stated, some years ago, in reply to an application made by a member of my family, that possibly the "grant could be found by searching a good deal among the archives, for which heavy fees were required;" but it was admitted that the arms were there recorded as belonging to my family.

[* See also Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary, sub voce "Aver."—ED.]

There is no other family of the same surname in this country. These arms have been used on seals, plate, tombs, paintings, &c., for at least one hundred and fifty years, and have never been challenged—indeed the very seal which was engraved at the time the grant was made is still in existence. They appear in every heraldic dictionary, from Edmondson downwards; and no arms resembling them are borne by any English family (see Papworth) except my own.* Add to this, that my family pedigree is traceable to a very early period, and I have the proofs of every link as far as the sixteenth century. Some seventy or eighty years ago, many valuable family papers were lent to a literary gentleman, and have never been recovered. Hinc ille lachrymæ: for among the papers thus lost was, without doubt, the grant in question. H. S. G.

P.S. With reference to Warburton's grumblings. If, as A MIDDLE TEMPLAR supposes, a grant and a confirmation be the same thing, surely there could be no injustice in demanding 30*l.* for both; whereas Warburton complains of the extortion of the heralds, in "making no difference" between a grant and a confirmation.

"THE VICAR AND MOSES" (2nd S. iii. 112, 174.)—In turning over some of your earlier volumes, I found a correspondence concerning the authorship of the old satirical poem called The Vicar and Moses. No satisfactory answer seems to have been brought forward. I am glad now, however, to be able to solve the doubts of your querists. The Vicar and Moses was written by my great grandfather of my own name. He lived in a small country house in Herefordshire, and passed his days in literary amusement. He was one of the first contributors to the Gentleman's Magazine; and in the early numbers of that paper are several satirical poems, and like pieces, by his hand, written in the style of The Vicar and Moses. The "vicar" was the vicar of the parish in which my great grandfather lived, and his name I could give did I think myself at liberty to publish it. I should perhaps add that the squire of the parish, who seems to have been intimately associated in literary pursuits with my ancestor, had some hand in the authorship. How much, I cannot say.

T. CLIFFORD ALLBUTT, B.A., M.B., Cantab.
12, Park Street, Leeds.

* They have, however, been assumed with some little variation in the crest by a family whose name is somewhat similar.

COINAGE: PYRAMID OF GOLD (3rd S. vii. 34.)—The statement is not correct that a cubic yard of gold may be coined into two millions of sovereigns: the actual number is 1,805,039, omitting fractions.

The pyramid, which stood in the eastern dome of the Exhibition of 1862, measured 1492½ cubic feet; and represented accurately the quantity of gold exported from the colony of Victoria (not from the Australian colonies generally) between the 1st of October, 1851, and the 1st of October, 1861, viz. 26,162,432 ounces troy: the value of which, in pounds sterling, is 104,649,728*l.* The pyramid was 44 ft. 9½ in. high, and 10 ft. square at the base. It is now in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham. P. LE NEVE FOSTER.

PETRIFIED MAN (3rd S. vi. 518.)—I am informed that there is shown at Rosherville Gardens, Northfleet, a man who was found preserved in guano. I have not seen it, although I am positive that "the mummy" (?) was there during the summer of 1864. A. J. DUNKIN.

Dartford.

THE ROBBER'S GRAVE (3rd S. vi. 498.)—On Dartford Brent, for the last half century, has been a plot of ground the size of a coffin; the turf is lower than the surrounding herbage. Tradition says it is the grave of a soldier who was there shot for desertion. Hence the locality is still called "The Deserter's Grave." The site is not far from the gravel pit in which the martyr, Christopher Wade, was burned, to whose memory, within the last few years, a memorial has been erected in the disused burying-ground overlooking the town of Dartford. Attendant upon the burning of Wade occurred one of the few Protestant miracles the Protestant faith records. See "Fox," and John Dunkin's Hist. of Dartford, passim.

A. J. DUNKIN.

Dartford.

VERONICA (3rd S. vi. 464.)—Is the penultima to be pronounced in English long or short—veronica or veronica? Dante appears to make it long in the Italian. (Paradiso, c. xxxi. l. 39 from the end)—

"Viene a veder la Veronica nostra."

J.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Tabule Curiales; or, Tables of the Superior Courts of Westminster Hall, showing the Judges who sat in them from 1066 to 1864, &c. By Edward Foss, F.S.A. (Murray.)

In this compact publication Mr. Foss has presented to the legal profession a most acceptable work, which must in future be found in every lawyer's library. It not only exhibits in intelligible tables a complete picture of each of the Courts of Westminster Hall in every reign since they were finally settled under the English Justinian, King Edward I., but it enables the historical inquirer to determine with precision the actual staff in each of them, in every year, and almost in every day, since they were first established: thus affording an easy and convenient reference to learned counsel in their arguments, and an effective help to the student of our country's annals. To those who possess Mr. Foss's more elaborate work on the Judges of England, this volume will be a desirable Appendix; while to others, who may not be able to refer to the larger work, it will be an ample compendium of that part of the subject on which it treats.

The Works of William Shakespeare. The Text revised by the Rev. Alexander Dyce. In Eight Volumes. Vol. V. (Chapman & Hall.)

We must content ourselves, on the present occasion, with announcing the satisfactory progress of Mr. Dyce's Shakespeare. The fifth volume, which has now been issued containing the First, Second, and Third Parts of Henry the Sixth, Richard the Second, and Henry the Eighth, bears evidence in the number and extent of the Notes, to the pains which the Editor has bestowed upon the revision of the Text. In this, as in the former volumes, though we may think some of Mr. Dyce's suggestions less happy than others, many of them call for warm commendation; and whether we agree with them or not, all exhibit abundant proof of the intelligence of Mr. Dyce, and of his abundant qualifications for the task which he has imposed upon himself.

A Book of Golden Deeds of all Times and all Lands, gathered and narrated by the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe." (Macmillan.)

It was Mr. Smiles' good fortune to find a popular, and deservedly popular theme, in Self Help; but though Self Help be good, Self Denial is a better and holier quality, which has here found an able and fitting exponent in the author of The Heir of Redclyffe. Miss Yonge has in this beautiful little volume (one of Macmillan's Golden Treasury Series) narrated, in a taking and graceful manner, some half hundred Golden Deeds, "the very essence of which," as she well expresses it, "is such an entire absorption in others, that self is not so much renounced as forgotten." These acts of self-denial are very varied in their character, although they all alike "shine in a naughty world"; and many of Miss Yonge's narratives are well calculated for those short readings to the intelligent, though uneducated classes, which are now so popular.

The Clergy List for 1865, containing Alphabetical List of Clergy in England and Wales, Houses of Convocation, Clergy in Ireland, Scottish, Episcopal, and Colonial Clergy, &c. (Cox.)

Of all the Annual Volumes issued, few equal and none exceed the Clergy List in general utility. It would be difficult to find any question connected with Church,—its patronage, its benefices, those who hold them, the personnel of its Cathedral and Collegiate establishments and our public schools—which cannot be satisfactorily answered by a reference to it; for the information it contains is, we believe, as trustworthy as it is abundant.

The American Joe Miller: A Collection of Yankee Wit and Humour, compiled by Robert Kempt. (Adams & Francis.)

This is, we believe, the first attempt to give on this side of the Atlantic such a collection of American Wit and Humour as will enable us to compare the outré and exaggerated fun of Brother Jonathan with the rich and genial wit of John Bull, the pawky humour of Sawney, and the exuberant mirth of Paddy; and for this, as well as for the abundance of amusement to be found in it, Mr. Kempt's little volume deserves a hearty welcome.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

SERMON BY REV. H. HOWARTH, on the occasion of the death of Lord Lyndhurst.

 Letters stating particulars and lowest price, carriage free, to be sent to M^r. W. G. SMITH, Publisher of "NOTES & QUERIES," 22, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

CHARNOOD FOREST, by T. R. Potter, Esq. 4to.
PICTORIAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND, by Charles Knight, Esq. Vol. I. of the original edition, in cloth or parts.

GEOFFREY GATMAN'S ANGO-NORMAN CHRONICLE, AND THE LATIN HISTORY OF HERWARD. Exact title of the reprint unknown.
Wanted by M^r. Finlay, Myrtle House, Highbury Vale, N.

GORHAM'S HISTORY OF EYREBURY AND ST. NEOTS, with Supplement, or the Supplement alone.

Wanted by Dr. Rix, St. Neots.

The text descriptive of the plates of medals, &c., in TINDAL'S CONTINUATION OF RAFIN.

Wanted by J. W. Fleming, F.R.C.S., Surgeon, 37th Regiment, Dover.

Notices to Correspondents.

"Party is the Madness of Many," &c. (3rd S. vi. 504, 536).—Our readers will remember the correspondence which has been carried on in these columns on the subject of this well-known quotation. We have received a letter from Mr. Gaspey, in which he explains, that "not having the book numbers at hand when he sent his last paper, referring to his previous communication, he erroneously substituted the date of June 21st for April 21st, 1862." Mr. Gaspey further comments in the same letter upon some of Mr. Bolton Cornes's observations, based on this little mistake, and on other points connected with the main question in difference between them; but it is not advisable to insert his remarks, especially because we think both these valued Correspondents are right, and both wrong—right, so far as they have depended upon their respective copies of the Miscellanies, but wrong in writing generally as if all the editions of the Miscellanies were alike. On some inquiry into the subject, we find great differences between them. We purpose to give a little further attention to this paper, and shall take an early opportunity of laying the results before our Readers.

JOSEPH LIVING (Brixton.) The inscription on the octagonal pedestal of the statue of John Carpenter in the City of London School, occupies five sides, and is too long for quotation. It is printed in Mr. Thomas Brewer's Memoir of John Carpenter, ed. 1856, pp. 116–118.

U. O. N. The weight of the Koh-i-Noor is 102½ carats; the 2 had probably dropped out.

M. A. The coin is clearly a touch piece, described at p. 457 of our last volume.

CONINGSBY QUERIES (3rd S. vi. 523).—C. R. S. M. is requested to communicate with E. M. B. of the Union, Oxford.

EDWIN ARMISTEAD. Seven articles on the origin of the saying, "Cock and Bull Story," appeared in our First and Second Series.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d., or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 4d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 22, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., to whom all COMMUNICATIONS from THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

CURE OF FOURTEEN YEARS' ASTHMA BY DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—From Mr. J. Ekersley, West Houghton, to Mr. T. Valls, Market Place, Hindley.—"My wife can now sleep soundly the whole of the night without being disturbed by her cough and shortness of breath, although for four years she had not been able to sleep more than a very short time. She is now better than she has been for the last fourteen years." They have a pleasant taste. Sold 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. per box, by all Druggists.

"I saw him carried to the earth
By four officers—
One bore his cuirass,
Another his buckler,
One his grand sabre,
And the other carried—nothing.
Around his tomb
They planted rosemary,
And on the highest branch
The nightingale sings;
They saw his soul fly up
Amidst laurel branches.
Every one prostrated to earth,
And then sprang up
To sing the victories
Which Marlborough had won."

The soul flying up is represented in the oddest way. His armour with no body in it, the several pieces in their relative positions (but a little way apart to show there is nothing within) are flying upwards between some large branches of laurel. The chanting the victories is represented by some men in flowing perriwigs singing from music paper; one wears a huge pair of spectacles. The chanson goes on, and concludes in an equally strange way—

"The ceremony over
Every one went to bed.
Some with their wives,
And the others (les seuls, bachelors) alone.
It is not that ladies are wanting,
For I know a great many.
The fair, and then the brown,
And also the chesnut-complexioned."

"Les seuls," or the bachelor class, is typified by a dandy with a pig-tail, long waistcoat, and blue shorts strutting along; (the spire of a church in the distance)—evidently pourtraying the dandy of the day. The next illustration shows the ladies, who may be as he describes them—

"Des blondes, et puis des bruns, Et des châtaignes aussi,"

but to judge from their noses, to say nothing else, they seem very, very inferior to their "insular" rivals.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

[Our correspondent is probably not aware that this notable war-song has been reprinted with an English translation in The Reliques of Father Prout, edit. 1860, p. 219. "Who has not hummed," says this lively writer, "in his lifetime the immortal air of MALBROUCK? Still, if the best antiquary were called on to supply the original poetic composition, such as it burst on the world in the decline of the classic era of Queen Anne and Louis XIV., I fear he would be unable to gratify the curiosity of an eager public in so interesting an inquiry. . . . It may not be uninteresting to learn, that both the tune and the words were composed as a 'lullaby' to set the infant Dauphine to sleep; and that, having succeeded in the object of soporific efficacy, the poetess (for some make Madame de Sevigné the authoress of 'Malbrouck') deemed historical accuracy a minor consideration. It is a fact, that this tune is the only one relished by the South Sea islanders, who find it 'most musical, most melancholy.' Chateaubriand, in his Itineraire de Jerusalem, says the air was brought from Palestine by Crusaders.]"

SAVANAH.

Recent events at Savannah (sometimes written Savannah) have brought to my memory an old engraving of this city, given to me in 1835 by an old gentleman in Staffordshire, and which has lain most of the time buried in a portfolio. This engraving measures $15\frac{1}{2} \times 21\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and is entitled "A View of Savannah as it stood the 29th of March, 1734." It represents a large square clearing in a dense forest, three sides of the square clearing being bounded by trees, and the fourth, nearest the spectator, being the river. The country at the back of the city is a dead flat, for the horizon line of the tops of the trees is straight and horizontal. The central part of the clearing is marked out in parallelograms, destined for blocks of houses. On some of these plots houses have been built, and the ground plots fenced in with palings. Some of the public edifices, apparently only log huts, stand more or less detached. The whole character of the scene gives one the idea of a place only newly-founded in the primeval forest. At the bottom of the plate are the words—"To the Hon^{ble} the Trustees for establishing the Colony of Georgia in America, this View of the Town of Savannah is humbly dedicated by their Honours' Obligated and most Obedient Servant, Peter Gordon." In the left-hand corner appears "P. Gordon, Inv.;" and in the opposite one "P. Fourdrinier, Sculp." (I knew some of the Fourdrinier family in Staffordshire.) The reference comprises the following objects represented in the view:—

1. The stairs going up. [This is a flight of stairs, with a hand-rail on the left side, leading from the water up the high bank to the level of the town.]
2. Mr. Oglethorpe's tent. [Near the top of the stairs close to four trees left standing.]
3. The Crane and Bell. [And a slide for pulling up merchandise.]
4. The Tabernacle and Court House. [A little hut with gable roof.]
5. The Public Mill. [A similar building.]
6. The House for Strangers. [Ditto.]
7. The public Oven. [Ditto.]
8. The Draw-well. [In the middle of the township.]
9. The Lott for the Church. [Unoccupied.]
10. The public Stores. [A hut.]
11. The Fort. [This is a small square hut with pyramidal roof at the left furthest corner of the township. Three portholes appear on the nearest side.]
12. The Parsonage House. [On the left side, and midway between the last and the water.]
13. The Pallisadoes. [A line of high railings nearly from the last to the river.]
14. The Guard House and Battery of Cannon. [This is a building of two storeys, with flag flying at the top of the bank towards the left side. Twelve dismounted, or not yet mounted guns, lie on the ground in front of it, and on the right side appear the Stocks and Handcuffs.]
15. Hutchinson's Island. [This is an island in the river in the foreground. Several trees grow on it, two boats are against the bank, and three cows are grazing.]

' D. O. M.

In spem resurrectionis

Hic quiescit vir omni nomine clarissimus

FRANCISCUS ANDERTONUS, Baronettus, Lostochii, etc.
dominus.

Nobilitas ejus major quam quæ efferrî indigeat, antiquior
quam quæ possit,

Crevit tamen conjuge Somersetâ;

Atque inde privato stemmati decus regium accessit.

Hic bello [foris?] domique strenuus,

Pietate in Deum, beneficentiâ in pauperes, summâ in adversis animi constantiâ, Enituit.

Sic fide integer, et Christianis virtutibus jam cœlo maturus, Cum Benedictinæ huic familiæ, cui conjunctissimus vixerat,

Æternum amoris pignus corpus reliquisset,

Obiit Parisiis iv^{to} Nonas Februarii,

Anno Domini M.DCLXXVIII. Ætatis LI.

Hoc marmor Elizabetha Somersetæ Francisci relicta

Mœrens posuit.

Requiescat in pace.'

"Inscriptions on some monuments of the royal family of England, buried in Paris or elsewhere. In the chappell belonging to the Scotts College in Paris:—On the north side, under an arch, stands a fair monument of brass and marble, on whose summit stands a pyramid bearing a flaming lamp, at the foot of which is a brass urn, covered with an imperial crown, in which lies the heart of King James II. Over it, in profile, a medal of that prince's head. On each side sit two boys; underneath, lye a scepter and sword saltirewise; lower, the arms of Scotland and England empaed, and encircled with the garter. On each side are severall military trophies of brass, and on a tablet underneath the following inscription:—

' D. O. M.

Memoriæ

Augustissimi Principis JACOBI II^{di} Magnæ Britanniæ, etc., Regiæ,

Ille partis terræ ac maris triumphis clarus, sed constanti in Deum fide clarior, huic regna, opes et omnia vitæ florentis commoda postposuit, per summum scelus a sua sede pulsus, Absalonis impietatem, Achitophelis perfidiam, et acerba Simeï vitia [convitia, Collect. Topogr.], invicta lenitate et patientia, ipsis etiam inimicis amicus, superavit. Rebus humanis major, adversis superior, et cœlestis gloriæ studio inflammatus, quod regno caruerit sibi visus beator, miseram hanc vitam felici, regnum terrestre cœlesti commutavit. Hæc domus quam pius princeps labantem sustinuit et patrie fovit, cui ingenii sui monumenta omnia, scilicet sua manuscripta custodienda commisit, eam corporis ipsius partem qua maxime animus viget, religiose servandam suscepit.

Vixit annis lxxviii, regnavit xvi. [Ob. xvii.] Cal. Octob.
An. Sal. Hum. M.DCCI.

Jacobus dux de Perth, Præfectus institutioni Jacobi III.
Magnæ Britanniæ, etc., Regiæ,

Hujus domus benefactor mœrens posuit.'

"Before this monument lye the bowells of Queen Mary (whose body is preserved in a gallery at the upper end of the chappell belonging to the nunnery of Chaillot, near Paris), in a box covered with black velvet; athwart which is a cross of white damask, and on a copper plate this inscription:—

' Entrailles de la Reine de la Grande Bretagne,
MARIE ELEONOR
d'Est, decedee
a St. Germain en
Laye, le 7 May,
1718.'

"On a white marble gravestone laid over this box, is this inscription:—

' D. O. M.

Sub hoc marmore.

Condita sunt

Viscera MARIÆ BEATRICIS Reginæ Mag. Britan.

Uxoris Jacobi II. Matris Jacobi III. Regis.

Rarissimi exempli princeps fuit

Fide et pietate in Deum, in conjugem, liberos, eximia,

Caritate in suos, liberalitate in pauperes, singulari,

In supremo regni fastigio Christianam humilitatem,

Regno pulsa dignitatem majestatemque

Retinuit.

In utraque fortuna semper eadem,

Nec aulæ deliciis mollita,

Nec triginta annorum exilio, calamitatibus,

Omnium prope carorum amissione,

fracta,

Quievit in Domino vii. Maii An. MDCCXVIII.

Ætatis anno lx^o.'

"At the feet of the last, under a white marble esccheon, lye parts of the bowells, brains, and heart of Louisa Maria Stuart, daughter of King James II.; and over it this inscription in capitals:—

' D. O. M.

Hic sita sunt

Viscera puellæ regiæ

LUDOVICÆ MARIÆ

Quæ Jacobo II. Majoris Britanniæ Regi

et Mariæ Reginæ divinitus nata fuerat,

Ut et parentibus optimis perpetui exilii

Molestiam levaret,

Et fratri dignissimo Regii sanguinis decus

Quod calumniantium improbitate detrahebatur

Adsereret.

Omnibus naturæ et gratiæ donis cumulata,

Morum suavitate probata terris,

Sanctitate matura cœlo,

Rapta est ne malitia mutaret intellectum ejus, eo maxime tempore quo spes fortune melioris oblata, gravius salutis æternæ discrimen videbatur,

Aditura,

xiv Kal. Maii, An. MDCCXII.

Ætat. An. xix.'

"In the parish church of St. Germain en Laye, at the foot of an altar on the north side the body, lye the other part of the bowells, &c., of the princess Louisa Maria before-mentioned; and on a small white marble tombstone is this inscription:—

' Viscera

LUDOVICÆ MARIÆ

filie Jacobi secundi

Magnæ Britanniæ Regis.

Consummata in brevi explevit

Tempora multa,

dilecta Deo et hominibus,

Annis nata prope viginti,

Abiit ad Dominum die 18 Aprilis, anni 1712.'

"Under another white marble stone, lie the bowells of King James II., and on it is this inscription:—

' Viscera

JACOBI SECUNDI

Magnæ Britanniæ

Regis,

Virtutibus regiis maximus,

Fide major.

Obiit Sangermani in Laya, die 16 Septembris, anni 1701.'

"In a small chappell on the north side of the chappell belonging to the English Benedictine monks in Paris, are preserved in two coffins the bodies of King James II. and his daughters, under two hearses: the first covered with black velvet, the last with damask and silver lace. Round them severall escocheons, bearing the arms of England, &c., empaled. Within the same convent is preserved a waxen face of King James II., taken from his dead countenance, in which is pretended to be a very good likeness, and on the eyebrows are fixed the very hairs of the dead King.

"At the west-end of the chappell of the Scotts College was buried the Lord Perth; over whom lyes a large and fair marble gravestone, on which is, in capitals, the following inscription:—

"Hic jacet

JACOBUS DRUMMOND, dux de Perth, marchio de Drummond, comes de Perth et de Stobhall, vicecomes de Cargill, Baro de Drummond, Conerag, &c., antiquissimæ familie de Drummond Princeps hæreditarius, seneschallus de Strathern. Cuiusque Ordinis, Cardui apud Scotos, et Periscædii apud Anglos eques, Regibus Magnæ Britanniæ Carolo II. Jacobo II. et Jacobo III. ab intimis et secretioribus consiliis. Ex summo Scotiæ justitiario ad supremam cancellariatum Regni dignitatem a Carolo II. Rege erectus, post diuturnos fluctuantis animi æstus victrici tandem veritati cessit, fidemque Catholicam amplexus in eam brevi totam suam traxit familiam. Hinc propter constantem Religionis zelum et invictam ergo Regem legitimum fidem, diuturno carcere, proscriptione et exilio probatus, omnium dignissimus Jacobo II. Regi visus est qui iuncti filii Jacobi Magnæ Britanniæ principis institutioni præciceretur. Regio demum præfectus est cubiculo et constitutus Regiæ camerarius. Fuit summus ille vir non tam natalibus et affinitatibus Regiis quam humanitate, urbanitate et ingenii elegantia conspicuus, iurium regie majestatis et sacre hierarchiæ vindex acerrimus, omni literarum genere excultus, et summus literatorum patronus, sed præclaras animi dotes constans ejus pietas, fidei zelus, integritas incorrupta, propensus ad omnes sublemandos animus, et humilitas vere Christiana longe superarant. Domum hanc ab imminente ruina officiis apud Regem ope et re sua suffulsi. Hic condidit prope monumentum quod Regis Jacobi II. memoriæ proprio ære ponendum

Curaverat,

Vixit annis lxxviii. obiit die xi. Maii, M.D.CXCVI.
R. I. P.

"In the church of St. Germain's en Laye, on a northern pillar, on a fair white marble tablet, shaped like a scroll, which is held up by a skeleton, is this inscription in capitals:—

"D. O. M.

De curso inquietæ vitæ stadio

Tandem quiescit CATHERINA DE CATHNECY Comitissa de Arrol, comitis de Southasq filia, comitis de Arrol magni Scotiæ comes (sic) Tabuli vidua, natalibus et consilio clara, munere quo functa est clarior, virtutibus clarissima iudicio (sic in orig.), ingenio, moribus, et animi potissimum magnitudine, ultra sexum, par viris. Præcæ popularium in Reges fide Usurpatori (sic in orig.) Auriæ artibus graviter lassâ, suam servavit integritatem, aliorum confirmavit. Hinc carceri commissam, cum vel victum timeret tyrannos (sic in orig.) egit in exilium, sed exilium datum in poenam cessit in præmium, nam Jacobus Mag. Brit. Rex, meritorum æquissimus iudex, dignam censuit cui regimen infantie principis Walliæ demandaret. Hoc defunctam munere integro fere triennio neco reposit die ii Octob. An. Dom. M.D.CXCII. Ætat. lvi. Requiescat in pace.

Lad' dame a faite une donnon a cette Eglise, et y'a fondée une messe basse annuelle le 2 Octbre, jour de son deceds (sic) par con^{te} devant Guismon de Fonteny, notre de ce lieu se (sic) 80 Xbre, 1694.

"On a black marble gravestone in the body of the church is this mangled inscription, almost worn out by the people's feet:—

"D. O. M.

Quisquis peregrinus ades

Quiescentem hic spem beat, resurrectionis ad vitam vir pro sincera in Deum fide, pro inconcussa in Regem fidelitate, a patria . . . æditiq; precibus oppos . . . in . . .

Sub hoc etiam marmore jacet

HENRICUS DOMINUS DE WALDEGRAVE, Baro de . . . Par Angliæ, ex antiqua nobilique Suffolciensi comitatu stirpe oriundus do . . . bis mortuum cum oneris vixerit par in (? sic) dicis id . . . ex eo conjicere quod Jacobus II. Magnæ Britanniæ Rex e tanto procerum regni numero . . . carissimam Henrici . . . collocaret, qui in honores cum . . . ab ipso regum . . . Angliæ optimo D. Ludovici, M.XIV. Regum . . . maxim . . . An. 1688, Ablegatus arcanis . . .

[Rawl. MS., B 155, fol. 10. "In the window at the west end of the Benedictines' chapel: Josephus Shirley, hujus monasterii prior, hanc ecclesiam, dormitorium, &c. edificari curavit, A^o Dm. 1676."]

(To be continued.)

THE CONFEDERATED COLONIES OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA: WANTED, A NAME.—Hesperia, derived from "hesper, or resper, the setting sun or evening," and used in the sense of "a western country," was a name applied by the Greeks to Italy, and by the Romans to Spain. Since the discovery of America, it belongs preeminently to the western hemisphere, as distinguished from the eastern.

In Webster's Dictionary, we find the following words and definitions:—

"HESPERIAN, a. (L. hesperius, western, from hesperus, resper, the evening star, Venus, Ἑσπερος), western, situated at the west.

"HESPERIAN, n. An inhabitant of a western country."

So that the above colonies are already "Hesperian," and the people "Hesperians," in relation to Europe; while they have an especial claim to the title from including also the westernmost shores of America, except the Russian territory.

Need we tax our inventive powers to supply a new name when we have one already at hand, which, though derived from antiquity, has not yet been specially appropriated by any other country, and is recommended by being at once brief, significant, and agreeable to the ear? X.

INSCRIPTION AT HOLLAND HOUSE TO THE SECOND LORD CAMELFORD.—Among the Epitaphs and Inscriptions collected by Miss Frances Williams Wynn, and placed at the end of Diaries of a Lady of Quality from 1707 to 1844, edited by A. Hayward, Esq., Q.C. (second edition, 1864, p. 361,) is one—

"On a stone which marks the spot on which Lord Camelford fell in a duel.

"Placed by Lord Holland, written by Ugo Foscolo.

"Hoc Diis Manibus voto deprecatione Iræ."

Neither the inscription itself, nor its author, is here correctly stated. Ugo Foscolo came to England about the end of 1816. The duel between Lord Camelford and Mr. Best, in which the former was killed, was fought in 1804, and the monument on the fatal spot in the gardens of Holland House was erected by Lord Holland shortly after. An antique Roman altar was adopted for the purpose, raised on a square base for a pedestal, on the front of which was placed this inscription—

HOC
DIS MAN. VOTO
DISCORDIAM DEPRECAMVR.

An engraving of the monument may be seen in Faulkner's History of Kensington, and in the Gentleman's Magazine for April, 1821, p. 325. It is not likely that the few words of the inscription were dictated by any other person but Lord Holland himself. J. G. N.

MONEY POST OFFICE ORDERS were issued for the first time in the United States, on the 1st of November, 1864, and from the returns of 147 offices, which were all that had then been established, though the number hereafter will be greatly increased, I learn the amount transmitted during the month was $115,000, or a little more than 23,000*l.*, a very small sum, in comparison to what it will be when this important system of pecuniary remittances becomes better known by the people.

I notice in that interesting volume, Her Majesty's Mails, that money orders were first issued in England in 1839, and that "the annual amount transmitted has risen from 313,000*l.* to 16,494,000*l.*, it being fifty-two fold." Those persons who are living twenty-five years hence may see the same results in America. W. W.

Malta.

TOLBOOTH: GROTESQUE: LACED MUTTON: WOLFGANG LAVIER.—1. The readers of Sir Walter Scott's captivating novels must be familiar with the "Tolbooth." I have noted the following use of this term in its original signification, viz. the covered place where custom or toll was paid, in Bishop Hall's Contemplations on the New Testament, Book III. Contempl. iv. "Matthew called":

"Those other disciples, whose calling is recorded, were from the fisher-boat; this from the tolbooth."

2. Grotesque—

"Morto da Feltro, an assiduous investigator of the decorative remains hidden and buried around Rome and Naples, in the numerous tombs, which, if we may use the expression, were preserved by their own ruins, had exerted himself to revive the taste for what have been denominated grotesche, because the models were found in grottoes."—History of the Life and Works of Raffaello, by Quatremère de Quincy (H. G. Bohn), p. 262.

3. Laced Mutton, Shakspeare. See Vossius, Etymolog. p. 389 a, s. v. "Muto." Lactantius, De Falsâ Relig. p. 110; British Magazine, Feb. 1842, p. 162, v. f. ("Mutinus qui est apud Græcos Priapus.")

4. A few months ago a coin, of which the following is a description, was dug up on the lands of Mr. John Southall, at Clare Hays, in the parish of Bobbington, Staffordshire, and is now in my possession. It is a thin brass token, unmilled, evidently of considerable antiquity, not only from the appearance of the entire coin, but also from the use of the v for u throughout. On the obverse, which is best preserved, I read the name of the person who caused the token to be struck: "WVLF. LAVIER. IN. NVRMBER." Beneath, in an inner circle are three crowns alternated with as many fleurs-de-lis. The reverse, which is much defaced, contains an inscription, which I read, "WER. GOT. VER. ER. GVT. HAT," i. e. "Wer Gott verehrt er gut hat": He who honours God is blest. In an inner circle is the orb surmounted by the cross. It is no doubt one of the numerous Nuremberg tokens; but who Wulfgang Lavier was I am not aware. H. W. T.

PRICE OF A BIBLE IN 1680.—In a book intitled "The Testimony of Truth Exalted," by the Collected Labours of that Worthy Man, Good Scribe, and Faithful Minister of Jesus Christ, Samuel Fisher, M.DCLXXIX," are these words under the date of 1680, under the heading of "The Rustick's Alarm to the Rabbies":—

"And whereas a man may buy a whole Bible for five shillings, they [the Parsons] sell some one Verse of it, a little set out and flourishd and amplified with no other Trimming but their own fallible vain thoughts upon it, for Twenty shillings [that is, when they preach from a text] which Bible might serve a whole Town to read in; one Chapter of which is worth twenty of their uncertain Sermons; or if men be minded to have Sermons, these Nations are now so full of them, that for Groats a piece, one may buy Twenty Printed Sermons of men," &c.—P. 227.

EDWIN ARMISTEAD.

Leeds.

AUSTRALIAN TOPOGRAPHICAL NOMENCLATURE. Mr. Isaac Taylor, in his Words and Places, mentions only two or three Australian names, and one of these he gives with a wrong spelling, in evident misapprehension of its derivation. He writes "Port Philip," as the original name of the colony of Victoria; it should be "Port Phillip," for its discoverer was Governor Arthur Phillip, first Governor of New Holland.

It may be mentioned that Mr. Henry Kingsley, in his latest romance, The Hillyars and the Burtens, names the capital of his imaginary colony "Palmerston," evidently in imitation of the origin of "Melbourne;" and Palmerston is the actual name selected by the South Australian Government for the capital of their new settlement on Adam Bay, at the mouth of the Adelaide River, on the northern coast of the continent. D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

A GOOD HIST.—As your "N. & Q." fall, I have no doubt, into the hands of all classes, may I ask you to endeavour to put an end to a crying evil in the fine arts. I bought lately a collection of clever sketches of places in England and Wales, among which there are a hundred or more without any name of the place attached to them! Will you be so kind as to tell all artists and tourists that, unless they put the names of the places they sketch on the drawings themselves, they will be hereafter of no more value than a child's drawings at school. This will apply to lady artists as well as men; and I hope you will urge all who have any of their own sketches still in their possession, to sit down at once and write the names upon all of them. It will add greatly to the value of them when they are sold.

There is another crying evil, and a trying evil to old people with weak eyes, and young, too; namely, an extraordinary fancy for engraving the names of places in plates of views so faint that they cannot be read even with glasses. Pray do your best, Mr. Editor, to put a stop to such follies.

T. P.

Queries.

APPLE-PIE.—What is the derivation and propriety of this in such phrases as "Apple-pie order"? I do not think that the origin is apparent on the face of the word.*

THOS. COWARD, M.A.

Cambridge.

AUVERGNE POETRY, ETC.—Would you permit me to ask for the following information?—The titles of any books relating to the national poetry, fairy tales, legends, &c. of Auvergne, Limousin, and Poitiers. I have not been able to find any books as yet relating to these provinces of France and their legends, especially as regards Auvergne.

A. W. TAYLOR.

3, Harwood Terrace, King's Road, Fulham.

BIBLE: NOAD.—I have a Bible, printed in 1591 by Christopher Barker, and a Prayer Book without date; but King James being prayed for, it must have been published in his reign. Are these editions scarce, and of much value?†

* For some conjectures respecting the origin of the phrase "Apple-pie order," see our 1st S. iii. 468, 485; vi. 149.]

† Our correspondent has not stated the size of the Bible.—Ed.]

Would you also say if the family of Noad is of Saxon or Norman origin? I understand that it is a common name in some parts of Wiltshire, but have no means of ascertaining any particulars.

CANADA.

Quebec.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL QUERIES.—

1. James McHenry, M.D. This gentleman was author of The Antediluvians, a poem, London, 1839; The Pleasures of Friendship, and other Poems, 1825; and several novels and plays. Dr. McHenry was, I believe, a native of Ireland, but was for many years resident in the United States of America. Can any of your readers inform me whether he was an alumnus of Glasgow University? Is he still living?

2. John Douglas, author of Poems, Maryport, 1836. Can any of your Cumberland readers give me any account of this author, and his poetical works?

3. George Wilde, author of Poems and Songs, 1816, Plymouth. Can you give me any information regarding this Devonshire poet, and the titles of any of his other writings, poetic or dramatic?

4. There was published in 1822 a magazine, called The Constitutional Guardian, Bristol, J. M. Gutch. Can any reader of "N. & Q." acquainted with Bristol literature, inform me who is author of the following papers in this periodical? I. Parody on Hamlet's soliloquy, p. 50. II. "Cleopatra's Needle," p. 203. III. Fragment from the History of Tom Thumb the Great, a tragi-comedy, p. 373.

5. Mrs. Crowther, author of Moral Tales and Poetical Essays, Huddersfield, 1802; with portrait. I only know this lady's book from seeing the title in a sale catalogue. Can any of your readers give me any account of the contents of this volume? Has the authoress written any other work, poetic or dramatic?

6. In the Biographia Dramatica there is a translation of Kotzebue's Pizarro (1799?) ascribed to Robert Heron, one of the biographers of Burns, and author of numerous miscellaneous works. This is a mistake. The author's name is Richard Heron. Can you tell me if Richard Heron has published anything else?

7. Junius. Another Guess at Junius, with a Dialogue in the Shades, &c., 1803. This pamphlet is, in Lowndes, ascribed to the Rev. Mr. Fitzgerald. Can you give me any information regarding the author?

R. I.

S. DECHARMES, LONDON.—I have seen a very handsome repeating watch, which is still in good order, made by the above maker. Can any of your correspondents tell me when he flourished? I have a particular reason for wishing to know.

G. G.

DRAGON IN HEREFORDSHIRE.—There is a story of a dragon, that lived in a wood near Hereford, and was killed on its way to drink. What are the particulars of the story, and who is the hero of it?

T. C.

SIR SAUNDERS DUNCOMBE, ETC.—Can any of your readers oblige me with any particulars of Sir Saunders Duncombe, of whom I have lately met with an original portrait bearing an inscription to the effect that he was distinguished for attainments in the mechanical sciences, and had a patent granted to him for the introduction of Sedan chairs into England. I have not, however, as yet met with anything further as to him.*

I have also met with another portrait, said to be painted by Benjamin West. It is that of a counsellor in wig and gown, holding a scroll, on which is written, as far as can be traced, an Act —, Trade of —, Rhode Island —, Virginia —, America. I shall be very glad if any clue can be afforded me to the identity of this portrait.
J. N.

"THE EUROPEAN." — I have five numbers of "The European, a Journal of the Progress of Society, Literature, the Arts and Sciences," published in November, 1839. Can you tell me who were its conductors, and how long it lived? It contains a review, with long extracts, of a poem called "The Re-advent of King Arthur or Ernest." Who was the author of this poem? If I remember right, a notice of it appeared in the Quarterly Review about the same time. Are copies to be had?
G. G.

FAMILIES OF GOODRICH, LINCOLNSHIRE. — The favour of information is desired, with descriptions of any monuments, &c., as to families of Goodrich or Goodrick, in Lincolnshire, anterior to 1700, including that of Thomas Goodrich, Bishop of Ely, who died 1554, Lord Chancellor to King Edward VI. and Queen Mary; and as to the emigration of persons of that name from Boston to Virginia, or elsewhere in America. Some information has been already obtained from East Kirkby and Bolingbroke.

Address, F. J. J., Box No. 62, Post Office, Derby.

GREEK CHURCH. — Can any of your readers tell me what is the precise relation in which the Greek Church stands, first, to the Roman Catholic Church, and second, to the English Church? or where can I get accurate information on the subject? Stanley does not seem to touch on it in his Lectures. Williams, in his Holy City, says, it is a "humiliating fact that while the Greek Church admits the orders of the Latins and Armenians, they do not recognise those of the Anglican Church, supposing them without the apostolic succession." Now how do these matters stand? I have heard it asserted that the Greek Church, as a Church, does not recognise the Roman Church; and I have also heard it asserted it does recognise the orders of the Anglican Church. I make the inquiry merely for information on a matter of fact, and not with the view of raising any controversy.
G. G.

HARD TACK. —

"In Dauphine, France, they make bread but once in six months, and bake it with the refuse of the fields. In the winter it becomes so hard that they cut it with an axe, and soak it for twenty-four hours before they can eat it."

[* Sir Saunders Duncombe was a member of the Duncombe family of Battleden, co. Bedford. See the pedigree in Harl. MS. 1581, fol. 152^b. — Ed.]

May I beg to ask if any of your correspondents can verify this statement, not from personal experience, but from having seen this "hard tack" in France, or read of it, in other publications?
W. W.

HERALDIC. — 1. In Leland's Collectanea is a list of the names of those who came over to England with William the Conqueror. Amongst these we find "Percehay et Pereris." Query — Is the latter name a variation of that of "Henri de Ferrieres" mentioned in M. Leop. de Lisle's list?

2. A friend has copied for me the following extract from the Rev. W. K. R. Bedford's Blazon of Episcopacy, in reference to the celebrated Bishop of St. David's: —

"William Linwood, 1422 to 1446. Arms, a chevron. Coat of Arms at the beginning of his Register; communicated by Sir Frederick Madden."

"Note. Wm. Linwood (or Lindwood) was appointed to the See of St. David's Aug. 14th, 1442: ob. Oct. 21st, 1446."

Query. What authority is there for representing his arms as in the above extract — a chevron? (No tincture is assigned either to the field or to the ordinary so borne.)

All the heraldic authorities to which I have had access uniformly blazon the arms of Lyndwood (the ancient spelling) thus: arg. a fesse crenellée between 3 fleurs-de-lis, sa. Crest, a fleur-de-lis per pale arg. and sa.

In a copy of Bishop Linwood's great work, the Provinciale, seu Constitutiones Anglie, London, 1505, there is a large coat of arms prefixed, with some complimentary hexameters, of which I sub-join a description: Quarterly, 1st and 4th arg. a fesse crenellée between 3 fleurs-de-lis sa.; 2nd and 3rd on a field semée of crosses crosslet a unicorn rampant. Crest, a fleur-de-lis per pale arg. and sa. Supporters; two unicorns coward.

Query. To what family do the arms of the 2nd and 3rd quarters belong, and how did they come to be borne by the bishop? The supporters clearly belong to the same source.

3. I should be much obliged to any contributor to "N. & Q." who has access to works on Spanish and Portuguese heraldry, if he would furnish me with the armorial blazonry of the following foreign families: — Alvares; Carvalhal; Villarinho; Coelho; *De Haro; *De Castro; De Padilla; *Ponce de Leon; Mendes; De la Cerda; and Forjaz.

Those marked thus * may be found in Sandoval's "Chronica del ínclito Emperador de España Alonso VII., Madrid, 1600; but I have no means of consulting that work.

4. Gules, 2 bendlets vairé arg. and sa. on a canton or, a lion couchant of the second. Are these

Has this been the custom with regard to pontifical rings when borne by bishops, and has it any affinity with the custom of kissing the Pope's slipper? I am sure a reply would be gladly welcomed by all readers of "N. & Q." A. A.

Poets' Corner.

RED LION.—In Lancashire, according to the last Directory of that county, there are eighty inns with the sign of the Red Lion. Where a lion is figured it is usually heraldically represented, and mostly rampant. In Yorkshire the sign is equally prevalent, and doubtless so in many parts of England. Whose arms are represented thereby? The Lacies, who received from the Conqueror large estates in Lancashire and Yorkshire, bore a lion rampant, but it was purp.; and the Percies, who also got many Yorkshire manors, bore, and still bear, a lion similarly represented, except it is ar. Whence, then, the Red Lion? PRESTONIENSIS.

LEGEND OF ROSAMOND QUEEN OF THE LOMBARDS.—Where may authority be found for this legend, versified in Once a-Week, No. 27, November 30th, 1861, p. 631? H. W. T.

ROYAL STANDARD.—When Charles II. landed in England to resume possession of his kingdom, what ensign did he hoist? I ask the question because I observe in one of the frescoes in the Palace at Westminster representing the event, that his majesty is depicted stepping from a barge with the Union hoisted at the stern. Now, I conceive in the first place, that the appropriate ensign, and probably that actually used, would be the royal arms; and, secondly, that if, under the circumstances of the time, that flag could not be readily supplied, but the Union was substituted, it must have been the Union Jack, consisting only of the colours of England and Scotland combined; whereas the artist in the fresco appears to have added the saltire gules, which formed no part of the national flag until the union with Ireland. I am fully aware that this sort of criticism may be regarded as idle, and as having nothing to do with the merits of the picture. I readily assent to that judgment. But when we consider the amount of observation, not only among ourselves but among foreign visitors, which our frescoes are likely to attract, it is surely desirable that they should be correct in points of detail. R. S. Q.

"SECRET HISTORY OF THE CABINET OF BONAPARTE."—A work bearing this title was published in 1808 or 1809, and went through six editions. The author was Lewis Goldsmith. It contained many scandalous stories about the family of the Bonapartes, most of which are notoriously untrue. The work would be left to perish in obscurity by every honest historian. It is, however, referred to by Francis Lieber in his Manuel of Political Ethics, an English edition of which was published by Moxon in 1839. On p. 360 of that edition he quotes in the text the following passage:—

"When Napoleon was at the summit of his power, the Archbishop of Paris wrote to his bishops in a pastoral letter: 'Servants of the altars; let us sanctify our words; let us hasten to surpass them by one word, in saying he (Napoleon) is the man of the right-hand of God.'"

Then Mr. Lieber adds in a note:—

"Goldsmith, Histoire Secrète, p. 130. Can the author have invented it? I only know it from that work. The Bishop of Amiens says in his Mandement, 'The Almighty having created Napoleon, rested from his labours.' Fabre de l'Aude, president of the tribunal, said to Napoleon's mother, 'The conception you have had, in carrying in your bosom the great Napoleon, was certainly nothing less than a divine inspiration.' It is well for us fearlessly to see how far man is ever ready to err as soon as opportunity offers. Shall we wonder that the Romans deified their emperors, and worshipped their images?"

Lieber leaves us somewhat in doubt whether he is indebted to the work of Goldsmith for the whole of these instance of glaring flattery and profanity. He uses them only as illustrations of the fulsome adulation which is often poured out on the shrine of absolute power, but it is a pity for a scientific writer to repeat such instances, unless he be satisfied of their authenticity. In the more recent histories of the Consulate and the Empire we do not find them recorded, and I have not access to the work of Goldsmith at present. As such stories have obtained currency, I quite agree with the concluding remarks of Lieber. He says:—

"I wish that some one would publish the most remarkable addresses made to Napoleon in and out of France; I wish it, that we may have them as a mirror of ourselves, for is it not our own time which committed these guilty follies?"

Can any of your readers give any authority, beyond that of Goldsmith, for the above?

T. B.

A TOWN-CLERK'S SIGNATURE.—Why does a town-clerk sign his surname as a peer would, i. e., without Christian name or initials? W. B.

LADY TEMPEST'S JURY.—I find in Woolrych's Memoirs of Judge Jeffreys—see note, p. 44—that Thwing and another were indicted for high treason at York, before Sir William Dolben; and in the course of his challenges Thwing said,—

"My Lord, I will willingly stand by the other jury.

Justice Dolben.—What Jury?

Thwing.—My Lady Tempest's Jury.

Justice Dolben.—Oh! your servant! You are either very foolish, or you take me to be so."

I wish to be informed, 1st. Who was Thwing? 2. Who was Lady Tempest? 3. To what circumstance allusion is here made? C. H.

THE TIME OF DAY.—In Bunyan's Holy War (p. 9), Religious Tract Society's edition, one of the evil spirits uses this slangy phrase:—

BOOKBINDING.—I am anxious to obtain information of any books on this subject. Below is a list of some half-dozen I have happened to have seen. Is there any Life or Memoir of Roger Payne to be had?—

Arnett, J. A. "Bibliopagia, or the Art of Bookbinding." London, 1835. 12mo.

Arnett, J. A. "An Inquiry into the Nature and Form of the Books of the Ancients, with a History of the Art of Bookbinding." London, 1837. 12mo.

Cundall, J. "On Ornamental Art applied to Modern Bookbinding." London, 1848. 4to.

"Bookbinder's Manual of Leather and Vellum Bindings, with Directions for Gilding and Marbling the Edges." 12mo.

"Bookbinder's Complete Instructor in all Branches of Bookbinding, Marbling," &c. Peterhead, 1828. 12mo. n. d.

"The Handbook of Taste in Bookbinding." London. Churton. 8vo. n. d.

G. WESTON.

Croydon.

[Our correspondent's list contains the best works on the art of bookbinding. J. A. Arnett, whose name appears to the first two books, is a pseudonym for John Hannett. The fourth and best edition of Bibliopagia, with considerable additions, was published in 1848 with the author's real names. It also contains an interesting account of Roger Payne, with a rough engraving of him at work in his den. For additional particulars of this prince of English bookbinders, consult Dibdin's Decameron; Gent's Mag., lxvii. 1070; lxxxiv. (i.) 440; Timperley's History of Printing; Chambers's Book of Days, ii. 596; and "N. & Q.," 3rd S. vi. 131.

A series of articles on "The History of Bookbinding" appeared in The Bookbinders' Trade Circular, vols. i. and ii., 1850—1859, containing some curious particulars of the art, as well as references to other works treating on this subject.]

BOARDS.—Mr. Fitzgerald, in speaking of the Sermons published by Sterne in 1767, says in a note, vol. ii. p. 327:—

"'Boards' and 'cloth' being as yet unknown, every book came out either in paper covers, like French books, or 'whole bound in calf.'"

When did boards first come into use?

MELETES.

[The most ancient boards used for binding books were of wood. About the middle of the sixteenth century, leaves of paper were pasted together for this purpose, called pasteboards, until these were succeeded by mill-boards, which appear to have come into use in the seventeenth century. This change of material effected a great improvement in the art of bookbinding.—The originator of binding in cloth was Mr. R. E. Lawson, of Stanhope Street, Blackfriars, formerly in the employ of Mr. Charles Sully, and the first book bound in cloth was a manuscript volume of music, which was subsequently purchased by Mr. Alfred Herbert, the marine artist. On this volume being shown to the late Mr. Pickering, who was at that time (1828) printing a diamond edition of "The Classics," he thought this material would be admirably adapted for the covers of the work. The cloth was purchased at the corner of Wilderness Row, St. John Street, and five hundred copies of the Diamond Classics were covered by Mr. Lawson with glue. Shakspeare's Plays were also issued in this form, and these works were the first books bound in cloth.]

THE WELSH TRIADS.—I find in two of the Triads, quoted in Jones's History of Brecknockshire (vol. i. p. 69), mention made of King Arthur as sovereign of three kingdoms, and of Cradoc as one of the officers of his court. What is the date at which the Triads are supposed to have been written, and how far are their historical statements to be relied on? T. C.

[The Cambro-British fragments called "The Triads," or metrical triplets, allude to circumstances connected with the first population and early history of our island, of which every other memorial has perished. Some are historical, whilst others are ethical, legal, and theological. Mr. Vaughan, the antiquary of Hengurt, refers them to the seventh century; and they have been noticed with respect by Camden. They were published in 1801, by the munificence of Mr. Owen Jones, and have since been edited by Mr. Probert, and their genuineness elaborately vindicated by Mr. Sharon Turner, and the Editors of the Myvyrian Archæology. Consult The Ecclesiastical Antiquities of the Cymry, by the Rev. John Williams, 8vo, 1844; and especially the notice of that work in The English Review, vol. xv. pp. 1—24, which contains a brief examination of the evidence adduced in support of the authenticity of the Welsh Triads and other ancient records.]

WATERHOUSE OF KIRTON.—In Sylvanus Morgan's Sphere of Gentry, fol., London, 1661 (p. 84, recte 82), is an engraving of the "Effigies Gilberti Aquedomus, Ang. Waterhows, de Kirton Comit. Lincoln, temp. II. III." I am anxious to know which Kirton is here meant. There are two places of that name in Lincolnshire: Kirton in Lindsey, and Kirton in Holland. P.

[In the Gentleman's Magazine, vol. lxxvi. pt. i. p. 460, Sir Gilbert Waterhouse is said to be of Kirton in Low Lindsey, co. Lincoln, which we take to be in the Holland division, divided into Upper and Lower.]

THE SUFFOLK PAPERS.—The amusing work, edited by John Wilson Croker in 1834, professes to give only a selection from the Countess of Suffolk's correspondence. Where are the rest of the papers? P.

[The original Correspondence and Papers of Henrietta Howard, Countess of Suffolk, 1712-1767, in five volumes large folio, are in the British Museum, Addit. MSS. 22,625—22,629.]

Replies.

UPCOTT'S REVISION OF 1808 FIRST FOLIO
SHAKSPEARE.(1st S. vii. 47.)

There is a notice of the reprint (1808) of the First Folio Shakspeare collated with the original by Mr. W. Upcott, who states that he found in the reprint no less than 368 typographical errors. That copy of Mr. Upcott's subsequently passed into the hands of J. W. Croker, Esq., and has recently come into my possession. On coming to examine it, I found on the first page a MS. note written by Mr. Croker. It is as follows:—

"Mr. Upcott collated this reprint most carefully with the original, and found, he says, 368 variances. I have noted all the variances in the margin of this copy from Mr. Upcott's notes. They are for the most part of little importance, and not quite so many as Mr. Upcott states; for in several places in which I myself collated this book and his notes with an original, I found he had marked variances where I found none. This copy may therefore be considered as perfect.

"J. W. CROKER."

"3 Feb. 1842."

Now, as the reprint of 1808 is really a very handsome volume, and corresponds page for page and line for line with the Original Folio, it is a pity, I think, that its value should have been unduly depreciated by Mr. Upcott's account of it. For I have been at the pains to go through his notes carefully, comparing them in each instance with the actual text of the reprint. The following is the result of my examination, by which it will be seen how few errors there are, after all, of any serious importance. In the first place, then, he has marked 42 instances of variation in some very minute or trifling point, which are found, on closer scrutiny, to be either not such in the text of the reprint, or if so, to be no deviations from the original. 23 are corrections of obvious and manifest misprints in the Original, such as all for nil, enter for entor, daughter for daughtet, and the like. No less than 50 arise from the confusion of the long s and the f (f f), which, however, in only one instance (and I have verified them all), is likely to mislead the reader. 43 variances consist solely in the punctuation—a matter of no very great moment, considering the loose way in which the text is punctuated throughout in the original. 26 arise from the omission of the dot over the letter i. 21 from capital letters being substituted for small ones at the beginning of a word, or vice versa. 15 from the letters c and e being interchanged; but this again, as in the case of f and f, is not likely to mislead the reader, the two letters being so nearly alike that he could seldom observe the difference unless it were pointed out. 10 trifling errors occur in the catchwords or headings, 12 in the paging, 7 in the omission or needless addition of the mark of apostrophe ('), 7 in words partially disjointed or else improperly joined. 6 in letters accidentally reversed, 5 in the cross stroke of the A omitted (Δ), 2 in the hyphen mark omitted, 38 in arbitrary or archaic variations in the mode of spelling words, as doe for do, oh for o, then for than, shortly for shortlie, return for returue, and the like.

We have thus about 268 variances accounted for out of Mr. Upcott's 368. The remaining hundred do not admit of being easily classified, but they consist for the most part either in some glaring, though easily distinguished blunder, as earrh for earth, supulcher for sepulcher, or in an extra vowel, as sweettly for sweetly, or the omission of a letter, as squandred for squandered, dist for didst, &c.

These being deducted, there remain about 40 material mistakes, quite sufficient indeed to convict the printers of gross carelessness in the execution of the reprint, but relieving it from the load of opprobrium which Mr. Upcott's account of it is naturally calculated to create.

Of these I now subjoin a list, for the benefit of all present and future possessors of this reprint, that they may, if they please, correct them in the margins of their copies, and thus render them, as books of reference, little inferior in value to the Original:—

Merry Wives of Windsor.

Page	Col.	Line
49	1	24	pay for pray.

Merchant of Venice.

163	2	32	me for we.
177	1	53	about for above.
178	2	19	swayes to for swayes it to.

Love's Labour's Lost.

128	1	45	ligge for jigge.
-----	---	----	------------------

All's Well that Ends Well.

242	1	44	Sir it for Sir it is.
-----	---	----	-----------------------

Twelfth Night.

261	2	13	thou for you.
266	1	23	fee for see.

Winter's Tale.

279	2	25	you for your.
ib.	2	44	on for one.
287	2	41	torment for torments.
295	1	29	faith him for faith with him.

Richard II.

27	2	20	from bottom, y for y ^t .
32	1	last,	come for comes.

Henry VI., Part I.

109	1	37	had for hath.
118	2	6	gaced for graced.

Henry VI., Part II.

129	2	11	from bottom, and five how for and five thou how.
137	2	23	from bottom, surprized for surprized,
138	2	4	life for like.
145	2	80	are for art.

Henry VI., Part III.

Page.	Col.	Line.
147	2	7	Dare for Dares.
157	2	8	from bottom, rayle him for rayle at him.

Henry VIII.

206	1	33	give for gives.
220	1	49	should for shall.

Troilus and Cressida.

81	2	4	from bottom, whar for what.
89	2	11	from bottom, sweere for sweete.
93	1	26	eave for leave.

Coriolanus.

15	1	11	from bottom, their for there.
----	---	----	-------------------------------

Romeo and Juliet.

60	1	3	then for they.
----	---	---	----------------

Timon of Athens.

89	2	3	dvet for dyet.
91	2	48	hast y more for hast y ^a more.
98	2	10	are for art.

Macbeth.

147	1	11	from bottom, nor for not.
-----	---	----	---------------------------

Hamlet.

258	2	8	from he for from the.
273	2	12	Now now for How now.
276	1		last, you for your.

King Lear.

296	2	7	from bottom, Ho for no.
-----	---	---	-------------------------

Othello.

315	2	15	from bottom, conjunctive for conjunctive.
334	1	2	do for doth.

Antony and Cleopatra.

365	1	11	uine for ruines.
-----	---	----	------------------

It will be seen, I think, that even of these forty misprints, which are the worst in the book, there are not very many which would seriously mislead the reader. There is one mistake in the Epistle dedicatory, viz. nation for nations, which I see I had overlooked. I have thus given you a faithful analysis of Mr. Upcott's list of variances, corrected by Mr. Croker, hoping it may be acceptable and useful to some of your readers. C. H. G.

Henley-on-Thames.

THE PRIOR AND THE EXPECTED DELUGE.

(3rd S. vii. 57.)

Without it can be shown that the prior of St. Bartholomew's was a much more enlightened man than the foremost of his contemporaries, there appears no reason for treating as a joke the story of his journey to Harrow with boats and provisions in anticipation of a deluge. The astrologers of the time had predicted that a grand conjunction of the planets Saturn, Mars, and Jupiter, in the sign Pisces, almost identical in character with that which produced Noah's Flood, would occur in February 1524, and be attended with most disastrous results. There can be no doubt that this prediction caused the greatest consternation, and struck terror into high and low, learned and unlearned, throughout the whole of Europe. Bayle and Moreri furnish authorities for this statement in abundance.

John Stoeffler (or Stofler), a famous mathematician and astrologer, who taught at Tubingen, first promulgated the prognostication in one of his Ephemerides, and it was supported by many of the best astronomers of the age. There were the incredulous, of course. Augustin Niphus, the amorous professor of divinity at Pisa, pooh-poohed it, and Paulus de Middeburgo, appealed to by the Duke of Urbino, "ei liquido demonstrasset, inane esse prorsus metum omnem, quem de futuro diluvio conceperat." (Naudæus.) On the other hand, the learned Cirvellus, Professor of Divinity at Alcalá, admitted the value of precautions, though he denounced as "stupid" the sacrifice of property which the terrified people, living near the sea or rivers, were making in Spain. Peter Martyr, also, when consulted by the Chancellor of Charles V., thought the alarm exaggerated, but confessed his anticipation of fearful inundations. The Emperor's General at Florence employed a physician of Ravenna to write against the book of Niphus, lest the necessary precautions should be neglected, and suggested the selection of places of safety for men and beasts during the floods.

Nicolas Peranzonus followed suit with a book published at Ancona, and containing also accounts of twenty great inundations, as did Michaelis de Petra Sancta, Professor of Metaphysics in the College at Rome. There were many other publications on this subject pro and con: the writer would be glad to receive the full titles, &c., of any known to your correspondents.

Numbers of persons in France and other parts of the Continent provided themselves with ships, or fled to the mountains with provisions. The agitation must have been most intense and lamentable.

Stoeffler's reputation was wrecked by the result. "The sun shone forth exceeding bright, and never was there a more pleasant spring."

Cardan and others make out that the prediction was a mistake, caused by Stoeffler's want of skill; and that the particular conjunction of the planets from which he drew such dire forebodings indicated fine weather. The unlucky astrologer continued to shoot his arrows, and if we may credit the storytellers, his last shot was a "bull's eye." As Bayle quotes from Seth Calvisius, Stoeffler foresaw that on a certain day he would be in great danger from something falling on his head. Feeling his own house secure, he invited some learned friends to bear him company in his study, and "while they were sitting over a moderate glass of wine, a small dispute arose, and Stoeffler, to decide the controversy, took down a book from a high shelf; but the nail was loosened; the shelf fell on his head and gave the poor old man a grievous wound, of which he died at Tübingen, on the 16th February, 1531!"

AMOS CHALLSTETH.

1. Verulam Buildings.

TRADITIONS OF AN ANTECEDENT WORLD.

(3rd S. vii. 95.)

The inquirer will find much information on this curious subject in the Præ-Adamitæ of Isaac de la Peyrère, a French Calvinist, who published the work anonymously in 1655. See also the Systema Theologicum or Præ-Adamitarum Hypothesi by the same author. The full title of Peyrère's work is—

"Præ-Adamitæ; sive exercitatio super versibus, 12, 13, et 14. capitis quinti Epistolæ Divi Pauli ad Romanos; quibus inducuntur primi homines ante Adamum conditi."

This work created a great sensation, and was translated into English the following year, under the title—

"Men before Adam; or a Discourse upon the Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth Verses of the Fifth Chapter of the Epistle of the Apostle Paul to the Romans."

For writing this book Peyrère was forcibly carried off, and immured in the Inquisition; but being a follower and librarian of the Prince of Condé, he was soon afterwards released. Several scholars wrote vigorously against Peyrère's heretical ideas, and the smaller wits assailed them with ridicule. In the Menagiana there occurs a curious instance of a man reviewing a book without ever reading it,—not an uncommon practice, by-the-way, at the present day. The writer says, "that Peyrère would have been well pleased if he had known that a Rabbi had mentioned Adam's tutor." While the truth is, that Peyrère not only notices Adam's tutor, but actually says his name was Semboecer. Peyrère, founding his work on scriptural texts, expresses his disbelief of Rabbinical fables, though he acknowledges there are some traces of truth even in fables:—

"Quamvis parum credam Rabbinorum fabulis, nihil tamen adeo fabulosum est quod non antiquam redoleat veritatem."

In relation to Peyrère's work, a laughable circumstance has lately occurred, affording considerable hilarity among literary circles during the dull days of winter. A few years past, a book was published, entitled Genesis of the Earth and Man, in which the author, though he travelled over the same ground, and even quoted the same texts as Peyrère, never once mentioned his name. Later still, this last year, another book was published of the same description, entitled Adam and the Adamite. Thereupon, the author of the first work challenged the author of the second for plagiarism; the gage was accepted, and the combat, a very lame affair, came off in The Athenæum. Though each doughty hero cuffed the other soundly, yet both, with true Spartan tenacity, held the secret intact; neither mentioned the well known name of Peyrère, but, like the cuttle-fish, purposely obscuring the water, each alluded to the French Calvinistic Protestant as an "Italian Monk." It would have been easy, even graceful, for the second author to say, in the words of a more distinguished writer, "the limits of fair appropriation are passed when the stream is purposely left sand-choked near the fountain-head;" and then the first author might have boldly and defiantly assumed the devout tone of St. Donatus, and exclaimed—"Pereant illi qui ante nos nostra dixerunt!" Or repeated the pleasanter epigram of the Chevalier d'Aceilly, thus—

"Dis-je quelque chose assez belle ?
L'Antiquité tout en cervelle
Pretend l'avoir dite avant moi.
C'est une plaisant donzelle !
Que ne venait elle après moi ?
J'aurais dit la chose avant elle."

The sect of the Pre-Adamites was founded soon after the issuing of Peyrère's work, but has long since disappeared. A few years ago I was attracted to stop a few minutes and listen to a street preacher in Brighton, through perceiving a Hebrew Bible in his hand—not knowing at the time that this is a common dodge used by the most illiterate of the street-preaching craft. The doctrine held forth seemed to me to be a mixture of Pre-Adamitism and Mormonism, and from the glibness of the speaker, and his peculiar selection of explanatory texts, I fancied he was well up in Peyrère; for the English translation, Men before Adam, though a rare, is not an uncommon work, and may frequently be picked up at an old book-stall. In the Anthropological Review, vol. ii. p. 109, there is an ably-written paper, entitled "Peyrèrius and Theological Criticism," and well worthy of notice at the present time. WILLIAM PINKERTON.

DUTCH EPITAPH: THE LEARNED FIG.

(3rd S. vi. 513.)

The subject of Major Clark's poor joke was Albert Pighe, a theologian of sufficient importance to have been fully noticed by Bayle, and to retain a place in the modern biographical dictionaries. To them I refer for his life, and shall omit what does not bear on the epitaph. He was born at Kempen in 1490, and died at Utrecht in 1542. He was a professor at Louvain and Paris, and a statesman at Rome. He wrote against the Protestants, and was groundlessly accused of Calvinistic "proclivities." Two epitaphs upon him are given by Casper Burman, but it is doubtful whether either was actually placed in the church of St. John at Utrecht, where he was buried:—

"Conditus vero dicitur in medio templi S. Johannis, et adsculpta ejus insignia cum signo sacri calicis, et super his mœandri sive gyri, et flexus hunc versiculum exhibentes:

'Pighius Albertus prepositus hic requiescit.'

Additque Valerius: 'Forte aliquando ibi lectum fuit hoc Epitaphium, Iconoclastarum rabie in Belgicis secessionibus deletum:

'Hic dormit ille Pighius mire sagax,
Mireque felix nactus ingenium, statim
Multis et amplis exerceus se dotibus.
Lovanii primum, deinde Parisiis
Variis politus artibus, ac his optimis
Romæ Hadriani factus assiduus Papæ,
Comes est, amatus, nemo quantum amabitur,
In urbe Roma Pontifici ter maximo
Paulo supremo tunc Dei Vicario;
Merito offerendus pluribus præconis,
Quod pestilentes vindicavit hæreses,
Quibus Lutherus se, viuosque perdidit,
Factos rebelles Principes Germaniæ;
Quod et paratas negligens insidias,
Catholicorum sancta dogmata,
Ecclesiæque asseruit perstrenue.
Falsas Bucer dum parat calumnias,
Paucis, sed aptis, graviter convellere,
Vix absolutis operis primordiis,
Aqua gravatus, obrutusque interente,
Scribendo summum finit vite diem.'

Hausse gives another epitaph, "hodie adhuc juxta chorum dictæ Ecclesiæ:

'Ne turba tumulum, Viator, istum,
Sed adsta reverenter, et saluta
Sacratum cinerem viri sacrati.
Ille est Pighius hoc loco sepultus,
Aures qui Batavas ita expolivit,
Ut dicas sapere Atticos lepores.
Quare tam bene dormiat, precare,
Quam docte nitideque et eleganter
Defendit Latine decus tiaræ,
Et morem statuit pium sacrorum,
Utro ut nomine debeant Latini
Plus illi addubitant; utroque certe
Ingens promeritum viri fatentur.'

Caspari Burmani, Trajectum Eruditum, pp. 263-4. Traj. ad Rhen. 1738.

Burman says that he could not find the above in that church. Most likely it never was there, as he found an inscription in prose, put up sixty years after Pighe's death, and which, from the injury of time, was very difficult to read. It is too long to quote, and there is no reason to suppose that Major Clark had seen it. Perhaps he translated from a Dutch epitaph compounded of the two which I have quoted. The book in which his appears is dated 1724; Burman's is 1738. The line, "Yet Jove disliked his voice and face," was perhaps suggested by a quotation in Bayle—

"Magnus hercle nature illudentis inverecundia, excellentem doctrinam cum illustri eloquentia conjunctam, et christiani scriptoris decus spectetur, multa infaceti oris truculentia operatum, in Alberto Pighio conspeximus. In disserendo vultus, Scythico more contusus et enormis, et aspero gutture vox educta, et graviter resonantis nasi tumultus, totam fere sapientiæ gloriam deformabant."—Paulus Jovius, Elogiis, cap. cv. p. 245, ap. Bayle, Dic. art. Pighius.

The rendering of Jovius, by Jove, is in the same taste as Pighius, by "Pig."

I cannot refer to the passage in Ward. From the subject matter, I think it probable that not Ned, but Thomas Ward is intended. After the perusal of England's Reformation, I do not think Ned will seem dull.

H. B. C.

U. U. C.

ENGLISH SOLDIERS AT THE BATTLE OF LEIPSI (3rd S. vii. 43.)—The following extracts from Carlisle's Foreign Orders of Knighthood (London, 1830), may perhaps interest GAMMA and others. The second class of the Imperial Order of S. Anne was conferred by the Emperor of Russia on Sir Wm. Congreve, Bart., "on account of the effect of the Congreve rockets at the battle of Leipsic in 1813." (P. 323.) Among the recipients of a gold medal from the King of Sweden was Lieutenant "Strangways of the Royal Artillery, who succeeded to the command of the Rocket Brigade, on the death of Captain Bogue in the neighbourhood of Leipsic, on the 19th of October, 1813." (P. 468.) The Marquis of Londonderry (then Sir Charles Wm. Stewart, K.B.) was decorated by the sovereigns of Russia, Sweden, and Prussia on account of (among other services) his gallantry "in the battles fought before Leipsic on the 18th and 19th days of October, 1813." (P. 312.) English officers and soldiers were also present at the siege of Dantzic in 1813. "Lieutenant and Adjutant Robert Gilbert, of the Royal Marine Artillery" received the fourth class of the Order of S. Vladimir, "in testimony of the approbation of his Imperial Majesty, the Emperor of all the Russias, of the signal intrepidity displayed by him in command of a corps of the Royal Marine Artillery (employed as a rocket corps), at the siege of Dantzic in the year 1813," (Pp. 317, 318.) Lieutenants George Macleod and Willoughby Montagu, both of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, Christopher Strachey, R.N., and Alexander Macdonald, R.H.A., were also similarly rewarded for their services on the same occasion.

JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

CAREY (3rd S. vi. 498) is from "cor cau," a circle, Celtic; like eye, "isle," the pupil of the eye, Saxon. In fact both names have similar significations.

J. A. DUNKIN.

ABRAHAM WOODHEAD (3rd S. vi. 475.)—Is it known whether there exists in any public or private collection, either in England or on the continent, a portrait of this distinguished writer?

LLALLAWG.

"THE MIRROR OF KNIGHTHOOD" (3rd S. vi. 310.)—I have an imperfect copy, in black-letter, of this old romance, containing the first part as far as page 170; wanting, however, the preceding pages (or rather leaves, for the right hand side only is numbered), viz., 137, 151, 152, 153, 157, 158, 160, and 176. The volume is otherwise in remarkably good condition; the title-page, dedication, and address to the reader, perfect; but it has been printed without date, the year 1595 being neatly inserted in writing by a former possessor. A long MS. note in a modern hand, is appended, from which I extract the following passage, notwithstanding its manifest inaccuracy, because it points to the whereabouts of a copy of this rare work, not mentioned in the Editor's reply to MR. WINNINGTON's query, or in Bohn's edition of Lowndes. My copy has Thomas East, not Este, as the printer's name.

"The First Part of the Mirror of Princely Deeds and Knighthood—so says the title, and adds, translated out of Spanish, but most likely is an original English composition. The date of the second part which was evidently published some time posterior to this, is 1596; the present part then we may justly suppose issued from the press of Thomas East, in 1595, and the age of the work may be, with pretty certainty, fixed at 200;* for this may be accounted an early edition, although most likely there never was other than one. All three parts are found in the library of Sir W. Dolben, Bart., at his seat at Finedon, Northamptonshire."

T. C. SMITH.

GENERAL HUGH MERCER (3rd S. vii. 40.)—Allow me to correct an error in M.'s reply as to the parentage of this general, &c. Mercer's Chronicle was not published by the "Spalding Club," but by that of the "Maitland Club, Glasgow." It is entitled The Chronicle of Perth, a Register of remarkable Occurrences chiefly connected with that City from the Year 1210 to 1668. It was printed in 1831, and presented to the members by James Maidment, Esq., Advocate. T. G. S. Edinburgh.

JACK-STONES (3rd S. vii. 34.)—When I was at Eton some twenty years ago, as was befitting such a classic spot, κατράγαιοι, κεντέλιθοι, or tali, were much in vogue as a game in the long winter evenings, when "lock-up" was early. We called both the game and the implements used in it by the same name, "knucks," clearly a contraction of knuckles, as the knuckle or hucklebones of sheep were used for the purpose. The game required much quickness of eye and hand. I never heard the term jack-stones (or, no doubt more properly, jact-stones) used in England. BRUN.

At a large school in Surrey, the knuckle bones from the legs of mutton, with which this game was there played, were called dibs. M. S.

ANONYMOUS (3rd S. vii. 74.)—Three discourses &c. The author of this sensible volume was

* From this I infer the above note was written in 1796.

Thomas Sanden, M.D. of Chichester. See the Biographical dictionary of living authors by Watkins and Shoberl, 1816. The same information was given to me by Thomas Sutton, M.D. of Greenwich in 1822 or earlier.

BOLTON CURNEY.

Barnes, S.W.

METRICAL SERMON (3rd S. vii. 70.)—In the Life of John Edwin, the comedian, it is said when he was tramping through the south of Ireland, on a professional tour, with three others, they requested him, it being a Sunday morning, to favour them with a discourse suitable to the day. He began as follows:—

"In the fifth chapter of Job, seventh verse, you will find these words,—'Man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward.' I shall divide this discourse and consider it under the three following heads: 1. Man's ingress into the world; 2. A man's progress through the world; and 3. His egress out of the world.

"1. A man's ingress into the world is naked and bare,
2. His progress through the world is trouble and care,
3. And his egress out of the world is—nobody knows where!

"To conclude,—

"If we do well here, we shall do well there;
I can tell you no more if I preach a whole year."

I suspect the Derbyshire parson to whom W. D. refers was guilty of plagiarising the witty actor.

W.

THE INSCRIPTION ON THE CROSS (3rd S. vii. 75.)—Though all the four Evangelists mention the inscription, none of them gives it in full. We collect it therefore from comparing all together. St. Luke gives the order of the three languages in which it was written, thus: Greek, Latin, and Hebrew. But St. John states it differently: Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. It is not certain that either intended to record the exact order in which the languages appeared, any more than the exact words of the inscription, of which they judged it sufficient to give the substance. It is most likely, however, that the Hebrew appeared at the top, or first in the title, as being the language of the Jews, and best understood; as in our own country we should write any inscription intended for general information, first in English, and next for the benefit of foreign visitors, in French, or German. But the remains of the original title are still to be seen at Rome, though much decayed, and with only the word Nazarenus, and the corresponding Greek word now legible. The Hebrew was at the top, but only a few faint traces of it are left. As the Hebrew was written from left to right, the Greek and Latin were written in the same way, as the Jews were accustomed so to read. The letters are in red. Now if the authenticity of this venerable relic be disputed, it must always be allowed to be of great antiquity; and the inference is just, that it was considered in the early times of the church that the Hebrew occupied the first or highest place on the title board. It may not be out of place to subjoin the comment of St. Augustin, on the adoption of the three languages:—

"Hæ quippe tres linguæ ibi præ cæteris eminebant. Hebræa propter Judæos in Dei lege gloriantes. Græca propter gentium sapientes. Latina propter Romanos, multis ac pene omnibus jam tunc gentibus imperantes." (Tract. cxvii. in Joan.)

F. C. H.

CHATEAUX IN FRANCE (3rd S. vi. 124, 190.)—No doubt there was in France as elsewhere a time when the castellated mansions of the feudal nobles were destroyed. Since that time country residences have sprung up in other parts of Europe. In England they abound. Those who have travelled abroad cannot have failed to observe that in France such residences are much more rare, and that of those that do exist many are in a dismantled and dilapidated state. How is this fact to be accounted for? I have frequently heard it attributed to the French revolution, and to the subdivision of property consequent on modern legislation. To this I reply, how then do you account for the same complaint being made by Laurence Sterne upwards of a century ago? I do not go so far as to suppose with MR. MACRAY, that Sterne may have recorded his own impressions; for I am not aware that when he wrote the first volume of Tristram Shandy he had ever been abroad. But however this may have been, I conceive it is no answer to say that Sterne's impressions were fantastical. His theories, social and political, may have been fantastical, if you please, and therefore I make no great account of the reason that he puts into the mouth of Mr. Shandy the elder. But in his perception of fact Sterne was remarkably acute, and though he may not have spoken from his own observation, I can have no doubt that his description was one of which the accuracy was so generally recognised, as to have warranted him in putting it forward as a thing about which there could be no question.

As regards the present state of things, it may be perfectly true that the Revolution, by breaking up extensive domains, may have had some effect in diminishing the number of the larger class of country residences. The great number of small proprietors must also be taken into the account; though I very much doubt whether the number of these small proprietors has been increased since the Revolution so much as is generally supposed. At all events the question still remains, whether the number of comfortable country houses is not remarkably small in proportion to the number of moderate sized estates. STAFFORD CAREY.

WORKS ON SATAN AND HIS DWELLING PLACE (3rd S. vi. 533.)—Amongst my Kentish Collections I have the following:—

"An Enquiry into the Nature and Place of Hell, showing—1. The Reasonableness of a Future State. 2. The Punishment of the next life. 3. The several Opinions concerning the Place of Hell. 4. That the Fire of Hell is not metaphorical but real. 5. The Improbability of that Fire's being in or about the Center of the Earth. 6. The Probability of the Sun's being the Local Hell, with Reasons for this Conjecture; and the Objections from Atheism, Philosophy, and the Holy Scriptures answered. By Tobias Swinden, M.A., late Rector of Cuxton in Kent. The second edition. With a Supplement wherein the Notions of Abp. Tillotson, Dr. Lupton, and others as to the Eternity of Hell Torments, are impartially represented. And the Rev. Mr. Wall's Sentiments of this learned Work."

I have given the title in full because I have never met with the book in a bookseller's Catalogue. My copy has a frontispiece, showing the face of the sun to be full of volcanoes belching forth flames and smoke. A. J. DUNKIN.

Dartford.

LANCASHIRE: OLD TIMBER HALLS (3rd S. vii. 76.)—

"Clayton Hall, surrounded by a moat in the time of Charles I., was owned by the Byron family, now Lords Byron, Barons of Rochdale. It was afterwards sold to the Cheetham family, and at the death of the late Mr. Cheetham, was inherited by Mordecai Green, Esq. His son has since parted with it to several proprietors.

"Garra Hall, in the time of Henry VII., belonged to George Trafford, Esq., and his wife Margaret, for whom the boys of the Free Grammar School in Manchester were bound to pray daily along with other benefactors."—Dr. Aiken's History of the Country round Manchester, London, 1795.

Ince Hall is near Wigan, and was formerly the property of the Gerard family, and is an interesting specimen of the half-timbered buildings once so common in Lancashire. H. FISHWICK.

WAKING TIME (3rd S. vi. 534; vii. 84.)—I believe I can now answer my own query, and, with your permission, will do so. This term had its origin amongst the weavers before the introduction of gas, when of course, during the winter, candles were used. By a figure of speech, candles were spoken of as "wicks," which in the Northern dialect becomes "wakes." Hence the time of year when it was necessary to use artificial light was called "Waking time." H. FISHWICK.

GAELIC GRAMMAR (3rd S. vii. 75.)—The ablest work on Gaelic Grammar, written by a native of North Britain, is unquestionably that by Alexander Stewart, late Minister of the Gospel at Moulin, the first edition of which was published in Edinburgh in 1801, and an improved edition in 1812. As the Highland Gaelic is essentially the same as the Irish, though it branched off as early as the sixth century, it may please HIGHLANDERS to be informed that the best grammar of the Irish—the best preserved, most cultivated, and most polished dialect of the Gael—is "A Grammar of the Irish Language, published 1845, for the use of the Senior Classes in the College of St. Columba, by the late eminent scholar Dr. John O'Donovan. I fear they are both out of print, but each them, I believe, may be obtained on application to Phelan, Bookseller, Lambeth Road, London.

J. EUGENE O'CAVANAGH.

REV. JOHN BRABANT: CHRONOGRAMS (3rd S. vii. 77.)—In the interesting editorial note upon the Rev. John Brabant, I observe these words:—

"It may be remarked, however, that P sometimes stood for 7, and that the age of John Brabant is not given, apparently, elsewhere in the inscription. P P, therefore, may have been meant to convey the information otherwise wanting, and to signify that he died aged 77. This method of indicating numbers, especially dates in letters larger than the rest of the text, is Jewish, and may be seen repeatedly in Jewish books."

This practice was not confined to the Jews. It occurs undoubtedly in Roman lapidary inscriptions. Here is one from Orellius (Inscript. Latin. N. 452):—

- Dis Manibus, Claudia Ti. Augusti L. Toreumæ annor. XVIII.

"hæc ego his denos nondum matura per annos condor humo multis nota toreuma jocis.
exiguæ vitæ spatulo felleiter acto effugi crimen longa senecta tuum."

With all modesty I am inclined to suggest that the Rev. Mr. Bedford's age may have been 55. I have no means of reference at hand, but I fancy that the majuscular P, in Greek at least, stands for five. H. C. C.

LATIN PUZZLE (3rd S. vii. 84, 85.)—The verses by Donne do not appear to come strictly within the class of Macaronics. They are a ludicrous jumble of English, Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish words, each of which stands distinct from every other. Macaronic verses are subject to the ordinary rules of scansion; but Donne's set all principles of prosody at defiance, as completely as most of the modern attempts at English hexameter. It does not, however, require any extraordinary effort to relieve CPL. from his real or pretended difficulty:

As many perfect linguists as these two distichs make,
So many prudent statesmen will this book of yours produce.

(Meaning obviously none at all.)

To me the honour is sufficient of being understood; for I have

To you the honour of being believed by no one.

This literally. The following attempt at a paraphrase may, I hope, be pardoned:—

Could these my couplets one sound linguist breed,
Then to true statesmanship your book might lead.
If I'm but understood, I aim no higher:
Be yours the honour to be deemed a liar!

But for a perfect appreciation of the author's sentiment, it is necessary to keep in view Coryat's inductive essay "On Travel in general," in which he urges the importance of visiting foreign countries towards the formation of a statesman's character. And it is not less essential to recollect the antecedent English lines of Donne, in which the Odcombian traveller is treated with a degree of severity exceeding the ordinary bounds of banter. R. S. Q.

BISHOP THOMAS SYDSEF (3rd S. vi. 356.)—I find that from my attention in this reply being directed solely to the spelling of the name, I have most unintentionally led some to suppose that the Diurnal writer was the bishop himself. It was his son, as indeed is expressly stated by Wodrow, i. 215. In a subsequent letter of Sharp's, 7th Feb. 1661, I find another notice of the Diurnalist:—

"They say they have discharged Thomas Sydserf. It is intolerable that a Papist sh^d bespatter the ministry of our church."

Sharp was then a moderate Presbyterian, but in fact attaching very little importance to the form of church government, except in so far as it might effect the tranquillity of the country in civil matters. In another letter dated the 2nd of March, after mentioning that it had been proposed in the Articles (a Committee of the Scotch Parliament by which all the business to be brought before the House was arranged) to repeal the Acts against Episcopacy, he observes:—

"If those Acts be rescindit, what confusion will be upon us. Bishop Sydserf may come and demand his place in Parliament."

GEORGE VERE IRVING.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Practical Dietary for Families, Schools, and the Labouring Classes. By Edward Smith, M.D., LL.B., F.R.S. (Walton & Maberly).

This is an excellent and most opportunely published little work, on a subject, the great importance of which is only just becoming fully recognised. Dr. Smith was already known for his researches on subjects connected with diet, when he was entrusted by the medical department of the Privy Council with the task of inquiring into the dietary of the poorer classes throughout the kingdom, and the opportunities afforded by this extensive investigation have made him probably the first authority on the subject in this country. The design of the present work cannot be better explained than by stating, in the words of the Preface, that it is "intended to be a guide to heads of families and schools in their efforts to properly nourish themselves and those committed to their care, and also to clergymen and other philanthropists who take an interest in the welfare of our labouring population." The style is popular and little encumbered with technicalities, even in the more scientific parts, and the whole character of the book is essentially practical.

Libraries and Founders of Libraries. By Edward Edwards. (Trübner & Co.)

Mr. Edwards has been very fortunate in his choice of a subject; for it would be difficult to find topics of greater literary interest than Libraries and Founders of Libraries. A small portion of the book, some thirty pages, had previously been published in the Encyclopædia Britannica, but with that exception, the contents of the present volume are now published for the first time, and have been based upon documents heretofore unused, and upon personal examination of the principal Collections which are here described. An outline of the contents of the volume will show the reader how much curious information he will find in it. After an introductory Sketch of the Ancient Libraries of Egypt, Judæa, Greece, and Rome, Mr. Edwards gives us an account of the more remarkable Libraries, both abroad and at home. The Libraries of famous Authors next occupies his attention, and he furnishes curious notices of the Libraries of Plutarch, Boccaccio, Montaigne, De Thou, Grotius, Swift, Goethe, Scott, Southey, and De Quincey. The Royal Libraries of Isabel of Bavaria, Catherine de Medicis, Charles I., Frederick the Great, Napoleon, &c., are then reviewed, and the seventh chapter is devoted to the Old Royal Library of the Kings of England. The History of the State Papers and the Public Records of the Kingdom follows; and three chapters, devoted respectively to the Macclesfield Library at Shirburn Castle, the Sunderland Library at Blenheim, and the Spencer Library at Althorp, conclude the work.

A History of the Clanna-Rory or Rudicians, descendants of Roderick the Great, Monarch of Ireland. Compiled by Richard F. Cronelly, Constabulary Reserve Force. (Goodwin & Co., Dublin.)

A History of the Clan Eoghan, or Eoghanachts, descendants of Eugene the Great. By Richard F. Cronelly, Irish Constabulary Force. (Goodwin & Co. Dublin.)

We do not pretend to criticise or review these, the first two Parts of what promises to be a very curious Collection of Irish Family History. A glance shows the labour which its author—a member be it remarked of the Irish Constabulary Force—has bestowed upon it. All Celtic Antiquaries, especially all Irish Antiquaries, we had almost said all Irish men, would, we should think, be glad to aid by their subscriptions (the price of each Part is but 1s. 6d.) the patriotic labours of so intelligent a Constabulary Officer as Mr. Cronelly.

A Selection of Papers on Subjects of Archaeology and History. By the Rev. John Kenrick, M.A. (Longman.)

In these seven Papers communicated to the Yorkshire Philosophical Society by their excellent Curator of Antiquities, which treat of the Knights Templars in Yorkshire; Historical Traditions of Pontefract Castle; The Relation of Coins to History; The Cause of the Destruction of Classical Literature; The Recovery of Classical Literature; The Reign of Trajan; Roman Waxed Tablets; and New Year's Day in Ancient Rome—Mr. Kenrick displays considerable learning, and tells what he has to say very pleasantly.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—

The Irrationale of Speech. By a Minute Philosopher. (Longman.)

The reprint of an article from Fraser, which ought to be read by all Stammerers, and all who have to speak in public.

The Songs of Robert Burns. (Bell and Daldy.)

Tales of a Traveller. By Washington Irving. (Bell & Daldy.)

The time for criticising the Songs of Burns, or Washington Irving's Tales of a Traveller, has long since passed away. We can therefore only announce these handsome editions of them in Bell & Daldy's English Elzevirs.

Webster's Complete English Dictionary, thoroughly revised and improved. By C. A. Goodrich and Noah Porter. Part II. (Bell & Daldy.)

We are glad to see the Second Part of this cheap and excellent Dictionary.

We regret to announce the death, on Saturday last, of the Rev. Thomas Lathbury, Author of The History of the Non-Jurors; The History of the Book of Common Prayer, and other similar works. Mr. Lathbury, who was a frequent contributor to "N. & Q.," was in his sixty-sixth year, and was, we believe, the possessor of an extremely curious Library.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

COLLECTION OF ALL THE REMARKABLE AND PERSONAL PASSAGES IN THE BRITON, NORTH BRITON, AND AUDITOR. 1766.
GENERAL COCKBURN'S (DIMENTATION ON HANNIBAL'S PASSAGE OVER THE ALPS. (Privately printed). Dublin, 1845.
THE HIBERNIAN MAGAZINE FOR 1771, 1772, 1773.
THE LONDON MUSEUM OF POLITICS, MISCELLANEA, AND LITERATURE. 4 Vols. 8vo. 1769, 1770.
A COLLECTION OF LETTERS ON GOVERNMENT, LIBERTY, AND THE CONSTITUTION. 3 or 4 Vols. 1774. Almon.
A COLLECTION OF MOST INTERESTING POLITICAL LETTERS, PUBLISHED IN 1763. 4 Vols. Almon.
A COLLECTION OF ESTEEMED POLITICAL TRACTS, 1764, 1765, and 1766. 3 or 4 Vols. Almon, 1766.
VOX SENATUS. 1771.
WILKES' SPEECHES. 3 Vols.
THE EXPOSTULATION; A POEM. Bingley, 1768.
JUNIO DISCOVERED BY P. T. 1769.
REASONS FOR REJECTING THE EVIDENCE OF MR. ALMON. 1807.

 Letters stating particulars and lowest price, carriage free, to be sent to Mr. W. G. SMITH, Publisher of "NOTES & QUERIES," 21, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Notices to Correspondents.

K. R. C. Richardson's Dictionary. 3 vols. 4to, contains quotations from our standard writers illustrating the various meaning of each word.

 The similarity referred to by our Correspondent has, we think, been frequently noticed.

WHITMORE OF WHITMORE. Shem will send Mr. Whitmore a private answer to his query on this subject.

E. J. ROBERTS. The Register of Burials at Bunhill Fields, collected at immense labour and expense by Dr. Kippon and his son, are now in the College of Arms.

H. FENWICK will find in our 1st S. vi. 358; viii. 242, some interesting Notes on—

"The conscious water saw its God and blushed."

VALENTINE'S DAY. "One who wishes to know" should consult "N. & Q." 1st S. v. 198; vii. 523; x. 5, &c.

A. F. BARTON. The beautiful proverb, "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," made so popular by Sterne, is fully illustrated in our 1st S. i. 211, 226, 325, 337, 418; vii. 198.

J. WOODWARD. Some accounts of the Emir Pacardín will be found in the Biographie Universelle, ed. 1856, xiii. 338, and the Nouvelle Biographie Générale, ed. 1856, xvii. 27, art. "Fakhr-eddyn." Consult also Zucc's Cyclopedie, art. "Ormus." These notices of the Emir state that he visited the Court of the Medici at Florence.

C. W. King Henry VI. clearly intended his foundation at Eton to be collegiate from the first, which would of course include the perpetual celebration of Divine service. The earliest act of the King respecting his projected College was his "Procuratory," dated Sept. 12, 1440, printed in Ackermann's History of the College, p. 13. — Abp. Laud was buried under the altar of the church of Allhallows Barking; but on July 31, 1660, his body was removed to St. John's College, Oxford. See "N. & Q." 2nd S. iii. 3.

ERRATA IN OUR last number. — Page 120, col. i. for "Thomas" Hallstone read "Edward." — Page 116, col. ii. line 12, Farmer's Essay first appeared in 1775, not 1755.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES FOR SIX MONTHS, forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the English yearly Index) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 21, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., to whom all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

CURE OF ASTHMATIC COUGH AT THE AGE OF EIGHTY-FIVE. — DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS. — "WM. Taylor, The Cape, N.H., who, aged eighty-five, says he for many years suffered from a husky, asthmatic cough. To get rest at night was almost out of the question, although he tried many things; but for the last four years, since he commenced taking the Wafers, he can insure a good night's rest, no witness, R. Brown, Chemist, 66, Spring Hill, Birmingham." Price 1s. 1jd., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. per box, of all Druggists.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 165.

NOTES:—Epigrams, 147—"The Mother of the Weasleys," 148—Sir James of Ormonde, 149—Six Hundred Years old—Curious Seal—Incongruous Sayings—"No Man is a Hero to his Valet-de-Chambre"—Milton and his Illustrator—Curious Origin of a Christian Name—English Beards—Calvin—The Cat—Conventual Discipline in the Middle Ages—Shakespeare Family—First American Steamboat—The Venality of Chatterton—Elma, a Female Christian Name—Adverbs improperly used, 150.

QUERIES:—Civil War Sermons, MS. 152—John Anderson, Founder of Fernoy, &c.—Calamy's "Abridgment," Chap. ix.—Church Desertion—"God us Ayde"—Edmund Hoyle—"Is the Times"—Infantry in Line—"Jean-François, les Bleus"—Young Johnson—Longevity: Miss Mary Billinge upwards of 112—Lord Macaulay's Ancestry—Lady Marjory Murray—The Netherlands—"Oh, oh, ray, oh Amborah"—Puritan Pew—Quotations—Pewterers' Company—Practices of the Romish Church—Sam Sharpe, &c., 153.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—"Collection of Political Tracts"—Latin Names of Towns—Cromwell: Palinurus—Dissectors' Colleges or Public Schools—"Not Proven"—Rev. George Secker—Paramatta, 154.

REPLIES:—Derivation of the Word Mistletoe, 157—Is it a Fossil? 159—Symbolism of Colours in Heraldry, 159—Winthrop Family, 160—The Church of England and Ireland, 16.—Jacobite Song, 161—Barley, 163—Invoice of Cargo, 1833: a Business Communication—Tithe Barns—William Alexander—Mum—Herefordshire Queries: Tump and Toft—The Quaker's Disceus—Magna Charta—Arms of a Conquered Knight—My—Cuddy: Man, Bird, and Beast, &c., 164.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

EPIGRAMS.

In this month's Quarterly Review (No. 233), in a pleasant article on "Epigrams," it is remarked:

"How many a drawer in a scholar's escritore contains, if we might rifle it, buried treasures of this kind, thrown off, perhaps, in lightness of mood, passed about to a friend or two, and then laid by and forgotten. . . . It is a pity that these are not more carefully caught up, as they drop, and communicated on the spur of the moment to Notes and Queries, where, at least, they would attain a longer and larger fame than their careless and indifferent progenitors have cared to secure for them."

I lately found in a book-shop a MS. volume by a Westminster scholar, H. H. dated 1840, containing a good many epigrams. Most of them are verifications of Irish bulls or well-known jokes; but some of them appear to be original. I transcribe a specimen of the different sorts. I have no clue to the author:—

"Per natus omne notis inscripta tabella legendis,
'Hos,' monet, 'insidiæ mille tumentur agros.
Hic filo presso, illic ferro, fata lacesces
Imprudens. Homines, vosque cavete, canes!'
Sic loca servantur, sic servatoribus ipsis
Tatis per tates vix licet ire vias."

"Fronti nulla fides.

"Nulla fides fronti. Ergo aversa fronte sacerdos Præcinit ante aram stans Puseyita fidem."

Inventis felix utiliter.

"Angulo in obscuro parvus Johannulus Horner
Artocreas, ut fert fama, sedebat edens;
Integrum et extrudens inserto pollice prunum,
'Heus!' exclamat ovans, 'sum bonus herede puer!'"

Μεταβολή πάντων γλυκό.

"Quis ferat hos, inquit piscis, sartaginis æstus?
Et saltu gratam quarit in igne vicem."

Ὁὐ πάντων μεταβολή γλυκό.

"Bos meus, invitus fateor, laceravit in agro Communi taurum sævus, amice, tuum.
'Ergo restituas.' 'Erravi: bos tuus est, qui Occidit nostrum.' 'Res meditanda magia.'"

Non tentanda via est.

"Cauta nimis mater puero: Noli, nisi postquam Nōris nare, tuum credere corpus aquæ."

Crescit res.

"Ante reformatum radicali arte senatum
Ad rem cernendam nox erat una satis.
Nunc conscriptorum gravior sapientia patrum,
Evolvit sese quinto operosa die."

Sane [Sawney] nollem hinc exitum.

"Sawney so fat in prison grows
On wheaten bread and water,
That, dreading oatmeal, he avows
His guilt in a manslaughter."

"The elm-trees in St. James's Park
Were daily losing all their bark,
At which whoever look'd, or
From which whoever broke a piece,
He might the excavations trace
Of Scolytus destructor."

"The ranger, knowing not what jaws
The insect uses when he gnaws,
Thought such tree-royal killing
By soldiers' bayonets must be done,
As if the guardsmen every one
Had not enough of drilling."

Ex fumo dare lucem.

(On seeing some of my Scraps burned.)

"Though dull my wit, my verses heavy stuff,
That you make light of them is clear enough."

JAMES HAMILTON.

GLEANINGS FROM AUSONIUS.—Having occasion to look over the Epigrams of this writer, who is not much read, I venture to think that a few specimens of his style may not be unacceptable to the readers of "N. & Q." The first epigram I shall select is very like the Facetia of Hierocles—that is in spirit, for its matter is quite original. The rhetor is just the scholasticus perpetuating a fresh absurdity:—

"Rufus vocatus rhetor ad nuptias,
Celebri (fit ut) convivio,
Grammaticæ ut artis se peritum ostenderet,
Hæc vota dixit nuptiis;
Et masculini et feminini gignite
Generisque neutri filios."

"A pedant, when a wedding guest,
The bride and bridegroom thus addressed:
'O may your union favoured be
With children of the genders three!'"

The following epigram is an amplification of a maxim I have seen, whether older than Ausonius or not I cannot tell: Bene cœpisse est dimidium facti. The first word, which Ausonius has not, perhaps makes the maxim truer than the distich:

"Incipe: dimidium facti est, cœpisse. Supersit Dimidium: rursum hoc incipe; et efficies."

"Only begin; the half is done;
Begin again: all will be won."

The next epigram also embodies a well-known and valuable maxim, Bis dat qui dat cito,—Who gives at once, gives more than once:—

"Si bene quid facias, facias cito: nam cito factum Gratum erit: ingratum gratia tarda facit."

"Give quickly that your gift may please;
A tardy gift will rather tease."

I give, but not in English verse, the following recipe for a drink of nine ingredients, which seems to have been famous. The distich is remarkable for its happy condensation:—

"Dodralis Potio.

"Dodra vocor. Quæ causa? Novem species gero. Quæ sunt?

Jus, aqua, mel, vinum, panis, piper, herba, oleum, sal."

LAURENCE MACKENZIE.

EPIGRAM AGAINST ARCHITECTS (3rd S. vii. 97, 119.)—If M. P. and A. A. will turn to the old-fashioned book, Gay's Fables, they will find in the second part (Fable 14) this couplet:—

"Make him (nor think his genius checkt)
A herald, or an architect."

Where the poet names Martial as his suggester, and where the allusion is evidently made to some occupation suitable for a dull boy. Having always had a strong turn for both heraldry and architecture, I remember in my young days thinking that there must be some error in the rendering, and fancying it to mean "an emblazoner or a brick-layer," or builder at the best.

Z. Z.

Is your excellent correspondent A. A. quite serious in saying that "durus ad studia" means a hard student. To me—and if I am mistaken I shall be glad to be corrected—it seems to convey a very opposite idea. Certainly the passage referred to in Cicero, Orat. pro Archia Poetâ, will not support him in that assertion. I conceive the explanation in Facciolati is right (edit. Schneeb. 1831, fol.), which I will quote—"Durus ad aliquid est qui alicujus rei nullâ delectatione capitur," and he cites the very passage (Cic. Arch.) "Ipsi illi C. Mario, qui durior ad hoc studia videbatur, jucundus fuit." Nor can I agree with A. A. that "ingenium durum" is best explained by the term "hard-headed," which we use in the more favourable sense, implying intellectual solidity, compass, and power. So to construe it would take away the whole point of Martial's epigram. The meaning of the epigrammatist surely is—"If your boy is a slow coach," a regular stupid (to use common expressions), "make him into an architect." And so the Delphin commentator (edit. Smid. Amst. 1701, 8vo), "Si puer videatur mentis stupidæ, efficias illum præconem aut architectum;" and in this explanation the other commentators on Martial whom I have met with seem to concur.

JAS. CROSSLEY.

AUTHOR OF EPIGRAM.—In an article on "Epigrams," in the current number of the Quarterly Review, the reviewer refers to a couplet of Sir Thomas More's—

"If evils come not, then our fears are vain;
And if they do, fear but augments the pain,"— as "an equivalent for only two lines of an epigram which in the Latin consists of four":—

"Cur patimur stulti? namque hæc recordia nostra
Urat ut indomitus pectora nostra metus.
Seu mala non venient, jam nos metus urit inanis;
Sin venient, aliud fit metus ipse malum."

Whose is this epigram? Perhaps Milton had it in his mind when he wrote (Comus):—

"Peace, brother, be not over exquisite
To cast the fashion of uncertain evils.
For grant they be so, while they rest unknown,
What need a man forestall his date of griefs,
And run to meet what he would most avoid?
Or if they be but false alarms of fear,
How bitter is such self-delusion."

BRIGHTLING.

"THE MOTHER OF THE WESLEYS."

The foregoing is the title of an exceedingly pleasant volume by the Rev. John Kirk, Wesleyan Minister, much of the matter being of course derived from Dr. Clarke's charming account of The Wesley Family. My present object, however, is not to review either of these books, but merely to make a few remarks on the portrait of the excellent and remarkable woman above named. Several years ago, the late Mr. Tegg published an edition of Wesley's Philosophy, as revised by the Rev. Samuel Dunn; and prefixed to this work was a portrait with the name of Susanna Wesley. Being a very pleasing face of a young woman, and bearing such a name, it was not only highly thought of by the Methodists generally, but by other persons who felt an interest in one of the most remarkable families of its class. I well recollect a framed impression of this print, which for years hung in the sitting-room of the poet James Montgomery, and often diverted his admiration from the fine engraving of Stothard's "Canterbury Pilgrims," which occupied an adjacent space. I had from the first, and for several reasons, grave doubts as to the genuineness of a picture which was so little like what one would expect of the daughter of good Dr. Annesley, the old Nonconformist minister; and still less, as I thought, either like, or likely to have been painted for the worthy rector of Epworth. Opportunity occurring, I mentioned these doubts to Mrs. Smith, one of the daughters of Dr. Clarke, and she asserted that the engraving was from a portrait with which she had long been familiar, of Miss Gwynne, a sister to Mrs. Charles Wesley. How it came to be used as I have stated; and why it continued to be so used after the mistake—if mistake there was—became manifest, I do not know. But now for the genuine portrait. Some time since, a painting of an elderly lady turned up in London, which the owner said had always been regarded and prized as the mother of the founder of Methodism: the look of the person represented, and history of the picture pointing towards its probable authenticity. The only prima facie feature of doubt being the occurrence of the towers of Westminster Abbey represented as seen through a window. After due inquiry, an old engraving of the picture was met with; and it turned out, on further evidence, that this was an undoubted, as it is a most pleasing original likeness of Mrs. Wesley, taken at a venerable age, for her son Samuel, when he was master of Westminster School: hence the characteristic accessories. This very interesting portrait, which, if I recollect rightly, is in the possession of Mr. Morley, of Leeds, has latterly been engraved in more than one size and style. It represents the good woman in a close-fitting full-bordered cap, suiting her sweet and saintly face: a white neckerchief; and long black silk mittens. I have been led to record these particulars in consequence of the interest I feel in the notices of and inquiries after original portraits of the Rev. John Wesley. Curiously enough, the "official portrait," now prefixed to most of the Wesleyan publications, is a compilation made by the late John Jackson, R.A., from all the accessible originals! A plan which, I must think—the very flattering result in this case, notwithstanding, and, as I said to the artist—exactly adapted to miss the truth and discredit the trustworthiness of portraiture. D.

SIR JAMES OF ORMONDE.

There is a seal among those shown to visitors in the British Museum, which the authorities have labelled as belonging to "James Dormont, Ent., Captain of Gournay, 1441;" a designation which is, perhaps, correctly extracted from the accompanying document, but which will hardly enable a casual observer to identify the owner.

James Butler, son and heir to the fourth Earl of Ormond, born in 1420, was knighted with King Henry VI. in 1420. Youthful as he was, his sovereign was even younger. In 1440, he is stated by Hall, who calls him Sir James of Ormond, to have accompanied the Duke of York to France, of which that prince had been made regent. Gournay, of which he was probably then appointed captain, was an important place; and six years previously an English force under the Earl of Arundel had suffered a serious repulse there, the earl himself being wounded and made prisoner. In 1449, Holinshed names "the Lord Butler, sonne to the Earl of Ormond," as left in the hands of the French as an hostage. In the same year he was created, viti patris, Earl of Wiltshire; was advanced to the Lord High Treasurership of England in 1455; and was also elected a Knight of the Garter; but, being made prisoner after Towtonfield, he was beheaded on May 1, 1461, and afterwards attainted.

The seal bears the arms of his ancient house differenced with a label, and he uses on it, like modern eldest sons of peers, the supporters belonging to the title to which he was heir apparent. When did the further use of the father's second title, and its distinguishing coronet, become general? Hotspur, who flourished at about this time, is not known as Lord Percy. Holinshed, as already noted, calls this Sir James "the Lord Butler," but I think incorrectly. The Earls (and Marquesses) of Ormond, whose second title of Viscount Thurles was conferred in 1537, do not use that of Butler, though they sat as magnates in the Irish Parliament before they were created earls.

Their sons, however, and those of the Earls of Desmond are frequently designated by the title instead of the patronymic of their family. In the case of the Desmonds, this custom continued until the destruction of that great house in the reign of Elizabeth. In the present instance we find it in use even after a distinct peerage had been conferred. Thus Hardyng, in cap. ccxxxviii. of his metrical Chronicle, naming those who adhered to Henry VI. after the battle of St. Albans, includes "Sir James Ormond, Erle of Wiltshire"; and when the brother and eventual heir of this nobleman, Thomas, seventh Earl of Ormond, was summoned to the English House of Lords, the writ was addressed to "Thomas Ormond de Rochford." Whence did this custom arise? Unless as a mark of illegitimacy, I do not remember meeting any instance of it among English noble families, except that of Arundel. It was not practised by the Kildare Geraldines, the equals and rivals of the houses of Ormond and Desmond in Ireland, and is rather opposed to the Celtic ideas of a community which deemed it a higher distinction to be "The O'Brien" than to be Prince, or perhaps, King, of Thomond. S. P. V.

SIX HUNDRED YEARS OLD.—A communication in "N. & Q." (3rd S. iii. 248) has brought me into trouble with the Standard of January 11th, which, in a leader on "Centenarianism," makes me relate that there is a man at Smyrna 600 years old, and that the governor-general knew it was true, "for he was present at his birth."

As neither Capt. Burton, nor any of the Mekkahites, has explained my note, I have now made inquiries, and am informed by Halikejee Hajji Ali Effendi, a very respectable and intelligent gentleman, that he met at Mekkah persons who had seen the aged Sheikh, that he lives in the Turkish province of Habesh in Abyssinia, about 40 hours (100 to 140 miles) from the sea; that notwithstanding his assumed age, he was in full possession of his faculties, and was very affable to strangers and foreigners. I have no doubt that my first hypothesis is right, and that this is a case of the succession of aged sheikhs like lamas. Ali Effendi says there are no cases of reputed extraordinary age at Mekkah, but that at Medinah there are many people of one hundred or thereabouts.

HYDE CLARKE.

Smyrna, 27 Jan. 1865.

CURIOUS SEAL.—The impression in gutta percha of a curious mediæval seal was lately sent me for explanation. It is well-preserved, of oval form, and represents a female and a youth standing, each bearing a palm branch; and a nimbus surrounds the head of each. Underneath is the figure of a religious kneeling. The legend round the seal is as follows: s'POSITI . SCI . QVIRICI . ASTEN . ORDIS . HVILIATOR. I have given the inscription in Roman letters; but the characters on the seal are Lombardic. This seal is curious from having belonged to a religious congregation long since suppressed and abolished. It was that of the Humiliati, founded in 1017, confirmed by Pope Innocent III. in 1200, but abolished by Pope St. Pius V. in 1571, on account of the nefarious attempt of three of its members to assassinate St. Charles Borromeo. The superior of each House of this congregation was styled Provost; and this seal belonged to the convent of St. Quiricus, at Asti in Sardinia. Hence the inscription is in English: The seal of the Provost of Saint Quiricus, at Asti, of the Order of the Humiliati. The figures on the seal are St. Julitta and her young son St. Quiricus, or Cyr; and the religious kneeling below represents the Provost wearing the cap, or bonnet peculiar to that congregation.

F. C. H.

INCONGRUOUS SAYINGS.—These are no novelties. In the excellent edition of Reynard the Fox, published by the Percy Society, p. 54, the hero says:—

"Ye, my Lord, the Kynge, ye be also nyghe that as fro Rome to Maye."

The note quotes a French saying, "entre Maubeuge et la Pentecôte," and an English expression, "From the first of April to the foot of Westminster Bridge."

I have heard from some of the old four-in-hand whips, who prided themselves on their driving and their knowledge of town, that it used to be a sort of catch-question to a tyro in the art who might be talking of places and distances—"How far is it from the foot of Westminster Bridge to the 12th of August?"

The initiated would reply in a moment about two hundred yards. I have been told it was at this distance on the Surrey side that George IV. when Prince met Rodney in state when returning from sea after his victory over De Grasse. It is said the greeting of the former to the latter was, "Welcome, Rodney, to the Prince of Wales." Immediately after this a large public-house was built close to the spot, over the door of which were placed the portraits of the prince and the admiral, inscribed with the words of welcome stated above, and the date of the meeting. Very shortly after, the house was popularly known by the name of the date—"The 12th of August;" and thus to the habitués of London it was as much a locality as the foot of the bridge itself, and might be measured accordingly.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

"NO MAN IS A HERO TO HIS VALET-DE-CHAMBRE."—The origin of this well-known phrase may be as old as Antigonus, who, on a poet flattering him with the title of the Son of God, answered—"My servant knows the contrary."

FRANCIS TRENCH.

Islip.

MILTON AND HIS ILLUSTRATOR.—In the volume of woodcuts illustrating Milton's noble poems, "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso," issued some years ago by the Council of the Art-Union of London to the subscribers, the designer of engraving V. seems quite to have misapprehended the allusion contained in two lines of the former poem; the two latter in the extract here given:—

"While the ploughman, near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land;
And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his scythe,
And every shepherd tells his tale
Under the hawthorn in the dale."

The student of Milton needs not to be reminded that the expression, "tells his tale," as here employed by the poet, refers to the shepherd's practice of counting his flock. The artist, under the impression that a tale of love is implied, has represented the amorous swain engaged in breathing tender words into the ear of his fair one, whose waist he encircles with his arm.

I know not whether this misinterpretation of our great poet's meaning has been before pointed out. It certainly ought not to be permitted to pass unnoted.

T. N.
Bacup.

CURIOUS ORIGIN OF A CHRISTIAN NAME.—I extract the following paragraph from a sister periodical published at New York, called the Historical Magazine and Notes and Queries of America, Feb. 1864, p. 71:—

"In Canada Delima is a common and rather a pretty name for girls. Its origin would not easily be suspected. A clergyman from France had a child brought to him to baptize, and was requested to christen it by this name. 'This is not a fit name,' was his reply. 'You should give her the name of some saint.' 'But, M. le Curé, it is a saint's name.' 'No; there is no such saint in the calendar.' 'Why, M. le Curé, don't you know Ste Rose de Lima?' He certainly did, and found that people finding Rose de Lima too long, dropped Rose, and ran Delima together.—A."

P.

ENGLISH BEARDS.—The following note on this subject will not be considered ill-timed in the year 1865. The second half of our century having witnessed so remarkable a revolution of fashion from those days when the daily attendance of a barber with his razor was deemed indispensable. An able biographical work of contemporary biography was commenced in 1798 by Richard Phillips (afterwards Sheriff of London and Sir Richard), under the title of British Public Characters, and was continued for a considerable period in yearly volumes. In the first volume is a memoir of Matthew Robinson, then Lord Rokeby, to which is prefixed (pp. 494-496) a Prefatory Dissertation on Beards, concluding with the following passage:—

"These preliminary remarks will not appear totally misplaced, perhaps, to such as are acquainted with the person of the noble lord whose memoirs are here offered to the public, as his beard forms one of the most conspicuous traits of his person; and he is the only peer, and perhaps the only gentleman of either Great Britain or Ireland who is thus distinguished."

Is there any engraved portrait of this Lord Rokeby?

At a much later date Mr. Muntz, the member for Birmingham, was long regarded as a singular example of a bearded Englishman: and I can well remember the time when a beard in the streets of London could only be supposed to be the property of some Turk or Oriental, or of the rabbis of the Jewish church.
J. G. N.

CALVIN.—I have heard the name of the great Geneva Reformer quoted as if derived from Calvus, as though it meant Baldhead, or Baldy; but surely it represents rather Calidum vinum, from the French form Chaurin, i. e. Chaud-vin.
O. T. D.

* Two engraved portraits of Lord Rokeby occur in Emm's Catalogue of Portraits, vol. i. p. 295.—ED.]

THE CAT.—I saw it stated recently, in the Intellectual Observer, that the modern name of this animal is Teutonic. Without denying this, allow me to say, that I some time since asked a Nestorian, a native of north-western Persia, what the cat was called by his people; and he answered, "Catto." This is the pronunciation; and, to prevent mistake, I asked him to write it down in Syriac characters. He did so, and with the same result.
B. H. C.

CONVENTUAL DISCIPLINE IN THE MIDDLE AGES. St. Bernard, who flourished in the twelfth century, and who occupies a high rank in the Romish calendar for his piety and austere sanctity, has left in his works a series of letters to a nun, De modo bene vivendi, giving her rules of conduct in all the duties of her monastic life.

In his chapter, "De Disciplinâ," he thus exhorts her:—

"Amabilis mihi Soror, melius est tibi manu Abbatissæ vel Priorissæ flagellis cædi quam in Inferno penas pati; melius est tibi manu Abbatissæ vel Priorissæ flagellari in hac vitâ quam in Inferno cruciari in futuro; melius est tibi manu Abbatissæ flagellis verberari quam in Inferno torqueri; melius est tibi manu Abbatissæ temporaliter affligi virgulis quam cremari æternis incendiis."

Which may be briefly rendered—My amiable sister, it is much better for you to endure the wholesome smart of the rod from the hand of the abbess, than to suffer eternal torments hereafter.

None ever understood human nature better than the heads of the Catholic church, and they well knew that wherever strict discipline was required and the stubborn will brought into subjection, no means were so prompt and efficacious, with so little permanent injury to the sufferer, as moderate corporal punishment. There is not a matron in any of our gaols or houses of correction who does not deplore that the over-refinement of this age does not allow her to enforce order among the unruly and abandoned females she has to control, by the infliction of a whipping with a birch rod, which would effect more than days of solitary confinement in dark cells.
C. M.

SHAKESPEARE FAMILY.—Perhaps the following extract from Aubrey's Natural History of Wiltshire (written about the year 1680) may interest your readers:—

"Jo. Shakespeare's wife, of Worplesdowne, in Surrey, a North Wiltshire woman, and an excellent huswife, does assure me that she makes as good cheese there as ever she did at Wraxhall or Bitteston, and that it is merely for want of art that her neighbours do not make as good."

C. J. R.

FIRST AMERICAN STEAMBOAT.—I trust the following authentic notice of the first ship navigated by steam in American waters may claim a remembrance in "N. & Q.":—

"FULTON'S STEAMBOAT.—In a speech in New Orleans recently, Jacob Barker mentioned incidentally that when Robt. Fulton's machinery for the first steamboat came from the manufactory in England to New York, it was consigned to him, and that it actually remained in the commission warehouse six months before the money could be raised to pay the charges of importation."

W. W.

Malta.

THE VENALITY OF CHATTERTON.—Chatterton's sister, a Mrs. Newton, in a letter first published in the pamphlet entitled Love and Madness, thus vindicates her brother's morality:—

"My brother would frequently walk the College Green (Bristol) with the young girls that stately paraded there to show their finery; but I really believe he was no debauchee, though some have reported it; the dear unhappy boy had faults enough: I saw with concern he was proud, and exceedingly imperious: but that of Venality he could not be justly charged with."

This is a curious use of a common word: the good lady evidently derived it from Venus.

X. Y. Z.

ELMA, A FEMALE CHRISTIAN NAME.—The following passage occurs in The Historical Magazine and Notes and Queries of America, September, 1864, p. 312. It ought to be reproduced in "N. & Q." :—

"In London Notes and Queries (3rd S. v. p. 97) an enquiry is made as to the origin of Elma, the Christian name of a daughter of the Earl of Elgin. The querist supposes it formed from the initial syllables of her mother Elizabeth Mary. In this country the name exists, but is an abbreviation of Gulielma. The victim of the Manhattan Well murder in New York, many years since, was Elma Sands, whose real name was Gulielma."

P.

ADVERBS IMPROPERLY USED.—Bartlett, in his amusing Dictionary of Americanisms (p. 28 of the Introduction), protests against the use of adverbs where idiomatic usage requires an adjective, as "I feel very badly," "you look charmingly," &c. "So that," he continues, "we may expect soon to hear 'She seems ignorantly;' 'he became quite crazily,' &c.; and to be unable any longer to make the distinction between 'He feels warmly,' and 'he feels warm.'"

He should have added that this usage is common in Shakspeare. Thus, in As You Like It, we have—

"You look merrily."—Act II. Sc. 8.

"Looks he as freshly."—Act III. Sc. 2.

And in Julius Cæsar—

"Look fresh and merrily."—Act II. Sc. I.

S. W. P.

New York.

Queries.

CIVIL WAR SERMONS, MS.

Two MS. sermons preached before Charles I. and his court, at Oxford, in the civil wars, are now pene me. They are in the handwriting of the time, and so copiously blurred with corrections and interlineations as to be evidently, in the opinion of clerical experts, the actual pulpit copies. No name is given, but I have some reason for conjecturing that the name of one of the preachers was Benet. Query, Do any records exist of the Oxford transactions of that time which would give the court preachers? They are of octavo size, bound together in a dark calf, and written on paper so coarse as almost to suggest a scarcity of stationery in that beleagured city. The first states that it was "preached before y^e King, y^e Prince, y^e Duke, and y^e Lords at Oxford, on Christmas Day, being Munday, 1643, in y^e time of y^e great Rebellion."

The text is from

"1 Jo. iii. 8: 'For this purpose y^e Son of God was manifested, that hee might destroy y^e workes of the Deuill.'"

There are, of course, occasional references, in describing the works of the Devil, to agencies then close at hand; thus,—

"That if we finde in the world a generation of men compacted as it were of pride, and crueltie, and calumnie, and hypocrisie, and lying, we may sadly conclude they shake hands with the Devill, and have entered a covenant with hell, and death, and damnation, without Repentance. And then, I beseech you, consider awhile what is Luciferian Pride if this be not, to offer at the Crowne, to endanger the Royall throne, to say in effect, St. lay by your Scepter, deliver us your sword, if not we will take it by violence. What is barbarous Crueltie and hellish barbaritie if this be not? to send out bloodie edicts (executed accordingly) for killing, and slaying, and destroying all their fellow subjects and servants that shall dare to resist their rebellious insurrection? . . . If these be not τὰ ἔργα τοῦ διαβόλου, the workes of his master-peeces, certainly there is either no difference betwixt Virtue and Vice, or we must graunt of necessitie a parietie of transgressions, and so blott out τὰ ἔργα in the text."

The second sermon has marks of a still darker time, its date being but a month before the king delivered himself up at Newark, "maestissimo tempore," as the preacher notes at the end. The text is,—

"1 Cor. xv. 57: 'But thanks be to God who giveth us the victorie through o^r Ld. Jes. Xt.' A sad time to preach of victories, in such a low condition, when y^e enemy presseth on so fast, and lookes so bigg, not only insulting and flying upon us gladio oris, with the base and barbarous sword of their mouth—for swords are in their lipps (Ps. lix.), et ore gladii—and with the mouth of their bloody sword; but, what is more, openly confessing they intend no longer to deale with us by way of retayle, but to take us off totally at a blow, as by whole sale, and so to make havock of us altogether. For any one then to treat of victories at such a time as this, may it not be thought an argum^t It were to be wished that too, too many, had not too much cause to be troubled with the same contemplation at this day; when they behold (as they doe) in this deluge of miseries the best of men in the worst condition; being forced to for-ake howses, and brethren, and fathers, and wife, and lands, and possessions; hunted and proscribed from citie to citie; many of them tortured and tormented from top to toe; undergoing the trial of cruel mockings and scourgings," &c.

Mem. at end of sermon:—

"Deo gratias, before y^e King, y^e Duke of York, and P. Ropt., &c., March 29, A^o 1646, moestissimo tempore."

The remainder is on the inside the cover: seem hints or fragments:—

"That these words may be treated on to"

"More especially let us pray for the churches under [Seems incomplete, like the preceding line and others below.]

"And let us pray for y^e King's Majestie, that God would look upon his pson with the watchfull eye of his gracious consideration—that he would comfort him in all his troubles, that he would deliver him out of all his dangers, and that he would crown his pious endeavours with happie successe, to the glorie of his great name, the preservation of his poore church, and y^e peace and safetie of his kingdoms.

"Let us pray also for his royall Consort that they may in their severall places serve faith"

BIBLIOPOLA.

JOHN ANDERSON, FOUNDER OF FERMOY: SIR JAMES CALEB ANDERSON.—In Mr. D. Owen-Madden's Revelations of Ireland, is an interesting account of John Anderson; an enterprising character, founder of the town of Fermoy in Ireland, who appears to have been living in 1816. Mr. Madden's account forms the basis of an article in Mr. William Anderson's Scottish Nation (a very excellent work, which ought to be better known south of Tweed); and some details respecting John Anderson may be found in Burke's Peerage and Baronetage for 1861, pp. 23, 24. None of these authors give the date of John Anderson's death. I hope it may be supplied.

John Anderson's son, Sir James Caleb Anderson, Bart., died, aged sixty-eight, April 4, 1861; when, leaving no male issue, the baronetcy became extinct. He was at one period celebrated for his efforts to improve steam locomotion. His death is duly recorded in the Gentleman's Magazine and the Annual Register, but without any allusion to the circumstances which once made him famous.

S. Y. R.

CALAMY'S "ABRIDGMENT," CHAP. IX.—I should be very much obliged to any of your correspondents who could assist me with information on the two following points?—

1. The names of those in the list who simply gave up their livings in 1660 to the rightful owner. I have already, by a careful search through Walker's List of the Suffering Clergy, discovered 218 who did so.

2. The names of any in the list who were ejected for refusing to take the engagement. Calamy himself says that many of the Lancashire ministers were ejected for refusing, and writing against the engagement. He, however, distinguishes them in no way, and puts them all down as sufferers in 1662.

I shall also be glad to know from what sources I can best verify Calamy's List?

JOHNSON BAILY.

Bishop Middleham, Ferry Hill Station, Durham.

CHURCH DESECRATION.—These lines were written on seeing the vaults under a church used as wine cellars:—

"A spirit above, and a spirit below,
A spirit of weal, and a spirit of woe.
The spirit above is the spirit divine,
The spirit below is the spirit of wine."

Who was the author?

J. B. G.

"GOD US AYDE."—At the sale of Antiquities from Bramhope Manor, Yorkshire, which took place at Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Wood's rooms on February 6, there occurred a ring thus described in the Catalogue:—

"25. A curious old ring, chased with the Nortons' motto, God us ayde."

As the metal in which the ring is wrought is not named, it is, I suppose, of gold. I am anxious to know whether the above motto has been used by any family except the Yorkshire Nortons, and also whether it is known to occur as a posy on wedding rings. Everything that relates to the sufferers in the Rising in the North is interesting to many of us.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

Bottesford Manor, Brigg.

EDMUND HOYLE.—Can any of your correspondents help me to any facts relating to Edmund Hoyle (the celebrated writer on cards) as to his parentage, life, descendants (if any), or family? Has any memoir of him ever been written? He was born in 1672; and died in Wellbank (qv. Welbeck) Street, Cavendish Square, in August 1769. Any further particulars respecting him would be most acceptable. If any of his family are living, I should feel greatly obliged to them to put themselves in communication with me.

CAVENDISH.

"IN THE TIMES."—I shall be obliged if some of your poetical readers will furnish me with a copy of a touching little poem entitled "In the Times," or refer me to any publication in which it has appeared. The first verse runs thus:—

"Married! married! and not to me!
Is it a dream, or can it be
That the final vow is plighted?"

Is there no chance of error here
In the cruel lines traced fair and clear,
By which my hope is blighted?"

WILLIAM GASPEY.

Keswick.

INFANTRY IN LINE.—I should like to know if it is true, that the Duke of Wellington was the first general in the British army who introduced the formation of infantry in line, in preference to column, when attacking an enemy; and if he carried out that formation in all his battles in the Peninsula, and also at the battle of Waterloo?

Has any continental nation ever employed the formation of infantry in line in any of their great battles, as an attacking force? FUSILIER.

"JEAN-FRANÇOIS, LES BAS BLEUS."—The Athenæum for 1833 (p. 792), contains a review of Les Cent-et-Une Nouvelles nouvelles des Cent-et-Un, Vol. I.; Paris, Ladvocat; London, Dulau & Co.: a work, as it seems, contributed to by several writers, among them, M. Charles Nodier. He wrote a tale therein called "Jean François les Bas Bleus," of which an abridged translation is given. I am very anxious to know whether this story is told as a work of fiction, or whether it is a narrative of facts. There is perhaps nothing impossible in it; but it is altogether so contrary to the experience of most persons, that if the circumstances related really occurred, one would like to have proof that they did so. I should not have thought of asking if a story in such a collection was true, were it not for the fact that some passages in it, as translated, seem to claim credence.

P.

YOUNG JOHNSON.—Can any of your readers give me a copy of the once celebrated lyric, recording the sad fate of a young man named Johnson from the neighbourhood of Malton, who was executed for forgery, which contains the injunction—

"O beware of pen and paper,
For 'tis called forgery?"

C. J. D. INGLEDEW.

Tyddyn-y-Sais, Carnarvon.

LONGEVITY: MISS MARY BILLINGE UPWARDS OF 112.—In The Times of January 20th, Mr. John Newton of 13, West Derby Street, Liverpool, communicated the following remarkable instance of longevity of an old lady, whom he had attended in her last illness. The account was written by Mr. Newton at the time of her death, and was published in The Times, the Gent. Mag. and other periodicals:—

"Dec. 20th, 1863, at her residence, Edge Lane, Liverpool, aged 112 years and six months, Miss Mary Billinge. She was born at Eccleston, near Prescot, on the 24th May, 1751. She retained her faculties in a very remarkable degree to the last, and was never known to have been confined to her bed for a single day until the week preceding her decease."

On the 27th, a correspondent who avowed "that he shared Sir George Lewis's doubts as to the majority of statements of longevity, and his wish to ascertain the precise facts in all alleged cases," invited Mr. Newton to furnish some particulars of the evidence which satisfied him that the lady, Miss Mary Billinge, who died on Dec. 20, 1863, was the same person who was baptized on May 24, 1751.

I, who am also a doubter in these cases, have looked with some anxiety for Mr. Newton's reply. That gentleman has as yet made no sign. Parliament is now sitting; The Times will have little space for such matters, and I hope therefore "N. & Q." will admit an old correspondent, through its columns, to call the attention both of Mr. Newton and its Liverpool subscribers to this curious instance.

The subject of longevity has long attracted the attention of men of science, actuaries, and others; but I believe that since the present century no case at all approaching to that of Miss Mary Billinge has been found to bear the test of examination.

A DOUBTER.

LORD MACAULAY'S ANCESTRY.—His grandfather was the Rev. John Macaulay, minister of Inverary; whose brother was the Rev. Kenneth Macaulay, minister of Calder, Nairnshire, author of the History of St. Kilda. Who were these two the sons of, and who did they marry? They are both frequently mentioned in Boswell's Johnson.

Were the Rev. Robert Macaulay, minister of Inchinnan, Renfrewshire, in 1703, and the Rev. Robert Macaulay, minister of Stirling about the same date, relations of the above? or were the two latter one and the same? F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

LADY MARJORY MURRAY.—I have before me the following books:—

1. "Essai d'Imitation Libre de l'Episode D'Ines de Castro dans le Poème des Lusiadas de Camoens. Par M^{lle} M. M. 1772 8vo."

2. "Essai d'un Eloge Historique de Maria-Thérèse, Archiduchesse d'Autriche, &c. &c. Par M. M. Brussels, 4to, 1781."

In a hand of the period, a former owner has filled up the asterisks in the title of the latter work with the name Murray, and has written Murray on the title of the first-named book.

I surmise that the person meant was Lady Marjory Murray, who died at Twickenham 19th May, 1799. She was the second daughter of David Murray, sixth Viscount Stormont, by Anne, only daughter and heiress of John Stewart of Innerbye, and was called Miss Marjory Murray until 30th April, 1793, when she and her eldest sister Anne obtained the royal warrant to enjoy the same place and precedence as the daughters of an earl of Great Britain. Thenceforward she appears to have been designated Lady Marjory Murray. In Mary Granville's (Mrs. Delany's) Autobiography she is called Miss May Murray at a period before 1793. Perhaps some correspondent can confirm or rebut my supposition that these works are by Lady Marjory Murray. S. Y. R.

THE NETHERLANDS.—At the time of the separation of the seven united provinces (1679) was Drenthe part of either Friesland or Gröningen? Which three of the other ten provinces were ceded to France in 1748? A card, containing the arms of the Netherlands (1677), gives the seventeen shields; but leaves out Liege and West Flanders, and puts in Malines and Arras (Arras).

JOHN DAVIDSON.

"OH, OH, RAY, OH AMBORAH."—

"No pow'r on earth can e'er divide
The knot that sacred love hath tied;
When parents draw against our mind,
The true love's knot they faster bind.
Oh, oh, ray, oh Amborah.
Oh, oh," &c.

Polly sings the above air in the Beggar's Opera, Act II. Sc. 2. The burden seems a strange unusual sort of one. Had it any meaning at the time the Opera was written? W. B.

PURITAN PEW.—It would be interesting to ascertain how many of these curious enclosed seats still remain untouched in our churches.

W. T. T. D. (3rd S. vii. 116) mentions one in Long Melford church, "entirely covered in." There is another pew of the kind in the church of Langley V. Mary (commonly called Langley Marsh), in West Drayton. It is on the north side, separated from the nave by a wooden lattice work. The pew communicates with a small library of books on divinity, to which the occupant of the pew might retire without being noticed from the body of the church. The domestic chapel attached to Littlecote Hall, near Hungerford, still retains the distinctive arrangements peculiar to the Puritan age, in the position of the communion table, seats, &c. Can any of your readers supply other instances of this kind?

BENJ. FERREY, F.S.A.

QUOTATIONS. —

" a gleam,
A light that never fell on sea or land,
The artist's fancy, and the poet's dream!"
" in a season of calm weather,
Though inland far we be,
Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
Which brought us hither,
Can in a moment travel thither,
And see the children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore."

A.

PEWTERERS' COMPANY.—The Athenæum of Feb. 4, 1865, contains a review of Dr. Hook's

Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury (vols. iii. and iv.), which concludes with the following words:—

"When these volumes close, the Statute was in force which legalized the burning of heretics; and the Pewterers' Company were then, or soon after, in possession of the estates which they held under the pleasant service of furnishing all the faggots required for the fires in which the heretics of London were to expiate their offences against Rome."

Will you kindly allow me to propose the following queries:—Where can the authority be found for this assertion with respect to the Pewterers' Company? When, and by whom, were estates granted to them on the condition mentioned? What were the estates? Does any evidence exist of the service having been rendered? Did the Company lose the estates when the service was no longer required?

An answer to any of these inquiries will be highly acceptable to A LONDON ANTIQUARY.

PRACTICES OF THE ROMAN CHURCH.—In an article entitled "The Reformation," in The Saturday Review, of Jan. 28, 1865, the writer says:—

"Vernacular services, communion in both kinds, and the marriage of the clergy, are all freely allowed to large national communities in strict communion with Rome."

I wish to ask, to what communities does he here refer? W. T. T. D.

SAM SHARPSHET.—Will some clever kindly disposed reader inform me who is the worthy alluded to in the following comparison, which appeared in the 10th of December number of The Reader?—

"A momentary enthusiasm might perhaps greet a tragedy by Sophocles, a decade of Livy, or the now missing portions of the Annals or History of Tacitus" "A few scholars would cherish the resuscitated worthies, but nine-tenths of the literary world would receive them as coolly as Sam Sharpshet received his brother Matthew at Barbadoes."

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

SKETCH BY LESLIE.—Can any correspondent suggest for what subject the late Mr. Leslie intended a sketch, which is now in my possession? It is a single figure, apparently of a Welshman. He has his head tied up in a napkin; one hand he holds to his breast, with the other he very sorrowfully holds out a piece of money as if particularly objecting to part with it. It is very spirited, and finely touched. He evidently intended to introduce it into some large picture, by the pains he took to finish the flesh parts.

J. C. J.

R. SMITH, author of A Wonder of Wonders, or a Metamorphosis of Fair Faces into Foul Visages: an invective against black-spotted Faces, temp.

James I.* Any particulars of his life will oblige me. St. T.

"STILL WATERS RUN DEEP."—I have been accustomed to hear this phrase used for the last fifty years. Where does it first occur in print? G. H. OF S.

STORMSTEAD.—Will any of your readers kindly give me information as to the orthography of the word "stormstead"? Is it "stead," "sted," or "staid"? H. B.

"VITULUS AUREUS."—Who, under the name of Philander, wrote this work?

JOHN DAVIDSON.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.—Did Sir Walter Scott ever visit Melrose Abbey by moonlight, or is the well-known description in the Lay of the Last Minstrel wholly the result of imagination?

J. B. G.

Queries with Answers.

"COLLECTION OF POLITICAL TRACTS."—Chance threw in my way a book bearing this title:—"A Collection of Political Tracts. Dublin: Printed by George Faulkner, in Essex Street. M.DCC.XLVIII." In the Preface are these words:—"Some of them were ushered into the world from a printing-press under the sanction of a late noble Duke." Who was the "noble Duke"? The tracts are signed as if by different writers, but the style of all is so alike as to lead one to the conclusion that they are all by the same hand. By whom were they written? I give some of the names found at the end of the various papers: "The Occasional Writer;" "From my Garret;" "John Trot;" "Phil-Athenus." The following names appear in one of the articles thus entitled: "An Answer to the London Journal of Saturday, December 21, 1728:—"Benjamin, Lord Bishop of * * * * *;" "Ben;" "Robin;" "Numb Fish;" "Raleigh;" "Publicola;" "A Person." For whom did these names stand? PAUL A JACOBSON.
West Derby.

[The Tracts contained in the volume purchased by our correspondent are from the pen of Lord Bolingbroke, and some of them are reprinted in Mallet's edition of his Lordship's Works. The Rev. William Mason, in a letter to Mr. Bryant, dated Nov. 13, 1747, informs him that "Lord Bolingbroke has advertised a Collection of Political Tracts, but I suppose they will be only such as have before made their appearance in the weekly papers." (Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, ii. 711.) This volume was reprinted verbatim in Cadell's edition of Bolingbroke's Works, ed. 1788, 8vo, with the following title: "A Collection of Political Tracts, by the Author of the Dissertations upon Parties." Warburton said that his "Occasional Writer" (printed in this Collection) is one of the best things Bolingbroke ever wrote." By "Robin of notable memory" is probably meant Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford; and "Benjamin, Lord Bishop of * * * * *," is clearly Benjamin Hoadly, Bishop of Bangor.]

[* Temp. Charles II. "Lond. 1662, 4to." A copy was in Heber's library, Pt. iv. 3087.—Ed.]

tion upon Parties." Warburton said that his "Occasional Writer" (printed in this Collection) is one of the best things Bolingbroke ever wrote." By "Robin of notable memory" is probably meant Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford; and "Benjamin, Lord Bishop of * * * * *," is clearly Benjamin Hoadly, Bishop of Bangor.]

LATIN NAMES OF TOWNS.—Is there any dictionary or work that gives a list of the Latin names of the principal European towns? Without some list of that sort, one is apt to make mistakes in reading small coins where the words are much contracted. I had a small silver coin of Louis XIV., with MO. NO. ARGEN. (or some contraction like it) on the reverse, and I considered it to mean new silver money; however, I came across a demiecu of the same most Christian king, on which the legend was given in full—"MONETA. NOVA. ARGENTINESIS." New money of Strasburg struck 1710, a few years after that beautiful city had given itself up to France as the comet-thaler of 1681 says:—

"Strasburg die schöne statt;
An Frankreich sich ergeben hat."

MON. NO. TUGI. was to me a great puzzle till I found it to mean of Zug (Tugigensis). If any correspondent of "N. & Q." can inform me where I can find such a list I shall be much obliged.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

[The following works may be consulted for the Latin names of towns: 1. Lexicon Geographicum in quo universi orbis urbes, provinciae, regna, maria, et flumina recensentur. Illud primum in lucem edidit Philippus Ferrarius Alexandrinus, in Ticinensi Academia Mathematicae Professor. Nunc vero Michael Antonius Baudrand, hanc editionem emendavit, illustravit, et dimidia parte auctiorem facit. Paris. 1670, 1677, fol.—2. J. B. Riccioli's Geographiae et Hydrographiae reformatæ libri duodecim. Bonon. 1661, fol. et Venet. 1672, fol.—3. Dictionnaire interprète manuel des noms Latins de la Géographie ancienne et moderne [par Espr.-Jos. Chaudon]. Paris, 1777, 8vo. Vide "N. & Q." 1st S. i. 474; v. 235, 305.]

CROMWELL: PALINURUS.—In the Miscellaneous Writings of Lord Macaulay, the following passage occurs:—

"A few days more, and his head is fixed to rot on the pinnacles of that very hall where he sat on a throne in his life, and lay in state after his death."—Conversation between Mr. Cowley and Mr. Milton.

He is here speaking of the Protector. Is it a fact that such occurred to him?

To whom does Pope allude in the following line—

"Even Palinurus nodded at the helm"?

The Dunciad, canto iv. line 614.

E. L.

[Pepys shall reply to our correspondent's first question. "Washing-day. My wife and I by water to Westminster. She to her mother's, and I to Westminster præsertim mingere," and derivatively "stercus egerere." From this root a large number of words are derived both in the classical and Teutonic families. Johnson does not seem to be aware of the mode of propagation of the plant alluded to above; but his description (too long for quotation here) is well worth reading.

The Latin name of the plant, though bearing the same meaning, is derived from a different root, विष्, viśh, disjungere, separare, from which viśh, stercus. Virgil (Æneid, lib. vi. ver. 205) appears to allude to the mode of dissemination:—

"Quale solet silvis brumali frigore viscum
Fronde virere nova, quod non sua seminat arbos,
Et croceo fetu teretes circumdare truncos."

I am not able to say why Shakspeare should attach the epithet baleful to the plant, except in connection with the cruel superstitions of the Druids, from whose festivities at the winter solstice the modern associations of the plant may be derived.

J. A. P.

Liverpool.

It would take up more room than I think the Editor would like to allow to answer the inquiries of A. A. fully. It is a very curious subject, and one little known. By far the best account of mistletoe, of its growth, its properties, and the superstitions connected with it, that I know, was read at Hereford last spring, before the Woolhope Naturalists' Field Club, and has since been printed, with some additions, in the Transactions of that society. It is shown there to have been regarded as a "mirth-provoking plant" only of late years, since the knowledge of it has extended from the counties where it grows into London and the large towns. In Herefordshire it is associated not with Christmas but with the new year. Shakspeare's discernment did not fail him when he called mistletoe a baleful plant. It is always most abundant on the oldest and most unhealthy trees in an orchard, and in the oldest orchards; its presence is probably the consequence and not the cause of their unhealthiness; but the coincidence is strongly marked. It is a popular but erroneous belief that the berries are poisonous; and this may be what Shakspeare referred to. Its medicinal properties are, in reality, very slight, and rather beneficial than otherwise.

T. C.

Hay, Hereford.

IS IT A FOSSIL?

(3rd S. vii. 75.)

No! it is simply the head of a real crocodile. But the head of a dragon said to have been strangled by St. Martha's garter, and preserved with great veneration at Aix, is undoubtedly the fossilised head of an extinct Saurian reptile. The best authenticated dragon story is that of the one said to have been killed by Dieudonné of Gozon, Knight of Rhodes, and afterwards Grand Master of the Order, who died in 1353. Gilles de Chin died in 1137, yet the traditions of Hainault attribute to him the most striking traits of the exploit said to have been performed two centuries later by Dieudonné. The difficulty of obtaining permission to fight the dragon, the care with which a figure resembling it was previously made to accustom the horse to such a terrific sight, the training and employment of fierce dogs, the precaution of being followed by devoted servants to near the place of combat,—all these circumstances are common to both combats. The head of Dieudonné's dragon was carefully preserved as a trophy at Rhodes till the knights were driven out of the island.

The Turks in turn preserved the head with equal care, so it was actually seen by Thévenot, the traveller, as late as the middle of the seventeenth century; and from his description it appears to have been the head of a hippopotamus. And I believe it really was that animal, which, before the invention of fire-arms, would prove no contemptible antagonist to a knight on horseback confined in heavy armour, and armed only with sword and lance. But how did it get to Rhodes? Dr. A. Smith, in his Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa, gives a remarkable account of the migrations of this animal; and Sir C. Lyell, without any reference to this subject, says:—

"The geologist, therefore, may freely speculate on the time when herds of hippopotami issued from North African rivers, such as the Nile, and swam northwards in summer along the shores of the Mediterranean, or even occasionally visited islands near the shore. Here and there they may have landed to graze or browse, tarrying awhile, and afterwards continuing their course northwards."—Geological Evidences of the Antiquity of Man, p. 180.

In that interesting and valuable miscellany, The Book of Days, edited by Mr. R. Chambers (vol. i. p. 541), will be found many curious dragon legends both British and foreign; also notices of several continental churches where parts of crocodiles are preserved, and shown as dragons killed by saints. See also Recherches Historiques sur Gilles Seigneur de Chin et la Dragon, Mons, 1825; Thevenot, Relation d'un Voyage fait au Levant; Dictionnaire de Moreri, art. "Gozon" (Dieudonné); Bottin, Traditions des Dragons Volans; and an excellent paper by Lenoir, "Du Dragon de Metz," published in the second volume of Mémoires de l'Académie Celtique.

St. Romanus, about 720, is said to have delivered the town of Rouen from a monstrous dragon. This deliverance seems to have been raising banks 313, 314 of which the invention is detailed; and on p. 314, illustrated by a plate of the tinctures, all except purpure—which purpure was added in the Tessera in 1638. De la Colombiere had to shew, not only that a work published in 1638 imitated a work published in 1639—an enterprise of sufficient difficulty—but he had to show that a work published in 1634 was guilty of the same imitation. His entire silence as to the De Symbolis Heroicis of 1634 appears to me, as I suppose it has appeared to most other persons conversant with the facts since his time, to remove all ground for further inquiry. No edition of the Tessera Gentilitiae appeared after 1638. Fr. S. Petrasancta had no proper opportunity, therefore, of contradicting De la Colombiere. Probably he and his friends thought, as I think now, that no special occasion was to be made for the purpose of contradicting an assertion which would be sure to refute itself. D. P.

Stuarts Lodge, Malvern Wells.

WINTHROP FAMILY.

(3rd S. vii. 96.)

"The family of the Winthrops came antiently from Northumberland, they afterwards settled in a village not far from Newark, which was called Winthorpe; from thence they came up to London, and owned Marribone [Marylebone] Park; from thence they went to Groton, in Suffolk, where they lived many years; and when the great persecution of good men was in England they came to America."*

John Winthrop, Governor of Massachusetts Bay, 1630, Lord of the Manor of Groton, Suffolk, England; born Jan. 12, 1577-8; died in Boston, U. S., March 26, 1649.

John Winthrop (his eldest son), born Feb. 12, 1605-6; elected Governor of New Haven Colony in 1657, and on the union of Connecticut and New Haven Colonies in 1685, was the first governor under the charter; died April 5, 1676, in Boston, U. S.

Fitz-John Winthrop (his eldest son), Governor of Connecticut; born March 14, 1638-9; died Nov. 27, 1707.

Wait Still (second son), Major-General and Chief Justice of Massachusetts; born Feb. 27, 1641-2; died Sept. 7, 1717.

John Winthrop (his only son), born Aug. 26, 1681; married Ann, daughter of Governor Jos. Dudley, and died Aug. 1, 1747, at Sydenham in England; buried at Beckenham, in same county.

John Still Winthrop (his son) born Jan. 15, 1720; married Jane Borland of Boston, U. S.; and secondly, Elizabeth Shirreff of Annapolis, Nova Scotia, widow of Captain John Hay, of the 40th

* Extract from a paper in Wait Still Winthrop's handwriting, in the possession of the late William H. Winthrop, Esq., of New London, Connecticut, U. S.

regiment; died June 6, 1776, leaving the following sons:—

Francis Bayard Winthrop, of New York, who died in 1817.

William Winthrop, of New London, Connecticut; died 1827.

Joseph Winthrop of Charleston, South Carolina; died 1828.

Thomas Sindall Winthrop, Lieut.-Governor of Massachusetts; died 1841.

Benjamin Winthrop of New York.

Robert Winthrop, Admiral in the British Navy; died 1832.

There are numerous descendants of the above now living in Boston, New York, and other parts of the United States.

Of the issue of John Winthrop and Ann Dudley, Mary married Joseph Wanton, Governor of Rhode Island; Rebeckah married Gurdon, son of Governor Gurdon, Saltonstall, of Connecticut.

Thomas Sindall Winthrop (son of John Still Winthrop) married Elizabeth Bowdoin, eldest daughter of Sir John Temple, Bart., by which marriage this branch of the Winthrops are of course connected with the families of the Duke of Buckingham and Viscount Palmerston.

Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, now living in Boston, U. S., is the representative of this branch. Some years since he was United States senator, and at another time Speaker of the House of Representatives. Admiral Yates, of the British navy, is a first cousin.

H. O'D. will find a complete pedigree of the Winthrops, after their intermarriage with the Dudleys, in the Sutton-Dudleys of England, and the Dudleys of Massachusetts in New England, 8vo, 1862. GEO. ADLARD.

Barnsbury.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND AND IRELAND.

(3rd S. vii. 122.)

The Right Hon. Joseph Napier delivered a lecture before the Young Men's Christian Association in Dublin on the evening of the 8th of February, the subject being "The Irish Difficulty." In the course of his address, the learned gentleman partially answered a question of mine in "N. & Q." on the application of the term used in our title. His words, as reported, were to this effect:—

"The Protestants of Ireland had been assured that they would occupy under the Union an improved position. The State, the Church, and the Legislature of Ireland were to be united with those of England. It was an international treaty in its very nature permanent, because on each side there was the giving up of the separate and independent existence of a State, a Legislature, and a

* One volume, 8vo, J. Russell Smith, Soho Square.

"Sir Johnny Cope addressed his men,
Saying, If that you'll be stern and steady,
Five hundred pounds again I'll gie,
If you catch me the lad wi' his Tartan Plaidie.
Our noble prince addressed his men,
Saying, If you'll be stern and steady,
I'll set you down in a kingdom free,
If you fight with me to keep my Plaidie.
The Duke o' Perth stood on his right,
Brave Montrose and brave Glengarry,
From the Isle of Sky the brave Lochiel,
M'Larens bold, and brave M'Cready.
Painted rooms, an' feather beds,
Could hardly please a German lairdie;
But a better prince than ever he was,
Lay among the heather in his Tartan Plaidie."
JAMES GIBSON.
23, Spring Gardens, Bradford.

BARLEY.

(3rd S. v. 358; vi. 481; vii. 84.)

This query reminds me of a mystic jingle used by Lincolnshire boys when claiming any treasure-trove, whether a bird's nest or otherwise:—

"All my awn (own)!
Barley-corn!
Bar ha'avs (halves) and quarters!"

The second line is exquisitely obscure, still there seems a family likeness to the Lancashire instance given by T. T. W. in your January part (p. 84), so far as the right to a "find" is concerned. Whether the other sense of "barley;" viz. a prohibitive or cautionary one, may be connected with the verb "bar," I merely throw out as a hint. I think that monosyllable is still in use in boys' games to stop any irregularity, as "bar that!" "bar striking!" &c. Among Lincolnshire phrases one may hear, "It's a bargains on it!" or "Oh, a bargains on (or of) him!" when one would depreciate a man or a thing.

In a little threepenny tract, Notes on Lincolnshire Words, in form of a glossary (Lincoln, Brookes), "bargains" in this phrase is explained by the old negative "bar;" viz. no gains, no profit, no good of him or it. The late Rev. Jas. Adcock, Mr. Halliwell's chief Lincolnshire correspondent, once gave this to the writer. (N.B. I have just seen—not without a certain indignation—bar and barring, in the sense of excepting [a perfectly legitimate sense] inserted in the Slang Dictionary.)

Apropos of Lincolnshire words, which have received very little attention generally, a local classification of the several dialects is very desirable, by which some estimate of the local immigrations at the era of the seakings might perhaps be approached. A walk of a few hours introduces a new dialect. Rambling on the wolds, not far from Horncastle, I asked a shepherd boy the way to a certain farmhouse which I was bound for. In showing me its direction, he added—"It's a pla'as uncommon hard to fin." Now, nearer to Lincoln, foind, with a splendidly full and broad enunciation, would have been the word. The Danes (per Mr. Worsaae) claim our country as their own. On the coast near Wainfleet is the popular bathing village, Skegness; the Notes just mentioned connect it with some Baltic prototype, Skaegnaes; but query if Danish, as I have been assured that the k is soft in Denmark, and that it would have come down to us as Shagness. The word would imply a ragged shore, a rough cape, which scarcely applies to the flat Lincolnshire beaches.

I am glad to see on p. 31 of your January part a "Lincolnshire Dialogue" by C. P. T., but in a county some eighty miles from north to south, the locality should have been given. Strange, as the pronunciation of strange, is, I confess, quite strange to me; taving (restless) is probably south Lincolnshire. It is given in Thompson's Boston, and Skinner (temp. Chas. II.) has "to tave, furere," as a Lincolnshire word. He was a Lincoln physician. Wetchard must be the common corruption of wet-shod, and only applicable to wetted feet. C. P. T. mentions in a note (as if it were the bond fide name) "Marquery, a vegetable peculiar to Lincolnshire, resembling spinnach." I presume the same as the mercury of the gardeners. I hope the writer will pursue the subject, but not omit to tell the district he illustrates.

There are some curious instances in the above-quoted Notes of words lost since Skinner's time from our local vocabulary. A tom-cat was then a karl-cat, meaning no scandal on the joyous Stuart on the throne, but simply thus (according to Skinner)—"Lincoln. usitatissima pro feli mare, ab A.-S. karl, i. e. masculus." Scathe, to hurt; snithe-wind, a cutting wind; beesen, blind, with many more, which have perhaps only retreated northward since those days, have likewise disappeared from among us. In the fourteenth century old parish documents show that gar, speer, and other Scotticisms, as they are now considered, were current in the district.

LINDENSIS.

INVOICE OF CARGO, 1803: A BUSINESS COMMUNICATION (3rd S. vii. 72.)—The document of which you insert a copy is very interesting, as illustrating the mode in which a former generation of merchants conducted the slave trade. It is, however, not an invoice, but a bill of lading. An invoice is a document stating the description and quality in detail of certain goods or live stock which may be sold by one party to another, specifying the price and charges of transmission, if any. A bill of lading is a receipt given by the master or purser of a vessel for certain goods or live stock shipped on board such vessel, contracting to convey the same from one port to another in genius and high scholarship, whose life was early clouded by insanity, gives some curious statements about the effects of the system of rigid restraint exercised by the Society of Friends, which I am not prepared either to support or contradict. After describing the system of restraint itself, he says: 'This is known, but it is not equally known, that this unnatural restraint falling into collision with two forces at once—the force of passion and of youth—not unfrequently records its own injurious tendencies, and publishes the rebellious movements of nature by distinct and anomalous diseases. And further, I have been assured upon most excellent authority, that these diseases—strange and elaborate affections of the nervous system—are found exclusively among the young men and women of the Quaker Society; that they are known and understood exclusively amongst physicians who have practised in great towns having a large Quaker population, such as Birmingham; that they assume a new type and a more inveterate character in the second or third generation, to whom this fatal inheritance is often transmitted; and, finally, that if this class of nervous derangements does not increase so much as to attract public attention, it is simply because the community itself—the Quaker body—does not increase, but on the contrary is rather on the wane.'

In 1860 I called the attention of a medical man, residing in one of the strongholds of Quakerism, to the assertion of Lord Jeffrey, but he would not allow that those born in the drab were more liable to "die of a sort of atrophy" before the age of fifty than were any of their more lively fellow-creatures. I have not yet had the advantage of his opinion concerning the neurotic affection. Perhaps DR. CAPPER of Liverpool may be induced to favour us with another communication.

ST. SWITHIN.

MAGNA CHARTA (3rd S. vi. 533.)—Finding that no one has yet sent a reply to this query, which somewhat surprises me, I give the authority, and fuller quotations. On May 17, 1628, during the debate on the Petition of Right, Sir Edward Coke said:—

"Sovereign Power is no parliamentary word. In my opinion it weakens Magna Charta and all our Statutes: for they are absolute, without any saving of sovereign power; and, shall we now add it, we shall weaken the foundation of Law, and then the building must needs fall. Take we heed what we yield unto. Magna Charta is such a fellow that he will have no sovereign. If we grant this, by implication we give a sovereign power above all these laws. We must not admit of it; and to qualify it is impossible. Let us hold our privileges according to the law."—See I. Rushworth, 568.

The whole speech is to the same effect. Sir Edward Coke had been Lord Chief Justice of England, Speaker of the House of Commons, &c.

TOULMIN SMITH.

ARMS OF A CONQUERED KNIGHT (3rd S. vii. 46.) MR. DYMOND appears to have committed an inadvertence (3rd S. vi. 540) in identifying MR. RYE with the passage that he extracted from Burke's Extinct Peerage (3rd S. vi. 483). It must, however, be observed that the passage so extracted by MR. RYE has not added materially to our knowledge. For the Robert Carey mentioned by Burke is no other than Robert Cary, respecting whom the question originally arose. And if MR. RYE wishes for some authority for the supposition that the statement contained in the extract is erroneous, he will find it in the passage quoted from CURTIUS in a former communication of mine (3rd S. vi. 313). This communication MR. DYMOND perhaps thought it unnecessary to cite, as it had already been referred to by MR. RYE (3rd S. vi. 483).

R. J. F. has given an instance of the arms of a knight, taken prisoner in war, being conferred on his captor (3rd S. vi. 401). I am not sure that this is quite a case in point. Still it appears to have some bearing upon it; and I therefore beg to add another case of the same kind that I have lighted upon in Clark's Introduction to Heraldry (1818) p. 58:—

"No. 33. Argent, on a bend gules, between three pellets, as many swans proper—rewarded with a canton sinister azure, thereupon a demi-ram mounting argent, armed or, between two fleurs-de-lis of the last; over all, a baton dexterwise, as the second in the canton. This is the arms of Sir John Clarke.

"Note. The canton was the arms of the Duke of Longueville, and was given as a reward to Sir John Clarke for his taking in lawful war Lewis de Orleans, Duke of Longueville, and Marquis of Rotueline (Rothelin), prisoner at the battle of Bomy, near Terovane, August 16, anno Hen. VIII. 5."

The Duke of Longueville, mentioned in the foregoing extract, was the first husband of Mary of Lorrain, who was afterwards married to James V., King of Scotland. The battle at which he was taken prisoner is sometimes called the battle of Guinegate, but more commonly the battle of Spurs. In his enumeration of the prisoners taken on that occasion, Dr. Lingard speaks of the Duke of Longueville and the Marquis of Rotelin, as two separate and distinct persons. MELETES.

Morgan le Yonge, of the family of the Yonges of Bryn Yorcin, co. Flint, had lands granted him in the reign of Richard II., for having taken prisoner a Spanish grandee of great note, and was permitted to bear his arms, "Gules, a toison, or," in a canton on his own shield. (Archæologia Cambrensis, i. 44.) MORRIS C. JONES.

Liverpool.

MY (3rd S. vi. 435.)—Is MR. KEIGHTLEY correct in stating broadly that, in common conversation, my is pronounced so as to rhyme with his, fly? It undoubtedly is so pronounced where it is emphatic, as in—"That is my hat, don't you run away with it." It is also pronounced somewhat in the same manner, though not so strongly, when it begins a sentence, as in—"My hat wants brushing." But when it comes in the middle of a sentence, and is not emphatic, the sound of the y, School chapel was brought from Flanders; but the character of several of the windows has been entirely changed (I might say destroyed) during the recent alterations. A very poor woodcut of the east window forms the frontispiece to the Book of Rugby School. A S.

THE QUEEN'S MARIES (3^d S. vii. 69.)—W. H. C. has in the foot-note confounded two incidents connected with the history of Mary, Queen of Scots, which are quite distinct from each other; and between the occurrence of which there was a long interval.

When the queen at a very early age was sent to France, she was accompanied by four little ladies (all about her own time of life), daughters of noblemen, and all having the Christian name of "Mary." I have seen given the whole four surnames (where I cannot remember), but one of them I am certain was Fleming; and very likely Livingstone was that of another.

The second incident took place when the queen lived at Holyrood Palace, during her marriage with Darnley. She had then four female attendants, all named Mary. One of whom was a French girl, who was executed in Edinburgh for child-murder; and it is to this the lines of the old ballad (quoted in part by your correspondent) apply—not to the little Maries of the queen's childhood. This appears clearly, from the only three verses of the ballad which are preserved; and which, as they have a kind of wild pathos, and may probably be new to many of your readers, I use the freedom to give in full:—

"When she came to the Netherbow Port,
She laughed loud laughs three;
But when she came to the gallows' foot,
The tear stood in her e'e.

"O ye mariners, mariners,
That sail upon the sea,
Let not my father or mother to wit,
The death that I'm to dee.

"Last nicht the Queen had four Maries,
The nicht shall hae but three;
There was Mary Seaton and Mary Beaton,
And Mary Carmichael and me."

G.

Edinburgh.

ROMNEY'S PORTRAITS OF WESLEY AND MRS. TIGHE (3^d S. vii. 103.)—MR. BURTON gives an interesting note on Romney's portrait of Wesley. It will cause one of your correspondents, at all events, to make some endeavour to see it when next in Ireland. Every portrait by that prince of English portrait painters is precious indeed, and Wesley was a fine subject for an artist.

MR. BURTON ends his note with a reference to Mrs. Tighe, adding, that "all we know of the personnel of the lady of that name—the authoress of Psyche, first published, I think, in 1805—comes to us from the picture for which she sat also to Romney."

Looking to my quarto edition of Psyche (London, 1811), I find an exquisitely beautiful portrait of its "authoress," as I suppose here referred to. The readers of "N. & Q." are encouraged to look at it, if they can. It is in small medallion form, with costume of the utmost simplicity—scarcely more than that which would be worn by a peasant girl. It is quite in the Romney style; but the inscription is as follows, wanting farther explanation to those unacquainted with the history of the portrait: "Comerford, after Romney, pincit; Caroline Watson, Engraver to her Majesty, sculpsit." FRANCIS TRENCH.

Islip Rectory.

Romney's portrait of Wesley became the property of the late Mr. Butterworth, M.P., some thirty years ago; and it may be presumed, is in the possession of the family.

About 1817 it was copied, with the permission of the excellent lady for whom Romney painted the portrait—the late Mrs. Tighe of Rossana—for the Rev. Mr. Roberts of Bristol; and the copy was done by the late Mrs. John Taylor, the talented daughter of Mr. Spilsbury, who, about 1789, engraved the mezzotinto alluded to.

As names have been introduced—although, as MR. BURTON observes, parenthetically—I think it right to correct a little mistake:—The authoress of Psyche was not Mrs. Tighe of Rossana, but her daughter-in-law Mrs. Henry Tighe. All are now dead. Psyche, alas! died young—

"Ere yet her form had lost its vernal bloom"— and before she could know the wide-spread fame her poem attained. A. W. DAVIS, M.D.

Toppington Vicarage, Shrewsbury.

HORKEY.—In "N. & Q.," 1st S. i. 263, the derivation of this word was asked by LORD BRAYBROOKE; and in 1st S. i. 457 various solutions, all in my opinion very unsatisfactory, were offered. I beg to suggest one that has my preference, and which, I think, is calculated to command more general assent. I mean the Greek word ὄργια (Latin orgia), "orgies"; which, though originally applied to the feasts of Bacchus, was afterwards used to denote any revel or feast.

THOS. COWARD, M.A.

Cambridge.

KNIGHTS BACHELORS (3^d S. vii. 76.)—Sir Daniel Williams is unquestionably dead. The precise date of his decease I do not recollect, but it must be forty or fifty years ago. It can, no doubt, be ascertained by application to the clerk of the peace for Middlesex.

It is a mistake to call Sir Daniel chief of the Lambeth Court. That court had no existence in his day, not having been established in fact until the reconstruction of the police districts, about twenty-five years ago. The court over which he peasant's cottage a tuft of yew may be seen at the bed-head, or round the crucifix which hangs on the wall. Hence yew trees are almost universally called palms in Ireland, even by persons who know the proper name for them. CYWRM.

Porth yr Aur, Carnarvon.

REGIMENTAL BADGES: THE PASCHAL LAMB.—In the interesting article on "Regimental Badges" (3rd S. vii. 5), it is said that the Queen's Royal Regiment derives its—

"Badge, 'The Paschal Lamb,' from the Royal arms of Portugal; the regiment being raised for service in Tangiers, part of the dower of Catherina, Queen of King Charles the Second, and who was, previous to her marriage, Infanta of Portugal."

But at p. 49 it is stated this badge was "granted for having been a guard of honour to the queen of Charles II. on her progress to London."

May I ask JUVENA if both these statements are correct? I should be glad also if he, or any other of your correspondents, would kindly inform me how the "Paschal Lamb" is connected with the arms of Portugal. It does not appear in them at present; and after diligent search, I have failed to find that it has ever done so, or been associated with them as a crest or supporter.

JOHN WOODWARD.

New-Shoreham.

PASSAGE IN "DON QUIJOTE" (3rd S. vii. 25.)—When translating Don Quijote, I was much puzzled by the expression "mil velos"; and my master, who was a Spaniard well acquainted with English, told me that "mil velos" meant a very large or long veil, and that it gave the idea of reaching down to the feet. Of course, velos is in the plural, because preceded by mil. Its number, therefore, is no proof that more than one veil is meant.

A. DE R.

FIRST DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH (3rd S. vi. 376.)—Perhaps MR. HUTCHINSON is not aware that the Duke's mother was Elizabeth Drake, daughter of Sir John Drake, Knt., of Mount Drake and Ashe, by Helen, daughter and co-heir of Sir John Butler, Bart., of Hatfield Woodhouse, Herts. I should be much obliged if MR. HUTCHINSON can tell me to whom the property of Ashe now belongs?

W. T. T. D.

THOMAS BUDD (3rd S. vi. 418.)—With Governor Jennings he was, in 1684, chosen a commissioner "to negotiate in England" the "matter relating to" the People of West New Jersey's "demand and vindication of their right to the Government, against Edward Billing's pretence to the same." Other persons were elected in the same year to fill the public offices in New Jersey held by Budd, which makes it probable that he went to England. Can anything be learned of his sojourn there, and its results? His book on Pennsylvania, &c., was published in 1685—the following year: possibly in England, and under his own supervision. I find that he copies, literally, passages from Yarrenton's work (to which you kindly referred me) without any marks of quotation. He was a member of the Society of Friends, was involved in the Keith controversy, and, I have heard, became a member of the Church of England. On this latter point I would be glad of information.

St. T.

"HARD CASH:" "JUPITER AID US" (3rd S. vii. 94.)—The symbol which is usually prefixed to a medical prescription undoubtedly now stands for the word Recipe, just as the French physicians use P, or the word Prenez, at the beginning of their formulæ. But there is as little doubt that this letter has replaced the somewhat similar symbol of the planet Jupiter, used by the physicians of heathen times, as an invocation to the deity whose aid and blessing they sought in their professional labours, just as the Mahometan writers invoke Allah, poets propitiate the Muse, and, in days of more simple and earnest faith, the merchant headed his invoice with the words "Laus Deo," or some similar address to the Deity who alone giveth the increase. I cannot say when the change in the symbol took place; but should infer from the following explanation that the astrological character was in use a century and a half ago:—

"R. Take, which also represents Jupiter's Arms, as if Physicians would first of all invoke the Deity. 'Tis marked thus R at the beginning of a prescription."—Physical Dictionary, by Stephen Blancard, 8vo, London, 1715.

It now, however, much more nearly resembles the letter R, and, as Dr. Paris remarks:—

"It is at present so disguised by the addition of the down-stroke, which converts it into the R, that, were it not for its cloven foot, we might be led to question the fact of its superstitious origin."—Pharmacologia.

Mr. Reade thinks the doctors fair game, and perhaps he wishes, too, to insinuate that a less reliance on their own skill would be as well, at least for their patients; seeing, moreover, that, according to the old epigram, the former have such a powerful auxiliary on their own side:—

"Death and the Doctor to destroy

All mankind have agreed;

But why should both their power employ,

When one can do the deed?"

WILLIAM BATES.

Birmingham.

"It is generally supposed that R is short for recipe." This is true, but how came the word recipe, or its initial letter, to be placed at the beginning of medicinal formulæ? It is not the most appropriate Latin word for the meaning it there assumes. A reason is given by a late president of the London College of Physicians, Dr

Paris, in his Pharmacologia (8th ed. p. 13). He says:—

"The salutary virtues which many herbs possess were, in times of superstitious delusion, attributed rather to the planet under whose ascendancy they were collected or prepared, than to any natural and intrinsic properties in the plants themselves; indeed, such was the supposed importance of planetary influence, that it was usual to prefix to receipts a symbol of the planet under whose reign the ingredients were to be collected; and it is not perhaps generally known, that the character which we at this day place at the head of our prescriptions, and which is understood and supposed to mean Recipe, is a relic of the astrological symbol of Jupiter, as may be seen in many of the older works on pharmacy, although it is at present so disguised by the addition of the down stroke, which converts it into the letter R, that were it not for its cloven foot we might be led to question the fact of its superstitious origin."

Dr. Paris then shows in a drawing how easily the symbol of Jupiter (♃) could be turned, by the addition of a back, or first stroke, into the modern R. His inference from this is plausible, and probably true, but it would have been more satisfactory if he had given a reference to some old work on pharmacy, in which the symbol of Jupiter, without the modern addition, is placed at the beginning of a medicinal formula. Will any correspondent of "N. & Q." supply the omission?

D.

"BAILLER AUX CORNEILLES" (3rd S. vi. 94).—The excellent Phraseological Dictionary of Tarrver gives "bayer aux corneilles," to look about idly, vacantly. The old meaning of bayer seems to be to gape or stare about; but bailler seems to be a different word, and to signify in old French, to give, or rather more closely rendered, to "hand over," as we should say in vernacular English. The whole expression seems so closely to resemble the often-used phrase of Aristophanes, βαλλ' ἐς κίρκας (see Nubea, 134), that we should believe one is derived in some way from the other. Perhaps the learned Examiner at Woolwich himself would oblige us by his own impressions on the point.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

BELL CRACKED, 1504: OLD CHURCHWARDENS' ACCOUNTS (3rd S. vii. 89).—All thanks to MR. TYSSEN for publishing to the wide world in "N. & Q." "the slothfulness of a sexton" in 1504, whereby a noble bell at Reading was cracked, as many hundreds have been, by pulling the clapper to the side for tolling. Thanks, too, for such interesting extracts from old churchwardens' accounts.

I beg to suggest that much information of bygone proceedings in our parishes would be elicited if the several Archæological Societies throughout the kingdom would set some simple machinery at work, by which the contents of all the old parish coffers within their districts might be examined.

And, with regard to bells being cracked by lazy sextons—as it is a well-known fact they are—will any scientific reader of "N. & Q." explain the reason why? And here I would ask whether any person ever heard of a bell being cracked by tying a string round it, and then sounding it, as I heard a village blacksmith boast some sixty years ago that he could do? To the same point I annex a quotation from Neckam de Naturis Rerum, a volume lately issued under the sanction of the Master of the Rolls, p. 63, "De Campana:"—

"Campana maxima si pulsetur, filo circumdata etiam tenui, findetur."

H. T. ELLACOMBE, M.A.

NUMISMATIC QUERY (3rd S. vii. 76).—It is of course extremely difficult to pronounce on a coin without having seen it, but the probability is that it is one of Philip IV. of France (Philippe le Bel); that the crosses are simply the abbreviation of the name of Christ; and that the legend is the same as that given on the reverse of the coin figured in Bordier and Charton's Histoire de France, Paris, 1680, vol. i. p. 426; namely, "Christus imperat, Christus vincit, Christus regnat." The coin is supposed to have been struck about 1290. The reverse has a cross flory in a quatrefoil, and the legend goes round it. We must all congratulate its possessor on its extreme curiosity and value.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

The legend on the gold coin mentioned appears to run thus: "XPC imperat, XPC regnat, XPC vincit." I believe the three Greek letters are not the date of the coin, as GEO. MOORE supposes. They are simply the common abbreviated form of the word ΧΡΙΣΤΟΣ, "Christ rules, Christ reigns, Christ conquers."

J. A. WICK.

MOLLITIOUS (3rd S. vi. 524).—I see no reason to regret having made the suggestion contained in my former communication (3rd S. vi. 337); for though it may have failed to set your correspondent upon analysing what was passing in the mind of the poet, it appears to have led him to answer his own question in a manner satisfactory to himself.

MELETES.

COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK (3rd S. vii. 94).—Zuccaro came to England in 1574. At that time no lady bore the title of the Countess of Suffolk; and as Frances, Duchess of Suffolk, mother of Lady Jane Grey died in 1563, the portrait referred to (if authentic) must be that of her stepmother, Katherine, Baroness Willoughby de Eresby and Duchess of Suffolk, who died in 1580. Much curious information about her will be found in Lady Georgina Bertie's Five Generations of a Loyal House.

S. P. V.

BARAPICKLET (3rd S. vii. 113).—Is equivalent to the Cymric bara-planc, or griddle-bread—i. e.

small flat cakes baked on a portable iron plate, which is suspended a few inches above the fire-place. Bara, baked after this primitive fashion, constitutes the ordinary diet of the Welsh peasantry at this day; and, when properly made, surpasses all other kinds of bread. The story of King Alfred and the cottier's wife will recur to the minds of your readers. Whence comes picklet, unless from the French, I know not. The term is still applied to those pancake-looking delicacies vended by dealers in muffins and crumpets, and made it would seem of similar materials. I have usually heard the term pronounced as if it were spelled pike-let. But this, no doubt, is an Anglicism. W.

An oval cake about the size of one's hand, slightly sweetened, and not thicker than half a muffin, to be eaten toasted, is called a picklet; sometimes also, in contempt, "buttered flannel."

CYWRM.

Porth yr Aur, Carnarvon.

Barapicklet, Welsh. (Bailey's Dict.) Beatille pies, giblet pies. E. MARSHALL.
Sandford.

Bailey gives this apparently as a compound word of Welsh origin: "Bara-picklet, cakes made of fine flower kneaded with yeast."

F. PHILLOTT.

In the midland districts of England, I first made the acquaintance of a table-delicacy called a "pyflet"—a round, flabby, spongy cake, baked I believe in a metal ring; but on this point I do not presume to speak as an authority. I have heard it spoken of, by native tongues, as a "pike-let." And does not this sound like an abbreviation of barapicklet? J. C.

Newcastle.

SURGEON EXECUTED FOR MURDER (3rd S. vii. 112.)—In a useful old volume, entitled A Chronology of some Memorable Accidents, from the Creation of the World to the Year 1742, Dublin, 1743 (p. 107), the following entry appears:—

"1728, June 5. Mr. Audouin was executed at [St.] Stephen's Green [Dublin], for cutting his Maid's Throat."

This supplies your correspondent with the name of the criminal. I have certainly read, within the last few years (and there is probably in my possession), a full account of the trial and execution; but I cannot remember in what publication.

ABHBA.

CARY FAMILY (3rd S. vii. 117.)—Your correspondent is in error when he states that, "in 1588 there was a Cary, or Carey, Bishop of Killaloe," no one of the name having been at any time in charge of that diocese. He probably refers to Mordecai Cary, D.D., who was "a native of England, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge;" and who, having been rector of St. Catherine's, in Coleman Street, London, and chaplain to the Duke of Dorset, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, was promoted to the bishopric of Clonfert in the year 1731, and translated to Killaloe (not Killaloe), and Achonry, 1735-6. See Harris's Works of Sir James Ware, vol. i. pp. 646, 657; and Archdeacon Cotton's Fasti Ecclesie Hibernice, vol. iv. pp. 75, 170. Bishop Cary died at Killaloe, October 2, 1751; and was buried in his cathedral, where his monumental stone may be seen. There has not been a second Irish prelate of the name; but in Archdeacon Cotton's very valuable work, mention is made of several of the Cary family amongst the inferior clergy. The Bishop's son, Henry Cary, was Archdeacon of Killaloe. ABHBA.

GLADYS (3rd S. vi. 334, 538.)—I am greatly obliged to MR. CARMICHAEL for so satisfactorily answering my query as to the origin and pronunciation of the name "Gladys." The previous answer of SCHIN failed of its kind intention to satisfy my curiosity. I already knew that Gladiss was a Silesian surname; but that did not help me towards understanding the origin of Gladys, the Christian name. "There is a river in Macedon, and there is also moreover a river in Monmouth."

MR. CARMICHAEL states that Gladys is more correctly written Gwladys, and he goes on to say that it is considered to be the equivalent of Claudia.

Now the latter is a genuine Latin word, and of course could not have been derived from Gladys. Does MR. CARMICHAEL mean that early British writers adopted Gladys as the equivalent of Claudia, on account of the mere similarity of sound? The writer of the article "Claudia," in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, supposes that the Claudia mentioned in the Second Epistle to Timothy, iv. 21, was a British maiden, whose father took the name of his imperial patron, Tiberius Claudius.

I know next to nothing of the Welsh language, and can only cling to my Dictionary, where I find Gwlad translated "country," and Gwlad ac Eglwys cited as meaning "Church and State." Does Gwlad, then, mean "country" in the sense of patrie, or in that of pays? Patria or terra? J.

TOKEN: THOMAS JOHNSON (3rd S. vii. 78.)—I extract the following from Bromley's Catalogue of Engraved British Portraits:—

"Thomas Johnson, Pugilist, wh. len. prefixed to Boxing Revised, 1790, 8vo. Basset.

"— fighting Isaac Perrins, an etching. Metz. J. Grozer. 1789.

"Isaac Perrins, Pugilist, in the print with Tho. Johnson, above."

I happen to possess the coin described by E. M'C., as well as another of similar character, but having a different bust and the name "Isaac Perrins." The reverse has the same date and inscription in the middle; but the legend round is,

"Strength and Magnanimity." Both pieces are of very good workmanship. I have also a sort of "Brummagem" halfpenny: obv. a bust, "Johnson. Pugilist;" rev. a harp, "Music Charms."

The following extract is from the Gentleman's Magazine for October, 1789, p. 947:—

"On Thursday the 22nd inst. a great boxing match took place at Banbury, in Oxfordshire, between two bruisers, Perrins and Johnson: for which a turf stage had been erected 5 feet 6 inches high, and about 40 feet square. The combatants set to at one in the afternoon; and, after sixty-two rounds of fair and hard fighting, victory was declared in favour of Johnson, exactly at fifteen minutes after two. The number of persons of family and fortune, who interested themselves in this brutal conquest, is astonishing: many of whom, it is proper to add, paid dearly for their diversion."

J. C. WITTON.

Bath.

"WHEN OLD ADAM FIRST WAS CREATED" (3rd S. vi. 308) is part of an old song I was accustomed to hear above sixty years ago. I do not know who is the author of it. The first verse is—

"When old Adam first was created,
And lord of the universe crown'd,
His happiness was not completed
Until a companion he'd found."

J. H.

SIR ANDREW RAMSAY (3rd S. vii. 123.)—HIBERNICUS and N. H. R. seem to come, on insufficient grounds, to the conclusion that the letter referred to shows that, before its date, the Provost of Edinburgh was not called "Lord Provost," for it is obvious that the letter may bear two interpretations, viz., that of constituting the title for the first time, or that of debarring other Provosts from using it. That the latter is no strained construction, but on the contrary the true one, appears from the former article in "N. & Q.," alluded to by HIBERNICUS, and to be found in vol. iii. 404. On looking at that article, it will be seen that the writer of it cites an entry in the City Council Records of the Scottish capital, in which, seventy years before the date of the letter, viz. in November, 1597, the Provost is denominated Lord Provost; and it is not improbable that were these Records more minutely examined, they would show instances of the same thing at a still earlier date.

As to the "place and precedency" which the latter declares that the Lord Provost should have within the precincts of the city, there is no inconsistency in it with the view I have above suggested. It is not to be supposed that, as Chief Magistrate, he had not already such place and precedency, so that the declaration was not enactive, but confirmatory and expletive. G.

Edinburgh.

PEPYS'S MEMOIRS (3rd S. vii. 98.)—MR. EVANS'S suggestion, that a new edition of these most interesting Memoirs should be published, including all that Pepys wrote, with the exception of the indecent passages, will, I am sure, meet with a cordial response from many readers of "N. & Q." The subject brings to my remembrance a question I have often thought of asking with regard to a peculiarity in Pepys's phraseology. Instead of "he tells me," "he thinks" this or that, we find "he do tell me," "he do think."

Now this was not the ordinary mode of expression in Pepys's day. We know that his Diary was kept in short-hand, and that it was from an expanded transcript of the MS. that Lord Braybrooke compiled his edition. I would ask whether the peculiar phraseology I have alluded to was really adopted by Pepys, or whether it originated in some mistake of the transcriber who wrote out the fair copy? Now that we possess the key to the original, it would, I presume, be easy for a careful examiner of the MS. to answer the query I have proposed. JAYDEE.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Itinerarium Peregrinorum et Gesta Regis Ricardi; auctore ut videtur Ricardo, Canonico Sanctæ Trinitatis Londinensis. Edited from a MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. By William Stubbs, M.A., &c. (Longman.)

Recueil des Croniques et Anciennes Istories de la Grant Bretagne, à present Nommée Engleterre, par Jehan de Waurin, Seigneur de Forestel. Edited by William Hardy, F.S.A., &c. From Albina to A.D. 688. (Longman.)

A Collection of Chronicles and Ancient Histories of Great Britain, now called England, by John de Waurin. Translated by William Hardy, F.S.A., &c. (Longman.)

Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft of Early England, being a Collection of Documents for the most part never before printed, illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vol. II. Collected and Edited by the Rev. T. Oswald Cockayne, M.A., &c. (Longman.)

The good work, which was originally suggested by Sir John Romilly, and which that sound scholar and enlightened statesman, the late Sir George C. Lewis, enabled the Master of the Rolls to carry out, is progressing so quickly, although as satisfactorily as quickly, that, with the limited space we can devote to the notice of new publications, we find some difficulty in keeping that progress before our readers. The books whose titles head this notice are the latest of these valuable contributions to English History. The first, the Itinerarium of Richard Cœur de Lion, the authorship of which seems pretty clearly brought home to Richard, the Canon of the Holy Trinity in Aldgate, who having been formerly in the service of the Templars, was afterwards Prior of the House, has been most carefully edited by the present librarian of Lambeth, whose sketch of the character of the impetuous monarch and view of the times, as narrated in his able introduction to the Chronicle of Richard the Canon will be read with considerable interest. The interesting French Chronicle, the editing and translating of which has been entrusted to Mr. William Hardy, peculiarly well fitted for the task, embraces a period from the first fabled settlement in Britain to the author's own time, namely, to the expedition undertaken by King Edward IV. against the Bastard of Falconbridge, after the defeat of Queen Margaret and death of the Prince of Wales, at Tewkesbury, in the year 1471. The text of the present volume is printed from a MS. of the fifteenth century, preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy of Waurin's entire work now in existence. The portion now published concludes with the cessation of rule of the Britons and their final expulsion into Wales by the Saxons after the death of Cadwallader in 688. The whole of the MS. has been transcribed, and is now ready to be prepared for press. With regard to Mr. Cockayne's second volume of Saxon Leechdoms, we have only space left to reiterate the praises which we gave to his first volume. It is a book replete with information as to the state of science among the Saxons, and will interest the Antiquaries of Germany to the full, as much as it will their brethren in this country. The Glossary is very full and valuable.

Diary of Mary, Countess Cowper, Lady of the Bedchamber to the Princess of Wales. 1714—1720. Edited by the Hon. Spencer Cowper. Second Edition. (Murray.)

We are glad to see the favourable opinion we expressed of the value of the Diary of this amiable and accomplished woman recognised by the reading public, and that the second edition of the work, which that recognition of its merits has called forth, was not issued until there was time to include in it the interesting Letter from the lady which we published in "N. & Q." a few weeks since.

Debrett's Illustrated Peerage of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. Under the immediate Revision and Correction of the Peers. Published annually. 1865. (Bosworth.)

Debrett's Illustrated Baronetage and Knightage of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, &c. (Bosworth.)

These revivals of a Peerage and Baronetage, which were first published upwards of a century since, seem to have been carefully superintended; and as the Editor states that they have had moreover the benefit of the revision and correction of the noble and eminent persons whose names and arms figure in them, they bid fair to deserve and thereby to secure the favour with which Debrett was always regarded in the old times "when George the Third was King." Some of the arrangements by which the Peers who are ordinarily known by higher titles than those by which they sit in the House of Lords, and those bearing courtesy titles may be readily recognised, give a peculiar and useful character to the present Peerage.

The High Commission. Notices of the Court and its Proceedings. By John Southerden Burn. (J. Russell Smith.)

The High Commission was something like the Star Chamber, only while the latter dealt with Civil, the former busied itself with Ecclesiastical matters. This is, we believe, the first attempt that has been made to collect the materials for its history; and it is somewhat remarkable that the researches of so diligent an inquirer as Mr. Burn into a Court "which drew many more cases within its clutches, and was less merciful in its proceedings" than the justly dreaded Star Chamber, should not furnish material for more than a hundred pages. The book, though small, is a valuable contribution to English History, for which Mr. Burn deserves the thanks of all historical students.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

SPIRIT OF THE PUBLIC JOURNALS FOR 1805. Vol. IX. London, 1806.
A LETTER TO THE DUKE OF GRAFTON, ON THE PRESENT POSITION OF AFFAIRS. Almon, 1768.
THE VICI; a Poem, by the Author of JUNIUS. London, 1836.
COLLECTION OF ALL THE REMARKABLE AND PERSONAL FAMAES IN THE BRITON, NORTH BRITON, AND AUDITOR. 1765.
GENERAL COCKBURN'S DISSERTATION ON HANNIBAL'S PASSAGE OVER THE ALPS. (Privately printed). Dublin, 1845.
THE HIBERNIAN MAGAZINE FOR 1771, 1772, 1773.
THE LONDON MUSEUM OF POLITICS, MISCELLANIES, AND LITERATURE. 4 Vols. 8vo. 1768, 1770.
A COLLECTION OF LETTERS ON GOVERNMENT, LIBERTY, AND THE CONSTITUTION. 3 or 4 Vols. 1774. Almon.
A COLLECTION OF MOST INTERESTING POLITICAL LETTERS, PUBLISHED IN 1763. 4 Vols. Almon.
A COLLECTION OF EXTREMED POLITICAL TRACTS, 1764, 1765, and 1766. 3 or 4 Vols. Almon, 1766.
VOX SENATUS. 1771.
WILKES' SPEECHES. 3 Vols.
THE EXPOSITION; a Poem. Bingley, 1768.
JUNIOR DISCOVERED BY P. T. 1789.
REASONS FOR REJECTING THE EVIDENCE OF MR. ALMON. 1807.
 Letters stating particulars and lowest price, carriage free, to be sent to Mr. W. G. SMITH, Publisher of "NOTES & QUERIES," 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentleman by whom they are required, and whose name and address are given for that purpose:—

FORD'S DRAMATIC WORKS, by Gifford. 2 Vols. 8vo.
NOTES AND QUERIES. (First Series.) Vols. II. and VII.
PERCY SOCIETY BOOKS. Nos. 1, 6, and 17.
ENGLISH HISTORICAL SOCIETY. Large paper. The last two volumes, royal 8vo.
GIBBON'S MISCELLANEOUS WORKS, 4to. Vol. III. Boards.
WATT'S BIBLIOTHECA BRITANNICA, 4to. Part VI.
Wanted by Mr. Thomas G. Stevenson, 22, Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

Notices to Correspondents.

In consequence of the great number of Replies waiting for insertion, We have enlarged the present Number to thirty-two pages.

A. E. L. (Oxford.) Cohnaght's, Graves', or Hogarth's. The prices depend altogether upon the condition.

ARTHUR G. SALEP or Saloup is a decoction of the dried roots of the Orchis mascula.

A. TEACHER. Cowper's allusion in the line—
"So sit two kings of Brentford on one throne," is to the Duke of Buckingham's celebrated farce, The Behersal, where the two kings figure "hand in hand," &c.

H. F. will find the line—
"Too fair to worship, too divine to love," in Milman's Prize Poem on the Apollo Belvidere.

GRACE MACAULAY. We have a letter for T. G., whose communication on this subject appeared ante p. 49.

F. F. SHIRNEY. What was the subject of your communication?

E. S. C. "The Yorkshire Volunteers' Farewell to the Good Folks of Stockton," is printed in Ritson's Bishopric Garland, p. 25, edit. 1816, and in C. J. D. Ingledeu's Ballads and Songs of Yorkshire, p. 221, edit. 1860.

SIGMA. The extract from Stow's Annals on Bombs has appeared in our 2nd S. xi. 178. See also pp. 29, 74, of the same volume.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly Index) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., to whom all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

CURE OF ASTHMATIC COUGH AT THE AGE OF EIGHTY-FIVE, BY DR. LOCKE'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—"Wm. Taylor, The Cape, Smethwick, aged eighty-five, says he for many years suffered from a husky, asthmatic cough. To get rest at night was almost out of the question, although he tried many things; but for the last four years, since he commenced taking the Wafers, he can insure a good night's rest; but if perchance he has none on going to bed, he lies 'barking and coughing' all night long; he therefore says they are the best medicine ever offered to the public. — Witness, H. BROWN, Chemist, 55, Spring Hill, Birmingham." Sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. per box, by all Druggists.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 166.

NOTES:—Chorister Actors, 173—Homer and his Translators, 174—Shakspeariana: Mr. Keightley's "Shakespeare Expositor"—Shakspeare Family—"Cling"—Passage from "Macbeth"—Passage in "Much Ado about Nothing," 175—The Origin of Infirmaries in England, 176—Blackfriars broken Bridge, 177—Sherman's "White Salt"—The Sea Serpent—Remarkable Case of Resurrection and Confession—Curious Baptismal Names—Ancient Specifics against Hunger—Unconscious Imitation—One Beccaria, 177.

QUERIES:—Seals of George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, 1611 to 1633—Bibliographical Queries—Siege of Malta: "Cavalier"—"Fall" for "Autumn"—Howell's "Letters," edition 1754—"Hymns Ancient and Modern"—Hymnology—Llandaff Cathedral—Longevity—Henry Martyn—Phonetic Headstones—Ragusa—Spanish Jews—Sweeping the Hearth or the Threshold—Family of De Vaudin, or Vauldin—Henry Walker, Minstrel—"Dragon of Wantley": John, Third Earl of Bute—The Welch in England, 179.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Bishop Percy of Dromore—Cesar and the Delphic Oracle—Fanny Russell and Frederick Prince of Wales—Wellesley—Obadiah Walker's Private Printing Press—Lady Elizabeth Trevor—Uriconium, or Wroxeter—Bachelor or Widower, 181.

REPLIES:—Red Lion, 183—Sobriquets of Regiments, 176—Duncannon Family of Cantire, 184—Richard James: Assassination of the Duke of Buckingham, 185—Docking Horses—Passage in Eusebius: Dr. Cureton and the "Quarterly Review"—Street Melody: "Young Lambs to sell"—Readers—"For a Year and a Day"—Quotation wanted: "Oh! why wer'n't ye cunning," &c.—Venerable Bede—"Jouanes ad oppositum": Translation of English Proverb, &c., 155.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

CHORISTER ACTORS.

The employment of the Children of the King's Chapel and other choirs as actors, was of frequent occurrence during the reigns of our Tudor sovereigns. The Household Books of Henry VIII. contain entries of the payment of sums of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* each to "Maister Crane," master of the children of the Chapel-royal, "for playing before the King with the Children of the Chapell, in reward," on the New-year's days of 1520, 1530, and 1531; and the Household Books of Edward VI. show that similar payments were made to Richard Bower, the then "M^r of the Children of the King's Chappell, for playing before the King's Majestie with the said Children" in 1548 and 1549. In the reign of Elizabeth, the children of the chapel, under Richard Edwards, and the children of St. Paul's Cathedral, became famous as actors, and all Lyly's plays and many of those of Ben Jonson appear to have been acted by them.

Jonson's well-known poetical epitaph on Salathiel Pavy, a boy actor who was famed as the representative of old men, and who died about the year 1601, at the age of thirteen, will doubtless recur to the recollection of most readers. This boy was probably a chorister as well as actor. The choir boys continued to act on the stage until the early part, at least, of the reign of James I., but a change of feeling afterwards arose, for we find that a warrant, granted in 1626 to Dr. Nathaniel Giles to take up singing boys for the service of the chapel-royal, contained a proviso that the children so to be taken should not be employed as comedians or stage-players, or act in stage plays, interludes, comedies, or tragedies, "for that it is not fitt or decent that such as sing the praises of God Almighty should be trained or imployed on such lascivious and prophane exercises." The very spirit of Puritanism breathes in these words, which might almost be taken for a production of the same hand that, a few years later, penned the Histrio-Mastix.

It is not quite clear that the chorister boys resumed their occupation as stage performers after the restoration of the monarchy in 1660, but it is certain that the gentlemen of the Chapel-royal were so engaged, and continued to be until Queen Anne forbade the practice for reasons similar to those expressed in the warrant of 1626 before mentioned.

We learn, however, from Dr. Burney, that on Wednesday, February 23, 1731, Handel's oratorio of Esther, was represented, in action, by the children of his Majesty's chapel, at the house of Mr. Bernard Gates, their master, in James Street, Buckingham Gate; the chorus being "placed, after the manner of the ancients, between the stage and orchestra." Amongst the boys who performed on this occasion were John Beard, afterwards the famous tenor singer; John Randall, afterwards Doctor in Music and Professor at Cambridge; and Thomas Barrow, afterwards Gentleman and Music copyist in the chapel-royal. The oratorio was afterwards publicly performed by the same singers at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, but does not appear to have been then given in action or on a stage.

Exactly twenty-four years after the performance in James Street, viz. on 23rd February, 1755, Horace Walpole wrote to Richard Bentley as follows:—

"Garrick has produced a detestable English opera, which is crowded by all true lovers of their country. To mark the opposition to Italian operas, it is sung by some cast singers, two Italians and a French girl, and the Chapel boys; and to regale us with sense, it is Shakspeare's Midsummer Night's Dream, which is forty times more nonsensical than the worst translation of any Italian opera books."

The opera here spoken of was produced at Drury Lane Theatre on February 3rd, 1755, under the title of The Fairies. The piece was concocted by Garrick out of Shakspeare's play, by excising the comic characters, "sweet bully Bottom" and his fellows, and adding songs from others of Shakspeare's pieces and elsewhere. He also wrote, and himself spoke, a prologue to the opera. The music was composed by John Christopher Smith, the friend and amanuensis of Handel. The two Italian singers mentioned by Walpole were Signor Guadagni,* who played the part of Lysander, which Garrick is said to have (with great pains) taught him to act; and Signora Passerini, who performed Hermia. The "French girl" was Miss Poitier, who during the run of the opera married Joseph Vernon, the tenor singer, and who played Helena. The boys who took part in the piece as principal performers were Master Reinhold, who personated Oberon; Master Moore, who played Puck; and Master Evans, who represented the first Fairy. The remaining chapel boys probably appeared as Fairies in the chorus. The other singers employed were Beard as Theseus, Champness as Egeus, and Miss Young as Titania. The chapel boys were at that time still under the mastership of Bernard Gates.

I should be glad to know whether this was the last occasion on which choristers appeared on the stage as actors; and if so, whether their further appearance was prohibited by any and what authority? As also what, if any, other instances are known of the employment of the boys of the Chapel-royal or other choirs as actors?

W. H. HUSK.

HOMER AND HIS TRANSLATORS.

"Though I am willing to make all the allowances possible to an author who raises our admiration too often not to have a right to the utmost candour wherever he fails, yet I can find no excuse for an unaccountable absurdity he has fallen into, in translating a passage of the tenth book. Diomed and Ulysses, taking advantage of the night, set out in order to view the Trojan camp. In their way they meet with Dolon, who is going from thence to the Grecian, upon an errand of the same kind. After having seized this unfortunate adventurer, and examined him concerning the situation and designs of the enemy, Diomed draws his sword, and strikes off Dolon's head, in the very instant that he is supplicating for mercy:—

Φθεγγόμενου δ' ἄρα τοῦγε κάρη κονίησιν ἐμίχθη.

Book x. ver. 457.

"Mr. Pope has turned this into a most extraordinary miracle by assuring us, that the head spoke after it had quitted the body:—

'The head yet speaking mutter'd as it fell.'

"This puts me in mind of a wonder of the same kind in the Faery Queen, where Corflambo is represented as blaspheming after his head had been struck off by Prince Arthur:—

'He smote at him with all his might and main
So furiously, that e're he wist he found
His head before him tumbling on the ground,
The whiles his babbling tongue did yet blaspheme,
And curse his God, that did him so confound.'

Book iv. canto viii. 45.

"But Corflambo was the son of a giantess, and could conquer whole kingdoms by only looking at them. We may perhaps, therefore, allow him to talk when every other man must be silent: whereas there is nothing in the history of poor Dolon that can give him the least pretence to this singular privilege. The truth is, Mr. Pope seems to have been misled into this blunder by Scaliger, who has given the same sense to the verse; and then, with great wisdom and gravity, observes: 'falsum est a pulmone caput avulsum loqui posse.'—Fitzosborne's (Melmoth's) Letters on Several Subjects, vol. ii. p. 146.

* Tate Wilkinson, in his Memoirs, calls him Giordani, and Genest, in his Account of the Stage, gives the name as Curioni. Both are wrong.

In Clarke's Homer is the following note:—

"Ver. 457. Φθεγγόμενου δ' ἄρα τοῦγε κάρη κονίησιν ἐμίχθη.] Vide nimiam celeritatem, salvo pondere, ad quam non potuit conatus Maronis accedere:

'Tum caput orantis nequicquam, et multa parantis
Dicere, deturbat terræ.'—Æn. x. 554.

In quibus mihi visus est (Virgilius) gracilior auctore. Macrob., lib. v. cap. xiii. Scaliger e contrario locum hunc Homeri vituperans, 'Falsum est, inquit, a pulmone caput avulsum loqui posse.'—Poëtic., lib. v. cap. 3. [p. 563]. Quod plane est nodum in scirpo querere. Hoc enim ait Poëta, caput jam inter loquendum fuisse abscissum: 'Εὐς γὰρ ἔπεσεν ἡ κεφαλὴ ἐκείνου, ἀρξαμένου μὲν φωνῆν ἀφιέναι, μήπω δὲ διασαφίσαντος τὸ λεγόμενον.'—Eustath. 'Γράφεται μὲν, "Φθεγγόμενη δ' ἄρα τοῦγε κάρη." Οὐχ Ὀμηρικὴ δὲ ἔστιν ἡ φράσις, οὐ γὰρ ἔστι δηλοῦς ἡ κάρη παρ' Ὀμήρῳ.'—Idem. Meminit et Aristoteles, De partibus Animalium, lib. iii. cap. 10; qui hic legerent, Φθεγγόμενη, non Φθεγγόμενου."

But Pope is not singular in this supposed perversion. Chapman translates it thus:—

"And suddenly his head, deceiv'd, fell speaking to the ground."

Cowper thus:

" . . . with a stroke so swift, that ere
His tongue had ceased his head was in the dust."

Unfortunate indeed would have been this greatest of "the interpreters of the gods," had he been misinterpreted by all his translators. His meaning is faithfully given by Hobbes:

"That from his shoulders fell his head away
As he was speaking, and lay in the dust."

By Morrice:

"But the swift sword descending cut in twain
The nerves whilst yet he spake; his sever'd head
And lifeless corpse lay mingled with the dust."

By the Earl of Derby:

"Ev'n while he spoke, his head was roll'd in dust."

Here is the "nimia celeritas" which, as Macrobius observes, Virgil could not attain to. "Ev'n while he spoke"—dicto citius—"his head was roll'd in dust." But Scaliger's motto must have been "Ne quid nimis," for he adds, "et durum est, Caput mistum pulvere, non enim miscetur, quod apparet et extat." Perhaps Melmoth also was hypercritical.

BIBLIOTHECAR. CHETHAM.

Shakspeariana.

MR. KEIGHTLEY'S "SHAKESPEARE EXPOSITOR." The readers of "N. & Q." will, I am sure, not grudge me a little space on my own account. In the Preface to my edition of Shakespeare, I wrote as follows:—

"The corrections I have made will be explained, and the principles by which I have been guided shown, in a volume named The Shakespeare Expositor, on which I have been engaged some years."

In the Preface to the one-volume edition, last December, I added: "and which will shortly appear."

It is true I had made no regular agreement on the subject; but I regarded it as a clearly understood matter that, when I gave in the text the corrections, the result of several years' study, the comment explaining and justifying them should follow as a matter of course. The publishers however, taking a Trade-view of the matter, declined printing that moderate-sized volume, on the grounds that such works did not pay; that readers in general, when they got the results, cared little for the reasons, &c., &c.

This may be, and probably is, all very true; but if I had known it, I should either have declined the editing altogether, or I should only have given the simplest and least disputable corrections: for now I stand exposed, without the power of reply, to the sneers and taunts of any one who chooses to assail me.

This, however, I care not very much about. I never expected to make anything by the work, and fame is what I have never thought of. It has given me agreeable occupation for thousands of hours, that I might not otherwise have known how to employ. I will go on improving it: for it must, I am convinced, be published some day or other, though probably not in my time; and it will probably be all the better for the delay. I may here add, that it is adapted to any edition of Shakespeare, and has no peculiar connexion with my own.

It only remains for me to request of the readers of "N. & Q." to believe that I can give, if not convincing, at least very probable reasons, for even the boldest corrections I have made; and to judge of me as a critic by my perfect Milton, rather than by my imperfect Shakespeare.

THOS. KEIGHTLEY.

Belvidere, Kent.

SHAKESPEARE FAMILY (2nd S. x. 188, 402.)—E. A. T., S. W. RIX, T. C. N., and W. S., are informed that John Shackspeer (Shakespeare), of Rope Walk, Upper Shadwell, was born in 1612; that on July 14, 1654, he married Martha Seeley, aged nineteen, by whom he had four sons and four daughters; and dying in September, 1690, at the age of seventy-seven, he was succeeded in the business of rope-making by his youngest child Jonathan, who was born Feb. 6, 1670.

This Jonathan married, April 26, 1689, Elizabeth Shallott, and by her had thirteen children; and dying April, 1735, aged sixty-four, left his business to be carried on by his eldest son Arthur, who was born Nov. 3, 1690.

This Arthur died May 9, 1749; leaving his property and the rope-making to be carried on by his younger brother John, on condition that he John "brings up his heir to carry on the trade of rope-making."

This John was the twelfth child of Jonathan, and was born March 16, 1718. He married, 1745, Elizabeth Currie; and by her had eleven children. He died May 10, 1775, an alderman of Aldgate Ward.

In regard to this family being connected with him, "who was not of an age, but for all time," there is neither proof that it is or that it is not. But there are circumstances which lead me to believe that it is.

The dramatic poet lived in St. Helen's Place, Bishopsgate, within two miles of the parish of St. Dunstan's, Stepney; in which parish, and close to where John of Rope Walk lived, are Ben Jonson's Fields. Clearly our poet was often on the scene of the Rope Walk.

About 1580, the poet's father and mother were in London, and would probably be in the same locality. It also appears that several Shakespears came to London about this time.

It seems also strange, that Jonathan Shakespeare, in the rope-making trade, should have been of the Guild of Broiderers; unless, indeed, he had been influenced by Quincy, a connexion of the poet's youngest daughter, who was a citizen and Broiderer at that time.

There can be no doubt that there was a relation of the poet's alive in London, about 1660, at a very advanced age. May not this Shakespeare, very old in 1660, have been the father of John, born in 1612, and who now has a great-great-great-grandson?

My great grandfather has left a document, saying "that their family is from the poet's grandfather, Richard Shakespeare."

ARTHUR SHAKESPEAR.

Richmond.

"CLING."—This word occurs but twice in Shakespeare, namely, in Macbeth, Act I. Sc. 2:—"That do cling together";—Act V. Sc. 5: "Hang alive till famine cling thee." As it seems to me strangely ungrammatical to use the verb in an active sense, I think it probable that the word in the second quotation is a misprint. About Leeds, clam is used in the sense of "to pinch"; as, for instance, "I've clammed wi' hunger." About Newcastle-on-Tyne it is written and pronounced "clem." The word "clams" is also the technical name given to nippers or pinchers of various kinds used in several trades. I therefore suggest that the quotation should be read:—"Hang alive till famine clam thee." Clam, I think, is derived from the Saxon clæmian, German klemmen, to pinch.

G. H. OF S.

PASSAGE FROM "MACBETH" (3rd S. vii. 51).—If, in the wide variety of Shakspeare's Drama, an incongruous word occurs, his editors will proffer their own conjectural substitution; a process, however, which mere homeliness—the habit (not the vice) of his age—can hardly justify. Certainly Mr. Jessor's blanket is the nearest typographical approach to the eminently domestic word which our poet, without incurring any emendation, has more than once seriously used, and which sufficiently accords with his simplicity and directness. Neither Coleridge nor Mr. Collier have, in my poor judgment, mended the matter. If the stage substitutes, as I believe it does, the more elegant word curtain, let the printed text of his Macbeth abide intact by the variable and fantastic notion of gilding his gold, which is all the more pure and precious as it first came from his alchemic hand.

I fully assent to J. DIXON's suggested restoration of faint (p. 52); it relieves a world of idle conjecture.
E. L. S.

PASSAGE IN "MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING" (3rd S. vi. 324).—In "N. & Q." the well-known passage—

"And sorrow wag, cry hem, when he should groan,"—in Much Ado about Nothing, is briefly commented on. Will you please put a comma after "And," and alter "sorrow" to "sorry," and present it thus to your numerous readers? It will then read:—

"If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard,
And, sorry wag, cry hem when he should groan,
Patch grief with proverbs," &c., &c.

I know not if this reading has been given before, but have long thought it the true one.

H. J. L.
Cambridge Terrace, S.

THE ORIGIN OF INFIRMARIES IN ENGLAND.

In a thick octavo volume of tracts, the dates extending from 1710 to 1715, I have one with the following title:—

"The Charitable Society: or, a PROPOSAL for the more Easy and Effectual Relief of the SICK and NEEDY. I was sick, and in Prison, and ye visited me. London: Printed by G. James, for JONAH BOWYER, at the Rose in Ludgate Street, 1715." Pp. 27.

After a Preface of four pages, the body of the pamphlet opens with a declaration of the necessity and usefulness of such societies; and urges their establishment, as a duty towards God and man. The consideration of the subject is comprised under three general heads:—1st. The Scheme of such a Society. 2nd. By what Means it may easily subsist. 3rd. The great Benefits and Advantages.

It would occupy too much of the space of "N. & Q." to give even an outline of the scheme, which is set forth in detail in thirteen propositions. Suffice it to say, that the constitution includes all the features of the modern "Infirmaries," though the word itself had not then come into use.

Women, under the denomination of "Visiting Sisters," were rightly expected to take a prominent part; both in the internal management, and in obtaining funds. Besides a monthly meeting of all the members, it was considered desirable that the President, Steward, and Sisters, should have a meeting once a week. There is a naïve simplicity in the following recommendation:—

"XII. If the Meeting be in some convenient Room of some of the Members' Houses, let there never be any Treat given; and, as far as is possible, let all Discourse be avoided which is foreign to the Business in hand."

Among the means proposed for supporting the Society, in addition to the canvassing for subscriptions—

"It is to be hoped and expected that many will, of their own accord, send in of their charity; particularly those who are in conscience bound, as they value their Salvation, to make Restitution of their unjust Gains; and know not the persons whom they have wronged, and to whom they are obliged to make Restitution."

In setting forth the benefits and advantages, the writer refers to a French author, who shows that such Societies have been already established in Paris; and that—

"the Princesses, Duchesses, and those who are of the highest quality, and nearest to the Crown, do with cheerfulness enter into this Charitable Society for the Relief of the Sick and Needy; and take pleasure in visiting them, and in ministering to them with their own Hands."

After speaking of the benefit and advantage of such Societies, not only to the bodies and souls of those relieved and comforted, but also to those employed in so good a work, the writer adds:

"And now let it not be objected, that this Work of Charity is a troublesome and unpleasant Work. It is true indeed, that a poor Cottage where the Wind blows in on every Side; a hard Bed stuffed with Straw, on which the poor sick Wretch lies; a few Tattered Rags, which served to be a Covering to his weak and naked Body; but above all, that noisome Smell which ordinarily attends him languishing upon the Bed of Sickness in such a mean and straight Place, is no very agreeable and inviting Sight. But if we consider the poor Wretch as a: Representative of Jesus Christ, and with the Eye of Faith behold Him, as it were, lying upon the Bed of Sickness. If we consider farther the great Benefit and Advantage which we by this Labour of Love shall bring to others, and to our own Souls; we shall acknowledge it to be the most delightful and profitable Sight we can behold; the best and most useful Visit we can make; and the most pleasant and advantageous Work we can be employed in."

My brief account of this tract will have shown that it is, in itself, interesting; but I have a more special object in bringing it before the readers of "N. & Q."

Behind the title-page of my copy is written a curious autograph note, which I copy verbatim:—

"Mem^d. The Rev^d Mr Bowyer having communicated to me a Scheme he had met with in a French Sermon concerning of Infirmaries in France, we agreed to have y^e Substance translated and published in y^e manner it is in this Pamphlet, w^h first produced, by God's great Blessing, the Infirmary in St Marg^s Westm^r, and afterw^d the Hospital at Hyde Park Corner, at Winchester, Bath, and one in Dublin."

Was the "Rev. Mr. Bowyer" connected with Jonah Bowyer, the publisher of the pamphlet; and what further is known of him? Who was his worthy coadjutor—the anonymous writer of the above note? W. LEE.

BLACKFRIARS BROKEN-BRIDGE.

When I was a little boy I used very often, on winter evenings, to stop and enjoy the Galantee Show, then to be met with in the streets of my native town, as also in the streets of the adjacent neighbourhood: where, occasionally, Galantee Shows are still to be observed. I remember being particularly delighted with the broken bridge of cardboard; on which the cardboard man, while vigorously working away with his cardboard pickaxe, used to sing:

"The bridge is broke, and it must be mended, Right ful, de diddy dol de day."

It is not long since that I stopped, in broad daylight, to look down upon and meditate over the fate of another kind of broken bridge: for such, indeed, Blackfriars Bridge has been for many years past.

One afternoon, last summer, I tarried in Amwell churchyard to transcribe the monumental inscription of Robert Mylne, the architect of the broken bridge: which, after much labour, and spending of "coined money," was found to be past all possible mending. The inscription just alluded to, although in a country churchyard, is particular to tell that Robert Mylne was not only buried in the vaults of St. Paul's Cathedral, but that "his remains were interred near to those of Sir Christopher Wren." And further, to arrest the Weeverish wanderer on his pedestrian way, the inscription records the fact that Robert Mylne "designed and constructed the magnificent bridge of Blackfriars, London."

When I stood the other morning upon the high-up-in-the-air temporary wooden foot-bridge—looking down on the half demolished and stone-by-stone pulled asunder "magnificent bridge of Blackfriars, London"—I could not help thinking of the cardboard broken bridge, as exhibited in the Galantee Shows of my boyhood time, and of the above quoted words, which I had so recently copied in a country churchyard—far, far away "from the busy hum of men."

And anon, when I take up The Westminster Magazine for 1773, Time's Galantee Show reveals to me another picture, very interesting at this time; when we are compelled to see that Master Father Thames is more constant in his ablutions, so as to appear every day, and indeed all the year round, with a healthy and odoriferous "shining morning face."

"Thursday, June 24, 1773. At noon, the tollmen at Blackfriars bridge were all removed to the Surrey end, all the commissioners being present; so that any person from the city may take an airing on the bridge without taxation."

So says The Westminster Magazine. And such trivial facts and scraps as these, when they meet together, seem almost to resemble the sweet revival of a dying echo. Doubtless the time will arrive again, when we shall be able to take an airing on the Blackfriars Bridge of the future, free at least from taxation to our olfactory sensibilities: especially when we remember, that old John Norden, writing towards the end of the reign of that great Queen Elizabeth—"the most comfortable nursing mother of the Israel of God in the British Isles," as he terms her—was able to record, speaking of Somerset House, with its principal front towards the south, that "the sweete river Thamise offereth manie pleasinge delightes."

EDWIN ROFFE.

Somers Town.

SHERMAN'S "WHITE SALT."—My copy of White Salt, or, a Sober Correction of a Mad World, in some Wel-wishes to Goodness, by John Sherman, B.D., London, 1654 (pp. viii.—242), is bound in old morocco, from which silver (?) clasps, corners, and centre-pieces have been removed; and has the following curious inscription on the fly-leaf, in a contemporary hand, possibly that of the author:—

"Salsâ molâ litabat cui defuerint Thura.

"Who wanted Ox, or Lamb, or Dove,
With Salt did his Devotion prove.
If heaven, I hope then you'll dispense
And make my Salt your Frankincense.
When Sodom in her Flames was Burn'd.
Lott's wife in Salt a pillar turn'd:

But you a liveing pillar stand
Of salt, to season this Fresh land.
Each pious teare from your faire eyes
Is salt, and also sacrifice.
The tomb I wish for is, to be Well pickled in your memory."

EDWARD RIGGALL.

Bayswater.

THE SEA SERPENT.—This irrepressible monster has been seen again, teste the following cutting:—

"'THE SEA SERPENT AGAIN.'—We are in a position definitely to set at rest the much vexed question—discussed so earnestly a few years ago—as to the reality and bona fide existence of the Sea Serpent. A credible correspondent assures us that he has himself seen the creature, and found her (as he calls the Sea Serpent) to be quite a comely object. She made her appearance in these seas a few days ago, and is at the present moment in the waters of our harbour. The Sea Serpent was seen not long since off Tauranga, and had been previously observed among the Chatham Islands. The length of the creature is, we should say, not less than 70 feet; and as she moves along the water, which is occasionally done with considerable rapidity, the body appears a good many feet above the surface. The Sea Serpent presents exactly the appearance of a tight and well-rigged schooner, or perhaps we might say a brigantine, and is under the care of a highly respectable mariner."—New Zealander, Aug. 20, 1864.

B. II. C.

REMARKABLE CASE OF REANIMATION AND CONFESSION.—In one of his sermons, preached before King Edward, Bishop Latimer relates an extraordinary instance of reanimation and confession. During his stay in Oxford, he says, he "heard of an execution done on one who suffered for treason." The man was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to be hung, drawn, and quartered. Though the rope was about his neck, he continued to protest his innocence to the last; after some delay, he was hung and cut down; but life not being quite extinct, the wretched man was brought before a fire, and revived—and in that state of recovered consciousness, he confessed his guilt. "It may well be said," exclaims Latimer, "Pravum cor hominis, et inscrutabile, a crabbed piece of work and unsearchable."

F. PHILLOTT.

CURIOUS BAPTISMAL NAMES.—I may add to the list of curious baptismal names, the following: "Artules" and "Arculus," from gravestones in Clutton churchyard, Somerset, both evidently a corruption of Hercules; which seems to have been a fashionable name here. Also "Tearenery," from a stone in the churchyard at Geldeston, Norfolk. The last is a corruption of Irene. C.

ANCIENT SPECIFICS AGAINST HUNGER.—In Xiphiline's epitome of Dion Cassius, inserted among the fragments of the latter by Reimar, (book lxxvi. sec. 12-16, Hamburg, folio, 1752, p. 1281), is a statement that the ancient Britons could endure all sorts of hardships; that they could remain plunged in the marshes many days, their heads alone being out of water; that in the woods they subsisted on bark and roots; that on all occasions or emergencies (πρὸς πάντα) they prepared a sort of food of which, eating the size of a bean, they neither hungered nor thirsted (τὴν βρώμα ἕφ' οὗ κνύμου τι μέγεθος ἐμφορῶντες, οὐτε πεινῶσιν οὐτε διψῶσι). Sir Robert Sibbald supposed this to be the root of a sort of liquorice, which he says the mountain Scotch call karemyle, and used for the purpose of warding off hunger in his time. Pliny is cited (Nat. Hist., xi. 119; xxii. 11), as attributing such properties to the liquorice (glycyrrhiza). Caramel is the French word for a preparation of sugar, a sort of inspissation, and may have been adopted into the Scottish vernacular in the time of Mary Queen of Scots, when so many French words and customs were in vogue.

Now however useful and pleasant the liquorice may be, and however correctly Pliny may state (loc. cit.) what a valuable a remedy it is for coughs, injury to the fauces, and for the thorax and liver, yet we know that if we take the best preparation of liquorice (Savory and Moore's Pontefract cakes), the size of a bean of this delectable concoction would be a poor substitute for ever so slight a lunch. It is probable our author exaggerates a little, as he may do when he talks of the Britons being whole days in marsh-water up to the chin; but still there is every probability they had some prophylactic, or palliative against hunger, or it would not have been so prominently stated. Concentrated meat, or pemmican, requires concoction in hot water before it is eatable, though a little goes a great way; and much has been talked in late years of the specific virtues of the Arabian haksheesh. Is it possible the Britons may have used some of our native sedative plants for the purpose of deadening hunger? The subject is very curious, and worthy of illustration by our naturalists. A. A.

UNCONSCIOUS IMITATION.—The Court of Queen's Bench was amused some days ago by a case of Breach of Promise of Marriage, in which the gallant captain, who was defendant, had written to the plaintiff a letter referring to a fishing excursion, and wishing that he had been able to use the photograph of the plaintiff as a bait. Probably he was not aware that the idea had been previously used by Dr. Donne, as quoted in Isaac Walton's Complete Angler:—

"Thou thyself art thine own bait,
The fish that is not caught thereby
Is wiser sure, alas! than I."

JOB J. B. WORKARD.

ONE BECCARIA.—

"The English society for abolishing punishment by death has found little favour of late in British eyes, and it has therefore expended its sympathy at the considerable distance of Milan, by subscribing a round sum for the completion of a monument in that city to one Beccaria, who is said to be a warm partisan of the benevolent theory of letting off with his life the enemy of life."

The above is "going the rounds." Perhaps it may be worth preserving in "N. & Q." as a specimen of what distinguished writers may come to.
AN INNER TEMPLAR.

Queries.

SEALS OF GEORGE ABBOT, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, 1611 to 1633.—Can any of your readers refer me to impressions of the archiepiscopal and personal seals of Archbishop Abbot? There are no impressions of these seals in the British Museum. J. J. HOWARD.
Ashburnham Terrace, Greenwich.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL QUERIES.—Can you give me any information regarding Wm. Meeston, M.A., author of a translation of St. Pierre's Harmonies of Nature, 3 vols. 1815? I think he published a work on education about 1822.

Who is author of the English translation of Madame De Stael's Germany, 1813?

Wanted, any information regarding the Rev. J. Thomson, author of Poems, Moral, Elegiac, Descriptive, 1807, 12mo.

Can any of your readers inform me who was editor of The Lapsus Linguae, or College Tatler, an Edinburgh University periodical, 1824-5; published by Sutherland, Edinburgh? It contains original essays, sketches of the professors, dramatic sketches, poetry, &c. The initials of some of the contributors are, "J. S. M.," "A. F. S.," "R. W.," "S. G.," &c.

Can any of your American readers give me any information regarding J. W. Simmons, author of a volume of poetry published at Philadelphia in 1821? He published one or two other volumes, and was author likewise of Valdemar, a tragedy. Is Mr. Simmons still living? R. I.

SIEGE OF MALTA: "CAVALIER."—In the accounts of the siege of Malta frequent mention is made of the "Cavalier," which was evidently a work of different character to that which we call by the same name in modern fortification. What was it? Was it a retrenched bastion? There is, I think, a description of similar works in L'Architecture Militaire du Moyen Age, par M. Viollet-le-Duc; but that book is inaccessible to me at present. J. WOODWARD.

"FALL" FOR "AUTUMN."—It is usual to consider this peculiarly American, and it has probably now become so. How early an instance can be cited of its use in England? I have an impression that it is much older than the following passage from the Journal of one Samuel Bownas, an Englishman, about 1696: "Towards the fall I bought a horse" (p. 10, London edition of 1795). Is not the next use of the word, in a public Act, somewhat curious?—

"There shall be four Days in a Year for Training or Mustering, two in the Spring, and two in the Fall of the Leaf."—Chap. v. of Laws passed at Perth Amboy in New Jersey, in 1693.

Dr. Latham, in his notes on the Germania of Tacitus (p. 76), calls it American, and a "recent term." It may be recent, in his sense; and yet much older than the English language in America, or the "American language" as some are pleased to style it. St. T.

HOWELL'S "LETTERS," EDIT. 1754.—

Grunnius Sophista (p. 337).—Who was this testator, who, "having nothing else to dispose of but his body," devised it in the quaint manner there related? Was he a Grynæus? If so, which? And where can I find more of him and his will?

"The Extended Woman meaning the blessed Virgin" (p. 440).—Why, how, when, or where extended?

Corinth now Ragusa (p. 53).—"We passed by Corinth, now Ragusa, but I was not so happy as to touch there; for, you know, 'Non cuivis homini contingit adire Corinthum.'" What is the meaning of now Ragusa?

Captain Mahun (p. 282).—"And Captain Mahun was pitifully massacred by his own men lately." (Date of letter May 2, 1640.) Where can I find the story of Captain Mahun?

Ragged-staff of the Spaniard (p. 115).—"Therefore, rather than they [the Protestants] should be utterly suppressed, I believe the Spaniard himself would reach them his ragged-staff to defend them." What is the allusion here?

"The Lady Southwell's news from Utopia, that he who sweareth when he playeth at dice may challenge his damnation by way of purchase" (p. 208).—Wanted, information about this lady and her book. The biographical dictionaries and Lowndes afford none. H. L. T.

"HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN."—Hymn 20, entitled "Sunday," commencing—

"Morn of morns, and day of days!
Beauteous were thy new-born rays."

The first and third lines are sung to music identical with that of the beginning of the beautiful song, "Oh! Nanny, wilt thou gang with me?" Which is the more ancient, the hymn or the song? By whom was each composed? * SENESCENS.

[* The air of "Oh! Nanny, wilt thou gang with me?" has been generally considered the composition of Thomas Carter, a native of Ireland, and brought up in the choir of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin. He died on October 12, 1804. But in the Gentleman's Magazine for May, 1847, it is attributed to Joseph Blaidon, of Great Queen Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, who died on May 7, 1774. It is there stated by Blaidon's grandson that Carter was a purchaser at the sale of his grandfather's library, and among other things of the air of "Oh! Nanny," then in manuscript. Carter, it appears, subsequently published it as his own composition.—ED.]

HYMNOLOGY.—Can any of your readers tell me the authors of the three hymns which are numbered 61, 137, and 165, in the "Ancient and Modern" Collection? The first lines are:—

61. "The people that in darkness sat,
A glorious Light have seen."

137. "Three in One, and One in Three,
Ruler of the earth and sea,
Hear us, while we lift to Thee
Holy chant and psalm."*

165. "Take up thy Cross, the Saviour said."

The second of these hymns is, I understand, taken "from the German"; but I should like to know where the original is to be found. D. Y.

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—A Welsh lady has lately written to me as follows:—

"He took me over Llandaff Cathedral, now being restored under the superintendence of Mr. John Pritchard, the diocesan architect. The restorations are carried out, in what I consider excellent taste, with one or two slight exceptions; one of them being that the verse selected for the emblazonment of the otherwise beautiful organ bears the following astonishing ejaculation: 'O all ye Beasts and Cattle, bless ye the Lord!' Considering the congregation, this is certainly not complimentary."

Your readers, most probably, will agree with my fair correspondent; but can any of them inform me what special lesson is intended to be conveyed by this odd-sounding text? W.

LONGEVITY.—In the churchyard of Hampton, co. Middlesex (or perhaps in that of Hampton Wick), is a monumental inscription to a Mrs. Hannah Brown, who is stated to have died in 1785 at the age of 103. She was, I believe, the widow of Mr. Lancelot Brown of Hampton Court, who was, I think, a gardener of some repute; and their grandchild was another Lancelot Brown, some time M.P. for Hunts, and resident at Fenstanton, in that county, in 1788.

Though sceptical of most instances that have been publicly alleged, I have some reason to think the above is worthy of credit, and desire to know more about this supra-centenarian. C. Ross.

HENRY MARTYN was a contributor to the Speculator in 1711. Paper No. 200 is among his contributions. He is believed to have been a Wiltshire man, and to have married an heiress of a family of the name of Bendall. His son, Bendall Martyn, was Secretary to the Board of Excise. I should be greatly obliged if any of your correspondents could give the arms of these two families; and any further particulars concerning their pedigrees, and especially the name of the wife of Bendall Martyn. MARTNET.

PHONETIC HEADSTONES.—In a little kirkyard, near Elgin, I noticed a gravestone with an inscription beginning "Hēr liz ðe bodi," and written throughout in phonetic characters. Can any of your readers inform me if this is common? I should like to hear of another. T. W. HORSLEY.

Pembroke College, Oxon.

RAGUSA.—Who was Governor (Rector) of Ragusa in 1773? Where can I find a tolerably full account of the republic, and a list of its Governors or Doges? What metal is the shield—Or, or Argent, with four bars gules? JOHN DAVIDSON.

SPANISH JEWS.—It may be worthy of observation, whether the Spanish language of the Jews in Constantinople, Salonika, and Smyrna, is not giving way to the Italian? Such is certainly my view. Formerly the Spanish standard was maintained by the occasional arrival of emigrants, or exiles, from Spain, of whom I have seen in the Jewish burial grounds old tombs, with coats of arms and Spanish inscriptions; but now there is nothing to keep up the purity of Spanish, and its extinction seems imminent in the rivalry of Italian. HYDE CLARKE.

Smyrna, Turkey.

SWEEPING THE HEARTH, OR THE THRESHOLD.—A friend informs me that, in Hertfordshire and the adjacent counties, this custom prevails among the cottagers. If a visitor comes in who is welcome, they immediately sweep up the hearth. But if it be one with whom there is some secret feud, or who they consider de trop, the earliest decent opportunity is taken of sweeping the threshold of the door. This is a matter quickly understood, and the intruder walks off in a great huff. Does the custom prevail elsewhere in England? A. A.

Poets' Corner.

FAMILY OF DE VAUDIN, OR VAULDIN.—Can any of your readers direct me where to find the history of the ancient Breton family of De Vaudin, or Vauldin? Branches of it appear to have settled in Normandy and other northern provinces of France at a very early date. J. BERTRAND PAYNE.

Brompton.

HENRY WALKER, MINSTREL.—I shall be much obliged by your insertion of the following matter, and queries arising out of it:—

Henry Walker, musician, of London, by his will, dated April 17, 1612, gave to the master wardens and assistants of the Company of Musicians in London 120*l.*, for the benefit of the poor of Kingston, Herefordshire.

John Walker, his brother, and the surviving executor of his will, by deed dated May 8, 1626, conveyed lands in the parish of Kingston to trustees, with a view to give effect to his brother's will.

The Company of Musicians is supposed to have been incorporated by King James I. Arms were granted to this Company in 1614. (Stow's London, by Strype, 2nd App., p. 16).

[* Attributed to Mr. Marriott.—Ed.]

In the account of the sale of the articles, which formed part of the Sainsbury Museum, recently sold, occurs:—

"Indenture of bargain and sale between Henry Walker, citizen and minstrel of London, and William Shakespeare of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, gentleman, William Johnson, citizen and vintner of London, John Jackson, and John Hemyng, gentleman, for 140*l.*, of a house or tenement, with the appurtenances situate within the precincts of the late Black Fryers, London, March 12th, 1612, 55*l.*—Mr. Halliwell. (See Times.)

Does any list of the Company of Musicians exist?

Can Mr. Halliwell, or any of your readers, say whether Henry Walker, the testator, was the same person as Henry Walker mentioned in the bargain and sale? And whether Henry Walker, minstrel, was associated with William Shakespeare?

JAMES DAVIES.

Moor Court, Kington, Herefordshire.

"DRAGON OF WANTLEY": JOHN, THIRD EARL OF BUTE.—If any of your correspondents would kindly oblige me with the following, I will most willingly enclose you postage stamps to cover any expenses:—

1. The music of the Dragon of Wantley.
2. The burial place of John, third Earl of Bute, and his epitaph.

JAMES DAVIDSON, Head Master.

Grammar School, Bowness, Windermere.

THE WELCHES IN ENGLAND.—Extracting the following from Thafarzik's Slawanski Starozitnosti (Slavonic Antiquities),—a valuable work of ancient history and ethnology,—I solicit the attention of the friends of these sciences to this subject; and beg them, for the sake of English and Slavonic ancient history, to devote themselves to the investigation thereof.

After having substantiated his proofs of the nationality of the Welch, one of the Slavonic tribes now extinct, the above historian proceeds to speak of their settlements in Batavia and Britain on the 600th page as follows:—

"Still more dark and uncertain are the accounts of the sojourn of the Welch in England, especially in that part of the country which was termed, after the arrival of the Anglo-Saxons, Wiltshire, or Wilts, the present county of Wiltshire. There are mentioned early enough the town of Wilton (now Wilton), and the inhabitants, Wiltuns and Wiltonic.

"It is probable that in the great migration of the North Western Nation which ensued in the fourth and fifth centuries, there arrived there some of the troops of the warlike Welch, and, having liked that already considerably fertilised country, settled there. That may account for the great amount of original Slavonic terms in the modern English language. But as I am at present unable to follow this very important subject to its sources, I postpone the investigation thereof to a better time."

The author mentions on the same page that, according to "Cron. de Trajecto," the Welch and Slavonians came to Friesland from England, and also that the historian Mone declares, without hesitation, the Wilts in England to be the Welch.

CORCONTIUS.

Queries with Answers.

BISHOP PERCY OF DROMORE (3rd S. vi. 261, 338.)—Your correspondent H. S. G., at p. 338 of the last vol. of "N. & Q.," doubts very strongly the connection of the good bishop with the house of Northumberland. He is on this point by no means singular, for several eminent antiquaries are quite as sceptical. It would, however, seem as if Percy persuaded himself fully into the belief of the connection, and was justly proud of it. One thing is very clear that he was received on the most intimate footing by the duke and duchess of Northumberland of that day, though I cannot of course say whether they allowed the claim of relationship.

I transcribe the following passages from Leigh Hunt's amusing book The Town (edition 1850, pp. 187, 188):—

"Northumberland House was discovered to be on fire March 18, 1780, at five o'clock in the morning, which raged from that hour till eight, when the whole front next the Strand was completely destroyed. Dr. Percy's apartments were consumed; but great part of his library escaped the general ruin."

This is a quotation recorded from Malcolm, vol. ix. p. 308. Here follow Mr. Leigh Hunt's comments upon it:—

"Mr. Malcolm has spoken of the apartments of Dr. Percy. This was Dr. Percy, Bishop of Dromore, who gave an impulse to the spirit of the modern muse by his Reliques of Ancient English Poetry. He was a kinsman of the Northumberland family."

Percy was at this time Dean of Carlisle, which preferment he had obtained in 1778. In 1782 he became Bishop of Dromore, and there died Sept. 30, 1811. He was, I presume, buried in the cathedral there, far from the little country church of Easton-Maudit in Northamptonshire, in which he had so long ministered, and the sepulchre of three of his children.

I should be glad to be informed whether there is any memorial of him in Dromore cathedral; and if so, whether alliance is thereon claimed for him with the ducal house? Such a record, if existing, might be worthy of a niche in the pages of "N. & Q.," and would be valuable evidence.

OXONIENSIS.

[The inscription to the memory of Bishop Percy on a marble tablet in the north transept of Dromore cathedral does not allude either to his parentage or family. It is printed in Cotton's Fasti Ecclesie Hibernice, iii. 287. The Bishop's connection with the house of Northumberland has not been satisfactorily proved; but on this subject consult Nichols's Leicestershire, iv. 708; Nash's Worcestershire, ii. p. iv.; Green's Worcester; Gent. Mag. lxxx. (i.) 502; lxxxii. (i.) 225; and "N. & Q." 2nd S. vi. 410; vii. 34.]

CÆSAR AND THE DELPHIC ORACLE.—It is stated that Augustus Cæsar having sent an embassy to Delphos to inquire concerning his successor about the time of Christ's birth, the oracle gave the following reply:—

"Me puer Hebreus superum Rex linquere tecta
Hæc jubet, et Ditis cæcas remeare sub umbras;
Ergo silens aris tu nunc abscedito nostris."

Can any of your readers inform me in what Latin author the above account is to be found?

QUERIST.

[We believe that these oft-quoted lines can be traced no higher than the era of Suidas, to whom they are referred by Anthony Van Dale in his De Oraculis, 4to, Amstd. 1700, p. 444. Sir Thomas Browne of Norwich, in his Pseudodoxia Epidemica (s. v. Cessation of Oracles), gives both a Latin and an English translation of Suidas's Greek triplet; which, in all probability, were made by the eccentric knight himself, who offers, however, no authority for them—a very unusual thing with him. Sir Thomas being a firm believer in the supernatural and satanical character of oracles will account in some measure for this omission. Gibbon, the historian, is silent on this subject; and, we may add, every other trustworthy biographer of Augustus.

The supposed oracle is thus given in Greek by Suidas (Lexicon, Oxford ed., fol. 1834,) under Αἰγούστος:—

Παῖς Ἑβραῖος κέλεται με, Θεοῖς μακάρεσσιν ἀνδάνων, Τόνδε δέμον προλιπεῖν, καὶ ἀΐθην αὖθις ἰκίεσθαι.
Λοιπὸν ἄπιθι σιγῶν ἐκ βομῶν ἡμετέραν.

Suidas adds that Augustus on returning to Rome set up an altar with the inscription Ὁ βομὸς οὐτός ἐστι τοῦ πρωτογένου Θεοῦ (Hæc est ara primogeniti Dei).

Among the middle-age writers who have cited the "oracle" in question, it is remarkable that Cedrenus alleges no less an authority for it than Eusebius:—

Ὁ δὲ αὐτὸς φησὶν Εὐσέβιος ὅτι οὗτος ὁ Αἰγούστος ἀπελθὼν εἰς Δελφοὺς κ.τ.λ. (See the Corpus Scrip. Hist. Byzantine, Bonn, 1838, vol. i. p. 320.) This would bring us back to the fourth century. Van Dale, however, as cited above, states that he has failed in discovering the place in Eusebius, and so have we.]

FANNY RUSSELL AND FREDERICK PRINCE OF WALES.—Walpole, in his Letter to the Countess of Ossory, dated 26 August, 1784, speaks of "Fanny Russell's reply to the late Prince of Wales, on the 30th of January, as an anecdote especially worthy of being remembered." Who was Fanny Russell, and where can I find the anecdote?
F. R.

[In the suite of the Princess Amelia, daughter of George II., was a lady of the name of Fanny Russell, the great granddaughter of Oliver Cromwell. One day, it happened to be the 30th of January, the anniversary of the martyrdom of Charles I., she was in waiting, and occupied in adjusting some part of the Princess's dress, when Frederick, Prince of Wales, came into the room, and sportively said, "For shame, Miss Russell! why have you not been at church, humbling yourself for the sins on this day committed by your ancestor?" "Sir," replied Miss Russell, "for a descendant of the great Oliver Cromwell, it is humiliation sufficient to be employed as I am in pinning up the tail of your sister." Miss Fanny Russell married John Rivett, Esq., formerly of the Guards; he died in 1763, and his wife in 1775.]

WELLESLEY.—On October 10, 1797, Richard, second Earl of Mornington, afterwards Marquis Wellesley in Ireland, was elevated to the British peerage by the title of Lord Wellesley, of Wellesley, in the county of Somerset. Where is Wellesley?
P. S. C.

[The manor of Wells Leigh, which gave name to the eminent family of Wellesley, is in the ancient parish of St. Cuthbert, nearly two miles south of the city of Wells. (Vide Collinson's Somersetshire, iii. 405, and "N. & Q." 1st S. vi. 585; viii. 255; 2nd S. vii. 164.) Playfair in his British Family History, iv. 62, ed. 1810, informs us, that "the ancient family of Wellesley is of Saxon origin, but derives its name from the manor of Wellesley (originally Welles-leigh), in the county of Somerset, which it held under the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and to which it removed soon after the Conquest, having been previously seated in Sussex. Avenant de Wellesleghe, in the fourth year of Henry I., obtained from that prince a grant of the grand serjeantry of all the country east of the river Perret as far as Bristol Bridge; in the centre of which district lay his manor of Wellesleigh, in the hundred of Wells, and near the city of that name."]

OBADIAH WALKER'S PRIVATE PRINTING PRESS. Where will I see a list of the books printed at the private printing press set up at his lodgings by Obadiah Walker, Master of University College.

AIKEN IRVINE, CLK.

Kilbride, Bray.

[In the reign of James II. Obadiah Walker "set up cases of letters and a press in the back part of his lodgings, belonging to him as Master of University College, where he printed the works of Abraham Woodhead, his quondam tutor, and would have printed many more (all, or most, against the Church of England), had King James II. continued longer on the throne." (Wood's Athens (Bliss), iv. 440.) Walker had a license granted to him by the king, dated May, 1686, for the exclusive sale of certain books for twenty-one years. The license as well as a list of the books to be printed will be found in Gutch's Miscellanea Curiosa, i. 287—289.]

LADY ELIZABETH TREVOR.—Sir Richard Steele's daughter married Lord Trevor, and had a daughter Diana. Did this daughter ever marry? If so, who did she marry, and had she any issue, and has she at the present day any descendants?

R. W. E. L.

U. C. Club.

[John, third Lord Trevor, married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Richard Steele, on May 31, 1731. His lordship died at Bath on Sept. 27, 1764, at which place their only child, Diana-Maria, died on Jan. 29, 1778. She was remarkably beautiful, though unfortunately an idiot. Lady Elizabeth Trevor died on Jan. 1, 1782, and was privately interred in the parish church of Walcott, near Bath.]

URICONIUM, OR WROXETER. — Where can I find a good account of this place, and more especially of the explorations of the ruins? Are these still going on? ESICA.

[For particulars of the excavations at Wroxeter, the ancient Uriconium, consult the Journal of the Archaeological Association, xv. 205—224, 311—317, 350, 352, 358; xvi. 342, 349; xvii. 100—110, 218, 329; xviii. 75—78, 308; xix. 106—111. The Times newspaper of July 25, Aug. 16, Sept. 3 and 26, Oct. 19, 1859; June 23, July 19, Aug. 13, 1860; Oct. 5, 1861; and Jan. 11, 1862; also an article by Mr. C. Roach Smith in the Gentleman's Magazine for Nov. 1862, pp. 598—601.]

BACHELOR OR WIDOWER. — By which of the above is a man to be designated when divorced? A lady, I believe, regains her maiden name.

K. R. C.

[In Macqueen's Practical Treatise on Marriage, Divorce, and Legitimacy, the author, speaking of how divorced persons will appear before a clergyman for matrimony, says distinctly (p. 110), "The man will present himself as a bachelor; the woman will come, not as a married person or as a widow, but as a spinster. In a word, the sentence of divorce will effectually restore the parties to their original state."]

Replies.

RED LION.

(3rd S. vii. 136.)

The communication of PRESTONIENSIS respecting the numerous signs of the Red Lion to be found in Lancashire, brought to my recollection a story about that popular animal, which Canning introduced into one of his speeches delivered in Liverpool; and which is so good, that it deserves to be embalmed in your columns. The speech, in which the passage I refer to occurred, was spoken at the Canning Club on the 23rd of August, 1822; when the illustrious orator, alluding to those who put forward "parliamentary reform as the panacea for every evil," proceeded to say:—

"I read a few days ago (I cannot immediately recollect where) a story of an artist who had attained great eminence in painting, but who had directed his art chiefly to one favourite object. That object happened to be a red lion. His first employment was at a publichouse, where the landlord allowed him to follow his fancy. Of course, the artist recommended a Red Lion. A gentleman in the neighbourhood, having a new dining-room to ornament, applied to the artist for his assistance; and, in order that he might have full scope for his talents, left to him the choice of a subject for the principal compartment of the room. The painter took due time to deliberate, and then, with the utmost gravity and earnestness: 'Don't you think,' said he to his employer, 'that a handsome red lion would have a fine effect in this situation?' The gentleman was not entirely convinced, perhaps; however, he let the painter have his way in this instance, determined, nevertheless, that in his library, to which he next conducted the artist, he would have something of more exquisite device and ornament. He showed him a small panel over his chimney-piece. 'Here,' says he 'I must have something striking. The space, you see, is but small: the workmanship must be proportionably delicate.' 'What think you,' says the painter, after appearing to dive deep into his imagination for the suggestion, 'what think you of a small red lion?' Just so it is with parliamentary reform. Whatever may be the evil, the remedy is a parliamentary reform; and the utmost variety you can extort from those who call themselves 'moderate reformers,' is, that they will be contented with a small red lion."

C. Ross.

SOBRIQUETS OF REGIMENTS.

(3rd S. vii. 70, 120.)

I wonder that I never heard of the sobriquet of the 33rd Regiment, "Havercake Lads;" as one of my most valued friends, who is yet living, served in that corps in every rank, from ensign to lieutenant-colonel inclusive. He gave me the following anecdote of a recruiting-sergeant belonging to the regiment, who addressed his wondering Yorkshire listeners as followers:—"Come, my lads, don't lose your time listening to what them footsoggers says about their ridgements. List in my regiment, and ye'll be all right. Their ridgements are obliged to march on foot, but my ridgement is the gallant Thirty-third—the First Yorkshire West Riding ridgement; and when you join head quarters ye'll all be mounted on horseback." My friend Colonel ——— assured me that the ruse was nearly always successful.

After the death of the late Duke of Wellington, this corps received its present title, "The Duke of Wellington's Regiment," which superseded its former title. During the lifetime of the Duke, he was requested to apply to Her Gracious Majesty for permission to have the 33rd Regiment named after himself; but he firmly declined to do so, stating that such an application must be postponed until after his decease. He died in September, 1852, and the change of the regimental title was gazetted about July, 1853.

Thus far in reply to MR. HAILSTONE.

Your correspondent SCHIN is right as to the 53rd Regiment being called "The Five-and-Three-pennies;" and I can assure him that the 76th Regiment is spoken of by its officers as "The Old Seven-and-Sixpennies"—five-and-threepence being the daily pay of an ensign in our army, and seven-and-sixpence being the daily pay of a lieutenant, whose commission as lieutenant is dated seven years since.

The history of how the 76th Regiment obtained red facings is curious. In the year 1718, a regiment was raised and formed from invalids. On the 1st of July, 1751, it was numbered "The Forty-first Regiment;" and was disembodied in 1787, when another regiment was raised and received the same regimental number as the invalid corps which had been disembodied—the colonel of which was appointed colonel of the newly-raised regiment. The new regiment had red facings, and was quartered at Windsor soon after it was raised. In the autumn of that year, it became necessary to raise several regiments for service in India—the present 74th, 75th, 76th, and 77th; and the adjutant proceeded to Windsor, in order to receive His Majesty's commands relative to the equipments and facings of the newly-raised regiments. After deciding on the facings of the 74th and 75th, the King seemed uncertain, and at last remarked: "Seventy-sixth, eh? Seventy-sixth! Why the Forty-first were here lately, and looked very well in their red facings. Let the Seventy-sixth have the same."

In April, 1822, the facings of the 41st Regiment were changed from red to white; and on the 19th of March, same year, the Head Quarter division, under Colonel Godwin, embarked at Gravesend for India. Indeed, I hardly remember any distinction being conferred on a regiment without its being soon followed by an order from the Horse Guards to proceed for a lengthened service on a bad foreign station. Thus, the 13th Regiment was made "Light Infantry" when the corps was on board transports conveying it to India; and, as soon as I saw that the Queen's Bays had had their buff facings restored, April 7, 1855 (after having been for seventy-one years in mourning, i. e. wearing black facings), I knew that the Queen's Bays would certainly proceed to India on their next tour of foreign service; and, accordingly, the regiment went to India July 24, 1857, and is still quartered there. The facings were changed from buff to black, in 1784, at the request of the colonel of the regiment, George, fourth Viscount Townshend, and Baron of Lynne; who became Earl of Leicester May 18, 1784. On what grounds did he apply to have the "Bays" put into mourning? Was the previous Earl of Leicester his relative? He was created Marquis Townshend, October 27, 1787; and died September 14, 1807, exactly thirty years after the death of his first wife, Lady Charlotte Compton, only surviving child of the then Earl of Northampton.

With respect to the regiment stated by SCHIX to have borne an uncomplimentary sobriquet, I beg to observe, that I have heard offensive sobriquets applied to regiments; and that such titles shall never be imparted to the readers of "N. & Q." by JUVERNA.

A correspondent begs to ask JUVERNA if the 68th Light Infantry, or "The Faithful Durhams," has not been accidentally omitted in his amusing list of Regimental Sobriquets?
L.
Brussels.

DUNCANSON FAMILY, OF CANTIRE.

(3rd S. vii. 96.)

All the information I possess about the Duncansons is at the service of F. M. S. From the Army Lists in my possession, 1756-1807, and others which I have consulted from the latter year to 1856, I have gleaned, in chief, the following particulars:—

1. A Robert Duncanson was in the army in 1747, at which time he held rank as second lieutenant in the twelve independent companies formed for service in the East Indies under Admiral Boscawen. With that expedition Duncanson was present in 1748, in the action at Ariacoupan, and the unsuccessful siege of Pondicherry. On the return of the force to England, the independent companies were disbanded on December 25, 1750, and Duncanson placed on half-pay still as a second lieutenant. In 1786 most probably he died, as in 1787 his name disappears from the lists.

2. Duncan Duncanson was a lieutenant in the 100th foot on half-pay in 1772. His regiment was disbanded about 1763. I cannot trace when he first received his commission. In 1773 he disappears altogether from the Army List.

3. Robert Duncanson (written Robertson Duncanson in Army Lists in error, see Stewart's Highlanders, ii. 113; 3rd edition, 1825), joined 2nd battalion 71st foot on its formation, and was commissioned as lieutenant Dec. 1, 1775. Next year he was serving in the American war. On Nov. 12, 1778, he was promoted to be captain in the same regiment, and was still in America. When his regiment was disbanded in 1783, he was placed on half-pay; but returned to the service on full-pay as captain of the 77th foot, Nov. 6, 1788. In the Army List, 1791, under the head of "Alterations while Printing," p. 440, Robert Duncanson appears as captain in the 23rd foot, not, however, in the roll of the regiment; and, as his name is altogether dropped in the Army List, 1792, most likely he quitted the service by sale of his commission.

4. William Duncanson was ensign in 82nd foot, Jan. 3, 1778, and served in the American war, obtaining his lieutenantancy, Sept. 18, 1780. About and only find what exactly accords with Dr. Cureton's notes, but in a shorter form. The Syriac of the Martyrs of Palestine gives us the name of Valentina's companion three times: first in the title to the section, and afterwards in a passage which Dr. Cureton thus rendered:—

"He caused both the young women, Hatha and Valentina, to be bound together, and gave sentence against them of death by fire. The name of the first was Hatha, and her father's house was in the land of Gaza; and the other was from Cæsarea, our own city; and she was well known to many, and her name was Valentina."—P. 80.

I need scarcely say, that this justly represents the Syriac text. With regard to the passage in the Greek, where the word ἀσφα occurs, it differs from the Syriac; in which no such idea is conveyed, at least not in similar diction. I need not repeat the Greek which your correspondent has quoted, but I copy Dr. Cureton's rendering of the Syriac which answers to it:—

"Then, at that time of terror, the noble maiden showed the courage of her mind and gave the altar a kick with her foot, and it was overturned; and the fire that had been kindled upon it was scattered about," &c.—P. 29.

I venture to append as literal a translation as I can make of this sentence:—

"Then the noble maiden, in that time of fear, the courage of her mind displayed; and kicked the altar with her foot, and it was overturned, and the fire that upon it was burning she scattered."

The late—alas, that it must be said!—the late learned Canon has stumbled at the last word; but he has not made the mistake ascribed to him by the reviewer, who cannot have carefully read the passage.
B. H. C.

STREET MELODY: "YOUNG LAMBS TO SELL" (3rd S. vii. 118.)—I well remember this cry in Birmingham full sixty years ago; and the seller must have been the old sailor described by Hone in his Table Book, p. 397, or rather by some correspondent, as the article bears the signature of an asterisk. But I also recollect seeing the old soldier, William Liston, who followed up the trade of the old sailor. This was in Northampton, about forty years ago; and I distinctly recollect his peculiar appearance with his wooden leg, iron hook for a right hand, and his remarkable way of crying his "Young lambs to sell." He first gave a prelude of a few bars without words, of which I could not convey an idea without musical notation; and this served to collect boys and girls about him, and excite attention. Then came his cry,—

"Lambs to sell,
Young lambs to sell;
If I'd as much money as I could tell,
I never would cry: 'Young lambs to sell,
Young lambs to sell.'"

This was his cry, as I remember it. I quite agree with MR. ROFFE that the "Young lambs" we purchased in our childhood were far superior to those of modern manufacture.

F. C. H.

READERS (3rd S. vii. 109.)—The office is described at large, with the declaration which Readers have to sign since the Reformation, in Burn's Eccles. Law, sub tit., and in Hook's Church Dictionary.
E. MARSHALL.

Sandford.

Weever, in his Funeral Monuments, p. 127, ed. 1631, says,—

"Readers, quos Pastores (à pasco) nominatos putat Ambrosius, matutino tempore Prophetarum Apostolorumque scripta legebant, ac populum divinis lectionibus quasi pascebant. Which Saint Ambrose supposeth to be called Pastours by the Apostle Paul: did rede the writings of the Prophets and Apostles, at the time of morning prayer, and did feede, as it were, the people with such divine lessons."

J. H. S.

"FOR A YEAR AND A DAY" (3rd S. vii. 116.)—S. inquires the origin of the above phrase. In English it is as old as the thirteenth century, at least, for it occurs in Magna Charta; by which it is declared that—

"The King do not hold the lands of them that he convicted of felony longer than a year and a day ('Nisi per unum annum et unum diem'), after which they shall be restored to the lord of the fee."

But the use of the phrase is probably antecedent to this: for as Magna Charta was not a new legislative creation of the reign of King John—but consists, at least in part, of re-enactments from earlier laws, Norman, Saxon, or British—this article may probably be traced to a prior date. From feudal associations, one would conjecture that it was Norman; but Barrington, in his Observations on the more Ancient Statutes, points out that an equivalent French law omits the "one day," and gives the king possession only for the year—"pour la première année;" whilst he quotes from the Danish law an instance, in which the term of the "year and the day" occurs: "Si agricola domum reliquerit, vicini per annum et diem, quo minus destruat, custodiant" (p. 15).

The precise period of a year and a day is fixed for other purposes in the statute of Gloucester in the reign of Edward I., and in many laws later than Magna Charta. Barrington suggests that the "addition of the day to the year may have been made with a view to prevent all disputes about inclusive and exclusive" (ib.). Was it for a similar reason that a youth's majority has been fixed at twenty-one? so as to be absolutely certain that he had attained twenty.

Amongst the natives in some parts of India, the number of blows legally inflicted for certain offences, is thirty-nine: being the "forty stripes save one," which St. Paul complains that he had so frequently received from the Jews. Has this precise figure been fixed on to ensure that the punishment shall 'not be excessive, by keeping the number of lashes under forty?

There is an oriental air about the addition of the unit, especially when the numbers are large, that reminds one of The Thousand and One Nights of the King Shahriyar, and recalls the dreamy stories of the Princess Shahrazade.

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

QUOTATION WANTED: "OH! WHY WEREN'T YE CUNNING," ETC. (3rd S. vii. 56).—These lines form a portion of a song called "The Widow M^cGra." I have never seen it in print, but it runs thus:—

"If ye'll listen to me now, without any fun,
Sure I'll tell ye how the war begun:
But of all the wars, both great and wild,
There was that betune widow M^cGra and her child!
Musha tooral loo, &c.

"Now if Teddy would list, the serjeant said,
That soon a captain he'd be made;
With a fine long soord, and a big cocked hat,
'Arrah! Teddy, my child, wouldn't you like that?'
Musha tooral loo, &c.

"Then Teddy he fought his way through Spain,
And to the Indies back again—
And the hundreds and thousands that he kilt,
Sure a mortal volume might be filt!
Musha tooral loo, &c.

"Then Widow M^cGra waited on the shore,
For the space of seven long years and more—
Till she saw two ships sailing over the say,
Crying, 'Phililu, hubbahoo, whack, clear the way!'
Musha tooral loo, &c.

"Then Teddy he lighted on the strand,
And Widow M^cGra seized him by the hand;
But after she had given him a kiss or two,
Sax ahe, 'Teddy, my child, this can't be you!'
Musha tooral loo, &c.

"'Arrah! my son Teddy was straight and trim,
And had just one leg to every limb;
'Arrah! my son Teddy was straight and tall,
But the divil regeve the leg have ye got at all!'
Musha tooral loo, &c.

"'Oh! why weren't ye cunning, and why weren't ye cute?
And why didn't ye run away from the Frenchman's shoot?
To think that I my child should call
A man, who couldn't stop the force of a French cannon ball!'
Musha tooral loo, &c.

"'But a thundering war I will proclaim
Against the King of the Frinch, and the snuffy ould
Queen of Spain:
And I'll make them sorely to rue the time,
That ever they shot off the legs of a child of mine!'
Musha tooral loo, &c."

The first two lines of each verse are sung twice over. I have heard the song sung more than twenty years ago by poor Johnstone, the scene-master of the Adelphi, and never by any one else.

JOHN PAVIN PHILLIPS.

Everfordwest.

VENERABLE BEDE (3rd S. vi. 358, 401, 480).—In the edition published in 1848 of Wheatly's

Rational Illustration of the Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England, the following passage occurs at p. 64, and refers to the Venerable Bede:—

"His learning and piety gained him the surname of Venerable. Though the common story which goes about that title's being given him, is this: his scholars having a mind to fix a rhyming title upon his tombstone, as was the custom in those times, the poet wrote,

HAC SUNT IN FOSSA,
BEDE OSSA.

Placing the word OSSA at the latter end of the verse for the rhyme, but not being able to think of any proper epithet that would stand before it. The monk being tired in this perplexity to no purpose fell asleep; but when he awaked, he found his verse filled up by an angelic hand, standing thus in fair letters upon the tomb;

HAC SUNT IN FOSSA,
BEDE VENERABILIS OSSA."

I look on this passage as a literary curiosity, the style and punctuation of which are alike worthy of each other. I should hardly have liked to send up such an exercise

"At Merchant Taylors' School, what time Old Bishop held the rod."

I remember at a Divinity Examination at Oxford more than twenty years since being furnished by the Examiner with the following paper: "State what you know of the History of the Venerable Bede." My answer was that, "His learning and piety had rendered him conspicuous, and the epithet of 'Venerable' was probably conferred upon him for that reason, but certainly not on account of his advanced age, as he died in his sixty-second year." My venerable Examiner, being then but forty-five years old, may have taken my answer as a sly compliment to himself, as I was ordained very high up in the list of candidates for Priest's Orders in a few days after my examination.

One question remains to be asked—If the monk were asleep when the epithet "venerabilis" was added to the inscription, how could he be certain that the verse was "filled up by an angelic hand?" EIN FRAGER, M.A. OXON.

"JOANNES AD OPPOSITUM": TRANSLATION OF ENGLISH PROVERB (3rd S. vii. 114.)—

"To be Jack on both sides; 'Coser a dos cabos,' Span. 'Αλλοπρόβαλλος, a turncoat, a weathercock.'"—Ray's Proverbs.

E. MARSHALL.

Sandford.

SUPERSTITION OR SYMPATHY, WHICH? (3rd S. vi. 490; vii. 45.)—That gifted and admirable man, the late Dr. George Wilson of Edinburgh, thus describes his own sensations subsequent to the amputation of his foot:—

"I have no feeling of the want of a foot, and seem still to feel toes, great and small. John Cairns * thinks this must arise from a pre-ordained harmony between the soul and body!!! Well done, John!"—Memoir by his Sister, p. 301.

* The Rev. Dr. Cairns of Berwick.

A recent American writer, in a very curious and objectionable book, says:—

"Within the corporeal frame there is another body, constituted of more ethereal elements, and an imperishable organisation. It is a curious fact, that persons who have lost a limb always have an internal consciousness that the body is still complete. Although an arm or a leg may have been amputated years before, and its decomposed elements scattered to the winds and waves, the individual still feels that the lost member is with him, and sustaining its proper relations; and his sensation extends to the very extremity, almost as perfectly as when the limb was there. This may seem incredible, but the fact is confirmed by the uniform experience of all who have suffered the loss of one or more of their members. The sphere of their conscious existence is never circumscribed by this partial destruction of the body. From this significant fact we can only infer that the individuality of man does not belong to his body, but, on the contrary, that it inheres in a super-mortal and indestructible constitution."—Dr. S. B. Brittan, Man and his Relations, pp. 574, 575.

Dr. Kerner tells us that Madame Hauffé, the "Seeress of Prevorst," when she saw people who had lost a limb, saw the limb still attached to the body; that is, she saw the nerve-projected form of the limb.

"From this interesting phenomenon," he adds, "we may, perhaps, explain the sensations of persons who still have feeling of a limb that has been amputated: the invisible nerve-projected form of the limb is still in connexion with the visible body."

Fancy or fact, which? one at least of your readers is disposed to ask. W. MAUDE.
Birkenhead.

DIGHTON'S CARICATURES (3rd S. iv. 410; vii. 119).—Bos PIGER has furnished you with several racy anecdotes of the medical practitioners at Oxford in the early part of this century. May I be allowed to fill up his line,

"Optat ephippia bos piger, optat arare caballus."

As a scholar at Alma Mater in their day, I was well acquainted (happily not as a patient) with these doctors, and remember their professional phizzes, dress, &c. Grosvenor sported a venerable powdered pate, and wore a blue coat with brass buttons, the correct thing in that day for an elderly surgeon. Dr. Bourne, on the contrary, clad himself in a sober suit of brown, with a neat brown wig to match, and carried a gold-headed cane in his hand. Dr. Wall, another eminent medical, was attired pretty nearly after the same fashion of the time. Ex uno disce omnes. In the Vista, when the two doctors chanced to walk in High Street, they realised the description of family likeness, often quoted from Ovid,

"Qualis decet esse sororum,
Non eadem facies omnibus, una tamen."

Of the skill in these learned practitioners we undergraduates did not pretend to judge, but like the Dons in Common Room, sometimes perpetuated wretched puns upon their names, over our wine and walnuts; e. g., The weakest go to the Wall; the Bourne from whence no traveller returns—were the post prandial jokes of unfledged scholars with gooseberry beards. The Fellows, old grey-beards, confined themselves to Attic wit from the Greek and Latin classics. Bos PIGER has omitted to mention a contemporary professor with Bourne and Wall, the late Sir Christopher Pegge, who had the good fortune to be dubbed, at the same time with Sir Edward Hitchins, a knight of the thimble, in the presentation of a loyal address from the city of Oxford. On their return from London, Sir Edward was proud of the royal honour conferred upon the mayor; not so Sir Christopher. His new title did not settle comfortably on the stomach of the professor. His appetite began to fail; his clothes (made by Hitchins) hung loosely about him; he could get no sound sleep when he went to his bed; his medical brethren, Wall and Bourne, were called in, and consulted long and thoughtfully on the seat of the disease. It was beyond doubt their patient was a peg too low from some nervous affection. From whence did it arise? They determined to call in Grosvenor to help them in council. When the "Rubber" obeyed the call, post haste, of his medical brothers, both of them anxiously exclaimed, "What is your opinion?" The Rubber, with a look not to be mistaken, whispered in a slow and solemn tone—"night-mare."

QUEEN'S GARDENS.

LUNATIC LITERATURE (3rd S. vii. 120).—In justice to our American friends I would refer your readers to Mr. Sala's "Echoes of the Week" in the Illustrated London News of Feb. 11, in which he entirely refutes the statement that one of the principal New York papers was edited by a lunatic.

EDWARD C. DAVIES.

Cavendish Club.

XIMENES, ETC. (3rd S. vii. 102).—The arms of Cardinal Ximenes were chequy or and gu. In Goussencourt, Martyrologe des Chevaliers de Malthe, Paris, 1643, tome ii. p. 257, the arms of this family are blazoned correctly; but the engraving would make the tinctures arg. and gu. Very few indeed of the engravings, either in this work or in Favyn's Théâtre d'Honneur et de Chevalerie (Paris, 1620), have the hachures in accordance with the blazon: and that Favyn knew nothing of the system at present in use is proved by his speaking with praise of the German method of indicating the tinctures by small initial letters, as l'art Siebmacher's Wappenbuch, &c. He says (tome ii. p. 1797):—

"Il y pouvoit demonstrier les Couleurs, et Mettre de moins, ce qui luy estoit assez aisé de faire, s'il avoit voulu."

570. This writer says he saw the title, which was placed above the head of Jesus; and upon it was written: "Jesus Nazarenus Rex Judæorum." He says he held it in his hand and kissed it, in the church of Constantine at Jerusalem (sec. 20). He is silent in reference to the Greek and Hebrew. The most recent article upon the subject is in the Sunday at Home for 1864, p. 804. I may remark that, in one MS. of Antoninus, the reading is "Hic est Rex Judæorum;" and that there is considerable diversity in Greek MSS. of the Gospels as to the words employed by Pilate. The actual order of the languages cannot be determined, and the question is rather curious than important. For a description of the title, as shown at Rome, see Severano, Memorie Sacre delle Sette Chiese di Roma (Rome, 1630), p. 626. This title was found in 1492, and is mentioned by writers soon after.

B. H. C.

"MUNGO" (3rd S. vii. 135.)—Was not the term "mungo" given to a low class of woollen goods in consequence of the manufacturer, when the bad quality of them was pointed out to him, saying: "Well—well—there they are, and they mun go;" "mun go" being a provincialism for "must go": meaning thereby, that they must be sold at any sacrifice, rather than not be sold at all?

Hence low rubbishy woollens have taken the name of "mungos."

J. B. C.

I cannot help G. G. to the origin of the term "mungo," as applied to shoddy, or devil's dust; but I can inform him that the name "mungo" is applied, in the north of Ireland—and, for aught I know, in Scotland also—to an alkaline liquid used for cleansing linen yarns. What the mungo is composed of I have no notion; but I can answer for it that it is useful for cleansing other things besides yarn: since when, boy like, I had my hands covered with thick dirt, I have often made them perfectly clean and white by simply washing them in a vat of mungo in a friend's mill.

C. W.

GREEK CHURCH (3rd S. vii. 134.)—I will keep clear of all controversy in a brief reply to the inquiries of G. G. As to the precise relation of the Greek Church to the Roman Catholic: it is the relation of a schismatical and heretical church, entirely separated from her communion. It is so in consequence of its denying the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son, and maintaining that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father only; and also, from its denial of the Pope's supremacy. In every other article of faith, the Greek Church agrees with the Roman Catholic, believing in the same seven sacraments, the mass, purgatory, &c.

As to the precise relation in which the Greek Church stands to the Church of England, it agrees with it in one only point—the denial of the Pope's supremacy. The Greek Church does not acknowledge the validity of the Anglican Orders. Copious information on the Greek Church may be had by consulting the great and learned work, La Perpétuité de la Foi; which gives professions of faith, definitions of synods, liturgies, and ecclesiastical records, in abundance. Much information may be derived also from Bergier's Dict. de Théologie, and Bell's Wanderings of the Human Intellect.

F. C. H.

The best and fullest account of the Greek Church in our language, I believe, is the Rev. J. Mason Neale's History of the Holy Eastern Church (Masters or Rivington, I think). G. G. will probably find there what he wants.

LYTTELTON.

Hagley, Stourbridge.

An article, entitled "The Greeks of the Greek Church in London," by William Gilbert, appears in the number of Good Words for the present month. I think it will prove interesting to G. G., and afford him the information he requires.

C. K.

LIMEHOUSE (3rd S. vii. 35, 121.)—May I quote the following from An Account of Millwall, published in 1853?—

"In behalf of the common derivation of this name, we may quote Mr. Pepys. In his Diary under date, October 9, 1661, we find the following:—'By coach to Captain Marshe's at Limehouse, to a place that hath been their ancestors' for this 250 years, close by the lime-house which gives the name to the place.' The lime-house is there to this day, and also a house, which, if I mistake not, is either the same, or occupies the same site, as the one mentioned by Mr. Pepys. John Stow, a man possessing far more of the spirit of an antiquary, and who made such things his particular study, adopts the view that Limehouse is a corrupt spelling for Lime-host, or Lime-hurst; the latter of which denotes a plantation or a place of lime-trees. John Norden, in 1592, rather earlier than Stow, gives the more usual explanation, and, as we have seen, refers to the lime-kilns. These lime-kilns are very ancient, and must have existed for 450 years."

The reference to Limehouse by Norden mentioned previously seems to be the insertion of the name in his map. (See the Account of Millwall, &c., pp. 12, 108.) There is a good plan of Limehouse in Gascoyne's Survey of Stepney, 1703—a large map of the old parish of Stebonheath. The plate comprising the Limehouse section was a few years since at the Town Hall of the parish, and I have an impression (modern of course) taken from it. This is what I was told on the spot.

B. H. C.

S. DECHARMES, LONDON (3rd S. vii. 133.)—Mr. Simon De Charmes, the eminent watch-maker, flourished about the beginning of the last century. He built a house at Hammersmith, which is now called Grove Hall (at present unoccupied). The estate contained about twenty-five acres. About 1780 his son, David De Charmes, resided here, and was buried in the churchyard, in which is now a gravestone to the memory of Mr. David De Charmes (probably the son of the last named), who died March 15, 1783, aged fifty-six years. John De Charmes, Esq., died July 15, 1801, aged forty-seven years. Mrs. Ann De Charmes, relict of the above, died Nov. 20, 1812, aged eighty years. Also Mrs. Mary Ann De Saily, daughter of David and Ann De Charmes, who died March 24, 1822. The estate referred to has passed through several possessors during the present century, but Mrs. Mary Ann De Charmes, wife of David De Charmes, enjoyed an annuity of 200*l.*, payable out of the property, to her death, which occurred in the month of July, 1856. It is said (Faulkner's Hist. of Hammersmith) that the ancestor of this family came to England at the time of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, but I do not find the name in the Lists of Foreign Protestants and Aliens settled in England between 1618 and 1688, edited by Wm. Durrant Cooper, Esq., F.S.A., for the Camden Society, in 1802. Isaac des Camps obtained letters of denization in 1684.

JOHN MACLEAN.

Hammersmith.

COLOURS IN HERALDRY (3rd S. vi. 394, 480; vii. 102.)—I have seen some woodcuts in an old German work, The Council of Constance, published early in the sixteenth century, in which the distinction between metal and tincture was given by white for the first, and black for the second. It would be interesting to trace the commencement of this mode of distinction. It would probably date from the invention of block printing. Z. Z.

HAYS OF ERROL (3rd S. vii. 84.)—If H. will carefully read over my article on the Hays of Errol, he will find it perfectly correct. Sir David de Haya de Erroll, who commenced the existing Tabill about 1346, says that many names of his ancestors were wanting from the time of the battle of Luncarty, DCCCCLXXX., to his commencement of the Tabill in 1346.

JAMES DAVIDSON.

Bowness.

CRISOLINE (3rd S. vi. 512.)—I have impressions of two engravings, in large folio, of the street cries of some Italian city. They are on copper, apparently by different artists, and seem to be from the sixteenth century, or the first half of the seventeenth. In both the figures of the cries are arranged in five long lines, eight or nine figures in each line. The one unsigned has forty-three criers, each with a descriptive cry, a couplet in Italian below. The other has the engraver's monogram at the lower corner on the right, but it is very faint, apparently MB, which I cannot identify. It has forty-one such cries and criers, with similar couplets in Italian at the foot of each. The third in the third line is a man selling crinolines, exactly as we see them in our shop windows. He has three of these hateful objects slung on his back, which he holds by a string in his right hand, while he holds one such in his left hand. The lines below are,—

"Correte o donne che hauete i puscini
A comprar questi belli nostri crini."

Am I right in translating this —

"Who will my fine new crinnies try!
Come, girls with child, make haste to buy!"

If so, and if they were properly designed to hide pregnancy, and supposing that these abominations must still be used, might they not be brought back to their original moderate size, and confined to their original mock-modest object?

GEORGE STEPHENS.

Cheapinghaven, Denmark.

TOWN CLERK'S SIGNATURE (3rd S. vii. 136.)—The clerks of assize of the various circuits, and several officers of the courts of justice, sign by their surnames only the various writs which they issue. G.

YORKSHIRE POET (3rd S. vi. 389.)—Why a Yorkshire poet? Has the author ever been identified? My copy is in 8vo, and has the following title:—

"Pecunie obediunt Omnia. Money masters all things: or, Satyrical Poems, shewing the Power and Influence of Money over all Men, of what Profession or Trade soever they be. To which are added, A Lenten Litany, by Mr. C—d, a Satyr on Mr. Dryden, and several other modern Translators; also, a Satyr on Women in general; together with Mr. Oldham's Character of a certain Ugly Old P—."

"Tho' Jews, Turks, Christians, different tenets hold, Yet all agree in idolizing gold."

"Printed and sold by the Booksellers of London and Westminster, 1698."

The poem has no merit as such, but it contains many valuable illustrations of the social and domestic manners of the seventeenth century, particularly among the lower and trading orders. This edition has first two pages of poetry, "To the Reader." The following commendatory verses are signed not in full but with initials only. Those by R. J. are "To his Honoured Kinsman," not "Uncle," as in Mr. HAILSTONE's copy.

Section LXXXV., "On Booksellers," p. 58, in my copy, commences thus:—

"The Bookseller for ready cash will sell
For as small profit as other traders will;
But then you must take special care, and look
You no new title have to an old book;
For they new title pages often paste
Unto a book which purposely is plac'd,
Setting it forth to be th' second edition,
Or third, or fourth, with 'mendments and addition;
But when you come for to peruse and look,
You will not find one word in all the book
Put either in or out, no, nor amended,
For that's a thing that never was intended
By the author; but when a book begins to fail,
This is their trick to quicken up the sale."

And if a new edition comes indeed,
From all th' old books they have, they then with speed
The title-pages oft pluck out and tear,
And new ones in their places fixed are;
Then have the confidence to put to sale
Such books for new they know are old and stale;
And th' buyer thus, if he does not desery,
Will have a cheat put on him purposely."

All the rest of this severe but true description is well worth reading. Many curious words occur throughout the book. The last section, No. CLXXVI,
"The Epilogue," is only of two lines:—

"My Muse is tir'd, so has no more to say,
But that Pecunia obediunt omnia."

GEORGE STEPHENS.

Cheapinghaven, Denmark.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Haunted London. By Walter Thornbury. Illustrated by F. W. Fairholt. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Horace Walpole praised St. Foix's Rues de Paris, and proposed to write a book on London of the same character. What Walpole proposed Mr. Thornbury, who claims to be the Old Mortality of bygone London, has accomplished for the western part of it; and starting from Temple Bar, and walking westward until he turns up St. Martin's Lane, he returns by Long Acre and Drury Lane to Lincoln's Inn Fields; and as he leads us with him, points out "the legendary houses, the great men's birth-places, the haunts of poets, the scenes of martyrdoms, and the battle-fields of old factions." He tells us how "the tombs of great men, in the chinks of which nettles have grown undisturbed ever since the Great Fire, are now being uprooted;" and "how busily Time, the destroyer and improver, is working—erasing tombstones, blotting out names on street-doors, battering down narrow streets, and effacing one by one the memories of the good, the bad, the illustrious, and the infamous." The book overflows with anecdotal gossip; and as Mr. Thornbury is scrupulous in quoting his authorities, and indexing his facts, he has produced a volume which will make all who read it look anxiously for its successors. One word more in justice to Mr. Fairholt, whose drawings on wood from the old prints of London add alike to the value and interest of the book.

A Famous Forgery; being the Story of the Unfortunate Dr. Dodd. By Percy Fitzgerald, M.A. (Chapman & Hall.)

The story of Dr. Dodd—his strange career, his wretched crime, his melancholy death, the great moralist's interference in his behalf, the apparent indisposition of Lord Chesterfield to save his unfortunate tutor from the penalty of his misdeeds—furnish Mr. Fitzgerald with materials for a very readable little volume; in which the principal incidents of Dr. Dodd's career are so illustrated by contemporary gossip, as to bring them very vividly before the reader. We wish Mr. Fitzgerald had been able to cast some light upon the terrible insinuation thrown out by Walpole.

Bibliotheca Americana: a Catalogue of Books, Pamphlets, Manuscripts, Maps, Engravings, and Engraved Portraits, illustrative of the History and Geography of North and South America, &c., on Sale. By J. Russell Smith.

Though it is not our practice to call attention to Bookseller's Catalogues generally, the present, containing as it does nearly seven thousand articles relating to America, certainly claims recognition as a valuable contribution to American Bibliography.

We are glad to see that Messrs. Longman announce a new edition of Brande's Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art, reconstructed and greatly extended, to adapt it to the present state of knowledge.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentleman by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

 The bookseller, who intimated a copy of TYNDALE'S Rapin for sale—vide "N. & Q." February 11th, is requested to send his full address, as money and letters have been returned by Post Office, to Mr. J. W. Fleming, F.R.C.S., Surgeon, 37th Regiment, Dover.

FIGURES DE VIEUX ET NOUVEAU TESTAMENT, par G. C. T. 'A Lyon: Four Estienne Michel M.OLLEST.

Wanted by Rev. J. C. Jackson, 5, Chatham Place East, Hackney, N.E.

THE ASTRONOMY from the First Number to the end of the year 1821.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL REVIEW. Nos. 1, 2, and 3. (1s. each will be given.)

ARCHÆOLOGIA. Vol. XXXVI. Part II.

JOURNAL OF THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION. Nos. 2-12. (1s. each will be given.)

Wanted by Edward Peacock, Esq., Bottesford Manor, Brigg.

GRADE'S SEPTUAGINT. Last Volume.

Wanted by Rev. E. Knowles, Abbey Hill, Kenilworth.

Notices to Correspondents.

F. W. C. Wm. Prynce's Brief Survey and Censure of Mr. Cosm's consulting Devotions, 1688, 4to, is a curious tirade against the Collection of Private Devotions by that excellent prelate, John Cosin, the learned Bishop of Durham. See Kippis's Biog. Britannica, iv. 552.

J. S. The writers in the Lyra Apostolica were a, Bowden; B, Froude; c, Keble; d, Newman; e, Wilberforce; f, Williams. Vide "N. & Q." 1st S. ix. 407.

F. J. SPARKER. Either of the following works may be consulted for a description of the manners, customs, &c. of the English: Craik and Macfarlane's Pictorial History of England, 8 vols. imp. 8vo, 1849; or Charles Knight's Popular History of England, 3 vols. 8vo. 3s. 1846.

INGRAMS. We believe the best collection for a history of the Walley family (the Tombets) has been compiled by Mr. John Tucker, of 66, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

GEORGE J. COOPER. Dr. Hawtrey, late Provost of Eton died on Jan. 27, 1862.—A short notice of Forshall and Madden's edition of Wickliffe's translation of the Bible appeared in "N. & Q." 1st S. ii. 361.

J. L. (Dublin.) We cannot discover any remarks on Rev. Mr. 12, 16 "N. & Q."

C. W. H. The arms of Earton Hallday, as recorded by Wood, were:—Sable three helmets close argent, in the centre point a fleur-de-lis or, within a border engrailed of the second.

WORKHOUSE CHAPLAIN.—URIEN RUSSED will find a list of these officials in the Poor Law Union Almanack, published by C. Knight of Fleet Street.

Replies to other Correspondents in our next number.

ERRATUM.—In our last number, p. 155, col. l. line 10, for "Dreuth" read "Drenthe."

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newman, price 1s. 6d., or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 10, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS for the EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

MORE CURES OF COLDS, ASTHMAS, AND COUGHS BY DR. LECOCHE'S PNEUMONIC WAFERS.—FROM Mr. H. ARMSTRONG, Chemist, Church Street, Preston.—"Of elderly people, numbers have obtained the greatest benefit from them; many with the first or second box. To the greatest invalid I can recommend them with confidence, having seen the most magical effects produced by them on coughs, hoarseness, and difficulty of breathing." They have a pleasant taste. Price 1s. 10d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. per box. Sold by all druggists.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 167.

NOTES:—The Visits of Prince Charles Edward to London, 183—Blow's Belfast Bible, 194—Caraboo, 196—David Hume: James Boswell, 197—"The Fourth of March"—Nelson's Attack on the Boulogne Flotilla in 1801—Baptism of a Blackamoor—"Strawberry" Preachers—Myline of Balfarg—Epitaph by J. Hookham Frere—Heraldry as an Accessory to History, 179.

QUESTIONS:—Anonymous—Mount Athos—Courtenay Quarterings—Eryn—Old House at Hastings—Heraldic Query—Holy-water-sprinkle—Jews as Artisans—Picture by Mr. Le Jeune—Hugh Morrell—Regimental Peculiarities—Stick—Sun-Dials—Transmutation of Metals—William, Son of King Stephen, 199.

QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS:—"The Vampyre"—Riddell of Glenriddell—Patrick Anderson—Clerk of the Closet—Cookery: "Au Bleu"—King of Jerusalem, 201.

REPLIES:—Greek Church, 203—Cary Family, 203—"Il Fortunato Infornato," 204—Evidences of distant Light and Smoke, 20.—Longevity: Miss Mary Billinge—Keightley's "Shakespeare Expositor"—The Slavonians in England—Gleanings from Ausonius—Matfelon—Royal Standard and Union Flag—Latin Puzzle—Metrical Sermon—Apple-pie Order—Families of Goodrich—Quotations—Milton and his Illustrator—Pontifical Rings—Traditions of an Antecedent World—Basubend—Dragon in Herefordshire—Voltaire—Sam Sharpeet—Four-and-Twenty sworn Men of Goosnargh—Sir Walter Scott—Yew Trees called Palms—Sir Thomas Fortescue—Donkey, 207.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

THE VISITS OF PRINCE CHARLES EDWARD TO LONDON.*

NO. I.

The long letter to the Editor of The Times, signed J., which closed the communications to that journal upon this subject, was a résumé of all the stories respecting it. The first visit is said to have occurred in 1748, upon the authority of Forsyth's Remarks on Italy. This visit Lord Stanhope rejects; and rightly, as I think I can show quite satisfactorily. The Stuart Papers, as I stated in my first letter, are made up of two collections. I have no doubt that one consisted of the papers of the Chevalier de St. George, and the other of those of his son, the Prince Charles Edward. They contain the whole correspondence between the father and son, and the drafts or copies of their letters, which were kept on each side, for the year 1748, so that we have the entire series in duplicate, few of the copies being missing. From Jan. 1, 1748, to Dec. 9, there are letters from the Prince to his father weekly. In general they are not very interesting;—the weather is very cold, or very hot; he hopes it will change; he is in perfect health; and, as the custom was, he always "lays himself at his Majesty's feet." Those in reply to "Dearest Carluccio" most frequently state that the French post has not arrived, and that he has nothing to say, but (the letters being principally in Edgar's handwriting, he adds with his own hand, what does not appear in the copies, that) "he embraces him, &c." The Prince's letters during the negotiations of the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, and the events immediately preceding it, contain matter of more interest. He was fully alive to the effects of that treaty upon their cause, which his father appears to have perceived in a very somnolent manner. And he prepared, without consulting his father, the Protest which, it is known, was delivered in their behalf, though necessarily in vain, against it. On the other side, the correspondence is enlivened by complaints that the Prince does not confide in his father, and has other counsellors, &c. The letter warning the Prince against the danger of attempting to resist the King of France is perhaps the wisest of the whole. Great affection is expressed, under courtly forms, on both sides.

* Vide ante, 1—3.

Besides these letters, there are drafts of letters, dated in full, to all the Prince's real confidants and counsellors, which disclose what he so carefully concealed from his father.

The dates of these letters never show an interval greater than seven days. Frequently they follow at much smaller intervals. This is conclusive evidence against Forsyth's statement, which makes the Prince remain a week in London: for, on his hasty return from London to Paris, in 1750—according to the memoranda, printed in my first letter—the journey consumed two days. So that four days, at least, out of any one of these intervals must have been taken up in travelling. Besides, not one of all these letters, or drafts, speaks of such an expedition. Two expeditions are spoken of: but one is that to Madrid, in the preceding year; and the other is that made by an agent of his, whose letters are signed "Jo. Smith," to Frankfort, in the vain hope of procuring the hand of the Princess of Hesse Darmstadt for his master. [This expedition, it may be well to say, is usually placed a year later.] Still further:—The Chevalier, writing from Albano on June 25, 1748, says: "I look upon it to be very sure that you will be out of France when this letter arrives at Paris." And on July 15, the Prince replies from Paris: "Your Majesty has been misinformed as to my leaving this country."

His Majesty it appears had a correspondent, who signed "Watson" simply; and who was, during part of this time, certainly in Paris, and communicated to him what he could learn or observe about the Prince. His letters are very much of the same quality as those of some of "Our own Correspondents" in the present day. For instance, he tells Edgar in one, of the Prince's addiction to the demi-monde. But every soul in Paris knew of this. In another, dated March 9, 1748, he says, with characteristic irony:—

"We have now given up all thought of business, even our favourite project 75, 1024, 1805, 1680 [decyp. "of declaring Protestant"] is no more spoke of, nor that of 75, 407, 1330 ["of a Protestant"] marriage. We have no thought or mention of anything but money, our whole time is swallowed up in a round of pleasure; and could we be recovered out of this lethargick disease, we are assured that no discreet man 108, 46, 438, 100, 99, 579, 109, 101 ["will have anything to do with us"]."

Yet, in a draft of a letter addressed to some one in "Edingburg," dated the day before this communication, the Prince specially speaks of such a marriage as "necessary and proper for him." And after this it was, that the Hesse Darmstadt attempt was made, and the protest against the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle. The mention of "declaring Protestant," at this date, shows that the unhappy Prince had learned something from the fatal '45.

This, I think, fully supports Lord Stanhope in rejecting Forsyth's story of a visit to London in 1748. Hearsay evidence, considerably after date, cannot stand against the negative and positive evidence which these letters present. In my next note I will trace the Prince's movements, from his arrest in Paris in Dec. 1748, to his visit to London in Sept. 1750. B. B. WOODWARD.

Royal Library, Windsor Castle.

BLOW'S BELFAST BIBLE.

I may be excused for introducing a subject of local, though certainly of considerable bibliographical interest to "N. & Q." In Mr. Berwick's Historical Collections relating to the Town of Belfast (Belfast, 1817), there is the following passage under the date 1696:—

"The art of printing was introduced into Belfast this year by James Blow and his brother-in-law Patrick Neill, who came over from Glasgow by invitation from Mr. Crawford, then Sovereign of Belfast, who entered into partnership with them. After the death of Neill, the business was continued by Blow, who, about the year 1704, printed the first edition of the Bible in Ireland, and many succeeding editions."

Mr. Berwick gives the Belfast Newsletter as his authority, without reference to date or number, and I may observe that Mr. Crawford was not Sovereign in 1696, though he held that office in 1693 and 1694.

Again, in a History of the Rise and Progress of Belfast, by J. A. Pilson (Belfast, 1846,) will be found under the date 1704, as follows:—

"The first Bible ever printed in Ireland was published this year by Messrs. Blow & Neill at Belfast."

Again, in Belfast and its Environs, by J. H. Smith, A.M., M.R.I.A., is the following notice at p. 54:—

"In 1716 there was printed in this town (Belfast), by James Blow, the first edition of the Holy Bible produced in Ireland."

In the Ulster Journal of Archaeology (No. 9, p. 76,) there is a communication from Mr. John Hodgson—whose mere name alone, on a question of this kind, is a great authority—corroborating Mr. Smith. There is also a notice of Blow's Bible in Bohn's Hudibras; and later still we find in Bohn's Lowndes' Bibliographer's Manual the following entry:—

"The Bible, Belfast, James Blood, 1716, 8vo. First Edition of the Scriptures printed in Ireland. An error occurs in a verse of Isaiah. Sin no more is printed Sin on more. The error was not discovered until the entire impression (8000 copies) were bound and partly distributed."

This is circumstantial enough—the size of the book, the number of copies, even the very error—but it is nevertheless apocryphal. There is no such verse or passage in Isaiah as "Sin no more," at least I cannot find it, and Blood is evidently a typographical error for Blow,* not requiring further notice. But what is really worthy of attention is, that there are several distinct authorities asserting that the first Bible printed in Ireland, was printed at Belfast in 1716, while, in the British Museum, there is an excellent folio edition of the Authorised Version of the Scriptures that once belonged to the celebrated Archbishop Synge, bearing on its title-page the following imprint:—

"DUBLIN: Printed by A. RHAMES, for WILLIAM BINAULD at the Bible, in Eustace Street, and ELIPHAL DOBSON, at the Stationers' Arms in Castle Street. MDCCXIV."

Here, then, is conclusive testimony that the alleged Blow's Bible of 1716 was not the first printed in Ireland. I use the word alleged advisedly, for the bibliographers, who have made the various editions of the Bible their particular study, do not mention it. The writer, after many years' search, under rather favourable circumstances, has never been able to see it or even to meet with any one who had seen it; and, consequently, is now led to believe that it never had an existence. The well-known Irish antiquaries, the Messrs. Benn of Glenravel, have assiduously hunted among the old Presbyterian families in the north of Ireland, but in vain; Jas. Blow's descendants, still alive in Belfast, know nothing of it. Mr. G. Benn, in his very valuable History of the Town of Belfast (Belfast, 1823,) with his usual good judgment, omits all reference to the alleged Blow's Bible. Nor in the History of the Presbyterian

* The same error occurs in Bohn's Hudibras, but the text is correctly mentioned, viz. John viii. 11.

fact, from their notices of Old Testament history, they were considered next best to the Bible. In the description of Ralpho's library in Colvil's Scotch Hudibras we may read:—

"And there lyes books, and here lyes ballads,
As Davie Lyndsay, and Gray Steel,
Squire Meldrum, Bevis, and Adam Bell."

From Kelly's Scottish Proverbs we learn they were used as a school-book. A man, perfect in every art and science, was said to have read from Wallace to Lindsay, an allusion to Blind Harry's Life of Sir W. Wallace. A doubtful statement was gently contradicted by saying—"It's no atween the brods o' David Lindsay." Anyhoo, it is not within the covers of Lindsay's works. Such was the repute and confidence in which the works of the Lyon King of Arms were held. The Scotch-Irish of Ulster ever delighted in Scottish poetry, and did not write it badly themselves. It may not be generally known that the fourth edition of Burns's Poems, the first printed out of Scotland, was printed and published in 1787 by James Magee, at the sign of the Bible and Crown, Bridge Street, Belfast.

I think I have stated the question as fairly as I can; I might say a great deal more on this, to me at least, very interesting subject; but, like the imp of the old enchanters, my pen is circumscribed by a magic circle, which must not be overpassed. I ask, then, can any one give me any direct information of a Bible printed at Belfast early in the eighteenth century? I have heard so much hearsay and traditional evidence regarding this Bible, that I respectfully decline to receive any more. Nothing, in fact, will satisfy me but the statement of a person who has seen the Bible in question, with the imprint of Belfast upon it. I would be happy also to receive any information respecting the early typography of Belfast—say previous to the year 1740. I may be communicated with either through "N. & Q.," or my address as underneath.

WILLIAM PINKERTON, F.S.A.

Hounslow, W.

CARABOO.

The following paragraph is transcribed from The Times of Jan. 13, 1865:—

"Such of our readers as are interested in the history of impostors will remember that many years since a person who styled herself the 'Princess Caraboo,' created a sensation in the literary and fashionable circles of Bath and other places, which lasted till it was discovered that the whole affair was a romance, cleverly sustained and acted out by a young and prepossessing girl. On being deposed from the honours which had been accorded to her, the 'Princess' accepted the situation, retired into comparatively humble life, and married. There was a kind of grim humour in the occupation which she subsequently followed,—that of importer of leeches; but she conducted her operations with much judgment and ability, and carried on her trade with credit to herself, and satisfaction to her customers. The quondam 'Princess' died recently at Bristol leaving a daughter, who, like her mother, is said to be possessed of considerable personal attractions."

A full account of the singular imposition practised by the subject of the foregoing lines was published by Mr. Gutch, and is entitled:—

"CARABOO. A Narrative of a Singular Imposition practised upon the benevolence of a Lady residing in the Vicinity of the City of Bristol, by a Young Woman of the name of Mary Willcocks, alias Baker, alias Bakerstendht, alias Caraboo, Princess of Javasu." Illustrated with two Portraits, engraved from drawings by E. Bird, Esq., R.A., and Mr. Branwhite, &c., royal 8vo. Bristol, 1817, price 5s., pp. 68.

This curious volume has become very scarce; but it is needless to occupy space with details from it, as a summary of the case, with copies of the portraits, will be found in Hone's Every Day-Book, vol. ii. p. 1631. From this latter source I glean the further information that in the year 1824, Caraboo, on her return from America, made a public exhibition of herself in New Bond Street, at a charge of one shilling each person; but that she did not attract any great attention. See also Sketches of Imposture, Deception, and Credulity, p. 150.

The reader cannot fail to be here reminded of the equally extraordinary, and still more notorious imposture, practised half a century before by George Psalmanazar, "a reputed native of Formosa." He, like Caraboo, sought to sustain his imposition by the invention of hieroglyphics and characters to represent his native language; but went further than his successor by the publication (1704, 2nd ed. 1705), of a thick 8vo, containing a description and history of Formosa, the island of his alleged nativity. Of this fabulous narrative, a translation into French, as of a veridical production, is before me:—

"Description de l'Île Formosa en Asie, avec une ample, et exacte relation de ses voyages, traduit de l'Anglais de George Psalmanazar par le Sieur N. F. D. B. R.," 8vo, Amsterdam, 1705.

Psalmanazar repented in after life of the deception he had practised, and the other irregularities of his "hot youth." He wrote his life, a valuable and interesting, but neglected piece of biography:—

"Memoirs of . . . commonly known by the name of George Psalmanazar; a reputed Native of Formosa, written by himself, in order to be published after his Death, containing an Account of his Education, Travels, Adventures, and Connections, Literary productions, and pretended Conversion from Heathenism to Christianity; which last proved the Occasion of his being brought over into this Kingdom, and passing for a Proselyte, and a Member of the Church of England." Second edition, London, 8vo, 1765.

And he became in his latter days so exemplary a member of society, that Dr. Johnson, upon being NELSON'S ATTACK ON THE BOULOGNE FLOTILLA IN 1801.—I have just accidentally met with the following passage in the Biographie Nouvelle des Contemporains, tome i. p. lix.: "An 9 (1801), 26 therm. Combat naval entre l'amiral Nelson et la flotille de Boulogne: les Français sont victorieux." Now as it happened that I was in some degree an eye-witness of what was passing on the French coast, I beg leave to offer a few remarks on the above statement.

It is well known that in the summer of 1801, Buonaparte had mustered a large army upon the heights of Boulogne for the alleged purpose of invading England, while the harbour and the surrounding parts of the coast were occupied by an armed flotilla to assist in carrying out his projected attack. There was not any supineness or want of diligence on the part of our country. Lord Nelson was stationed in the British Channel to watch the movements of the enemy, and to act upon any emergency he might judge necessary to defeat this hostile attempt. At break of day on Tuesday, Aug. 4, 1801, Lord Nelson commenced his attack on Boulogne and on the armed flotilla in the harbour. The booming of the guns and the cannonading were distinctly heard and seen from the heights of Dover Castle. On this side of the Channel nothing was known of the proceedings until the following morning. It was by some conjectured that the French had quitted the harbour either with an aggressive design upon the English coast, or that a conflict in some way or other had arisen between the rival powers. Nelson's attack unfortunately turned out to be a coup manqué, as the French vessels, being guarded by strong wire-netted gratings and iron bars, became irresistible. (Vide the Annual Register, xliii. 266.)

In conclusion, permit me to state how I became acquainted with the circumstances above narrated. In 1801, I was surgeon and ensign of a militia regiment then stationed at Dover Castle. It may be necessary to state that, in the militia, as was the custom in the Fencible Cavalry, &c., the surgeon's stipend when held alone being 4s. per day, was considered unremunerative, unless a subaltern's commission and pay were allowed in addition. It was in this two-fold capacity that I was placed on the outlying piquet on the night of Monday, Aug. 3, to patrol the beach from sunset until the following morning, when on returning to my quarters in the Castle, I could observe from the heights what was then passing off Boulogne.

In the London Gazette of August 8, 1801 (No. 15,394) is a letter from Lord Nelson respecting his bombardment of Boulogne on August 4, from which it appears that Capt. Lieutenant Peter Fyers of the Royal Artillery was wounded on that occasion.

Φ.

BAPTISM OF A BLACKAMOOR.—The following entry appears in the Record of Baptisms for the Parish of Canongate (Edinburgh), and seems to merit insertion in "N. & Q." from its quaint and singular character:—

"80 September, 1686. The same day y^r was baptized a Blackmore Servant to My L. Duke of Queensberry, named John; who, being about 10 years of age, made publick profession of the Christian Faith, and solemnly engaged to live according to it. Witnesses y^a whole Session of the Abbey Church."

On the margin is written: "Blackmore John Drumlanrig."

Drumlanrig is the seat of the Queensberry family, in Dumfriesshire, and their town residence in Edinburgh still remains under the name of "Queensberry House" in the Canongate; but was disposed of by them many years ago, and is now a house of refuge.

G.

Edinburgh.

"STRAWBERRY" PREACHERS.—Latimer, preaching in the shrouds at St. Paul's, makes the following quaint allusion to the non-resident clergy of his day:—

"Great is their business, and therefore great should be their hire. They have great labours, and therefore they ought to have good livings, that they may commodiously feed their flock: for the preaching of the word of God unto the people is called meat. Scripture calleth it meat; not strawberries, that come but once a year, and tarry not long but are soon gone, but it is meat, it is no dainties . . . Many make a strawberry of it, ministering it but once a year; but such do not the office of good prelates."

"[A Bachelor of Divinity, named Oxenbridge, in a sermon preached at St. Paul's Cross, Jan. 13, 1566, says, 'I will shew you the state and condition of this my mother Oxford: for a piteous case it is, that now in all Oxford there is not past five or six preachers. I except Strawberry Preachers.']"—Foot-note by the Editor.

Your readers will, no doubt, accept the testimony of Oxenbridge as that of the arch-denouncer of Oxen-ford.

F. PHILLIPS.

MYLNE OF BALFARG.—The following very remarkable genealogy of a family of builders is deduced from the master-mason of King James III. of Scotland (a monarch whose architectural taste did not suit his rude nobility, and who was murdered in Sauchie), is extracted from an old transcript of the Lyon record, made by Robert Mylne, a Scottish collector of the last and preceding century.

Whether old Robert—for he died at the age of 103—was of the same family, does not appear:—

"Mylne, Robert, of Balfarg, his Maiesties' Master Masson, nevy and representer of the deceased John Mylne, late Master Masson to his Majesty, which John was lawful son to the deceased John Mylne, also his Maiestie's Master Masson, and which John was lawful son to the deceased John Mylne, lykewise his Maiestie's Master Masson, and which John was lawfull son to the deceased Thomas Mylne, in lyke manner his Maiestie's Facing what page is this engraving? Fronting p. 106 we have an engraving of an old house "formerly at [the] eastern entrance of the town." At p. 107 we have Pelham House, still standing, in High Street, and Mrs. Shovell's house in All Saints' Street. On p. 108, Salmon's House; and, fronting p. 108, two old houses in All Saints' Street; and on p. 110, an old house, date 1657, known as Mrs. Boodle's, in George, i.e. Saburb Street; but where is the old house that was standing in 1815? Can MR. DURRANT COOPER—can MR. ROSS—inform me through "N. & Q.?"

W. J. B.

HERALDIC QUERY. — Do any English counties, towns, or families, bear St. George's cross (Argent, a cross gules,) as their arms, or any part of their arms? Can any correspondent of "N. & Q." add to the following list of foreign counties, &c., bearing it?—

1. Barony (Herrschaft) of Padua.
2. Island of Cephalonia.
3. Republic of Genoa.
4. Bishopric of Treves.
5. County of Pyrmont.
6. Imp. free town Memmingen (sinister part per pale).
7. Principality of Ratzeburg (sometimes a cross calvary, pendant).

I ask the same questions with reference to: Gules, a cross argent (foreign):—

1. Duchy of Savoy.
2. Barony of Vicenza.
3. Town of Vienna.
4. Bishopric of Constance.
5. Principality of Kammin, or Camin.
6. Family of Von Rotthal (Austrian, 1620).
7. Town of Elbing (borne in a chief).
8. The Order of St. John, Malta. (On coins the cross is not eight pointed).

Are these crosses, more especially in the second list, all exactly the same shape when properly represented?

JOHN DAVIDSON.

HOLY-WATER-SPRINKLE.—Can any of your military correspondents explain the nature of this ancient weapon or fire-arm, which has been described as having one of its ends armed with a gun—the particular use of which seems to have puzzled Grose? Are there any weapons of this description now in the Tower? I presume they were possessed of some explosive power. The name seems to imply as much.

F. PHILLIOTT.

JEWS AS ARTISANS.—Are there any Jews who, answering to what we call "artisans," work as such in any of our large manufacturing towns, or in any of our cotton mills? I know there are Jews who keep shops; but are there any who work, as do our carpenters and labourers? Are there, in fact, any "class of Jews" answering to our class of artisans? I should feel much obliged by this information.

W. J. CHARLTON.

Lansdown Terrace, Cheltenham.

PICTURE BY MR. LE JEUNE.—There was a picture painted, some years ago, by Mr. Le Jeune for H. R. H. Prince Albert, whose subject was the "Release of the Captives from Exodus." Can any contributor tell me in what number of the Art Journal it was engraved?

J. C. J.

HUGH MORRELL.—Looking over the Burnet Papers at the Bodleian Library, I met with a letter of Hugh Morrell, dated Paris, April 10, 1861, relating to some transactions with the French government. Can any of your readers inform me to what family and county he belonged, and what arms he bore? Also, the position he held in the government of the Commonwealth?

W. H. T.

REGIMENTAL PECULIARITIES.—When and why was the Light Company of the 40th Regiment permitted to wear red tufts in their shakos, instead of green tufts? The regiments of the Coldstream Guards and 42nd Highlanders now wear red feathers; but I think that I remember the time when green feathers were worn by the Light Companies, both in the Coldstreams and "The Black Watch." I know how, and when, the latter corps obtained permission to wear red feathers.

Why do the 5th Fusiliers wear white plumes tipped with red? All other Fusilier (Line) regiments wear white plumes. The Fusilier Guards do not, I think, wear any plumes in their bearskin caps.

JUVENA.

STICK.—"Our Author, to shew how angry and froward he resolves to be, . . . makes his first Paragraph a Compleat Stick of Railing;" and a marginal note, "J. B. a compleat Railer." (Works of Robert Barclay, London, 1692, p. 864.) Is stick used in the sense of a stab, or has it some other meaning now obsolete?

St. T.

SUN-DIALS.—Is there any work from which, with but slight mathematical knowledge on my part, I could learn "to carve out dials quaintly, point by point?" Where can I find designs for sun-dials copied from existing specimens?

S. W. P.

TRANSMUTATION OF METALS.—The following note deserves a place in the pages of "N. & Q."—

"The extraordinary price attained by this metal (bismuth) was due to a circumstance which would scarcely be suspected in the present day. A Company was formed in London, under the direction of a foreigner, for the purpose of making gold. Very large premises were taken and much apparatus placed in position, to carry out the most recent attempt at transmutation. Bismuth was the first element which had entered largely into the process, and all that could be obtained was purchased regardless of price. Of course no gold has been made, and to save out of the wreck as much as possible, the deluded shareholders are cautiously selling their stock of bismuth, so as to obtain as high of families and peerages. I should like to discover where the remainder of this interesting series is deposited.

J. E. O.

[There can be little doubt that the books and MSS. were sold as well as Friars Carse, the residence of Mr. Riddell, near Dumfries, where the contest for the Whistle, so well known by Burns's poem, took place. From a communication by our correspondent, MR. CARMICHAEL, which appeared in the last number of The British Archaeological Journal, p. 358, we find that some interesting relics of Mr. Riddell's antiquarian researches are still preserved at Friars Carse in the shape of carved and engraved stones.]

PATRICK ANDERSON, son of James Anderson, the celebrated editor of the Diplomata Scotiae, is stated in 2nd S. viii. 476 (note), to have been afterwards the "celebrated President of the Court of Session;" and yet no such name appears in the Chronological List of the Lords President. How is the contradiction to be reconciled? I suspect the asterisk referring to the note has been misplaced, but there is no other name in the page to which it can refer.
F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

[Patrick Anderson was Comptroller of Stamps at Edinburgh. The meaning of the note appears to be that he obtained this office through the influence of one who was afterwards "the celebrated President of the Court of Session;" no doubt Duncan Forbes of Culloden, at least he best answers the dates. It is curious enough, that though Anderson is a common name in Scotland, and more than one advocate bearing it have held good positions at the bar, none have ever been raised to the judicial bench.]

CLERK OF THE CLOSET. — What are the duties attaching to the office of Clerk of the Closet to the sovereign, which is usually held by one of the bishops?
E. H. A.

[Chamberlayne, in his Present State of England, 1678, p. 165, states, that "the King hath a Clerk of the Closet, or Confessor to his Majesty, who is commonly some reverend discreet Divine, extraordinarily esteemed by His Majesty, whose office is to attend at the King's right hand during Divine service, to resolve all doubts concerning spiritual matters, and to wait on His Majesty in his private oratory or closet."]

COOKERY: "AU BLEU." — Will one of the correspondents of "N. & Q." contribute to it, for the information of an untravelled Englishman, the signification in French culinary science of the process designated au bleu? Has it any connection with the Cordon Bleu, the badge or decoration popularly assigned to chefs de la cuisine?

CLERICUS.

[To cook a carp or any other fish au bleu is to boil it awhile in a sort of court-bouillon, which imparts a blueish tinge. This kind of court-bouillon is a sauce chiefly consisting of wine. We question whether, thus prepared, any fish that swims would beat our own stewed carp, though we never saw it look blue.]

KING OF JERUSALEM. — I shall be glad to know what kings have been designated by this title, and what present potentates call themselves by it, or claim right over the Holy Land?
E.

[A tabular list of the successive Christian Kings of Jerusalem, from Godfrey of Bouillon, A.D. 1099, to Emperor Frederick II., A.D. 1250, is printed in Anderson's Royal Genealogies, ed. 1782, Table 159; and in Betham's Genealogical Tables, ed. 1795, Table 171.]

Replies.

GREEK CHURCH.

(3rd S. vii. 134, 190.)

On so grave a subject as that which F. C. H. treats, it would surely be right rather to refer to authoritative statements than to make strong assertions. The Greek Church is not separated from the other part of Christendom because of its "denying the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son," but because of its protest against the insertion of these words into the Nicene Creed without the sanction of a General Council. That this is so is clear, from a conversation lately held between the Patriarch of Constantinople and an American clergyman. Pointing to the first suffrages in the Litany of the English Church, the Patriarch said: "That is your Litany; I see nothing here to hinder Communion, though you assert the double procession; but I protest against any part of the church altering a creed which is the common property of the Church Universal." Whatever differences then may exist as to doctrine, and these are, as they seem to me, differences of words rather than of facts, or rather differences in the stating of the same fact, the protest of the Greek Church has been against the foisting of words without authority into the common creed of the Church; and not, or at least not primarily, against the doctrine itself.

But your correspondent goes on to say, that the Greek Church agrees with the English Church "in one only point—the denial of the Pope's supremacy." Surely, not to mention other points, F. C. H. has forgotten that the Greek Church, in common with the English Church, maintains the Communion in the Liturgy under both kinds, and gives the cup in accordance with Christ's own command, and with primitive usage, to all. But F. C. H. adds, that "the Greek Church does not acknowledge the validity of the Anglican Orders." Where does this appear? What act of the Greek Church will bear out this assertion? Does the Greek Church re-ordain priests who have received "Anglican Orders"? Will F. C. H. point out any instances of this? In my intercourse with the between three crescents argent; 4. Argent, on a fess sable, three pears, or.

This is ascribed to George Cary (Dugdale's Orig. Jurid. 229.) The quarterings may assist to determine the individual. One George Cary, Recorder of Londonderry in 1618, obtained a grant of Red Castle, in the barony of Innishowen, co. Donegal, and died 22 April, 1640. A Sir George Cary was author of Reports of Cases in Chancery, out of the labours of Mr. William Lambert. These were printed 1650, and reprinted 1665 and 1820.

We have no information when Sir George Cary, the reporter flourished; but from the mention of Lambert [Lambarde] on the title-page of his book, he was probably dead long before its first publication. He may have been identical with George Carye, Esquire, who on 19 June, 1568, gave commandment from the queen to the Lord Keeper not to dismiss a certain suit, and brought unto his lordship from her highness a ring for that purpose. (Monro's Acta Cancellarie, 372.) We incline to think that the reporter may have been Sir George Carew, LL.D., Master in Chancery, who died at an advanced age in Nov. 1612.

The Dr. Carey who was brought to the Bar of the House of Lords in 1677 (1 March, 1676-7), and who was imprisoned and fined 1000*l.*, was named Nicholas.

The book for which he was called in question, was entitled, The Grand Question concerning the Prorogation of this Parliament for a Yeare and three Months stated and discussed. The author was not the Earl of Shaftesbury, but Lord Holles. (See Lords' Journals, xiii. 54, 55; Cooke's Life of the Earl of Shaftesbury, ii. 163.)

It is to be observed that before Dr. Carey was punished by the Lords, he had two interviews with Charles II. at Whitehall on the subject of the authorship of the above work.

More information about him will, it is hoped, be given. Peculiar interest attaches to the names of those who have courageously withstood efforts to repress free discussion.

The arms of Dr. William Carey, successively Bishop of Exeter and St. Asaph, were, Argent on a bend sable, three roses of the field, on a chief, gulca, three crosses patee or. (Bedford's Blazon of Episcopacy, p. 11 and pl. 6.)

Walter Cary, M.A. and Student in Physic, was author of A Book of the Properties of Herbes called an Herbal. Lond. (Kynngston), n. d.; The Hammer for the Stone, Lond. 1581; and A briefe Treatise called Caries Farewell to Physicke, Lond. 1583, 1597, 1608, 1611, 1625.

To T. Carey is ascribed a version of Psalm xci., apparently written at the close of the reign of Elizabeth. (Farr's Select Poetry, chiefly devotional, of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, pp. xxx, 338.)

Henry Cary was author of The Fruit of Pleading in Sir Edward Coke's Reports, 1601, and

The Law of England; or a true Guide for all Persons concerned in the Ecclesiastical Courts, n. d. Dugdale (Orig. Jurid. 61) calls him Richard, and this mistake has misled Watt, who ascribes the Fruit of Pleading to both Henry and Richard Cary.

Two letters of Sir George Cary of Cockington, Lord Deputy of Ireland (who died 1615) are given in Monro's Acta Cancellarie, 20, 127.

Walter Carey (apparently a different person from the medical writer of that name) was author of The Present State of England, expressed in this Paradox, Our Fathers were very rich with little, and We Poor with much. Lond. 4to, 1626, 1627. It is reprinted in Harl. Miscell. ed. Park, iii. 206; ed. Malham, iii. 552. The author was seventy-six years of age when the work was written.

Grace Cary, an extraordinary enthusiast, was widow of Walter Cary of Bristol, and resided at one period at Usk, in Monmouthshire. There is an account of her in Seyer's Bristol, ii. 338 seq.; England's Forewarning; or, A Relation of true, strange, and wonderful Visions and propheticall Relations concerning these Tragical Tymes, shewed four or five years since to Mrs. Grace Cary of Bristoll (dated June, 1644), forms MS. Egerton, 1044.

Under the name of Walter Cary appeared — England's Wants; or, several Proposals probably beneficial to England; offered to the Consideration of all good Patriots in both Houses of Parliament. Lond. 8vo, 1685. We can find no particulars of this author's history.

Robert Cary, LL.D., rector of East Portlemouth, and sometime Archdeacon of Exeter, published, Paleologia Chronica a chronological Account of ancient Time, in three parts. 1. Didactical; 2. Apodeictical; 3. Canonical. Lond. fo. 1677. This is said to be a work of considerable merit. The author was born at Cockington, Devon, and was buried at East Portlemouth, 19th Sept. 1688.

John Cary, merchant of Bristol, who died soon after 1704, was a voluminous writer on commerce. (See Autobiography of Edmund Bohun, 131 seq.; "N. & Q." 1st S. xi. 1; Watt's Bibl. Brit.; and McCulloch's Lit. of Pol. Econ. 46.)

Thomas Cary, M.A., of Oxford, and who was incorporated in that degree at Cambridge, became a Canon of Bristol, 1693, and died in 1711. Two of his sermons are in print.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

A more careful and extended search among original authorities has led me to modify and correct some of the conclusions which I had previously adopted upon this subject. I feel less confidence than heretofore in assuming that the descendants of the first Lord Hunsdon are to be looked for only in the issue of his third surviving son, Sir Edmund Cary.

can be no doubt that the sufferer was Sir Alex. Carew (half-brother of Sir Thomas) who was beheaded on Tower Hill, Dec. 23, 1644.

The only instance I have found of Cary arms differenced with a mullet occurs in a volume of Painters' Work in the College of Arms, viz.—

"1687. July 1. Arms of Forster impaling Cary with a mullet charged with a crescent for difference."

Perhaps your correspondent may be able to make something of this entry, which of course refers to a funeral. C. J. R.

The Rev. W. Bedford in the Blazon of Episcopacy, p. 11, gives the arms of William Carey, Bishop of St. Asaph, and afterwards of Exeter, as follows: arg. on a bend sa. three roses of the first, on a chief gu. three crosses patée or, on the authority of the Bishop's seal. J. WOODWARD. New Shoreham.

"IL FORTUNATO INFORTUNATO."

(2nd S. ix. 282.)

The play is "El Dichoso Desdichado, Poncio Pilato, de Don Juan de Espinosa Malagon y Valenzuela," 4to, p. 24. There is no date, but at the end is: "En Sevilla, en la Imprenta de Joseph Padrino, Mercader de Libros, en Calle de Genova."

Pontius Pilate is represented as depressed in spirits by excess of good fortune: everything which he undertakes is successful, and his blunders are as fortunate as his designs. He is weary of this, and wants a change. He says:—

"Si no conoce el pesar
Un hombre, lo que es placer?
Siempre el placer viene á dár
Enfado, que es necio el gusto.
Que se gusta sin azar,
Porque el placer sin disgusto
No es placer sino pesar."—P. 3.

As a contrast to Pilate, Brodio, one of his officers, is always unlucky, but cheerful. Pilate desires Brodio's company to death; Brodio suggests to dinner, d comer. Pilate afterwards relates his life, and bemoans his prosperity, concluding—

"Y así, la muerte has de darme,
Pilato soi yo soi Poncio,
Porque si tu no me matas
He de matarme yo propio.
Brodio. Yo, gran señor, vivir quiero Que soi desdichado en todo."—P. 8.

Saint Veronica, Tiberius, and various other persons are introduced, and the events are jumbled in the usual manner of Spanish plays. Tiberius has heard of Jesus as a curer of diseases, and, being very ill, sends for him to Rome. Hearing that he has been put to death by Pontius Pilate, he summons Pilate, and gives orders for his execution. Pilate appears in the coat of Jesus, and is loaded with compliments and promotion. When out of sight, Tiberius again decrees his death, but again changes on Pilate reappearing in the coat. At last he throws it off, Tiberius puts it on, and orders Pilate to be put to death without delay. Pilate enters, half naked—medio desnudo—with a dagger in his hand. A crucifix appears to him; he soliloquizes at some length, and with some affectation of argument, ending—

"Oy, Christo vos me matais,
Y en el Tribunal os veo
En la Cruz, y como á reo
Maldito me sentenciais,
A la justicia me dáis,
Que me hiera, y no me amague,
Que me confunda y estrague
Por perverso, y por mal quisto:
Si esta justicia hace Christo
Quien tal hace, que tal pague.

Dase de punaldas y cae muerto."—P. 24.

Perhaps I have trespassed too much on your space by these extracts, the interest of which I may have measured more by the time and the great number of volumes which I turned over before finding the play than by their real value. I have looked without success for some account of the author. I am not sufficiently familiar with Spanish typography to guess the date from print or paper; both are bad. I find other plays by the same publisher, better printed, but without date. Should any reader of "N. & Q." know a book, with the date, published by Joseph Padrino of Seville, I shall be glad of it, as a help to discover who Malagon was. H. B. C.

U. U. Club.

EVIDENCES OF DISTANT LIGHT AND SMOKE.

(3rd S. v. 329.)

SIR THOMAS E. WINNINGTON mentions a brilliant illumination of the sky as being distinctly visible at night in the direction of Dudley, but at a distance of twenty miles; and that he had found the larch plantations, near the summit of Brown Clee Hill, in Shropshire, fourteen miles distant, covered with a smoky deposit, similar to the trees in the London parks. He asks—"Has such a phenomenon of distant smoke been observed elsewhere?"

Brown Clee Hill is, I think, not many points from due west of Dudley; and it is a fact that the prevalent winds there are westerly. I believe it would be found that the wind blows from the east only a small portion of the year; and your correspondent may possibly be mistaken as to the substance upon the trees being brought from Dudley. I suggest a careful detachment of a sufficient quantity (without removing any of the cortex of the tree) for chemical examination. If the substance should be found almost, or quite, pure carbon, SIR T. E. WINNINGTON will have established a very interesting and valuable fact.

The vitiated air of large towns is undoubtedly prejudicial to both animal and vegetable life, and it is important to know how far that influence may, in extreme cases, extend.

Some years since I was staying with the vicar of Dudley, who complained of injury to the health of his large family, from residing at the vicarage, nearly in the centre of the town. On this account he had taken a house and grounds two or three miles distant eastward. There I saw that the fruit, when ripe, was coated with soot, and was informed that currants could not be eaten because they were so bitter.

Sheffield has long been called the "City of Soot;" and since the epidemic of "rifled cannon" and "armour plates" set in, I think it may fairly vie, in obscure atmosphere, with any town in the "Black Country." Yet the hills west of the town, within three miles, are dotted with pleasant residences, where smoke and soot are almost unknown. At Rotherham, five miles northeast, vegetation is slightly affected by Sheffield smoke. The distances, therefore, to which these disagreeable and deleterious influences extend, from any great centre, must depend upon the directions of the prevalent winds.

I have no doubt SIR T. E. WINNINGTON has seen the illumination of the sky at a distance of twenty miles from Dudley. It might be seen at a greater distance,—even from the Wrekin, and at Malvern. Dudley is situated on the watershed of the country, and the highest points of the parish are nearly 1000 feet above the sea. The rain falling on one side of High Street flows into the valley of the Tame, and thence by the Trent into the German Ocean; while that falling on the other side of the same street flows into the river Stour, and thence by the Severn into St. George's Channel.

In constructing the framework of the Ordnance Survey, (after measuring the base lines,) some of the operations of the first triangulation were executed during dark nights; and the surveyors, with their theodolites upon one eminence, were able to measure angles, whose sides extended from 50 to 70 miles in length, by beacon lamps placed upon other distant mountain tops.

Since writing the above, I am informed by a friend, who has recently visited the hydropathic establishment of Ben Rhydding, in Yorkshire, that the proprietor entertains no doubt the trees there are affected by the smoke from Bradford, fourteen miles distant.

W. LEE.

LONGEVITY: MISS MARY BILLINGE (3rd S. vii. 154).—Your correspondent, A DOUBTER, has asked me to furnish some particulars of the evidence which satisfied me that Miss Mary Billinge, of Edge Lane, near Liverpool, who died on December 20th, 1863, was the same person who was baptized on May 24th, 1751. In answer, I may say that it was only by a mere accident we were able to obtain even the scanty particulars furnished. The old lady had outlived all her early friends. She had long been looked on as a sort of fossil relic of a bygone age. Her old servant, who had faithfully served her for nearly fifty years, died two years before herself. She was the only depository of the secret as to the great age of her mistress; and, though often questioned, she never communicated it to any one. But to her sister, who succeeded to her place beside Miss Billinge, she told that years ago, it had been necessary, in connection with a will, to obtain needful certificates of relationship or identity, and that Miss Billinge had then sent her to Eccleston, near Prescott, assuring her that that was the place of her birth. We had traditional and other evidence to the same effect. She had, it is known, a brother and sister, and she was the senior of both. The brother died in 1817, aged forty-seven years. The Health Committee in this town employed an officer to make inquiries as to the matter, who, I understood, after some research, rested quite satisfied with the truth of the certificate. Miss Billinge would never speak of the past, and always resented any reference to her great age. She had long been bent almost double with years, her skin hung extremely loose, and was most curiously wrinkled. An old lady, herself upwards of eighty years, who called to see her in my presence, looked quite fresh and youthful in comparison. Should any further particulars as to dates come to hand, I will communicate them.

JOHN NEWTON.

13, West Derby Street, Liverpool.

KEIGHTLEY'S "SHAKESPEARE EXPOSITOR" (3rd S. vii. 175).—In reference to MR. KEIGHTLEY'S article on this subject in "N. & Q.," No. 166, will you allow us to deny having ever made any engagement, either expressed or understood, to print that work. MR. KEIGHTLEY undertook to make the First Folio Edition of Shakespeare the basis of the reprint we have recently issued, and to clear it as far as he could of printers' errors. We agreed to his inserting a few conjectural emendations, on condition that attention was specially called to them, and the old reading given at the end of each play; but he never asked us to undertake the Shakespeare Expositor, nor even showed it to us, till after half of the Shakespeare itself was printed; and had he in any way given us to understand that his preparing the text would involve the publishing of his Comments, we should have been obliged to decline his assistance. BELL & DALDY.

THE SLAVONIANS IN ENGLAND (3rd S. vii. 181.) Permit me to correct the following errata in my Query on p. 181: for Welches there should be Weletes; for Thafarzik, Shafarzik; for nation, nations.

I have to add, that as a further proof of the Slavonic origin of the Weletes, the former inhabitants of Wiltshire, there seem to serve efficiently the fact that Old Sarum was called by the Britons Sorbiodunum; that is, the town of the Sorbes. Now Sorbi, Serbi, Sierbi, Sirbi, Srbi, Surbi was the native name of the ancient Slavonians; and even until now more than 7,000,000 of Slavonians under Austrian and Turkish rule call themselves Srbi; and signifies, according to Shafarzi, a countryman, a native, and is related to the Indish term serim (natio.)

A similar term have the Germans in Thiotisk. Diutisk, Deutsche, Teuton, from Gothic thuida (natio, gens.) CORCONTIUS.

GLEANINGS FROM AUSONIUS (3rd S. vii. 148.)—Will MR. L. MACKENZIE accept the following translation of the Latin distich, on the Dodratis Potio?—

"I am called Dodra: do you ask me why?
Because my compound nine good things supply.
Broth, water, honey, wine, and bread combine
With pepper, herbs, oil, salt to make the nine."

F. C. H.

MATFELON (3rd S. v. 223.)—It will be remembered that B. H. C. supposes that Matfelon, as the name of a plant, is a compound of the old verb mater, to macerate, and felon, a boil. This derivation—somewhat different from any that I have seen elsewhere—receives confirmation from two articles that I have lighted on in M. Métiérier's Glossary to his Rimes Guernesiaises, published some years ago, but without a date, by Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.:—

"FLON, s. m. Clou, fronce; mal St. Antoine.

"FLON, Herbe au, s. f. Herbe qui guérit le mal St. Antoine. Ang. Matfelon, Knapeed."

It is clear that the Flon of Guernsey—probably known by the same name on the neighbouring coast of Normandy—is no other than the felon of B. H. C., or, as it is spelled in the Promptorium Parvulorum, felone. And as this is clearly at the root of the name—Herbe au flon—it seems almost beyond a doubt that the English name Mat-felon, given to the same plant, must have a similar origin.

Whether the parish of St. Mary Matfelon owes its name to the abundance of this medicinal herb once growing on its open commons, or, as B. H. C. suggests, to some medical virtues of its patron saint, is still a question open for discussion.

The French word fronce evidently comes from furunculus. But how came a boil to be called furunculus (a thief) in Latin, and felon in English? Might we not go a step further? and, as there is a striking similarity of sound between whilow and outlaw, might we not be led to suspect that originally these two words had something to do with one another? P. S. C.

ROYAL STANDARD AND UNION FLAG (3rd S. vii. 136.)—At Hampton Court are two very interesting pictures, which severally represent the embarkation of Charles II. from Holland, in 1660, and that of William III. in 1688, both monarchs being on their way to the shores of England. The Royal Standard in both pictures is a large red flag, upon the centre of which King Charles charges his Stuart shield-of-arms, while King William, in the same manner, displays his royal shield, with its accessories of supporters, crest, motto, &c. This usage is still prevalent in the blazonry of the sovereigns of continental states, but the sovereign of our own country now blazons the charges of the royal arms over the entire field of the Royal Standard or Banner. I think we may assume that both King Charles and King William, when landing, displayed the same standards that were hoisted by them on the occasion of their embarkation; and, accordingly, I believe, R. S. Q. may confidently consider the Royal Standard of Charles II. when he landed "to resume possession of his kingdom," to have been a large plain red flag, charged with the Royal Shield of the Stuart sovereigns of Great Britain.

As a matter of course, whenever the Union flag was displayed by Charles II. it was the first of the two Union brethren which had been adopted by James I. in 1606, and which symbolized the union of England and Scotland in the union of the Crosses of St. George and St. Andrew; the incorporation of the red saltier of St. Patrick into the Union Flag marks the political union of the three kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, in the commencement of this present century.

The ensign in use in the time of Charles II. appears to have been a red flag cantoning the St. George; this ensign, with a plain red flag, and another red flag containing the first Union in place of the St. George, appear in the Hampton Court picture of the embarkation of William III., and I know no earlier example of such an appearance of the Union in an ensign.

The criticism of R. S. Q., as he very justly admits, has "nothing to do with the merits" of the fresco in the Palace of Westminster, to which he alludes; still I cannot admit that his is "idle" criticism, since he would seek by it to secure for our national works of art of the highest order consistent historical accuracy. Bad heraldry may not necessarily imply bad art; but surely noble art has a right to expect good heraldry; at any rate, it must be a grave imperfection in an historical painting, which professes to deal historically with an important incident in history, should such a picture unequivocally record the return of Charles II. to England, to "enjoy his own again," to have

"Mr. Creswick's 'Dappled Dawn' rises naturally enough, but if 'every shepherd tells his tale under the hawthorn in the dale,' the shepherd of Mr. Redgrave is a notable exception; for, so far from telling any tale of his own, he is not even inclined to listen to the tale of his fair companion, being entirely preoccupied in opening the hurdles for his sheep"!!

A. CHALLSTETH.

1, Verulam Buildings, Gray's Inn.

T. N. is rather too dogmatic on this subject. In my note on this place of the Allegro in my edition of Milton's Poems I have shown that "the almost invariable meaning [of 'tell a tale'] is, to narrate something." THOS. KRIGHTLEY.

Several writers give the same explanation as T. N. of the shepherd's telling—

"his tale

Under the hawthorn in the dale."

Mr. and Miss Edgeworth, for example, in their Readings on Poetry, 2nd ed. 1816, p. 213, say,—

"The word tale here means the tally, or the account of the flock which each shepherd numbers or tells in the morning, and not a love tale."

But I doubt the correctness of this explanation. The hawthorn is in flower in May, and in many parts of England is commonly known by the name of that month; but May is especially the month of love.

"Hail! bounteous May, that dost inspire Mirth and youth, and warm desire."

In this the physiologist agrees with the poet. Hence the propriety of making the shepherd tell his tale of love under the hawthorn; but what propriety is there in making a shepherd count his sheep under a hawthorn rather than under any other tree? It may be added that a dale is a comparatively secluded place, in which sheep are much less frequently kept than in upland pastures, but which is all the more suitable for the lovesick swain. D.

Your correspondent T. N. in your number for Feb. 25 has certainly enlightened me as to the proper meaning of the "tale" which Milton's shepherd is supposed to "tell." In confirmation of his correctness, allow me to say, that when geologising a few years ago in Devonshire near Span Head, Isle of Barnstaple, I found on the Ordnance Map a place called "Telling House," and the people about spoke of "The telling house." On inquiring the meaning of the term, I found it was the place to which the sheep were brought down from the hill to be counted, or, in other words, to have their tale told. BETA.

PONTIFICAL RINGS (3rd S. vii. 136.)—In answer to the enquiries of A. A., I have to state that it has been long customary in this country for Catholics to kneel for a blessing from their bishops; but the custom of kissing the bishop's ring, when kneeling before him for a blessing, is not so common in England as on the Continent. Canons do not kneel, except to the Pope: to all other bishops they only bow when they receive the blessing, or kiss the pontifical ring. As to the affinity between kissing a bishop's ring, and kissing the Pope's slipper, both are marks of respect and veneration: the latter being more profound, as the dignity of the supreme Pontiff is so much greater. F. C. H.

TRADITIONS OF AN ANTECEDENT WORLD (3rd S. vii. 95, 141.) It may be useful to note, in addition to the valuable information by MR. PINKERTON, that the absurd book of Isaac de la Perreyre was pretty effectually stifled at its birth by the refutation published by a Professor of Theology at Gröningen, named Desmarais, though La Perreyre wrote a reply to it. He was condemned by the Inquisition in Flanders, but appealed from the sentence to Pope Alexander VII., who received him with kindness. While at Rome he printed a retraction of his book, and retired to the Convent of our Lady of Virtues; where he died, having been converted from Calvinism to the Catholic faith. (See Bergier, Dict. de la Théologie, art. "Preadamites.") F. C. H.

BAZUBEND (3rd S. vii. 113.)—Your correspondent is right in supposing that bazu-bend is an article of dress. It is used in Persia, and, I may add, in India. The word is good Persian, adopted also in Hindustani, from bāzu, the arm; and band, a band or fastening, and signifies an armet worn above the elbow. EDMUND BELL.

DRAGON IN HEREFORDSHIRE (3rd S. vii. 133.)—Mordiford is a small village near the junction of the rivers Lugg and Wye, four miles and a half south-east of Hereford. It is celebrated in a traditional history as the scene of a furious combat between a winged serpent and a condemned malefactor, who was promised pardon on condition of his destroying this monster, who had spread terror and destruction all around. The contest was of some continuance. At length, however, the serpent was killed, but his poisonous breath proved fatal to his destroyer. In memory of this event, a large green dragon, with expanded wings and web-footed, is (1808) painted on the west end of the church. (Hereford Guide, Wright, 1808.)

But the Rev. John Duncumb gives a more probable version of the legend:—

"Soon after this period (A.D. 448) Uther, surnamed Pendragon, was chief of the Silures; the cognomen was probably acquired by some signal exertion of valour under the insignia of the dragon, which was common to the banners of all the British chiefs, and was a sacred symbol amongst them, and many other nations of antiquity. The dragon is not only often mentioned in various records, but respect has been shown towards it in several places by particular customs, some of which exist even at this day (1804). Thus the supposed form of a dragon has been described and renewed on the west end of the after whom C. J. R. makes his inquiry. I shall be glad to know more of these Fortescues. C. P.

DONKEY (8th S. vii. 165).—There is one appellative of this interesting quadruped not noticed by O. A. L. In Nottinghamshire an ass is called "Bunkus:" witness the following speech from a stable-boy, who saw a lad beating a donkey in the yard: "What's thee arter, bensilling Bunkus a' that how?" A. T.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Historical Studies. By Herman Merivale. (Longman.)

When a sound scholar, who thinks for himself like Mr. Herman Merivale, puts forth in a collected form his published and unpublished Essays in the wide fields of History and Literature, he is sure not only to add to our stores of pleasant reading, but to do good service to the great cause of historical truth. The interesting Historical Studies contained in the present volume are devoted—first, to the illustration of "Some of the Precursors of the French Revolution," in biographical sketches of Joseph the Second, Catherine the Second of Russia, Pascal Paoli, Voltaire, Rousseau, and Goethe, &c. Next, to "Studies from the History of the Seventeenth Century," which are devoted to the Streets of Paris at that period, and to visits to Lutzen and Marston Moor. Lastly, some pleasant papers on "The Scenery and Antiquities of Cornwall," "The Landscape of Ancient Italy, as delineated in the Pompeian Paintings," and a "Visit to Malta in 1857," complete a volume of very varied interest and character, the contents of which the author modestly describes as "the attempts of a learner to assist fellow-learners with himself."

A Catalogue of the Collection of Tracts for and against Popery (published in and about the Reign of James II.) in the Manchester Library, founded by Humphrey Chetham, in which is incorporated, with large Additions and Bibliographical Notes, the whole of Peck's List of the Tracts in that Controversy, with his References. To which are added a Tabular Index to the Tracts in both Editions of Gibson's Preservative, and a Reprint of Dodd's Certamen Utriusque Ecclesie. Edited by Thomas Jones, B.A. Part II. (Printed for the Chetham Society.)

This ample title-page will show what a valuable contribution both to the history and bibliography of the times of James the Second, the learned Librarian of the Chetham Library, has here given to the world. An inspection of the book itself can alone show how much information Mr. Jones has thrown into the notes and extracts, with which he has diversified the monotony of a long enumeration of Tracts, and the pains which he has taken, lest, through any inadvertence on his part, anything should creep in calculated to give reasonable cause of offence to any reader, whatever his faith may be.

The Soldier's Pocket Bible. Printed at London by G. B. and R. W. for G. C. 1643. Reproduced in Facsimile, with an Introduction by Francis Fry, F.S.A. (Willis & Sotheran.)

The Christian Soldier's Penny Bible. London, Printed by R. Smith for Samuel Wade, 1693. Reproduced in Facsimile, with an Introductory Note by Francis Fry, F.S.A. (Willis & Sotheran.)

Two more of Mr. Fry's admirable facsimiles of rare and early tracts. The first is a facsimile of the Pocket Bible with which the soldiers of Cromwell's army were supplied; and of which only two copies are known to be now in existence. The second is a somewhat altered and enlarged work having a different title, and the extracts being taken from the Authorised instead of the Geneva Version. We hope Mr. Fry will be encouraged to continue his most useful labours.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.—A new and cheap edition of Mr. Dickens's matchless pictures of English life is announced by Messrs. Chapman & Hall. It will appear in Monthly Volumes, the first two of which will contain his earliest and almost his best story, Pickwick.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

A BALLAD IN MACARONIC LATIN, ENTITLED RUSTICA DESCRIPTIO VITIATIONIS FANATICÆ. By John Allibond, D.D. The Oxford edition of 1634 required.

Wanted by Mr. James Yeowell, 4, Minerva Terrace, Barnsbury, N.

GUIDON OF THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

THE WAY OF LIFE. By Charles Hodge, D.D.

Wanted by Rev. C. S. Ward, Brenchley, Staplehurst, Kent.

Notices to Correspondents.

CANON DALTON will find, on reference to the Indexes to our First and Second Series, that his communication on the MSS. used for the Complutensian Polyglott has been anticipated.

J. D. CAMPBELL. Oliver Cromwell's dying prayer is printed by Carlyle, iii. 373.

S. TUCKER. The Register of Burials at Bushill Fields is at the College of Arms. See our Notices to Correspondents on Feb. 1864.

B. W. E. L. He was thrown when hunting. Full details of the accident will be found in the Genie. Mag. for Feb. 1865, p. 168.

T. G. C. (Newcastle-on-Tyne.) The Rolls of Parliament are printed in six vols. folio, and extend from 6 Edw. I. to 19 Hen. VII. There is a very copious index, which forms an additional volume.

L. B.'s Queries being purely scientific should be addressed to one of the scientific journals.

OXONIENSIS is referred to our 2nd S. iii. 208, 237, 355, 471, for information respecting the First Actress.

ACHES. Irby, of Boston—Argent, a fretty sable, on a canton gules, a chapelet or. The Epitaph on Dean Bull is printed in Dart's Westminster, vol. i. 100.

A WILKHAMIST will find Swift's Epitaph on Schomberg in our 1st. S. vii. 341.

G. E. N. The legend on which Roger's Ginevra is founded is very widely spread.

W. R. G. R. "Five Hours Quatre."

A READER OF "N. & Q." (Kettering.) It is impossible from the description given to ascertain the artist by whom the pictures were painted, or whom they are intended to represent.

T. F. The print is certainly not by Hogarth. If left at the Office of "N. & Q." for a few days, we might be able to give our Correspondents information respecting it.

T. G. STEVENSON will accept our best thanks for the list of the contributors to The Lougher; but we find it has already been printed in Alex. Chambers's British Essayists, vol. xxx.

E. B. The passage in the Burial Service is from a Latin antiphon. See "N. & Q." 3rd S. v. 177.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The subscription for SEVEN POUNDS, for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 23, WILKINSON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

MORE CURES OF COUGHS, COLDS, AND HOARSENESS, BY DR. LOOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—From Messrs. Ferguson & Son, Auctioneers, Leek: "Sir,—The beneficial effects we have derived from your PULMONIC WAFERS, make us feel it a duty to offer you our grateful testimony to their superiority over any other remedy we have ever tried. For colds, coughs, and hoarseness, so peculiarly troublesome to our profession." They have a pleasant taste. Sold by all Druggists at 1s. 18d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. per box.

daughter Isabella. She possessed certain burgage subjects, besides property held under a long lease, which had belonged to her uncle John, and also some moveables, derived from her father James, all of which she conveyed, in February, 1821, to her husband Alexander Martin, residing in Laigh Craighmore. She died in May 1821, leaving no issue.

Agnes Kerr, the admitted daughter of John Kerr by Mary Bone previous to her marriage with Taylor, asserted that by reason of her father's subsequent marriage with her mother, she was legitimate in the eye of law, and entitled to the estate real and personal that belonged to her deceased father. Proceedings had been adopted by her and her husband, M'Robert, against Martin the husband and disponent of Agnes' cousin Isabella. He in his turn brought a reduction of a cognition of certain burgage subjects which Agnes had procured from the magistrates of Stranraer. In this proceeding he was successful, and the cognition and sasine following upon it were set aside. There was a cessation of litigation for some time, and the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary was allowed to become final; but in 1834 Agnes was induced, with consent of her husband, to institute new proceedings, which came to depend before Lord Cunninghame, and in which the only question substantially agitated was that of the lady's legitimation, which her opponent contended was barred by her mother's intermediate marriage with John Taylor. The case was deliberately considered, and the opinion of the whole judges of the Court of Session taken. The authorities for the presumed fiction were carefully examined and sifted, and although a minority of the Judges clung with great tenacity to it, the majority thought otherwise, and were of opinion that, as both by the civil and canon law there was no qualification adjoined to the imperial edict which had been incorporated into the canon law, legitimation must be taken unconditionally, and must be held in all cases absolute unless some fatal mid-impediment intervened.

This decision at the time startled many eminent lawyers, who having been accustomed to receive the fiction as conclusive, could not at first be reconciled to a judgment decidedly adverse to preconceived notions. Time and consideration led ultimately to the proper result, and we believe that the judgment is considered as in every way sound. Indeed, if the edict of Justinian and corresponding authority of the canon law, rule the point, as to which we presume there can be now little question, our only surprise is, that the fiction which owed its origin to fanciful theorists, could so long have held its place as an unassailable legal axiom.

A difficulty has been suggested, which merits attention. It is this: what place is the person so legitimated to assume in the succession of his parents? Is he to take according to seniority of birth, or from the period when he was first legitimated? We venture to think that it must be from the period of his legitimation. Neither the edict nor the canon law fix this; but if the fiction we have noticed be only a fiction and not a reality; then as the child was not made legitimate until the marriage of his parents, he had no title, either in law or equity to take a higher position than from its date. The subsequent marriage of his father and mother was an accident; but the antecedent marriage was a reality, and the birth of children, resulting from bona fide espousals, ought not, and we believe could not be injured by any such subsequent occurrence.

The object of these remarks has been to ascertain whether in any Christian country excepting England and its dependencies, the doctrine of legitimation per subsequens matrimonium has been repudiated. It would be also desirable to know what is the rule in foreign countries as to mid-impediments? for instance, if cohabitation between persons within the forbidden degrees can, by a papal ordinance, be legalized to the effect of removing the stain of incest; and if an intervening marriage excludes the legitimation of previous offspring by individuals subsequently becoming husband and wife?

It is but right to mention that the legal victory achieved over the prejudices of Scotch jurists was effected by the historiographer of her Majesty for Scotland, George Brodie, Esq., the learned editor and continuator of Stair, and Robert Robertson, Esq., now Sheriff-substitute of Stirling.

J. M.

THE "ÉCOLE DES CHARTES" AND THE SCIENCE OF PALÆOGRAPHY.

It has often struck me, and I speak from experience, that the correspondents who supply "N. & Q." with extracts from old literary muniments must very often be stopped in their researches by the difficulty of making out a crabbed piece of handwriting, and the still greater one of determining whether the piece in question is authentic or not. You alight upon a curious letter, a scrap containing the key to some interesting historical problem — a bull, an edict, a decree; you purchase it at a very high price, and while you are rejoicing at the idea of possessing a treasure, you discover, to your utter dismay, that the document is a forgery, and therefore utterly worthless. Perhaps you may have seen in some collection what appears to be an autograph of Luther, or of Corneille, or of Leo X. You get it printed; and, the next day a critic tells you that a word which you had overlooked, the crossing of with architecture. That it has been generally applied to the south-western hill (on which part of the city stands) is certain, but in and from the time of Constantine this has not been universal.

Eusebius, in his Life of Constantine, seems to make Zion the south-western hill; but he appears to do this by mystically applying the name to the side of the valley opposite to the Temple Mount. I rely on him as a witness that the hill on which the Temple had stood was then known as identical with Zion. Eusebius says (In Esaiam xxii.), — Σιών μὲν γὰρ ὅρος ἐστὶν ὑψηλόν, ἐφ' οὗ δὲ νεὺς τοῦ θεοῦ ὠκοδόμητο. (Montfaucon, Collectio nova Patrum, ii. 442^b.)

Epiphanius, in the latter part of the fourth century, thus identifies Zion with the eastern hill on which the fortress (ἄκρα) had stood (north of the Temple, on the same ridge, be it remembered). In speaking of Golgotha he says, — ἀντικρυς γὰρ ἐστὶ τὸ τοῦ Ἐλαιῶνος ὄρος ὑψηλότερον, καὶ ἀπὸ σημείων δεικνὺς ἡ Γαθαὶν ὑψηλοτάτη· ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ ἄκρα ἡ ποτὲ ἐν Σιών, νῦν δὲ τμηθεῖσα, καὶ αὐτὴ ὑψηλοτέρα ὑπῆρχε τοῦ τόπου. (Epiph., Panarium, ed. Petavii, i. 394^a, ed. Dindorf, ii. 415.) Probably for σημείων δεικνὺς we should read σημείων πύργε (ἐ instead of ἡ); for this would be about the distance to Neby Semwil, the only place it seems that could be intended. It may be worth mentioning that Origen in the third century identified Zion with the Temple mountain. He says (In Johan., tom. xiii. 12), οἱ δὲ Ἰουδαῖοι τὸ Σιών θεῶν τι γεννομίκοιτες . . . καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἐν αὐτῷ ὀικοδομησθαι τὸν ναὸν ὑπὸ τοῦ Σολομῶντος λέγουσι. (Ed. De la Rue, iv. 222^d.)

As every locality connected with Jerusalem is so earnestly discussed, every contribution in the way of evidence has its value. I believe that the passage from Eusebius and that from Epiphanius have never been brought forward before on this subject; at least I do not remember to have seen them, and I noted them in the course of my own patristic studies.

Many who do not at all agree with Mr. Ferguson in his strange theory as to the site of the Holy Sepulchre being where the Mosque of Omar now stands, fully hold that the Zion of Scripture was the eastern hill, the fortress ("City of David"), occupying the northern part; amongst these I may mention the Rev. J. F. Thrupp, in his Antient Jerusalem, 1855, and Mr. Lewin, in his Sketch of Jerusalem, 1861. Has Mr. Lewin published any more recent work on the topography of the Holy City? S. P. TREGELLES.

Plymouth.

[Mr. Lewin has since published, "The Siege of Jerusalem by Titus, with the Journal of a Recent Visit to the Holy City, and a general Sketch of the Topography of Jerusalem from the earliest times down to the Siege." With a Map. Lond. 8vo, 1863.—ED.]

JACOBITE BANK NOTES.

At a recent meeting of the Scottish Society of Antiquaries in Edinburgh, there was exhibited an engraved copper plate, found near the west end of Loch Laggan, which was one of those engraved by Sir Robert Strange for Prince Charles Edward shortly before the battle of Culloden. It is engraved for notes of "one penny," "two pence," "three pence," and "six pence." Each note has a background of a trophy of arms, with the letters "P. C." in the centre, surmounted by a crown and three feathers; and, although slightly engraved, is marked by the graceful manner of the engraver. This interesting relic seems to have been lost in the retreat from Culloden, and was found near the west end of Loch Laggan. In the brief paper of Memorabilia of Sir Robert Strange, dated 1797 (and in the possession of Sir Patrick Murray Thripland, Bart., of Fingask, whose grandfather, Sir Stuart, was his comrade in arms, and friend in their consequent exile), these notes are mentioned as follows:—

"During this period that the army were stationed in and about Inverness, the first battalion of the Life Guards, commanded by Lord Elcho were billeted upon Culloden House. One evening, after I had retired to rest, an express arrived from Inverness between eleven and twelve, acquainting me that the Prince was desirous of seeing me as soon as possible. I that instant got up, and my horse being saddled, I made the best of my way to town. Upon my being announced at the head quarters, I was desired to be shown into the Prince's bed-chamber. There was this evening a ball. After having waited but a short time, the Prince, accompanied by Sir Thomas Sheridan and Mr. Murray, the secretary, came into the room. Sir Thomas Sheridan took the lead, and, addressing himself to me more particularly, told me that His Royal Highness was desirous of taking my opinion, relating to a circulation of one species of money or another, which it had been thought expedient to issue for the service of the army in general, but more particularly amongst the soldiers, and that they were desirous of knowing what plan I could recommend as the most eligible. I answered Sir Thomas that the subject was entirely new to me; that, so far as regarded my own profession, I thought everything of the kind exceedingly practicable, but that it was a question with me whether or not the town of Inverness could afford me what assistance would be necessary in executing a work of this kind, particularly a rolling-press, which would be indispensable on the occasion; but, if they would indulge me with a few hours the next day, I should then have put my thoughts together upon the subject, have considered it in every point of view, and give my opinion of course. It was agreed upon that I should return the next evening between eight and nine. I attended soon after eight, and was again shown into the same apartment as I had been the night before. Soon after the Prince appeared, accompanied as the preceding evening, with the addition of a third gentleman. Sir Thomas Sheridan again accosted me, and asked me what I had done. I answered, that it was just as I had apprehended, for that there was no such thing in the town of Inverness as a rolling press; but, that I had had recommended me a very intelligent man of a carpenter, and an excellent mechanic, who had entered into my ideas, and perfectly comprehended the construction of what was re-exceeds belief, in these more prosperous times. I will give the history in the author's own words:—

"In one of the trials arising out of the outrages committed by the Luddites, who broke into manufactories and destroyed all lace frames of a construction which they thought oppressive to working men, an alibi," he said, "had been concocted; which was successful in saving the life of a man notoriously guilty, and which had therefore added to the disrepute of this species of defence. The hypothesis was, that the prisoner, at the time when the crime was committed, at Loughborough, sixteen miles from Nottingham, was engaged at a supper party at the latter place; and the prisoner having the sympathy of a large class in his favour, whose battle he had been fighting, no difficulty was experienced by his friends in finding witnesses willing to support this hypothesis on their oath; but it would have been a rash measure to have called them into the box unprepared. And when it is considered how readily a preconceived story might have been destroyed by cross-examination, the task of preparing the witnesses so as to elude this test was one requiring no ordinary care and skill. The danger would arise thus:—Every witness would be kept out of court, except the one in the box. He would be asked where he sat at the supper? Where the prisoner sat, and each of the other guests? What were the dishes, what was the course of conversation?—and so forth. The questions being capable of multiplication, ad infinitum: so that, however well tutored, the witnesses would inevitably contradict each other upon some matters on which the tutor had not foreseen that the witness would be cross-examined, or to which he had forgotten the answer prescribed. The difficulty was, however, surmounted.

"After the prisoner's apprehension, the selected witnesses were invited to a mackerel supper, which took place at an hour corresponding to that at which the crime was committed; and so careful was the ingenious agent who devised this conspiracy against the truth, that, guided by a sure instinct, he fixed upon the same day of the week as that on which the crime had been committed; though without knowing how fortunate it would be for the prisoner that he took this precaution. When, on cross-examination, it was found that the witnesses agreed as to the order in which the guests were seated, the contents of the dishes, the conversation which had taken place, and so forth, the counsel for the crown suspected the plot; but not imagining that it had been so perfectly elaborated, they inquired of their attorneys as to whether there was any occurrence peculiar to the day of the week in question; and were told that, upon the evening of such day, a public bell was rung, which must have been heard at the supper if it had taken place at the time pretended. The witnesses were separately called back, and questioned as to the bell. They had all heard it; and thus, not only were the cross-examiners utterly baffled, but the cross-examination gave tenfold support to the examination in chief: that is, to the evidence as given by the witnesses in answer to the questions put by the prisoner's counsel on his behalf.

"The triumph of falsehood was complete. The prisoner was acquitted."

T. B.

THE CLEMENCY OF THEODOSIUS.—Many weekly newspapers give a column of interesting scraps, in which the newest facetiae of Punch are mixed with jokes and anecdotes which have been used for similar purposes from the times of Hierocles and Plutarch till now, with no change but in the names. George Selwyn and Wilkes being succeeded by the Prince of Wales and Charles Fox, and they by Sydney Smith and Theodore Hook. Sometimes real history is so changed that it cannot be identified. Here is an example; which, on first reading, I cut out as a piece of pure fiction with an ill-chosen hero; as Theodosius was not very merciful to the traitorous or seditious.

"A WISE MONARCH.—The Emperor Theodosius ridiculed the idea of laws for treason and sedition, and passed a decree to this effect:—'If any person commits an offence against us, let him escape punishment. If he does it from levity of disposition, he deserves our contempt; if from madness, our compassion; if from malice, we pardon him, as having done the greater injury to himself.'—Reynolds' Newspaper, January 1, 1865.

Yet this is founded on a rescript, cited with approbation, and translated by Montesquieu, Esprit des Loix, liv. xii. c. 12. The original is:

"Si quis modestiæ nescius, et pudoris ignarus, improbo petulantique maledicto nomina nostra crediderit lacescenda, ac temulentia turbulentus obtrektor temporum nostrorum fuerit, cum poena nolumus subjugari, neque durum aliquid nec asperum volumus sustinere: quoniam si id ex levitate processerit, contemnendum est; si ex insaniamiseratione dignissimum; si ab injuria remittendum, unde integris omnibus, hoc ad nostram scientiam referatur, ut ex personis hominum dicta penseamus, et utrum præmitti an exquiri debeant censeamus."—Cod. ix. t. 7.

On this Gibbon says:

"Montesquieu praises one of the laws of Theodosius addressed to the prefect Rufinus, to discourage the prosecution of treasonable or seditious words. A tyrannical statute always proves the existence of tyranny; but a laudable edict may only contain the specious professions, or ineffectual wishes, of the prince or his ministers. This I am afraid is a just though mortifying canon of criticism."—Decline and Fall, c. xxix. note f.

I never heard of a monarch or state which went so far as to repeal the laws against treason and sedition.

FITZHOPEKINS.

Garrick Club.

HOURS OF SUNDAY SERVICES IN LONDON, A.D. 1714.—Paterson, in the introduction to his Pietas Londinensis, or the Present Ecclesiastical State of London, which was published in the year 1714, says:—

"In all Parish Churches especially, and Chapels, within my Compass, Morning Prayers and Sermon begin every Sunday at ten, and between two and three in the Afternoon. . . . And, moreover, on all Sacrament Days the Morning Service begins commonly a quarter of an Hour sooner, and in the Evening [i. e. the afternoon] as much later than the usual Time."

This is the reason in all probability, why, at St. Paul's Cathedral, where there is every Sunday a weekly mid-day celebration of the Holy Communion, the morning service commences at 9.45 A.M.; whereas at Westminster Abbey, which has not I believe a weekly mid-day celebration, the morning service begins at 10 A.M.

About the time of Queen Anne, our forefathers

Does Mr. Malan's volume contain any juvenile dramas, dialogues, &c.

1. F. P. Wilmsen, of Berlin, died 1831, author of The Children's Friend. 2. C. T. Thieme, author of Gutman's Children's Friend in Saxony, 4 vols. 1794. Can any of your readers inform me whether these collections contain any dramas for children?

Who is the author of a French translation of the Latin tragedy of Freewill, by Franc. Negri Basentinus, of which there is an English translation by H. Cheke, son of Sir John Cheke? The French translation was published about 1558. Is the translator named by Barbier?

In Brunet's Bibliogr. Manual there is the title of a French drama on the subject of the Triumph of the League, 1607, Leyden. (Anon.?) The author said to be R. J. Nerce. Wanted, some account of this writer. Was he a French Protestant?

There is a Latin translation of Beza's tragedy of Abraham, by Joannes Jacomotus Barennes, Geneva, 1598. Can you tell me anything regarding the history of the translator?

Can you give me the dates of the German translations of Racine's Esther and Athalie, and the names of the translators, as given in Ersch's Lexicon of German Bibliography?

Wanted, biographical particulars regarding—1. Sixtus or Sextus Betterlejus, or Birch, Principal of the College at Augsburg, who died about 1554. He was author of Latin Dramas. Was he of the Romish or Protestant party? 2. Vincent Boltz, author of the Mirror of the World, a Play, acted at Basle in 1550, and one or two other dramas.

Has F. Gerstaecker, a living German novelist, and well-known author of Travels, &c., written any dramatic works? R. I.

ALVOISE CONTARINI.—When was he doge of Venice? I have a ducat having the legend "S. M. V. Aloysius Cont. D."

Only five Contarini were doges, and their names were Francesco, Nicolo, Carlo, Dominico, and Luigi. The only doge having the Christian name of Alvoise (since 1413) is Alvizzo Moncenigo, 1763.

I suppose the list I have is not correct. Where shall I find a better one? I have taken mine from "Sketches of Venetian History," The Family Library, vols. xx. and xxx. 11.*

JOHN DAVIDSON.

EXECUTIONER OF CHARLES I.—In 2nd S. ix. 41, I read:—

"The burial register of St. Mary Matfelon has the

[* On referring to Antonio Nani's Serie dei Dogi di Venezia (2 vols. 4to, Ven. 1840), we failed to discover any doge of the Contarini family bearing the Christian name of Alvoise. Has our correspondent correctly read the legend on his coin?—ED.]

entry on the 21st [June, 1649]: 'Buried in the church-yard, Richard Brandon, a ragman in Rosemary Lane;' to which has been added: 'This R. Brandon is supposed to have cut off the head of Charles I.'"

In Ellis's Letters (2nd Series, vol. iii. p. 343 n.), the entry on the register is given, on the authority of the Rev. D. Mathias, the rector of Whitechapel, as follows:—

"1649. Buriall, June 21st. Rich. Brandon, a man out of Rosemary Lane."

The marginal addition is stated by Mr. Mathias in the words you quote. Which is correct—the "man," or the "ragman"? J. B.

GRINLING GIBBONS.—Lysons, in his Environs of London, iv. 87, mentions that at Valentines in Barking, Essex, "a large mansion built by James Chadwick, son-in-law of Archbishop Tillotson," there "was some fine carving by Gibbons." And in the Supplement (p. 342) that Valentines was purchased in 1808 by Charles Welstead, Esq., and that "the carving by Gibbons had been removed." Where is this carving? And what is known about it? M. C. J.

THE IGELER SÄULE.—Has any illustrated account ever been published of the sculptures on the "Heidenthurm" or Igeler Säule in Rhenish Prussia? J. WOODWARD.

KELLAWAY, CO. DORSET.—In Harl. MS. 1165, fol. 75, Visitation of Wilts, A.D. 1623, it is recorded that Thomas Weston, son and heir of John Weston, of Canings (Bishops Cannings), co. Wilts, and then living, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Weston of Kellaway, co. Dorset.

Was this Kellaway a tenement, an estate, or a hamlet, and where was it situated? Neither the Index Villaris nor Potts's Gazetteer makes mention of it, nor have local inquiries resulted in aught satisfactory. G. W.

WORKS ON SATAN, HIS OFFICE AND ABODE.—Thomson's Vindication of Eternal Punishment in Hell.

Bailey on The Extent of the Kingdom of Hell.

I found these titles in sale catalogues, but have failed in the attempt to identify the writers. Can any correspondent assist me?

The date of the second edition of Tobias Swinden's Enquiry, of which the full title is given by MR. DUNKIN (3rd S. vii. 144), is 1727. It was published after the author's death, and I wish to learn the name of the editor, who made considerable additions to it, and also of the writer of a letter appended to the volume signed "Philaletes."

"A gentleman of Wadham College, Oxford" (a MS. note in Museum copy says "Swinton") published in 1738 a letter on a kindred subject entitled A Critical Dissertation concerning the Words ΔΑΙ'MΩΝ and ΔΑΙΜΟ'ΝΙΟΝ. It is signed "Philaethes." Who was he?

An Enquiry into the Scripture Meaning of the Word Satan, &c. London: J. Wheble, 1772, in 8vo.

In the Museum copy a MS. note assigns the authorship on hearsay "to one Barker, a curate of Dr. Hershaw's at Leeds." Is this correct? Note that one Thomas Barker wrote on The Nature. . . . of the Demoniacks in the Gospels, &c. London: B. White, 1783, in 8vo.

A. CHALLSTETH.

1, Verulam Buildings.

STALE MATE.—Can any of the chess-players who read "N. & Q." inform me the French technical term for what we call in English a stale mate? in German it is schach-putt, in opposition to schach-matt, our check-mate. The French consider a game so concluded a drawn one (remis). The Germans allow no defeat: in England alone do we punish the generally superior power of the antagonist whose inattention drives his adversary into an immovable position. The technicals for the same condition in any other language are also requested.

WILLIAM BELL, Phil. Dr.

6, Crescent Place, Burton Crescent.

ABBEY OF STRATA MARCELLA.—Why was this abbey so named? Are any views or drawings of it or its ruins extant? In Dugdale's Monasticon, it is said to have been a timbered structure. In some of the neighbouring churches some relics of it are preserved. In Buttington church there are some fragments of stained glass and a font, and in the chancel of Guilsfield church a carved oak roof.

M. C. J.

SUNDEY QUERIES.—1. In the British Critic, vol. xix. p. 252, occurs a striking passage, cited by Coleridge from some Anti-Romanist publication of Spanzotti. What are the titles of the known works of this author? and are there copies of them in the British Museum or Bodleian Catalogues?

2. Desiderius, the last King of the Lombards, had a son Adalgisius. Is anything known of his descendants? and what is the title of the Drama written by Manzoni, of which Adalgisius is the subject?

3. In a small History of England, much used in schools some forty years ago, I remember a note, in which were quoted the first lines, in Latin and English, of some singular verses, to which (if I recollect rightly) some popular tumult had given rise. The commencement of each of these lines will perhaps enable some of your readers to revive the facts, and to furnish the pages of "N. & Q." with an authentic copy of the whole. I regret that I cannot recall more than one line of each

"Watte vocat, cui Thoma venit," &c.

"Watt cries, Tom flies, while Tib stands grinning by."

4. In M. Bouchot's Histoire du Portugal (Paris, L. Hachette, 1854) p. 62, the celebrated hero Dom Nuno Alvarez Pereira—whom our own Southey had signalised as "a perfect example of patriotism, heroism, and every noble and lovely quality above all others of any age or country"—is said to have resembled his patron, King John, in the character of his birth. He is described as "Bâtard comme don Juan." In a beautifully printed folio life of D. N. A. Pereira, by Frey Domingos Teixeyra, published in Portuguese at Lisbon, he is represented as one of the very large progeny of sons born to Dom Alvaro Gonçalves Pereira, Prior of Crato, whose wife was a person of distinction, Eyria Gonçalves do Carvalho, principal Lady of the Bedchamber to the then queen, Dona Brites. I do not remember, throughout the entire work, that there is any reference to the illegitimacy of Nuno Alvarez Pereira's birth. I should be glad to know on what authority M. Bouchot's statement rests.

5. Can any correspondent supply information respecting the pedigree and armorial bearings of the late Dr. Jonathan Pereira, F.R.S.?

6. Required, the arms of Fretwell, of Hellaby, co. York.

7. In Gilbert White's Natural History of Selborne, notes, it is stated that Hugh Tybbs was rector of Selborne A.D. 1411. Can any reader of "N. & Q." oblige me with information respecting this clergyman's family and armorial bearings?

H. W. T.

PORTRAIT OF TAYLOR, THE PLATONIST.—Mr. W. Meredith, the person who furnished Thomas Taylor the Platonist, with money to pay for printing several of his translations, had a portrait of Taylor by Sir Thomas Lawrence. I am anxious to know where this picture is now.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

Bottesford Manor, Brigg.

THE ORIGIN OF VALENTINES.—In Bailey's Dictionary we have this word under two headings:—

"VALENTINES (in England). About this Time of the Year, the Birds choose their Mates, and probably thence came the Custom of the young Men and Maidens chusing Valentines, or special loving Friends on that day."

"VALENTINES (in the church of Rome). Saints chosen on St. Valentine's day as Patrons for the Year ensuing."

In that curious Dictionary (sine not. aut ann.) I have referred to before, we get this explanation:

"VALENTINES, saints chosen for special patrons, for that year, or (among us) men and women chosen for special loving friends."

I have heard of the custom of selecting a special patron saint every year in Roman Catholic countries. In fact, I remember being told by a lady at Naples, that a friend, who had just taken leave of her, had stated she thought this year she should change from Santa Lucia to Santa Catarina, the reasons for which I do not remember; but I never heard such a thing took place de rigueur on St. Valentine's Day. If this really were the case, it might readily be understood how one custom slipped into another. The probable way to unravel this mystery, which has puzzled antiquaries for many years, would be, if the correspondents of "N. & Q." would give what information they can, first, as to the custom of choosing patron saints annually; second, Whether such choice be, or be not, on the 14th of February; and third, how early we have notice that the choice is recorded as that of "special loving friends."

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

ABP. WHATELY'S FAMILY.—Thomas Whately, of Norwich Park, the Archbishop's grandfather, married Mary, daughter and heiress of Joseph Thompson, Esq., a cousin of Lord Haversham.

I should be greatly obliged to any of your correspondents who will favour me with a clue to the name of the father of Thomas Whately, and his relationship to the "painful preacher of Banbury," who died in 1630, and who is believed to have been a member of the same family; and also for any clue to the relationship of Joseph Thompson to the Haversham Thompsons.

INVESTIGATOR.

ST. CATHARINE'S WHEEL.—In the table of authors at the commencement of the first volume of Le Martyrologe des Chevaliers de Malthe (Paris, 1643), par Mathieu de Goussancourt, is a passage which has puzzled me. It is (verbatim et litteratim) as follows:—

"Cahorsi Vice-Chancellor de Malte, en ses commentaires du siege de Rhodes l'an 1480. Il portoit d'argent à une rotte de sainte Catherine de gueulles, de six rayons, qui est celle des hommes; celles des Dieux est de huit, celles des demons est de quatre."

Can any of your correspondents inform me what is the meaning of the passage in italics?

T. WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

Queries with Answers.

THOMAS EARL OF EFFINGHAM, 1775.—In Mason's Correspondence with Walpole, vol. i. p. 194, Mason says:—

"You are always telling me of your additional noble authors, and do not mention one worth all the rest of the Bunch: I mean my neighbour here, Lord Effingham. Was there ever anything, ancient or modern, better either in sentiment or language, than his late speech?"

Thomas, Lord Effingham, was also the author of a "celebrated Whig Song," to which I have seen frequent references.

Can any reader of "N. & Q." say where I can see, at length, the above speech and song, or refer me to any other production of Lord Effingham?

T. S. B. E.

[Mason's allusion is probably to the speech of the Earl of Effingham on the debate in the Lords on the Memorial of the General Assembly of New York, May 18, 1775, printed in The Parliamentary History, xviii. 686—688. The Earl was bred to arms, and held a captain's commission in the twenty-second regiment of foot. As a peer in parliament, he uniformly opposed the whole system of measures pursued against the Americans, and finding at length that his regiment was intended for the American service, he thought it inconsistent with his character, and unbecoming of his dignity, to enforce measures with his sword which he had so utterly condemned in his legislative capacity. He accordingly forwarded a letter of resignation to the Secretary at War, for which he received the thanks of the cities of London and Dublin. The Earl also published anonymously An Essay on the Nature of a Loan, being an Introduction to the Knowledge of the Public Accounts. York, 1782, 8vo.]

"RUSTICA DESCRIPTIO."—I have now before me in MS. in rhyming Latin, a squib on the Reformation at Oxford, of which I can decipher only a very little beyond its title, as follows:—Rustica Academia Oxoniensis nuper Reformata Descriptio, &c. An. Dom. 1648. What is it? At the end is the signature, J. Alibourn.

QUERIST.

[The author of this satirical work was John Allibone, D.D., Vicar of Bradwell, in Gloucestershire—"a witty man of Magdalene College," says Antony Wood. John Allibone, with other wits of the University, found some solace for their woes, or some vent for their indignation under the persecution of the triumphant Puritans in 1648, by exhibiting the dulmanity of their persecutors in literary attainments, and their ruthless inmanity in matters of right, property, and personal liberty. On the visitation to Oxford by the parliamentary visitors, he put forth his "Seasonable Sketch of an Oxford Reformation," a poem of considerable humour.

"When rakes reforming tracts compose,
And sober blockheads read 'em,
Oxford, beware of godly foes,
And doubly guard thy freedom!"

"Lest pious knaves and canting fools
Should crow o'er men of letters,
And once more turn thy public schools
To sanctuaries for traitors."

The Rustica Descriptio was so popular, that, in spite of the visitors' orders against printing and publishing abusive pamphlets, it was printed on a single sheet twice in the year 1648. It was reprinted at London in 4to, without date (about 1700), and in 8vo, with an English version in 1717. The best edition is the one printed at Oxford, 8vo, 1834, with a "Preface and Notes, the verses being done into Doggrel in usum Parliamenti Indoctorum ejusdem nominis secundi."]

"TENTAMEN MEDICINALE."—I possess a small volume, entitled—

"A Short Answer to a late Book entitled Tentamen Medicinale. With which are reprinted several papers formerly published, touching the Rise, Growth, and Usefulness of the DISPENSARIES erected by the College of Physicians for the benefit of the Sick Poor in and near London. London: Printed for A. Roper at the Black Boy against St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet Street, 1705."

Can any of your readers give me any information as to the Tentamen Medicinale? T. B.

[The work is entitled "Tentamen Medicinale;" or, an Enquiry into the Differences between the Dispensarians and Apothecarys: wherein the latter are prov'd capable of a Skilful Composition of Medicines, and a Rational Practice of Physick. To which are added, Some Proposals to prevent their Future Increase. By an Apothecary. London, Printed and sold by John Nutt, near Stationers' Hall. 1704, 12mo." In the Preface, the author states, that "The principal reasons that put me upon this undertaking were to vindicate the Apothecarys from those unjust reproaches which of late have been cast upon them by such whose private interest has induc'd to be their enemies, I mean the Dispensarians, and to remove those infamous obloquies which the profession lies under by the admission of several into it almost altogether unqualified."]

THE IRON CROWN.—Have we any certain authority for believing that Napoleon crowned himself with the iron crown at Milan in 1805?

QUERIST.

[It was in March, 1805, that a deputation of the consuls or senate of Italy proceeded to Paris, to request Napoleon to accept the ancient iron crown, the crown of Italy, with the condition that the two crowns of France and Italy should remain united only on Napoleon's head. On the 26th of May, 1805, the ceremony of the coronation was performed in the Cathedral of Milan, by the archbishop of that city. Napoleon seized the iron crown of the old Longobard kings, and placed it on his brow, saying, "God has given to me; woe to him who shall attempt to lay hands on it." After his coronation at Milan, Bonaparte instituted a new order of knighthood for Italy, entitled "The Iron Crown," on the same principles as that of "The Legion of Honour" for France. An account of his coronation will be found in the Gentleman's Magazine, lxxv. (i.), 569—572; and an engraving of the iron crown in Chambers's Book of Days, i. 673.]

THE REV. JAMES SCOTT was one of the ministers of Perth from 1762 to 1806, when he resigned from age and infirmity. He was author of History of the Lives of the Protestant Reformers in Scotland, 1810; History of John, Earl of Gowrie. Edinb. 8vo, 1818. The latter work was posthumous. He was the founder of the Antiquarian Society at Perth, and made considerable MS. collections relative to the history of "the fair city." These, after his death, were purchased by the Faculty of Advocates, Edinburgh.

I presume Mr. Scott's death took place between 1811 and 1818. Can any of your correspondents supply the correct date? S. Y. R.

[The Rev. James Scott, late senior minister of Perth, died at the advanced age of eighty-five on April 27, 1818. Mr. Scott was ordained minister of Kinfauns in 1759; admitted minister of Perth 1762; and resigned his charge, in consequence of the infirmities of age, in 1807.—Scots Magazine, New Series, ii. 597.]

"CONFESSIONS OF A METHODIST."—By whom were The Confessions of a Methodist written? They were published in 1810, and originally appeared in The Satirist. I am also desirous of knowing when this Magazine was commenced, and at what time was it discontinued. Also by whom edited? C. K.

[A copy of The Confessions of a Methodist in the British Museum contains the following MS. note: "This work was bought up by the followers of Huntington, and the publication stayed. Not more than three hundred were printed, the greater portion of which were destroyed."—The Satirist, or Monthly Meteor, commenced on Oct. 1, 1807, and we believe was discontinued with the number dated Dec. 1, 1813, making 13 vols. The last three volumes were called a "New Series."]

"CALAMY'S ABRIDGMENT," CHAP. IX.—Walker, in his Sufferings of the Clergy, Part II., p. 240, in his account of Fullham —, D.D., says:—"The Right Reverend Bishop of Worcester, in some short Manuscript Notes of his on Mr. Calamy's Abridgment, saith, &c." Have these manuscript notes ever been published? If not, is it known whether they are still in existence?

JOHNSON BAILY.

[There is a copy of Calamy's Abridgment, 8vo, 1702, with manuscript notes, in the Bodleian Library. Bishop Kennett, in a letter to the Rev. Thomas Baker, dated June 13, 1728, says, "I have delivered to our good friend Dr. Knight, your second volume of Dr. Calamy's Abridgment, with your exact notes upon it; and thank you for the use of that and many like favours." (Nichols's Lit. Anecdotes, i. 383.) Consult also Masters's Memoirs of the Rev. Thomas Baker, 1784, 8vo, pp. 75—77.]

SIR ROBERT DOUGLAS, of Glenbervie, Bart., well known as the author of the Peerage of Scotland (published before his succession to the baronetcy) was dead in 1798, when his Baronage was published, but appears to have been alive when the 18th page of that work passed through the press. The exact date of his decease will oblige.

His only son, Sir Alexander Douglas, M.D., died 28 Nov. 1812, although his name continued on the list of the London College of Physicians till 1822.

S. Y. R.

[Sir Robert Douglas, Bart., died at Edinburgh on April 24, 1770, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. See Scots Magazine, xxxii. 230.]

Replies.

LADY TEMPEST'S JURY.

(3rd S. vii. 136.)

A correspondent under the initials C. H. has three queries: 1. Who was Thwing? 2. Who was Lady Tempest? 3. To what circumstance allusion is made in the extract he gives from Woolrych's Memoirs of Judge Jeffreys?—To the first,—Thwing was the Rev. Thomas Thwing, a Catholic priest, who was executed at York, October 23, 1680. Mr. Salmon, in his Examination of Burnet's History of the Reformation, p. 880, observes that the encouragement given to Titus Oates and Bedloe occasioned others to profess to discover plots in various parts of the kingdom. One of these was laid in Yorkshire, and Mr. Thwing was accused by two discharged servants of Sir Thomas Gascoyn, of having conspired with Sir Thomas, who was his uncle, and with Sir Miles Stapylton, Lady Tempest, and others, to kill the king. The others were acquitted; but Mr. Thwing, being a priest, did not meet with equal justice, but was condemned upon the testimony of the same two miscreants, whose evidence had not been admitted when the others were tried upon the same indictment. He was sentenced to death on the 2nd of August, but reprieved till the 23rd of October, and then hanged, drawn, and quartered, having solemnly protested his innocence in a noble speech at the gallows. The following inscription was placed over him when interred by his friends:

"R. D. Thomas Thwing de Heworth, Coll. Anglo-Duaceni Sacerdos, post Annos 15 in Missione Anglicana transactos, Eboraci condemnatus et Martyrio affectus est Octob. 23, 1680.

"A duobus falsis testibus, ob crimen conspirationis tunc temporis Catholicis malitiose impositum."

To the second,—Who was Lady Tempest? I can give no more direct answer than that she was a Catholic lady well known in Yorkshire, and most probably of the Tempest family of Broughton.

To the third,—by "Lady Tempest's Jury," Mr. Thwing evidently meant the jury on her trial. He petitioned the Court that he might be tried by the same jury which had been impanelled at the trial of Lady Tempest, who had been tried on the same evidence, and acquitted; but this request Judge Dolben refused, in the words quoted by C. H. (See Dodd's Church Hist. of England, vol. iii., and Challoner's Memoirs of Missionary Priests, vol. ii.)

A piece of the rope with which Mr. Thwing was hanged is preserved in one of the Catholic colleges in England, and has been often seen by

F. C. H.

Thomas Thwing was tried at York for high treason, 24th July, 1680. A jury had acquitted

Lady Tempest the day before. "Mr. Justice Dolben, taking notice of a gentleman near the prisoners, demanded, 'What is that gentleman?' We are all beset; he was one of the jury yesterday."

He afterwards says to the prisoner: "Really methinks you that are priests should be more dextrous. My Lady Tempest managed her business much better, and had her witnesses in more readiness." (State Trials.)

Thwing was convicted and executed. His trial is one of the most monstrous of the time. Sir Thomas Gascoigne, my Lady Tempest, and others agree to kill the king, and in hopes it will take effect, they will erect a nunnery at Dole Bank, of which Thwing shall be chaplain! E. G.

The passage quoted by Woolrych is from the trial of Thomas Thwing and Mary Pressicks for high treason at York in 1680. (See State Trials, vol. vii. p. 1163.) "Lady Tempest," it says in a note, "was probably the daughter of Sir Thomas Gascoigne. No report of her trial has been found." Sir Thomas had been previously tried in the King's Bench for high treason (p. 959), in which she perhaps was in some measure implicated. He was acquitted, and no doubt her trial and acquittal immediately preceded that of Thwing, who naturally, therefore, wished to be tried by the same jury, and the judge as naturally refused the request. Poor Thwing was convicted and hanged.

EDWARD FOSS.

SIR WILLIAM WESTON,

LORD PRIOR OF THE ORDER OF ST. JOHN OF JERUSALEM, temp. HENRY VIII.

(2nd S. vii. 317, 405, 496.)

The late MR. PISHEY THOMPSON in his reply to P. S. C. regarding the knight above named, refers to Cromwell's History of Clerkenwell for a representation and description of the very fine and curious monument to the memory of the last Lord Prior of the Knights Hospitallers in England, which adorned the old church of St. James's at Clerkenwell prior to its demolition in 1788, when, as recorded by MR. PINKS (2nd S. vii. 496), to the eternal disgrace of the parties concerned, it was sold to the Rev. Sir George Booth, and conveyed to Burghley, co. Lincoln [?]. Cromwell speculates at some length (pp. 189-191) on the signification of the extraordinary motto ANY BONE on the scroll beneath the sculptured arms of Sir William Weston; and premising that it had given rise to some antiquarian discussion, supposes it to be a corruption arising perhaps from the ignorance of the sculptor of SANE BARO, "Truly a Baron!" or "A Baron indeed!" and infers that it was the motto borne officially by the Grand Prior of the Order of St. John, as Premier of the Baronage of England.

I question the correctness of this assumption for the following reason:—In the Heralds' College is preserved "A Description of the Standards borne in the Field by Peers and Knights in the Reign of Henry VIII." compiled between 1510 and 1525; and in it is delineated the standard or and VERT of Sir Richard Weston, brother of the Lord Prior, on which in transverse, diagonal, countercharged bars, the motto ANI BORO twice occurs.

Sir Richard Weston was not a Knight of St. John; but even had he belonged to the Order, his brother, whose banner figures in the same MS., was at the time Grand Prior and bearing a like motto. Sir Richard, then, must have borne, and the heralds must have recorded, the motto of his family.

Major Whitworth Porter, in his notice of Sir William Weston (History of the Knights of Malta, vol. ii. p. 323), states that the Grand Prior of England ranked as premier baron, and describes the distinctive dress worn by him and barons generally; but he makes no mention of any distinguishing motto, which he undoubtedly would have done had he been satisfied that such was borne ex officio by that officer.

Can any of your readers adduce evidence in support of the view taken by Cromwell? Can any suggest a more probable meaning to ANI BORO than that assumed by him, or can any of them bring forward proof of another motto having been borne by Sir William and Sir Richard Weston and their family in the time of Henry VIII.? W.

ADVERBS IMPROPERLY USED.

(3rd S. vii. 152.)

I apprehend Mr. Bartlett is wrong, at least as to the use of many of the adverbs he appears to refer to; and that it can be shown without relying on Shakespeare's authority. In answer to the common question, "How do you do?" it is quite correct to answer, "I do well, or ill;" as in the Bible, "He shall do well." Now "well" and "ill" are adverbs, and correspond to "how." But the other common phrase shows the double usage most clearly when one says, "I am well," in answer to "How are you?" I say the double usage, for, of course, it is equally correct to say, "I am healthy," or "sick," using the adjectives. No doubt in colloquial usage "well" as much as "ill" is almost regarded as an adjective, as is shown by the derivative "unwellness," though "well" is never used as an adjective, while "ill," of course, is: "it is an ill wind," &c. As is continually the case in English it may not be easy to draw the precise line, or so define the rationale. But I apprehend for practice the rule might be found from what I have indicated. Wherever in a question the adverb can be used, another adverb can be used in the answer, and that, whether the question is asked or not. No one would say, "How do you become?" for "What do you become?" it would mean something quite different. Nor, I think, would one say, "How does it seem?" for "what does it seem to be?" except by a very loose colloquialism. But we should say, "How do they look?" or "How do they feel?" "He feels warmly" is different from "He feels warm," because the verb is used as a transitive, and elliptically. It means "he has or entertains (certain feelings) in a warm manner," or "to a great degree of warmth."

The quotation from Julius Cæsar shows the double usage, unless "fresh" is used adverbially.

LYTTELTON.

Hagley, Stourbridge.

Your correspondent, S. W. P., quotes from Shakespeare the phrases—

"You look merrily,"

"Looks he as freshly,"

"Look fresh and merrily," in order to defend such expressions as "I feel very badly," "You look charmingly," against the censures of Mr. Bartlett. Now he must allow me to point out a distinction where a real difference exists. Our word "to look" may be equivalent either to δοκεῖν, or to βλέπειν; and as it is wrong to say φαιδρῶς δοκεῖς · ιλαρῶς δοκεῖς, so is it wrong to say "You look merrily," if we mean "You appear merry." The expression "You look charmingly," evidently means "You have a charming appearance," and is therefore incorrect. But as it is right to say, φαιδρῶς βλέπεις, ιλαρῶς βλέπεις (Cf. Mel. in Anth. xii. 159, ιλαρὸν βλέπων, and Xen. Memor. iii. 10, 4, ἀρ' οὖν, ἔφη, γίγνεται ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ τό τε φιλοφρόνως καὶ τὸ ἐχθρῶς βλέπειν πρὸς τινας;) so is it right to say, "You look merrily," if we mean "When you look at me you do so merrily." Βλέπειν, "to look," in this sense has an active signification, and the action is properly qualified by an adverb. This active force of βλέπειν is still more strongly seen in an idiom common in Aristophanes, and familiar to ourselves. Compare Aristoph., Τεσπ. 455,—

... ἀνδρῶν τρόπος

δεξιόμων καὶ δικαίων, καὶ βλεπόντων κάρδαμα, with our expression, "He looked daggers at me." Cf. also Soph., Œd. Col. 319,—

... φαιδρὰ γοῦν ἀπ' ὀμμάτων σαίνει με προστείχουσα.

"She cheers me with the glad radiance of her eye," where we are usually told that φαιδρά is used adverbially. Here, however, as often elsewhere, the neuter adjective is far more expressive than the simple adverb. The idiom σάψει με φαιδρὰ ἀπ' ὀμμάτων is very nearly akin to κάρδαμα βλέπειν.

The distinction which I have attempted to point out above, holds with regard to the word "to feel," and Mr. Bartlett is aware of the distinction. "He feels warm" means "he experiences a sensation of warmth"—"he knows by his sensations that he is warm," and we accordingly use an adjective, and we condemn as incorrect the phrase "He feels badly," because an adverb is employed to convey a precisely similar notion. For as "he feels warmly" means "he is one who when he experiences sensations, does so in a warm manner;" so "he feels badly" should strictly mean, "His sensitive faculties are impaired;" a signification which we never intended the words to bear.

FABRIS OXONIENSIS.

MISTLETOE.

(3rd S. vii. 76, 157.)

That J. A. P. should have followed Wächter in his very erroneous deduction of this word, and thence too followed up the argument to ascribe to the Druids its origin from so despicable a word as mist, dung, shows that he has not consulted Pliny in the original. The passage he cites from Pliny after Wächter is from lib. xvi. cap. 93, in which three sorts of viscus are given: Stelin, Hyphear (called also Dryos Hyphear, copiosissimum in quercu) and Viscus; and then follows the quoted passage, which is more in relation to the mode of its propagation than to the derivation of its name. Had either J. A. P. or Wächter gone on to the next chapter but one, xcv., their error as to the derivation would have been very plain; and it would show a wonderful proof of the enduring powers of language, and of Pliny's knowledge of German and British, that his translation of our indigenous term should be still perfectly recognisable. This Teutonic lore of Pliny had already been recognised by Sir Francis Palgrave, in his translation of Bodenlos by fundo carens. But I will give you the principal portion of this chapter, in which, as Britons regardful of our ancestry, we have even a domestic interest:—

"Non est omittenda in ea re (nempe Visco) et Galliarum admiratio. Nihil habent Druides (ita suos appellant Magos) visco, et arbore in qua gignatur, si modo sit robur, sacratius. Jam per se roborem eligunt lucos nec ulla sacra sine ea fronde faciunt, ut inde appellati quoque, interpretatione Græca, possint Druides videri. Enimvero quicquid adnascatur illis e cælo missum putant, signumque esse electæ ab ipso Deo arboris.—Omnia sanantem appellantes suo vocabulo, sacrificiis epulisque rite sub arbore preparatis duos admovent candidi coloris tauros, quorum cornua tunc primum vinciantur. Sacerdos candida veste cultus arborem scandit; falce aurea demittit; candido id excipitur sago."

Omnia sanantem as translation of the indigenous term is still best retained in the German mistel, contracted merely from meist heil(sam), and not very dissimilar from our English equivalent, most heal(ing). Even mist, German for dung, philosophically considered as nature's balmy restorer, may not be inaptly deduced from the same considerations as producing fecundity, which Pliny, in continuation, makes one of the attributes given to the omnia sanantem herb:—

"Fecunditatem eo potio dari cuique animalium sterili arbitrantur; contra venena omnia esse remedio."

It may be doubtful whether superstition has taken or given one of its traits from the mode of the mistletoe's growth, and gathering into the white robe of the principal Druid, to prevent its ever coming in contact with the earth, so that in Shakspeare's days contact with the soil would weaken a charm or invalidate witchcraft. Hecate in Macbeth, says,—

"Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound,
I'll catch ere it come to ground,
And that, distilled by magic slights,
Shall raise such artificial sprites
As by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion.
He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear;
And you all know security
Is mortals' chiefest enemy."

The peculiarity of growth, coupled with the sanctity attached to the plant, will also give an answer to a question asked in "N. & Q." which I have not seen answered,— "Whence originates the custom of kissing under the mistletoe?" In our merry Christmas time the practice would lose all efficacy was it not under the mistletoe, and we therefore very correctly hang it from our ceilings; for in this position it aptly represents the native growth and place of potent vantage. We may fancy that three thousand years ago, if not more, our ancestral tribes in their youthful days of tryst and courtship, danced under the gnarled oaks of our primæval forests wherever the outstretched bough bore the sacred emblem, exchanging vows of troth and oscula dulcia, and may they continue to do so still for an equal space of time.

WILLIAM BELL, Phil. Dr.

6, Crescent Place, Burton Crescent.

Mr. Prior, in his very excellent little book On the Popular Names of British Plants, derives mistletoe from the Anglo-Saxon misteltan, from mist, different, and tan, twig, being so unlike the tree it grows on.

W. J. T.

T. C. is of opinion that the presence of mistletoe is "probably the consequence and not the cause of the unhealthiness" of the trees on which it is found. If he will consider how the mystic plant is propagated, I think he will be ready to change his note. One of the most exhaustive articles on the mistletoe which I can now call to mind, appeared in Once a Week for December 31, 1864. In it the writer, Mr. Walford, makes the following quotation from a paper read by Dr. Harley before the Linnæan Society in March, 1863. After the seed of the parasite has been deposited and has begun to germinate —

"the branch still struggles vigorously with its enemy, but as fast as one generation of roots are dying off, a later and more numerous progeny attack it in another place. The affected branch moreover assumes various contortions, in the hope of escaping, being twisted sometimes in one direction and sometimes in another, and frequently being bent at right angles to itself; but it wrestles in vain as with a veritable hydra, which having killed its centre, spoiled and occupied its bark, and invaded anew the living wood that remains, now gradually completes the work of destruction."

Thus far Dr. Harley; Mr. Walford continues —

"It is to this power of the mistletoe to seize on one branch of a tree after another, and to reduce them to a desolate woe-begone appearance, that Shakespeare is thought to allude when he says of the limes in Datchet Mead. —

"The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean, O'ercome with moss and baleful mistletoe."

Tit. Andr., Act II. Sc. 3.

ST. SWITHIN.

A curious practice illustrating the properties of this strange plant was communicated to me, now many years ago, and is, I think, note-worthy, although it may not throw any light on the peculiar epithet used by Shakspeare. In the palmy days of "Cranborne Chase," the season for killing "dry" does begin at Martin's Eve (Nov. 11) and ended at Candlemas (Feb. 2). Now it was customary with the keepers to produce the effect of natural sterility by inducing abortion in the female deer, and this they did by laying branches of mistletoe in their feeding grounds some two or three months before the season commenced. The plan succeeded, but it was said that the venison in such cases was deficient in flavour. I was likewise informed that mistletoe would produce the same effects in the canine race. This property of the plant is not, I believe, generally known; for the practice founded on it was a piece of woodcraft probably confined by traditional usage to the district I have named. The fact is singular and suggestive.

W. W. S.

LONGEVITY: MISS MARY BILLINGE (3rd S. vii. 154, 207.) — I am obliged to MR. NEWTON for his courteous reply; but he will, I trust, excuse my saying that I am not yet satisfied as to the exact age of Miss Mary Bilinge. Her brother, who died in 1817, aged forty-seven, must have been born in 1770, nineteen years after Miss Mary Bilinge, a fact which adds to my doubts rather than removes them. Would MR. NEWTON, as he is a resident on the spot, kindly apply to the Officer of Health for Liverpool, who made the researches, and was satisfied with the result, and request that gentleman to give your readers the benefit of those researches? The question is not an idle one: it involves much of social and physiological interest, and I hope for MR. NEWTON's assistance in settling it.

A DOUBTER.

BARLEY (3rd S. v. 358; vi. 481; vii. 84.) — Among the many conjectures that have been offered as to this expression, may I be permitted to intrude my own humble opinion: that the interpretation furnished by Halliwell in his Dictionary, after all, approaches nearest to the truth, viz. that it signifies "to bespeak or claim." This has been well illustrated by T. T. W. in the instance of children searching in company for an object, when the first fortunate discoverer of it calls out in haste, "Barley," or, as the version of P. P. has it, "Barley me," — thus asserting a right to it as his own. I would therefore suggest, that Barley is nothing more nor less than a contraction of the phrase, "By your leave;" as may be perceived by pronouncing it glibly over the tongue, without dwelling upon the labial re at the close. The addition of "me" only serves as a confirmation of the original claim; and is as much as to say, elliptically and hastily, without any unnecessary circumlocution, "It is for me," or "It is mine."

Then more particularly as to "me:" if I may be allowed without affectation of pedantry to employ a classical allusion, I would add, that this little me is Nature's most appropriate language of highly wrought hurried excitement, rising at once to the lip on the spur of the moment, and beautifully exemplified by Virgil in his episode of Nisus and Euryalus: —

"Me, me, adsum qui feci." — Æneid, l. ix. v. 42.

But, to descend from heroics: — At the hazard of being thought fanciful, I venture to put forward the above interpretation till a better is found; and, if it be admitted, shall assert my right among my fellow-inquirers to the privilege attendant upon the discovery by adopting the expression "Barley me" — "By your leave, it is mine."

U. U.

EDMUND HOYLE (3rd S. vii. 153.) — Your correspondent CAVENDISH will find a short account of Edmund Hoyle, in Chambers's Book of Days (vol. ii. p. 282). It is as follows: —

"Of this celebrated writer of treatises on games of chance, including, among others, whist, piquet, quadrille, and backgammon, and whose name has become so familiar, as to be immortalised in the well-known proverb, 'According to Hoyle,' little more is known than that he appears to have been born in 1672; and died in Cavendish Square, London, 29th August, 1769, at the advanced age of ninety-seven. In the Gentleman's Magazine of December, 1742, we find among the list of promotions:

'Edmund Hoyle, Esq., made by the Primate of Ireland register of the Prerogative Court there, worth 600*l.* per annum.' From another source we learn, that he was a barrister by profession. His treatise on whist, for which he received from the publisher the sum of 1000*l.*, was first published in 1743; and attained such a popularity that it ran through five editions in a year, besides being extensively printed. He has even been called the inventor of the game of whist; but this is certainly a mistake, though there can be no doubt that it was indebted to him for being first treated of, and introduced to the public in a scientific manner. It first began to be popular in England about 1730; when it was particularly studied by a party of gentlemen, who used to assemble in the Crown Coffee House, in Bedford Row. Hoyle is said to have given instructions in the game, for which his charge was a guinea a lesson."

THOMAS T. DYER.

PHILIPPINES: "VIEL LIEBCHEN" (3rd S. vi. 458, 501; vii. 24, 104.)—In explanation of the term Philippines, as referring to the double kernel of a nut, it was suggested in "N. & Q." (Queries with Answers, vi. 458), that the name of Philippines may have been connected with the two Philippinæ, daughters of St. Philip, who were interred in one burial-place.

A correspondent, however (vi. 501), offers what he thinks is a more satisfactory explanation of the name than that contained in your "editorial suggestion." In many parts of Germany, he says:

"The fixed salutation is 'Guten morgen, viel liebchen,'—'Good morrow, well-beloved;' and the similarity of pronunciation between 'viel liebchen' and 'philippines,' the English substitute, is quite marked enough to account for the name."

Your "editorial suggestion" is thus set aside. The term Philippines, as employed in reference to two kernels in one shell, is not traceable to the two Philippinæ laid in one burial-place; but is an "English substitute" for the German "viel liebchen."

But let us look a little further. Granting that "viel liebchen" is the phrase now commonly used in German, does it follow that Philippines is merely an English substitute? Far from it. On the contrary, your learned correspondent HERMENTRUDE informs us (vii. 104) that Philippe, or Philippine (as the case may be), was the term connected with the twin kernels which she heard employed in French by a native of Austria.

It would appear then that Philippine, so used, is no merely English term. And it may be remarked in support of this conclusion, that Philippine, though not a common, is a well-known German Christian name, as in the case of Philippine Welser.

On the whole, then, I would offer this suggestion. Philippine and "viel liebchen" have undeniably so much "similarity of pronunciation," that, in their common application to the case of twin kernels, one of them is in all probability the other's "substitute." But which? Is Philippine the mere English substitute for "viel liebchen"? We have already seen reason for concluding that this view is untenable. May we not rather, then, suppose the reverse?—Namely, that "viel liebchen" is after all a German substitute for Philippine?

Give but precedence to the sainted Philippinæ who were laid in one burial-place, your original explanation will then stand good, and we shall at once perceive the connexion with the two kernels in one shell.

INVESTIGATOR.

ADULATION OF BUONAPARTE (3rd S. vii. 136.)—The profane adulation of Buonaparte ("the Almighty having created Napoleon rested from his labours") cited in the Manual of Political Ethics of Lieber, as attributed to the mandement of the Bishop of Amiens, has also been ascribed to the Prefect La Chaise, who is stated to have inscribed under a portrait of the emperor, "Dieu créa Napoléon et reposa," which elicited two contemptuous French lines allusive to his name, marked by wit and point, but unsuited for general perusal. Did one of these plagiarise the impious parody from the other, or was it one of those inspirations in which "les beaux esprits se rencontrent?" That there is nothing intrinsically improbable in the servile incense stated to have been in this, as in other instances, offered to the first emperor, will be admitted by the contemporaries of the advent to presidential and imperial power of the third. Authentic instances of this abject prostration of self-respect in reference to both, would supply a singular and instructive chapter to "N. & Q." As antidote to the bane, curious notices might also be contributed of the satires, both pictorial and literary, of which the first emperor, now within the domain of historical criticism, was the object. Of these pictorial satires, I cite from a German work the following notice of a political caricature in reference to the murder of the Duc d'Enghien:—

"Nach des Herzogs von Enghien schändlichem Mord erschien eine Karikatur. Napoleon, den Kopf des Gemordeten in der Hand, besprengte Joseph, Ludwig und Murat mit dem Blute: 'Je vous fais princes du sang.' Bruder Hieronymus konnte die Bluttaufe noch nicht empfangen, und Lucian verschmähte sie, doch sagte er dem Königsmacher bei weiterem Andringen: 'Nun ja! so will ich König von England sein.'"

Is there any proof of the publication of this caricature?

JOHN HUGHES.

INFANTRY IN LINE (3rd S. vii. 154.)—I can give your correspondent, FUSILIER, some information on the subject of his inquiry, having been instructed from the lips of Colonel M'Murdo, C.B., the late Inspector-General of Volunteers, and now Honorary Colonel of the Inns of Court ("Devil's Own"). Colonel M'Murdo told us (the "Devil's Own" aforesaid) that the Duke of Wellington, in the Peninsular war, noticed how the French advanced under fire in column, and ~~that~~ addressed solely to the other sentiments and emotions, but provides us with habitations, and with other structures required by the common affairs of life. There must have been in Martial's days, as there are in ours, many builders, successful, wealthy, respectable, who yet, as their works sufficiently testify, have the slenderest pretensions to taste or genius, and to whom it is no disparagement to be classified with auctioneers, skilled in the value of goods and the credit of persons, and finding their calling most lucrative. I see nothing then incongruous in the ideas of the epigram, which may be thus paraphrased:—"Whatever you do with your son, do not let him pursue poetry or eloquence, which are unprofitable. If he wishes to make much money, let him become a great musician, if he can. If he is incapable of any such pursuit, he may still get rich if you make him an auctioneer or a builder." K.

FIGHTS WITH DRAGONS (3rd S. vii. 159.)—A correspondent of "N. & Q." alludes to the authority of the "late naturalist and antiquary, Colonel Hamilton Smith, who was of opinion that many of the local traditions of encounters between knights and dragons may have had their origin in fact, and that in all cases the so-called dragon was a crocodile." However this conjecture may be applicable to the mythic chivalry of Egypt and the East, it can hardly reach the difficulty of explaining such traditions in Great Britain, where the crocodile was not indigenous.

A more probable solution may possibly be found in the encounters between the native chieftains of these islands, and the Norsemen and Vikings, who gave to their war ships the name of "Dragons." This term occurs constantly in the Sagas. In the Frithiof Saga, Thorstein, when setting out to recover the golden armlet, which Soté the pirate had carried off to Britain—

"Mounted his dragon-bark, and steered to the place o'er the ocean."

Again, amongst the heirlooms of Thorstein which descended to Frithiof—

"Ellida, the war ship, belonged to the family treasures; Fair was the ship to behold, for the open planks of its structure Grew into one of themselves, and had never been bolted together:

It was framed like a huge sea-snake o'er the stem, which loftily tow'ring, Lifted its grisly crest, and breathed gilt flames from its nostrils.

Rose o'er the stern its glittering tail, all scaly with silver.

Filled with warriors in arms, 'twas as though some kingly castle

Or fortress embattled, were sailing abroad on the ocean; Black were its wings, with a border of red, and when they were extended,

It rivalled the tempest in speed, and distanced the following eagle."

Muckleston's Translation, p. 35.

Again, when Frithiof asks Ingeborg in marriage—

"Then Frithiof his dragon-bark unmoor'd,
And the breeze blew fresh, and the billows roar'd,
As northward she flew Toward Bele's Cairn o'er the waters blue."

Ib. l. 43.

Is it not probable that a combat and conquest of one of these formidable craft, with its ominous name, may have conferred on the vanquished the distinction of having slain the dragon?

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

SPANISH AND PORTUGUESE FAMILIES (3rd S. vii. 134.)—I am happy in being able to supply H. W. T. with some of the heraldic information which he desires:—

Alvarez.—Huit points d'azur équipollés à sept d'arg. (Chequy of 15 panes, az. and arg.)

Carvajal or Caravaial (= Carvalho?).—D'or à la bande de sa.; au chef cousu du champ, chargé d'un tourteau de sin., surchargé d'un croix d'or. (Or. a bend sa., on a chief of the field a pomeis charged with a cross or.)

De Haro.—D'arg., à l'arbre de sin. accosté de deux loups pass. de sa. (et portants la proie), à la bordure de gu. chargée de huit flanchis d'or. (Arg., a tree vert accosted by two wolves passant sa. on a bordure gu. eight saltires or.)

De Castro.—D'arg. à six tourteaux d'azur. (Arg. six hurts 2, 2, 2.)

Padilla.—D'azur à trois poëles à frise, rangées et mises en pals, adextrées chacune d'un croissant contourné, surmontée chacune d'un croissant versé, et soutenues chacune d'un croissant montant, le tout d'arg.

Ponce de Leon.—Parti de Leon et d'Arragon, à la bordure de Bidaure. (Party per pale—1st, arg. a lion ramp. gu.; 2nd, or, four pallets gu. All within a bordure az., charged with eight escutcheons, or, a fess azure.)

Mendez.—D'arg. au lion de gu., chargé de trois bandes d'or. (Arg. a lion ramp. gu. charged with three bendlets or.)

De la Cerda.—Ecartelé aux 1 and 4, parti de Castille et Leon; aux 2 and 3, de France. (Quarterly, 1 and 4, per pale, gu. a castle or. (for Castile), and arg. a lion ramp. gu. crowned or. (for Leon); 2 and 3, az. three fleurs-de-lis or, for France.)

I have not been able as yet to find the arms of Villarinho, Coelho, or Forjaz. J. WOODWARD.
New Shoreham.

SIR WALTER SCOTT (3rd S. vii. 156, 211.)—When Mrs. Beecher Stowe was in Scotland, she and her party felt themselves in duty bound to visit Melrose by "pale moonlight," and she says (Scotch Memories, p. 79):—

"In the course of the evening came in Mr. —, who had volunteered his services as guide and attendant during the interesting operation. 'When does the moon rise?' said one. 'Oh a little after eleven o'clock, I believe.'"

Barons and Churchmen during Edward the First's subjugating tour through Scotland in 1296.

Of the Orthographie and Congruitie of the Britan Tongue. A Treatise, noe shorter than necessarie, for the Schooles. By Alexander Hume. Edited from the original MS. in the British Museum by Henry B. Wheatley. (Early English Text Society.)

This early treatise on English Orthography, written by Alexander Hume, who was at one time Head Master of the High School, Edinburgh, is printed from the MS. copy which the author dedicated to James I. It is a very fitting Essay to have been printed by the Early English Text Society.

A Biographical Memoir of Samuel Hartlib, Milton's familiar Friend; with Bibliographical Notices of Works published by him, and a Reprint of his Pamphlet entitled "An Invention of Engines of Motion." By H. Dircks, Esq. (J. Russell Smith.)

By this little book Mr. Dircks has done good service both to literary history and to the history of mechanical progress in this country.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

COLE'S (ELISAB.) DICTIONARY, ENGLISH-LATIN AND LATIN-ENGLISH, 4to. London, 1677. Two guineas offered for a good copy.

Wanted by Mr. J. O. Halliwell, 6, St. Mary's Place, West Brompton, near London.

GARMANNI, L. C. F., DE MIRACULIS MORTUORUM LIBRI TRES. Dresden, 1700. Five shillings will be given.

Wanted by Mr. Edward Peacock, Bottesford Manor, Brigg.

ACCOUNTS OF EJECTED MINISTERS, by CALAMY.

Wanted by Mr. Johnson Baily, Bishop Middleham, Ferry Hill Station, Durham.

Notices to Correspondents.

Among other articles of interest which are in type, and will be inserted in an early number, are—

Death caused by drinking Cold Water; Breakneck Steps; Assumption of Arms; On a Passage in Pericles, by Dr. Bell; Daniel Defoe, the News-Writer, &c.

E. S. LASCELLES will find articles on the "Nixæan Barks" in "N. & Q." 3rd S. iii. 287, and v. 269.

THE GREEK CHURCH. We are compelled for obvious reasons to discontinue the discussion of this question.

H. P. G. will find the "Union Jack" treated of in "N. & Q." 2nd S. iii. 11, 70, and in a very recent number.

Z. The motto "Min, Sicker, Reag," is Irish, and means "Gentle, Prudent, Ready."

W. W. The following works on writing in Cipher may be consulted: LA CRYPTOGRAPHIE DÉVOILÉE, par Ch. Fr. Vostin (Bruxelles, 8vo, 1848); Martens's Guide Diplomatique, p. 576, et seq., and the Works of Dr. John Wallis, iii. 659. It is probable that the cipher occasionally seen in newspapers may be a regular code arranged between the corresponding parties. Vide "N. & Q." 1st S. xii. 112, 305, 413.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 4d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 4d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 32, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS for the Editor should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

RAPID CURE OF SEVERE COLD BY DR. LOOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—"To Mr. Winnall, Bookseller, 108, High Street, Birmingham.—I had been troubled with a severe cold, which grew worse, and a difficulty of breathing, with tightness at the chest. Your assistant prescribed me Dr. Loock's Wafers, and in a few minutes the tightness of my chest had entirely left, leaving only a slight cough, which left me next day." Sold by all Medicine Vendors at 1s. 11d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. per box.

ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—A Professional Man, residing in one of the best roads, is desirous of meeting with a Gentleman who wishes to board and lodge in a Private Family, and can afford to pay about 80l. per annum.—Address A. B., "NOTES AND QUERIES" Office, Wellington Street, Strand.

THE UPPER WARD OF LANARKSHIRE

DESCRIBED AND DELINEATED. The Archaeological and Historical Section by G. V. IRVING, F.S.A. Scot. The Statistical and Topographical Section by ALEX. MURRAY. Three Volumes, 4to, 108s.; 8vo, 63s.

"These three portly volumes are a valuable contribution to the local history of Scotland, and the production of works of this character we trust is a proof of the growing estimation of the utility and value of this department of literature. Pleasant indeed is it to turn aside for a few hours from the many scissors-and-paste compilations of the present day, to a book which reminds us of the works of worthy John Stow, the industrious Camden, and dear old Tom Fuller. . . . The amount of curious information—topographical, biographical, ecclesiastical, and statistical—concentrated in these volumes, does high credit to the learning, diligence, and vigilant research of the respective Editors. The work too is an admirable specimen of typography, and is not only profusely illustrated with maps, portraits, and miniatures of this delightful district, but the numerous facts embodied in its pages are made available by copious Indexes of persons and places. We must, however, refer our readers to the work itself, feeling confident that every lover of Scottish antiquities and Scottish scenery will be delighted and instructed in conning over its pleasant pages."—Notes and Queries, January 28, 1865.

J. RUSSELL SMITH, London; EDMONSTON & DOUGLAS, Edinburgh; THOMAS MURRAY & SON; or of A. MURRAY, 16, St. Enoch Square, Glasgow.

WHAT WILL THIS COST TO PRINT? is a

thought often occurring to literary men, public characters, and persons of benevolent intentions. An immediate answer to the inquiry may be obtained. A SPECIMEN BOOK OF TYPES, and information for authors, sent on application, by

RICHARD BARRETT, 13, Mark Lane, London.

TO LOVERS OF OLD HISTORICAL POR-

TRAITS.—For Sale, a pair of Portraits of Queen Mary I. and her husband, King Philip of Spain, A.D. 1554. They are painted on Panel, 19½ x 16½. Also, a Portrait of Queen Jane Seymour.

Apply to Mr. THOS. BOOKER, 33, New Bond Street, W.

Preparing for Publication.

A CATALOGUE of a particularly Interesting and Valuable Collection of Rare and Curious English Books, singularly rich in Early English Literature, including some of the Original Editions of Shakespeare's Works and extensively illustrated Works relating to him, Books relating to the Drama and Stage, Lives of Actors and Actresses; a large Collection of Song and Jest Books; a very Curious Collection of Books relating to Marriage, Divorce, &c.; and a great number of singularly Curious and Amusing Books, Fables, &c.; Valuable Books relating to English History, Topography, &c., selected from the celebrated Library of the late George Daniel, Esq., of Canonbury Square, and from the Library of a Gentleman, the greater part of which was purchased at the Sale of the Libraries of Dr. Richard Farmer, 1796, and George Steevens, Esq., 1800, NOW ON SALE at the prices offered, by JOSEPH LILLY, 17 and 18, New Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

This exceedingly Curious and Interesting Catalogue will be forwarded on the receipt of Twelve Postage Stamps.

IMPORTANT to NOBLEMEN and GENTLE-

MEN forming or adding to their Libraries, Amateurs of Rare and Curious Books, Curators of Public Libraries, &c.—Above 50,000 VOLUMES of Rare, Curious, Useful and Valuable BOOKS, Splendid Books of Prints, Picture Galleries, and Illustrated Works, beautifully illuminated Manuscripts on Vellum, &c., are NOW ON SALE at very greatly reduced prices, by JOSEPH LILLY, 17 and 18 New Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Library of a Gentleman, deceased; also, the Library of a Professor of Oriental Literature.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON, Auctioneers of Literary Property, will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, 27, Leicester Square, W.C. (West Side), on MONDAY, March 27, and Four following Days, a large and valuable COLLECTION of BOOKS in all Departments of Literature, English and Foreign, in which is included the Library of a Gentleman, deceased; comprising, among other valuable works:—Vico's Scienza Nuova, 7 vols.—Hickes's Voyages, by Woodfall, 5 vols., fsc paper.—Stanhope's Olympia, India proofs.—Hill's Etchings, 3 vols., half-morocco.—Bartsch, Le Peintre Graveur, 21 vols.—Ireland's Picturesque Works, 8 vols., green morocco.—Sharon Turner's History of England, 10 vols.—Froissart and Montreuil's Chronicles, 20 vols.—Universal History, 40 vols.—Biographie Universelle, 67 vols.—Shaw's General Zoology, 20 vols.—Shaw and Nodder's Naturalist's Miscellany, 24 vols.—Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors, 7 vols.—Shakespeare Society's Publications, 48 vols.—Numerous works on Costume, National and Theatrical, &c. Also, the Library of a Professor of Oriental Literature, and a Selection of Philosophical and Classical Books, the Property of a Public Institution.

Catalogues sent on receipt of Two Stamps.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 169.

NOTES:—Breakneck Steps in a Literary "London Fog," 233—Letter to R. B. Sheridan, 235—Death caused by drinking cold Water, 236—Passage in "Pericles," &c., 16.
—Letter of Our Lord to Abgar, 238—Curious Pamphlets—Louis XIV. Author of a "Vie de César"—"He'll never set the Temse on Fire"—Glibby—"As Gipsies do stolen Children"—Moore's "Poems"—Neologism: "Hold-furth"—The Lion on Northumberland House, 238.

QUERIES:—Apparitions of Reculver and Rochester—Thomas Bible—Bibliographical Queries—Marchioness of Cornwallis—Cinnamon—The Rev. Samuel Bledale—Meaning of "Powermen"—Old Inns of Holborn, Aldgate, and Babopsgate—Inscription on a Tombstone—Thomas Oughton—Political Satires: "New Tory and Whig Guide"—Weston, Earl of Portland—"Primitive History from the Creation to Cadmus"—Quotation wanted—Reading Pointers—Shelves in Wiltshire—Supersedeas, 239.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—When was Cannon first made?—"Ivanhoe"—Matthew Hopkins, the Witch-finder—Quotations—"As drunk as Davy's Sow"—Pagan Caricature—Men of Genius in Berners Street—Mary de Valence, Countess of Pembroke, 242.

REPLIES:—Daniel Defoe, the News-writer, 244—Lope de Vega, 246—Greek Church—Rockets in Warfare—Belfast Printing—S. Decharmes—Mungo as a Christian Name—Lancashire: Old Timber Halls—Lord Willoughby—Arundel of Lanherne—Confirmations of Arms—Duke of Buckingham—Tithe Barns—Church of England and Ireland—Chemical Washerwoman—Colours in Heraldry—Hymnology—"Hymns Ancient and Modern"—Jackstones—"What's in a Name?"—"Mors mortis morti," &c.—Sea Serpent, &c., 247.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

BREAKNECK STEPS IN A LITERARY "LONDON FOG."

The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, a work which will be of wonderful use when completed, has nevertheless caused a great gap in the City: a "breach in nature" as it were. Pistol-like, the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway is having "incision" in the Civic bosom, and in this cut-and-thrust performance, I am afraid the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway has not merely thrust on one side, but has entirely cut away, the Breakneck Steps of Goldsmithian reputation. Upon this interesting point, and upon sundry other points thereabout, some citizen, whose words are of credit, though at present his name may not be one of renown, might very well employ himself in re-surveying whatever is left undisturbed by the interesting line of railway, three times named in full already.

I lately tried to discover Breakneck Steps, but every lane or alley I went down, and every street I went up, I came upon the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway works, so that in many cases former thoroughfares were transformed into "No-thoroughfares," with Turn-back-again Lanes in all directions. I found boardings "awest my pwo-gress" such a number of times, that I felt compelled, as the saying is, "to fly away," and in despair give up my search for this famous flight of Steps.

A certain reference in London and its Environs Described, published by R. and J. Dodsley, 1761, in six volumes, was the cause of my attempt to survey this Breakneck locality, now so completely cut through by this almost-everywhere-to-be-handily-met-with railway. Of this locality, however, thank heaven! master John Strype, of laborious memory, has, in his edition of old Stow, 1720 (Book III. p. 280, vol. i.), laid down the following map-like description:—

"On the North side is Seacoal lane. This Lane is very ordinary, both as to Houses and Inhabitants. Out of this Lane is a passage to Snow Hill, another into Green Arbour, and a third into Bishop's Court; the two last ascended up by a great many Steps, or a pair of Stairs, made through London Wall; but having their chief Entrance out of the Little Old Baily, shall be here taken Notice of. On the West side of this Lane are these Allies, which fall into the Ditch side; viz. George Alley, or Yard, an open Place, and unbuilt, except the George Brewhouse, and the end next this Lane, and that is but ordinary. Bear Alley, an indifferent open Place, and reasonably built and inhabited. On the South side of this Alley, is another small one, called Little Bear Alley, very ordinary. Goose Alley, indifferent good, but narrow. And against this Alley is a small Place called Ford's Rents."

In London and its Environs Described, 1761, we are directed to "BREAKNECK alley, in the Minories," and also to "BREAKNECK court, Blackhorse alley, Fleet Street." Both alley and court are followed by this note mark ||, and all places so marked, we are informed, derive their names "from ridicule." The Breakneck Court, which, in 1761, was to be found by those who dived into Blackhorse Alley, may possibly have been the narrow passage to be observed in 1865, leading from the aforesaid alley into Farringdon Street. From the end of this little passage, in days of yore, there existed great facilities, no doubt, for tumbling into the Fleet Ditch, when that once smiling rivulet was open to the public view, from the silvery Thames, through the Holborn Hill valley, right away to the vicinity of old St. Pancras Church, and elsewhere.

Of these probable Fleet Ditch dangers we have a peep or two in A Survey of the Cities of London and Westminster, Borough of Southwark, and the Parts Adjacent, 1734-5, by one Robert Seymour, concerning whom, and his book, the following note from Henry G. Bohn's enlarged edition of Lowndes' Bibliographer's Manual, is worth being "made note of" in these pages:—

"The real author of this work was John Motley: Some copies are dated 1736, others 1754. A collation, with some curious particulars respecting the work, will be found in Upton's Bibliographical Account of the principal Works relating to English Topography, p. 620, and in Chronicles of London Bridge, p. 393."

Robert Seymour, at page 795 of his first volume, speaking of "Black-horse-alley," calls it "ordinary," and further adds:—"Out of this Alley is a Passage to Fleet-ditch," which passage might, with great propriety, have been called, once upon a time, and for the sake of "ridicule"—"BREAK-NECK COURT." Strype, who seems to have poked his antiquarian nose into every hole and corner with great earnestness, remarks, "Black-horse-Alley, ordinary, and nastily kept. Out of this Alley is a passage to Fleet Ditch." Robert Seymour further tells us of "Eagle-and-child-alley, narrow, hath a Passage into Fleet-ditch, down Steps." Brewer's-yard, George-alley, Currier's-alley, and Harp-alley, are all mentioned as making their way to Fleet-ditch, but without any notice of doing so "down Steps." Stone-cutter-street is a way "good and open." He records, however, "Queen's-arms-alley, but narrow, with a Free-stone Pavement, which leads to the Ditch-side, down Steps." Originally, perhaps Breakneck Court had a few steps down to, as it was called, the "Ditch-side"; though we are not called upon to suppose that at any time, Oliver Goldsmith, Bishop Percy, or anybody else, had to "climb from the brink of Fleet Ditch,"—which, by-the-bye, was covered in to a point beyond the south corners of Ludgate Hill and Fleet Street, and occupied by the old Fleet Market, as early as 1737, full twenty years before Goldsmith went to reside above the Breakneck Steps of our own times. When there were ways to the Ditch-side, "down Steps," the chance of danger to those ascending or descending seems to have been confined to the immediate possibility of a tumble and a broken neck, without the cruel addition—supposing a tumble and no broken neck—of a roll over the "brink of Fleet Ditch," with a watery-grave; or, in this case, to use Queen Gertrude's apter words, a "muddy death." This view of the matter may be prettily observed by another extract from the book of Robert Seymour, otherwise John Motley:

"The Ditch-side, called Fleet-ditch, is a spacious Place, with good Buildings on both Sides of the Canal, so made since the Fire of London, and has on both Sides a broad Passage for Carts to the Wharfs next the Thames; this Canal is railed in, for fear of Danger of People's falling into it."

Messrs. R. and J. Dodsley having kindly directed the Stow-ically inclined antiquary to Breakneck Alley, and Breakneck Court, while Lord Macaulay, according to the extract sent by J. E. J. ("N. & Q." 2nd S. ix. 280), chose poetically to exclaim—"Goldsmith took a garret in a miserable court, to which he had to climb from the brink of Fleet Ditch by a dizzy ladder of flagstones called Breakneck Steps. The court and the ascent have long disappeared; but old Londoners well remember both;"—I was led to dive into divers old "Londons" for references to Breakneck Steps, but could find no mention of them by that name.

Strype, in 1720, as we have seen, speaks of Bishop's Court, and Green Arbour Court, as being reached "by a great many Steps, or a pair of Stairs, made through London Wall." Robert Seymour, in 1734, observes, "Green-arbour-court, at the upper End is a very good Square with tolerable good Houses, and Inhabitants answerable. Out of this Court is also a Passage down Steps into Seacoal-lane."

In The History and Survey of London, 2 vols. 1756, "By William Maitland, F.R.S. and Others,"—the title-pages of which further affirm that it was published "By the KING's Authority,"—the "Others," I fancy, assisted William Maitland by thieving pretty freely—"convey the wise it call"—from Robert Seymour, otherwise John Motley. Not only do the "Others" give Seymour's words about Green Arbour Court, even to "Out of this Court is also a Passage down Steps into Seacoal-lane," but the "Others" at page 963, of their History and Survey of London, quaintly observe:—

"The Ditch-side, called Fleet-ditch, is a spacious Place, with good Buildings on both Sides of the Canal, so made since the Fire of London, and has on both Sides a broad Passage for Carts to the Wharfs next the Thames; this Canal is railed in for fear of Danger of People's falling into it."

And thus it is our merry-minded surveyors of Stow's London go on ringing the changes against each other, without remorse, for these words used by the "Others" in 1756, when (for nineteen years) the Fleet Ditch had been filled up and made of market-able value, are the very words spoken by Robert Seymour in 1734, at which time Fleet Ditch was a real ditch, as we learn from Maitland's original edition of his History of London, published in 1739. At page 352 thereof he observes:—

"But this new and spacious Canal filling with Mud and Dirt as formerly, the Charge of Cleansing it above Fleet Bridge amounted to more than its annual Produce; wherefore 'twas again neglected, and the Rails on each Side being decay'd, many Persons perish'd, by falling therein by Night, and Beasts by Day; so that it was become a very great and dangerous Nuisance: which occasion'd the City to apply to Parliament for a Power to arch over and level that Part of it above Fleet Bridge, which being readily granted, the Work was begun about the Beginning of March, Anno 1734."

This filling up, or ditch-arching-over "consummation devoutly to be wished," was finally effected in 1737, in which year, according to Maitland, "Fleet-Market was open'd on the Thirtieth of September." But all these varied says—first of Strype, then of Seymour, next of Maitland, and those "Others" who helped him, are necessary to be studied for the slight purpose of endeavouring to ascertain when Breakneck Steps were first called "Breakneck Steps" in print. Also whether it was likely that Oliver Goldsmith, when he repaired to his "Smoky, miserable one-pair-of-stairs room in Green Arbour Court, near the Old Bailey"—as a writer expresses it in The Westminster Magazine for April, 1774—was under the dangerous necessity of having to “climb from the brink of Fleet Ditch”—a very poetical idea, but not exactly correct.

In such “Londons” as I have been able to consult, I get no glimmer of Breakneck Steps, by that name, until David Hughson, in 1806, published a work entitled London; being an accurate History and Description of the British Metropolis. This work extends to six goodly octavo volumes, and in the third of them, speaking of Green Arbour Court, David Hughson (otherwise E. Pugh) remarks:—

“In the latter court, at the top of BREAK-NECK STEPS, stands a house in which Goldsmith dwelt when he composed the Vicar of Wakefield, the Traveller, &c.”

And so—in this neighbourhood—with the exception of the Dodsley “Breakneck court” in 1761, it is not until 1806 that I find (as yet) a mention of anything Breakneckish in name. However, from all these “Londons” there is something to be gained, notwithstanding the wholesale re-churning up of each other to be observed in them all. As for instance—of the “something to be gained”—during the summer of 1864 I was baffled many times in attempting to copy the crumbled inscription to Amey Constable on the monument erected to that lady’s memory in old St. Pancras churchyard: but in Robert Seymour’s Survey of the Cities of London and Westminster, Borough of Southwark, and the Parts Adjacent, 1734-5, I find Amey Constable’s monumental inscription accurately and completely given. I come to the conclusion of its completeness from the stray parts I myself recovered with so much trouble. From this circumstance I entertain some respect for Seymour’s title-page announcement, which in part reads as follows:—

“The Whole being an Improvement of Mr. Stow’s and other SURVEYS, by adding whatever Alterations have happened in the said CITIES, &c., to the present Year; and by retrenching many Superfluities, and correcting many ERRORS in the former WRITERS.”

However it may have been with the “former writers” and their doings, I know not, but Amey Constable died in 1731, and Seymour printed her tomb-inscription by 1734-5, whereas Master William Maithland in 1739, and the “Others” in 1756, cut poor old St. Pancras off, as it were, with a literary shilling, for they do not condescend to notice one inscription at that, then, out-of-town churchyard. Consequently, as Robert Seymour is the first and only one of these Londoners I can find who gave Amey Constable’s inscription to the printing press, I think we may venture to attach some sort of value to that “Motley performance,” as Upcott good-humouredly calls John Motley’s pseudonymic Survey. As John Motley, ~~as~~ Robert Seymour (who nineteen years afterwards was to be met with as a “Gentleman of the Inner Temple”), has been so often mentioned, the following note, taken from page 620 of Upcott’s Bibliographical Account of the principal Works relating to English Topography, may here be deemed interesting:—

“The real author of this book was John Motley, the more celebrated compiler of Joe Miller’s Jests. He also wrote a Life of Peter the Great, as well as some pieces for the stage; and was the son of Colonel Motley, who fell at the Battle of Turin, 1705, in the service of Louis the Fourteenth.”

To deprive antiquity of its dry, high-top baldness, is a very desirable consummation; while to infuse the spirit of poetry with inch-measured truth, is to produce that juiciness of being, so observable in the more renowned of our worthies.

Old Weever, when recording of rebels, exclaims about the “distorted visage of Plebeian fury,” while the venerable Stow, when his heart was troubled over demolished monuments, cried out against the “bad and greedy men of spoil.” But to talk as Lord Macaulay talked—according to the extract given by J. E. J.—of Oliver Goldsmith clambering from the brink of the Fleet Ditch by a dizzy ladder of flagstone steps, when that ladder of steps was a good quarter of a mile from the spot where the brink of the Fleet Ditch had been, is a process of poetry destructive to truth. Poetical expression is the life of antiquarian discourse, dry words the way to its “dusty death;” but in the midst of the most poetical of antiquarian discourse, inches must be measured by inches, feet measured by feet, or truth, “white-robed truth”—to use the words of the immortal Milton—becomes at once as dirty as Ditch-water.

EDWIN ROFFR.

Somers Town.

LETTER TO R. B. SHERIDAN.

Perhaps the following unpublished letter, containing a strange jingle of words, addressed to the late Mr. R. B. Sheridan, may amuse the readers of “N. & Q.” It is signed “W. R. Spencer,” a son of Lord Charles Spencer. He was the author of Leonora; a translation from the German. Urania, or the Illuminé; a comedy. The Year of Sorrow, and other poems, 1796-1811:—

“I only write you a few words by way of apology for not having sent, and for not sending now, those foolish things you were so good to desire. You shall have them all as soon as I have them myself, and you cannot desire them sooner. I hope you scolded Pitt confoundedly, and your friends still more than him, if they made themselves fools, which they were very likely to do. Dr. Parr begs you will cut Pitt’s throat without loss of time, and destroy all the worshippers of Baal without distinction. Pray drive the dog and all his whelps to the D—l, and purge the House of C’s of its filth, for it is an Augean stable of muck and nastiness. . . . Do send us some account of what you are doing or not doing, saying to. &c., and whether Pitt trembles on the treach. We drank your health yesterday, and various orthodox toasts, and will drink it again to-day by day, please God, dum spiritus hos regit artus. bye, God bless you and yours, and do punish me doing you with these hieroglyphics by sending me your own to decipher.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

"Yours sincerely,

Without dissimulation,
With the greatest admiration
Of your rank and station,
Which, without ostentation,
In my estimation
Is the first in the nation ;
So with due consideration
And perfect adoration
Of your Foxite situation,
And the truest execration
Of the damn'd simulation
And curst speculation,
Of which long observation,
And keen penetration,
And investigation,
And deep speculation
On the scheme and formation
Of Pitt's administration
Have giv'n me confirmation,—
With argumentation
And ratiocination,
Severe accusation
And quick refutation,
Which this generation,
From infatuation,
To my consternation
And heartfelt vexation,
Have giv'n his Brogation
And vociferation,—
So to Pitt here's damnation,
To Fox exaltation,
To you recreation
Beyond all numeration
Or multiplication,
With which supplication
Here ends my Rhymation.

"Yours, &c. &c.

"W. R. SPENCER."

B. S.

DEATH CAUSED BY DRINKING COLD WATER.

A fact which, although apparently well known in the East and in some parts of Europe, appears to have escaped the notice, or at least not to have occupied the attention, of writers on physiological subjects, seems worth making a note of in the "N. & Q."

To the believer in the Christian faith, the subject derives additional interest from the connexion it has with the most awful mystery of our religion, the Crucifixion. The commentators on those parts of the Gospels which relate our Lord's sufferings on the Cross do not mention the fact, probably unknown to them, that drinking cold water whilst suffering very severe pain, produced by torture, causes immediate death.

As has been noticed, most commentators on the Testament pay but little regard to the incident on the Cross; but in a very rare and little known work (Nov. Test. Cathol. expositio ecclesiastica, auctore A. Marlorato, 1559), the commentator on Matth. c. xxvii. remarks that the writer of the Gospel —

"Loquitur tanquam de re usitatâ : ac probabile est genus potionis fuisse confectum ad mortem accelerandum quum miseri homines satis diu torti essent."

General Kleber fell by the hand of a fanatic at Cairo, June 14th, 1800. The assassin was soon secured, and sentenced by the French to be impaled alive. This horrible sentence was carried out, and borne by the criminal with that fortitude and stoicism which is so often witnessed among the barbarous or semi-barbarous nations of the East or the extreme West.

"Fine tamen laudandus erit ; qui morte decorâ Hoc solum fecit nobile, quod periit."

In the French account of this execution it is stated that, after the assassin had been impaled alive, he asked for drink. A French soldier who was about to give the wretch some water, was prevented by the chief of the Mamelukes, who said, "Gardez-vous en bien ; vous feriez mourir à l'instant ce criminel." The unhappy man remained alive upon the stake for four hours ; at the end of which time, the executioners having departed, a French soldier, moved by a sentiment of humanity, gave a cup of water to the tortured wretch, who immediately expired. Moore had probably some such history as this in his remembrance when, in the "Veiled Prophet of Khorassan," he wrote the following lines :—

"Such treacherous life, as the cool draught supplies
To him upon the stake, who drinks and dies."

Cotterell, in his Recollections of Siberia, states that prisoners who are allowed to satisfy their thirst after suffering the severe punishment of the knout immediately die. J. V.

PASSAGE IN "PERICLES,"

In the following beautiful death oration of Pericles over the corpse of his Queen Thaya, who had just died in child-birth, and whose body the superstition of the sailors insisted on being thrown from the ship in which they were sailing into the ocean, I find an additional proof to the many I have already published, in my Shakspeare's Puck, of our great poet's intimate knowledge and consequent residence in Germany. For it is only explainable from a very popular but peculiar fallacy in natural history of our neighbours of Fotherland, still fully prevalent among them. The following is the passage (Act III. Sc. 1) :—

"Per. A terrible child-bed hast thou had, my dear :
No light, no fire : the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly ; nor have I time
To give thee hallow'd to thy grave, but straight

NOTES AND QUERIES.

8

er eleven Apostles, I cannot conjecture, unless Hagiology had already given these other eleven their final resting places. For this view of the shells connected with the coffins of the dead, I surmise that the epithet simple is here cited, to distinguish between one which would have the orthodox ornament and that in which the queen lay, with only the natural shells of the ocean around it.

WILLIAM BELL, Phil. Dr.
6, Crescent Place, Barton Crescent.

LETTER OF OUR LORD TO ABGAR.

Among the very ancient and interesting documents in the recently-published posthumous work of the late Canon Cureton, the letter said to have been written by King Abgar to our Lord, and that of our Lord to Abgar in reply, are now I believe for the first time printed in the original Syriac. It is well known that the learned Canon entertained a strong conviction of the genuineness of these letters; but the grounds on which he mainly rested this belief, so contrary to the opinion generally maintained at the present day, can unfortunately never be made known. The discussion of this, and of many other highly interesting matters, having been reserved for a preface, which his untimely death prevented him from adding to the volume; which although, with the exception of the last sheet, it was printed under his own intendment, he did not live to publish. In the notes which accompany the English translation of these letters, we find a curious bit of "folk lore," which may be worth recording in "N. & Q." After alluding to the fact (mentioned by Procopius) that the people of Edessa, firmly persuaded of the genuineness of this letter of our Lord, had a copy of it affixed to the gates of their city, which was supposed to act as a sort of phylactery, Dr. Cureton adds:

"Nor did the belief in the protecting power of this letter our Lord prevail in the East only; for we find, at a period also, that it obtained even in our own times by a reference to an on times, now
notes

and devotion regard it as the word of God, — genuine Epistle of Christ."

Dr. Cureton adds, finally: "I have a recollection of having seen the same thing in cottages in Shropshire."

CURIOUS PAMPHLETS. — In lately turning over a pile of old books which have been bequeathed to me, I have met with three which seem to be rare. One is —

"The Secret History of the Most Renowned Queen Elizabeth and the Earl of Essex. By a Person of Quality. Cologne: Printed for Will-with-the-Wisp, at the Sign of the Moon in the Ecliptick. 1695." Pp. 115.

It has an engraved frontispiece of a rather indelicate character; but there is nothing in the contents to correspond with the insinuation conveyed in the engraving. Is it of any value?

Next I have a small pamphlet, pp. 39 —
"White Ladies; or, His Sacred Majesty's most miraculous Preservation after the Battle at Worcester, September 3, 1651. Faithfully imparted for the Satisfaction of the Nation by Eye-witnesses. By Special Command. London: Printed for the Author, and are to be sold at the Royall Exchange, and at Westminster. 1660."

It has an engraved portrait of Charles II., arrayed in crown, ermine mantle, and collar of the Garter. The publisher promises that this "first part only of his Majesty's Preservation" will, "if it find a favourable acceptance," be followed by the "narration of the residue of his dangers." Is the "residue" ever appear?

The third is —
"Honesty the best Policy" (no date). Dedicated by Is. Pinckney, "to His Grace John, Duke of Marlborough, Captain-General of His Majesty's Forces."

It is a ranting defence of the Duke against —
"The high Ingratitude, and most unparallel'd Inhumanity of the monstrous, savage, and brutish wild Boars of our British forest; Who have thrown their most horrid Indignities, and vile Aspersions, on this great Hero (you know)."

It is abundantly larded with texts of Scripture and Latin phrases; and, as well as the other two, may be of interest to some of your readers — to any of whom I shall be glad to lend them for a time.

Union Grove, Clapham, S.

AUTHOR OF A "VIE DE CÉSAR" — "L'indulgence de César" by
O. W.

THOMAS BILBIE. — Can any of the readers of "N. & Q." inform me when a bellfounder of this name flourished in Bristol, and where he resided? In 1746 he set up a foundry at Collumpton. Any other particulars will oblige.
H. S. W.

BIOGRAPHICAL QUERIES. — Can you help me to any information about the following? —

1. Thomas Windsor, son of Sir Thomas Windsor, who married, ante 1630, Anne Carey.

2. Dudley Weld or Wild, of co. Kent, who married about the same time Mary Carey. She subsequently became the wife of Sir Alexander Fraser, Bart. (query, ob. 1681?); and by him had a daughter Carey, who married Charles Mordaunt, the great Earl of Peterborough.

3. Henry Picks, of Crayford, co. Kent, who married Dorothy Carey. (A Sir Edward Picks, of the city of Westminster, Knt., died in 1681, leaving his widow Dorothy sole executrix. He had property in Kent, Sussex, and Hants.)

4. Bevil Skelton, Groom of the Chamber to Charles II., and husband of Simona Carey.

5. Who was Catherine, wife of Sir Francis Rogers, of Cannington, co. Somerset, living (a widow) in 1629?
C. J. R.

MARCHIONESS OF CORNWALLIS. — In the Ninth Report of the Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records, p. 195, Augmentation Office Grants, the Marchioness of Cornwallis is set down as a grantee of monastic property. There is no date, but the reference to the late monastery of Dartford makes it probable that the time was that of Henry VIII. Who was the Marchioness of Cornwallis? Or if a clerical error, will some of the record officers oblige us with its correction?
C.

CINNAMON. — Whence comes the phrase —

"Cur moriatur homo, qui sumit de cinamomo?"*

J. G. T.

THE REV. SAMUEL ELSDALE, sometimes Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford (B.A. 1803, M.A. 1809), published —

"Death, Judgment, Heaven, and Hell: a Poem, with Hymns and other Poems," 8vo, 1812, 3rd edit. 1813.

In 1814 he was elected Master of the Free Grammar School at Moulton, Lincolnshire. He was alive in 1818. When did he die?

S. Y. R.

MEANING OF "FLOWERMEN." — The first entry in the church book of the parish of Plympton-Maurice, in Devon, dated "Anno Dni. 1650," records the election of "a churchwarden for the year following by the old warden." Then follow the names of "sydemen" (two), "flowermen" (four), "seattsetters" (two), and "waywardens" (two). Can any reader of "N. & Q." inform me what was the office of the "flowermen"? I can find nothing about them in any of the glossaries that I have had opportunity of searching. The title (in later entries written "fourmen") continues until 1700. After that date it does not appear, but in 1702 for the first time, and in following years, there are chosen four "rators." Was their office the same as that of the "fourmen"?

[* This phrase is thus noticed in Thomas Cogan's Haven of Health, 4to, 1596, p. 109: — "I have read in an old author of Phisicke this meeter following, —

"Cur moriatur homo, qui sumit de cinamomo?"
See "N. & Q." 1st S. x. 454.—ED.]

It has occurred to me that the title of the latter may have been derived from the word "fowe," to clean ("to fowen out an old diche," Beves of Hamtoun, quoted by Halliwell), and that their duty was to superintend the cleaning of the streets. Scavengers were elected annually in Plympton to a recent time, but I believe that they were elected at the "mayor-choosing," and that their office was municipal, not parochial. It is possible that the name may refer only to the number of the officers — four men.

As regards the "seattsetters," I may mention a note made in 1764, that the sum of two shillings and sixpence had been paid by the ancient custom of the parish by the inhabitants for their sittings. At the beginning of the eighteenth century and afterwards the title is written "seat sitters," the true meaning of the word (set, to let, still used in leases) being probably at that time forgotten.

J. SHELLY.

OLD INNS OF HOLBORN, ALDGATE, AND BISHOPSGATE. — May I ask if any thing has been done to illustrate the old inns in Holborn, Aldgate, and Bishopsgate? They are, I think, some of the most interesting relics left us of Old London; and as they are fast disappearing, I should be glad to know if there are any descriptions and illustrations in the way of engravings, water-colour drawings, or photographs, of the following old inns, viz.: The Old Beil; Black Bull; Blue Boar, afterwards called the George and Blue Boar Inns, in Holborn—this latter inn was pulled down in 1863; The Bull and the Three Nuns, in Aldgate High Street; and the Bull, Green Dragon, Four Swans, and Vine Inns, in Bishopsgate Street. The Bull Inn has just been sold to the City Offices Company, and is now being demolished. The following extract from the Herts Guardian of Saturday, March 11, relative to the demolition of the Bull Inn, Bishopsgate, may at this time be interesting to some of your readers. It states that —

"Under the yew-tree, against the steeple of All Saints' Church, Hertford, is a small ordinary looking gravestone, having the following quaint inscription: 'Here lyeth Black Tom of the Bull Inn, in Bishopsgate, 1696.' The Bull Inn was one of the oldest of the many hostleries for which London was noted. It had a special license granted for the performance of theatricals. Here some of our earliest actors played, and Black Tom was probably one of them. The stage was erected across the Inn yard, at the side of which there is a room still called the Shakers Coffee-room."

If there are no drawings in existence of the above old inns, I think that photographs should be taken of those remaining before they are demolished. I may state that the Vine Inn, Bishopsgate Street, was pulled down last year: and we are, I am informed, shortly to lose the Old Spread Eagle Inn, in Gracechurch Street. W. D.

INSCRIPTION ON A TOMBSTONE.—Will any of your readers say what author the following line, which I found on a gravestone in a Highland churchyard, is taken from, if it is not original? —

"Homo fugit rapide lethumq; invadit inermes."

It is intended for an hexameter, but as it stands there is neither "rhyme nor reason" in it, though if we read "Hors" for "Homo," the scansion and the sense will be made out. STELE.

THOMAS OUGHTON, a proctor in the Court of Arches published —

"Ordo Judiciorum; or, Method of Proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts of England and Ireland, relating to the Canon and Civil Law, with large Notes and Observations." Lond. 2 vols. 4to, 1728, 1738.

Where can any account be found of the author of this learned and valuable work? S. Y. R.

POLITICAL SATIRES: "NEW TORY AND WHIG GUIDE."—In the year 1819 there appeared two exceedingly clever works of a satirical description, the New Tory and the New Whig Guide. The former is perhaps the best of the two, although the latter is exceedingly good. In a leading article in a number of the Standard published last year, it is asserted that the admirable squib denominated "The Trial of Henry Brougham for Mutiny," in which the future chancellor is charged with calling the Right Honourable George Ponsonby, the leader of the opposition, "an old woman," was written by Lord Palmerston. Is this the case? I know from positive testimony that the English Melodies were written by the late Sir Alexander Boswell, Bart.

From an entry in the sixth volume of Moore's Journal, we learn, p. 178, that Paul Methuen, Esq., afterwards Lord Methuen, was the "author of almost all those [in the Tory Guide] about the Rat Club, which are certainly some of the best." It would be very desirable to ascertain the respective authors of the other articles in these very amusing volumes, which merit a place in the library of those who collect facetiæ. J. M.

WESTON, EARL OF PORTLAND.—Where can I find any detailed account of the descendant of Richard Weston, first Earl of Portland, and particularly of Thomas, the fourth and last Earl,

[* In the Catalogue of the British Museum it is stated that the articles in the New Whig Guide were written by R. J. Temple, Viscount Palmerston, and others.—ED.]

who died A.D. 1688; whereupon, as Banks states in his Extinct and Dormant Peerages, the title became extinct for want of heirs male of the first Earl surviving? HISTORICUS MINOR.

"PRIMITIVE HISTORY FROM THE CREATION TO CADMUS."—Some years ago I purchased at an obscure book-stall a portion of this work in sheets, comprising the first 200 pages, the margins of which are literally covered with additions and corrections in the hand of the writer, evidently with a view to its future republication. Subsequent to this I obtained the remainder of the work also in sheets but without any writing on it, and had the whole carefully bound so as to preserve the notes. It was published at Chichester in 1780, and dedicated by the writer, "W. Williams, Esq., formerly of St. John's College, Cambridge," to the Prince of Wales; but this dedication has been crossed over, and on the blank side of the leaf another appears in MS. addressed, "To the Members of the University of Cambridge in General; To the Members of St. John's College in Particular." As the work contains an immense amount of research and much recondite learning, I would be glad to obtain some information respecting the writer, for whose name I have searched several biographical dictionaries in vain. T. C. SMITH.

QUOTATION WANTED.—Christopher Love being brought to trial on a charge of High Treason in 1651, made a long defence, in the course of which he said —

"It is a maxim in the Law (I have read it in Divinity-Books), Amplandi sunt fautores, et in parvis benignior interpretatio facienda."—See State Trials, folio, 1742, vol. ii. p. 138.

Where is the foregoing maxim to be found?

MELETES.

READING POINTER.—Some years ago a person was convicted of stealing a reading-pointer, an instrument in the form of a hand and finger extended, used by the readers of the Hebrew Scriptures. Can any reader of "N. & Q." give a reference to the trial? E.

SHELVES IN WILTSHIRE.—Mr. Cobbett, in his Rural Rides through the down counties, refers to "the thousands and thousands of acres of ploughed lands in shelves, in Wilts alone." "The side of a steep hill," he tells his readers, "is made into the shape of stairs; only the rising parts more sloping than those of a stairs, and deeper in proportion" (p. 437). On these shelves Mr. Cobbett founds his hypothesis of population, which he contends was as great in the early days of England as in the present; and he adds:

"The fact is, I dare say, that the country has never varied much in the gross amount of its population; but formerly the people were evenly spread over the country, instead of being, as the greater part of them now are, collected together in great masses; where, for the greater part, the idlers live on the labour of the industrious."

I will not trouble you with a refutation of Mr. Cobbett's hypothesis of population in England; but shall, on the present occasion, confine myself to an inquiry of the origin of the shelves in Wiltshire. I have not access to the local histories of that country, save The Beauties of England and Wales. The author does not mention the shelves; nor, so far as I remember, are they referred to in any article in the Quarterly, or any other reviews, on the history of counties in which downs prevail. May I ask the favour of any of your readers conversant in the history of the down counties to give me, through the medium of your journal, the origin of these shelves, and any information which he may think will be useful to be made known of them?

I cannot conclude without expressing my desire to see a new edition of Cobbett's Rural Rides published; but stripped of all the abusive epithets of men, and of political and religious questions, which disfigure the Rides. I am persuaded it would become a very popular book in this day.

FRA. MEWBURN.

Larchfield, Darlington.

SUPERSEDEAS. — Will any of your readers oblige me by explaining this word? A reviewer in The Athenæum, Feb. 18, p. 226, writes:—

"We suspect that college terms are sometimes irrecoverably lost. It appears in Newton's private account-book, that while at Cambridge he bought, for a few shillings, a supersedeas. But all our inquiries, both in and out of Trinity College, have failed to discover what this was."

F. PHILLOTT.

Queries with Answers.

WHEN WAS CANNON FIRST MADE? — I have cut the following from the Miscellaneous paragraph column of a newspaper, but, as is too often the case, it gives no date, nor does it quote the authority on which the statement is made. It originates an inquiry of some importance—What is the actual date of the first cannon made, and which was the first battle in which they were employed?—

"A small brass cannon has been found at the bottom of a deep well of the Castle de Cluey, in France, with the date 1258 upon it. The date of the invention of cannon has historically been assigned to the year 1324, 66 years later."

T. B.

[Artillery was in use much earlier among the Eastern than the Western nations. Chased, the Hindú bard, says, "Oh! Chief of Gajné, buckle on your armour, and prepare your fire-machines," and he adds (stanza 257), that the culivers and cannons made a loud report when they were fired off. As this took place about A.D. 1200, during the Ghorian dynasty, the fact of cannon balls having been propelled by means of gunpowder in India, at that early period, appears to be established. With the exception of certain weapons, called by John Barbour, Archdeacon of Aberdeen, "crakys of war," which Edward III. had during his campaign against the Scots in 1327, the use of artillery in Europe appears to have been confined to Spain till about the year 1339, when ten cannons were prepared for the siege of Cambray by the noble Chevalier Cardaillac. It has been stated that Edward III. owed his great victory at Cressy in 1346 to the effect produced by some pieces of artillery placed in front of the army. This important circumstance appears to rest chiefly on the authority of Villani (see "N. & Q." 1st S. x. 584). For some interesting historical notices of the early use of cannon, consult Col. Chesney's Observations on the Past and Present State of Fire-Arms, 8vo, 1852.]

"IVANHOE." — This novel has been dramatised in England and France. Can any one tell me where I shall find the English adaptation? Also, is there any trace of Sir Walter Scott ever having passed any time in or near Rotherham, Wentworth, Doncaster, or other spot in or near the Valley of the Don, in which the action of Ivanhoe principally takes place?

T. S. B. E.

[The English adaptation is entitled "Ivanhoe; or the Knight Templar"; adapted from the novel of that name. First performed on March 2, 1820, at Covent Garden. The music selected by Dr. Kitchener: the Stage management and the whole piece produced under the direction of Mr. Farley. Lond. 8vo, 1820." A copy is in the British Museum. Ivanhoe was dramatised by Mr. Daniel Terry, the actor, to whom Sir Walter Scott wrote from Abbotsford on Nov. 10, 1819: "I go to town on Monday, and will forward under Mr. Freeling's cover as much of Ivanhoe as is finished in print. It is completed, but in the hands of a very slow transcriber. When I can collect it, I will send you the manuscript, which you will please to keep secret from every eye. I think this will give a start, if it be worth taking, of about a month, for the work will be out on the 20th of December. It is certainly possible to adapt it to the stage; but the expense of scenery and decorations would be great, this being a tale of chivalry, not of character."

Of the French adaptation of Ivanhoe, Sir Walter subsequently remarked, "It is an opera, and of course the story sadly mangled, and the dialogue, in great part, nonsense."

Scott certainly paid a short visit to Sheffield, and the district referred to in September, 1815, but the dates show it must have been a hurried one. It is, however, probable that he had been there previously, although there is no positive record of the fact.]

MATTHEW HOPKINS, THE WITCH-FINDER. —

"Who after proved himself a witch," &c.

"These verses (says Dr. Hutchinson, Historical Essay, p. 65) relates to that which I have often heard, that Hopkins went on searching and swimming the poor creatures till some gentlemen, out of indignation at the barbarity, took him and tied his own thumbs and toes, as he used to tie others; and when he was put into the water, he himself swam as they did. This cleared the country of him, and it was a deal of pity that they did not think of the experiment sooner." — Hudibras, Grey's edition, note to part II. c. iii. v. 159.

How did it clear the country? Did Hopkins run away, or was he tried and executed? Is any more known about him? J. M. K.

Malvern.

[In the account of Matthew Hopkins printed in the Anthologia Hibernica, i. 427, it is stated, that "the experiment of swimming was at length tried upon Hopkins himself, in his own way, and he was upon the event condemned, and, as it seems, executed as a wizard." The writer, however, gives no authority for his conjecture. Mr. G. BLESCOWE in our 1st S. x. 285, discovered the following entry in the register of the parish of Mistley-cum-Manningtree in Essex: "Matthew Hopkins, son of Mr. James Hopkins, Minister of Wenham, was buried at Mistley, August 12, 1647." This is supposed to refer to the noted witch-finder general of the associated counties. It is not known that any writer has made any mention of Hopkins after 1647. In whose library is the manuscript account of this notorious impostor formerly in the possession of the late Mr. W. S. Fitch of Ipswich?]

QUOTATIONS.—The following lines are taken from the mottoes of Sir Walter Scott's works. Who is the author, and what is the name of the book?—

"Away! our journey lies through dell and dingle,
Where the blithe fawn trips by its timid mother;
Where the broad oak, with intercepting boughs,
Chequers the sunbeam in the greensward alley.
Up and away! for lovely paths are these
To tread, when the glad sun is on his throne,
Less pleasant and less safe, when Cynthia's lamp
With doubtful glimmer lights the dreary forest."

Underneath is written "Ettrick Forest." Having but a treacherous memory, though knowing the following lines full well, yet I cannot remember the name of the poet:—

"The warbling woodland, the resounding shore,
The pomp of groves—the garniture of fields,
And all the dread magnificence of Heaven."

I have looked over Milton, Pope, Cowper, and Thomson in vain, or perchance I may have overlooked those lines in my hurry to find them.

DROGO DE M.

[The lines from Scott are prefixed to the nineteenth chapter of Isabel. They were written by Sir Walter himself: see Scott's Poetical Works, edited by Lockhart, edit. 1648, p. 677. The words "Ettrick Forest" are only one of Sir Walter's mystifications. "Whenever memory failed to suggest an appropriate epigraph," says Lockhart, "Scott had recourse to the inexhaustible mines of 'Old Play' or 'Old Ballad,' to which we owe some of the most exquisite verses that ever flowed from his pen."

The second quotation is from Beattie's Minstrel, book i. stanza 9.]

"AS DRUNK AS DAVY'S SOW!"—What is the origin and meaning of this phrase? Is it only a corruption the idea of the sow returning "to her wallowing in the mire?" R. C. L.

[Capt. Francis Grose, in his Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue, informs us that this saying took its rise from the following circumstance:—"One David Lloyd, a Welshman, who kept an ale-house at Hereford, had a living sow with six legs, which was greatly resorted to by the curious; he had also a wife much addicted to drunkenness, for which he used sometimes to give her due correction. One day, David's wife having taken a cup too much, and being fearful of the consequences, turned out the sow, and lay down to sleep herself sober in the sty. A company coming in to see the sow, David ushered them to the sty, exclaiming 'There is a sow for you! did any of you ever see such another?' all the while supposing the sow had really been there. One of the company, seeing the state the woman was in, replied, 'It was the drunkenest sow he had ever beheld.' Whence the woman was ever after called David's sow."]

PAGAN CARICATURE.—I am quite certain that I have met somewhere with the information that at an early period of the Christian era a famous caricature of our Lord represented him as a man with an ass's ears, and one foot hooved, holding in his hand a book inscribed "Deus Christianorum, ἀνοχίλον." My impression is that the note I have of this was taken from some cyclopædia; but I have recently searched right and left in vain for its corroboration. Can you or some correspondent tell me where the assertion is to be found, and whether it is to be relied on? R. C. L.

[The Pagan caricature referred to by our correspondent is doubtless that discovered at Rome in the Palace of the Cæsars in Dec. 1856, and noticed by Garrucci in his Graffiti de Pompei. It is described very fully in the Edinburgh Review, vol. cx. pp. 436-7, and it is this article, we presume, which our correspondent has seen. The caricature is engraved in Mr. Wright's lately published History of Caricature and Grotesque in Literature and Art, p. 39, where also some remarks upon the subject will be found.]

MEN OF GENIUS IN BERNERS STREET.—Can you tell me who De Quincey alludes to in his Essay on Murder as the men of genius in Berners Street?—

"To begin with S. T. C. One night many years ago I was drinking tea with him in Berners Street (which, by-the-way, for a short street, has been uncommonly fruitful in men of genius.)"

G. B.

[Cunningham, in his Handbook of London, tells us this street was chiefly inhabited by artists, and points out the houses respectively occupied by Sir W. Chambers, Fuseli, Opie, and Bone the enameller.]

MARY DE VALENCE, COUNTESS OF PEMBROKE.—Can you tell me where I can find any historical account of Mary de Valence, Countess of Pembroke, daughter of Guy de Chatillon, Count de St. Paul in France? She married Audamarie de Valence, second Earl of Pembroke, who was slain at a tournament on the day of his nuptials. She was the foundress of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge.

DROGO DE M.

[Some biographical particulars of Mary de St. Paul, Countess of Pembroke, who, says Fuller, was "maid, wife, and widow, all in a day," will be found in Dyer's History of the University and Colleges of Cambridge, ii. 94, ed. 1814; Carter's History of the University of Cambridge, p. 62, 8vo, ed. 1758; and A History of the University of Cambridge (Ackermann), vol. i. p. 51, ed. 1815.]

Replies.

DANIEL DEFOE, THE NEWS WRITER.

(3rd S. vi. 527; vii. 58.)

In a former article I epitomised the "history" contained in the recently-discovered "Letters of Daniel Defoe," and made some remarks on the criticism of the London Reviewer. I reserved for consideration what Defoe did under his engagement, therein mentioned, with the government;—and, the morality, or otherwise, of his conduct.

To form an accurate judgment as to the actions and conduct of men, we must place ourselves, as far as possible, in the midst of the circumstances by which they were surrounded. In 1718, when the Letters in question were written, all authors, of any considerable reputation and standing, had themselves been subjected to a rigid official censorship of the press. It cannot be doubted that the abolition of such censorship tended greatly to consolidate the principles of the revolution, and to establish the freedom we now enjoy; but another century required to elapse before Governors would be able to bear free public discussion of their policy. The Lord Treasurer for the time being was the head of the Government, and exercised some general superior authority; but there was then no Cabinet, as we now know it. The administration often consisted of discordant members, acting in their respective departments as judgment or caprice might dictate. The struggle of the preceding reign, for and against High Church principles, had scarcely ceased; and recently had given place to a fiercer conflict between the adherents of the newly acceded House of Hanover, and the friends and followers of the Pretender. The gaols still contained numerous Jacobite rebels; and more were at large, who did not always conceal their disaffection to the existing Government.

We can scarcely wonder that State authorities of the Home Department should, in such circumstances, evince great jealousy and over-sensitiveness as to public criticism; or should, under feelings of official isolation and insecurity, use what they considered effectual means to ward off, or punish, all attacks on their administration. Newspapers and other periodical publications were therefore all examined, and frequently, for offensive comments or opinions (that would not, in our day, excite more than a good-natured smile on the face of a minister), "messengers" were dispatched to search and ransack the premises of the printer and publisher; and to take into custody, not only him, but all persons found there. The zeal of the myrmidons was sometimes excessive to a ludicrous extent: not only compositors and pressmen, with their copy and sheets, but the "devil" and the old housekeeper, and any unfortunate lodger who happened to be under the same roof,—all were seized, and carried before the proper members of the administration. After examination, the innocent were released, the mere instruments discharged with suitable admonition, and the actual delinquent dealt with according to the degree of his political turpitude. For a minor offence, detention for a time in the private dwelling-house of the messenger sufficed, with a subsequent release upon recognizances, which the culprit was compelled from time to time to renew. Graver faults ensured committal and trial, with the punishment of pillories, whipping, fines, and imprisonment. For printing a pamphlet stating that James was the rightful king, a young man named Matthews was, in the following year, (1719) sentenced to be hanged, drawn, and quartered.

This will show that the conduct of a public journal was attended with much and continual danger to its proprietor; especially if it ostensibly took the side opposed to the Government.

Defoe knew, by sad experience, what it was for "an unhappy author" to suffer the displeasure of Government; and, on entering into the engagement we have now to consider, urged that the setting up a Weekly Paper to answer scandalous attacks on the Government, would be inadequate either to prevent such attacks, or, to avert the punishment of the offenders. He therefore too readily agreed to lay that aside, and accept the proposal of Lord Townshend, that he might be more serviceable by writing as if "under the displeasure of the Government, and separated from the Whigs." His great talent as a writer made him an acquisition to any journal, and his connection with its management would enable him, on the one hand, to serve the Government, by suppressing the treasonable or seditious papers of contributors, and on the other, to save the owner of the paper from fines, imprisonment, and, the common result, absolute ruin.

The details of the arrangement were left to the direction of a subordinate officer, Mr. Buckley. The journals in which Defoe was to write were "to seem to be on the same side as before, to rally the Flying Post, the Whig writers, and even the word 'Whig,' &c., and to admit foolish and trifling things in favour of the Tories."

The "recently discovered Letters" show that he insisted on these conditions with the owner of one of the papers in which he was to write. When Mr. Mist did not faithfully adhere to the compact, Defoe threatened not to "serve him any farther, or be concerned any more."

That I might be qualified to state what Defoe did under this engagement with the Government, and, to form a judgment on the morality or otherwise of his conduct, it became necessary to examine the publications referred to in his Letters—namely, Mercurius Politicus, Dormer's News-Letter, and Mist's Journal. I intended at first only to make such an investigation as would enable the readers of "N. & Q." to say, Guilty, or, Not Guilty, on the indictment against Defoe in the London Review. My manuscript of his hitherto unknown writings has, however, now grown to the capacity of an ordinary octavo volume; and I must, therefore, after a few brief illustrations of what he did, incur the risk of pronouncing a somewhat dogmatic judgment on his moral and political conduct: promising, that if all be well, the whole shall be laid before the public for final decision.

I. Mr. Buckley had directed—"Seeming to be on the same side as before."

With respect to the condemned rebels, especially in Scotland, he says, in Mercurius Politicus May, 1716:—

"It has been a mightily disputed case amongst the Parties here, whether JUSTICE, so it is call'd as respects the Publick; or REVENGE, so it is call'd as respects Parties, should be extended against the Rebels in general; or whether MERCY should interpose to the saving them from the Hand of the Executioner?"

"It is not the business of these Collections to enter into the debate, neither does it consist with the Impartiality propos'd in the Introduction, and to which we resolve steadily to adhere," &c.

In the same number, however, he finds nearly eight pages octavo, to print in full an able memorial by Sir David Dalrymple, Lord Advocate of Scotland, pleading for mercy towards the Scotch rebels. In Mist's Journal, Oct. 4, 1718, he says:—

"Our Scout employed in the districts of Long Acre, Covent Garden, and Drury Hundreds, writes us an account that a Parrot in Henrietta Street, having spoken very Seditious and Scandalous Words, a neighbouring Justice of De Peace had consulted several of his Brethren, in what manner they should proceed against the Parrot, or his Master."

In the same Number is the following characteristic anecdote:—

"They write from Edinburgh, that by a Commission of Obedience and Territorial at Perth, several Bills of Indictment were drawn up, and presented to the Grand Jury there, against several that were supposed to have been in the late Rebellion, and came home from France, and the Bills were all returned Ignoramus; upon which the Prisoners were discharged, and the Cryer, thereat standing up, proclaim'd it in Court; at the end of which, as usual, he spoke, with a loud Voice,—God save the King and the Judges. At which a Gentleman standing by added, and this Jury: The Cryer hearing it, and thinking it was a Direction to him, he likewise bawl'd out, AND THIS JURY."

II. The papers under Defoe's management were to "rally the Flying Post, the Whig writers," &c. In Mist's Journal, July 19, 1718, is a communication as to the general incredulity of some persons, and especially of a Whig whom he had recently met. He says:—

"I quoted the Flying Post, and ask'd him if he believ'd that? He told me, with a sneer, I had clench'd it now, by asking him if he believ'd a Paper that no body believ'd."

In the Journal of April 18, 1719, was inserted the following paragraph of false news:—

"On Monday last died Mr. Cibber, an Actor at the Theatre in Drury Lane; he was notorious for his late comedy called the Nonjuror, which was calculated to triumph over the misfortunes of those unhappy Gentlemen, who lately fell under the Displeasure of the Government for their attempt in favour of the Chevalier, and by which he lost himself much of the Reputation he acquired by his former Performances."

In the Journal of May 2, Defoe corrects the error as follows:—

"It seems, by an Advertisement published last Thursday se'nnight, that Mr. Flying Post is very angry that Mr. Cibber, who was reported to be dead, is alive; and appears to Act upon the Stage again, and a great Triumph he makes over Mr. Mist for having been wrong inform'd, to which Mr. Mist answers—

"1. As to Mr. C——, he says, as the famous Tatler said of old Partridge, the Almanack maker, that if he was not dead, he should ha' been dead, for any good he was like to do while he was alive.

"2. If Mr. Mist has gained Immortal Honour by believing a Lie of another Man's making, how many Immortalities of Praise are due to Mr. Ridpath, that has made so many for other People to believe?"

"All this is upon a Supposition that Mr. C—— is alive; he does not indeed know but he may be so, and should have been inclin'd to ha' believ'd it, had'n't it been publish'd in the Flying Post."

On the same day that he wrote the third of the letters to Mr. De la Faye, "recently discovered" in the Record Office, namely, May 10, 1718, he "rallied the Whigs," in Mist's Journal, thus:—

"One Mr. Oliver Testy has sent us a very good-natured peevish Letter, wherein he threatens Mr. Mist to write a Satyr on him shall make him go hang himself; and all this for taxing the Whigs with being the Chief Favourites of Curlicism, or Bawdy Books; but, by the way, does not deny the Thing to be true, so we need say no more of that."

III. As to his manner of dealing with the High Church and Jacobites, and the suppression of sedition and treason.

The Journal of the date just quoted contains an instance:—

"We heartily fall in with the opinion of the Reverend Mr. Jonathan Cassock relating to the Government of the Church; but, it being too tender a point for us to meddle with, we desire to be excus'd."

This must have been merely a questionable communication. The following reply, in Mist's Journal of March 20, 1718, probably relates to the subject of his Letter to Mr. De la Faye, dated April 12, 1718:—

"Among other Letters, we have lately received two from Mr. Paul Fogg, we should say, two Treasonable Papers; we hope, if he expects we should publish them, he will first come and set his Name to them, which, if he thinks fit to do, in the cause of Murder and Assassination of Kings, he may hear farther; but we cannot but wonder to what purpose any Man should send Letters to be put into a Publick Paper, when he must needs think, whoever should Print them could expect nothing but to be try'd for High Treason, and sent to the Gallows. However, we are bound to thank our Cozen Fogg for his good will, and take our leave of him in the terms of an Old Parliament Satyr, which may serve to answer him and those of our loving Friends who desire we should hang for them, viz. —

'Mist, at this time, having no need,
Thanks you as much as if he did.'

IV. His impartiality in writing the foreign and other news.

In Mist's Journal of July 5, 1718, after deprecating the exaggerations, untruthfulness, and contradictions of the Foreign Affairs in other newspapers, he says:—

"In this Madness we shall endeavour, as we have hitherto always done, to relate the events of this approaching War, which we believe will be very obstinate and bloody, with the utmost Exactness, and with a perfect Impartiality. We are utterly ignorant of the Necessity there is to lessen Things on one Side, or double them on the other, to please one side or other. We do not see that it is of such a mighty consequence to us which Popish Prince prevails over the other, that we should be afraid to give a full and true Account of any Action, let it fall how it will. The giving true Intelligence is the business before us, and we resolve to favour neither one side nor the other."

The above are fair examples, from the mass of manuscript now in my possession, of what Defoe did under his engagements with the Whig Government and with the Tory newspapers, respectively mentioned in his Letters "recently discovered." In other papers, Whig and Tory, of the same period, I have observed much pandering to the prurient passions of readers; but not in any of the papers with which Defoe was connected. The continual tendency of them was to promote religion and virtue. With respect to politics, he constantly aimed at impartiality; and I have not found that he actually wrote, in any Tory journal, anything contrary to the liberal principles he had all his life professed. He was undoubtedly restrained by his position from writing in such journals directly in favour of his own political views; but it is right to add, I have discovered that those principles were freely expressed and advocated in another journal, established in September, 1718, under the management of Defoe, and published thrice a week; and also, in a daily paper established the following year.

In connection with Tory journals Defoe had to meet continually persons very uncongenial to him, and to suppress, or remodel, Tory advices, essays, and letters, often of most objectionable character. He had further to contend against the prejudice, bigotry, and quasi loyalty of his printers and publishers; and to bear, in silence, the most virulent personal odium from two of the contemporary Whig journals. His motives and his conduct in so trying circumstances appear to have been upright, and the consciousness of this sustained him; but he had certainly placed himself in an irksome and a questionable position, and I cannot doubt he felt it most bitterly, when he wrote the words—"Thus I bow in the house of Rimmon."

The proper name of Mist's paper was, The Weekly Journal, or Saturday's Post; and as far as it was concerned I am able to add, in further proof of Defoe's strict integrity—that he firmly adhered to his determination of suppressing all offensive articles, or ceasing to be connected with the journal. In October, 1718, when a letter to which he objected was inserted, he added a long note replying, and disavowing its principles in the name of Mr. Mist, and at once severed himself entirely from the management of the paper.

Mr. Mist discovered his mistake by finding himself and his servants shortly in the custody of government officials; and after his liberation, on security given for future good behaviour, he very soon further discovered, by a rapidly declining circulation, that the good genius of his journal had departed. Self-interest compelled him to seek, and put himself again into the hands of, Defoe, who resumed its management at the end of January, 1719, on his own absolute terms; and it so continued for several years, exhibiting nothing of Toryism in its character beyond the mere pretension of adherence to its past reputation.

My judgment, after more than two months' careful investigation is, that in his connection with the Government, and the several Tory journals mentioned in his "recently discovered Letters," Daniel Defoe unwisely consented to place himself in a very questionable position; but that, in such position, he did nothing to disparage, positively, his moral character as a man, a patriot, and a Christian.

W. LEE.

LOPE DE VEGA.

(3rd S. vii. 114, 167.)

Sismondi says of Lope:—

"A temps perdu il ait encore écrit vingt-un volumes en 4to de poésies, parmi lesquelles cinque poèmes épiques. Ces derniers ouvrages ne méritent point une analyse; il suffira de les indiquer. Il y a une Jerusalem Conquistada,

The Whigg's Supplication, by Sam. Colvill, a neat 24mo, published by them in that year. At the end of this is a list of "Books lately printed by and for them," in which is one in the same line of literature, The History of Sir Eger, Sir Grahame, and Sir Gray Steel, a copy of which I should like to hear of. Your correspondent is no doubt right about the improbability of two Davie Lindseys having issued from the Belfast press in 1714. The copy in the British Museum corresponds exactly with the one he describes. J. O.

S. DECHARMES (3rd S. vii. 133.)—I do not find the date of Simon Decharmes' arrival in England, but in 1696 a Simon Decharmes was married at the Chapel of Le Quarré to Elene Dieu. In 1725 a Judith Decharmes was married at the French Chapel in Hungerford Market to Jean La Sage. The name is very uncommon, and must not be confused with the numerous Deschamps. Should G. G. desire Simon's parentage or place of business he had better look at the Register of Le Quarré, at Somerset House. JOHN S. BURN.

The Grove, Henley.

MUNGO AS A CHRISTIAN NAME (3rd S. vii. 135.) I think that some of the Glasgow readers of "N. & Q." must be rather surprised at seeing this name mentioned as if especially belonging to the Highlands. The name Mungo is formed from the epithet by which St. Kentigern, the patron saint of Glasgow and founder of that bishopric, is often known. This Kentigern is, according to the British or Welsh spelling of his name, Cyndeyrn; he was the son of Owain the son of Urien Rheged. The designation which he received because of his amiable disposition was Mwyngu (gently dear), which has been converted into Mungo.

"When he grew up he founded the bishopric of Glasgow, or as the Welsh writers term the place, Penryn Rhionydd; but after a time the dissensions of his countrymen forced him to retire to Wales, where he was kindly received by St. David. While he remained in Wales he founded another bishopric at Llanelwy (St. Asaph) in Flintshire, about A.D. 550."—Professor Rees's Welsh Saints, 261-2.

Cyndeyrn was afterwards recalled to Glasgow, which see he resumed after resigning Llanelwy to one of his companions called Asaph, whose name remains as the permanent English (and Latin) designation of the see, which the Welsh still know as Llanelwy. In the sixth century the language of the south of Scotland was certainly Cymric, a dialect cognate with the Welsh, if not identical. Thus there can be no surprise that Cyndeyrn Mwyngu should be equally at home as to language in Wales as in his own native Scotland. Of the Welsh authors of the sixth century Aneurin and Merddin Wyllt belonged to what is now Scotland, and Llywarch Hên was a Cumbrian.

It is in connection with the north that Cyndeyrn is mentioned in the Triads. May I venture to correct an expression used by the Editor of "N. & Q." (p. 136) who calls the Triads "metrical"?—they are plain prose, and many embody historical facts of great value. Besides the Triads, in the remains of early Cymric literature, there are several collections of metrical triplets, but these things are wholly distinct from each other.

LÆLIUS.

LANCASHIRE: OLD TIMBER HALLS (3rd S. vii. 76, 144.)—Your correspondent, H. FISHWICK, has incorrectly stated the succession to the property of Clayton Hall. It passed to Mordecai Greene in right of his wife, Miss Chetham, and was inherited by their only child James Greene, at whose death the lands at Clayton Hall and elsewhere were divided amongst his daughters; and Clayton Hall fell to the lot of Arabella (the second daughter), wife of Peter Richard Hoare, of Kelsey Park, Kent, in whose possession it still remains.

GEO. E. FREERE.

Roydon Hall, Diss.

LORD WILLOUGHBY (3rd S. vii. 96.)—Collins, in speaking of Robert Bertie, who, in 1715, was created Duke of Ancaster, expresses himself as follows:—

"His Grace married to his first wife, July 30th, 1678, Mary, daughter to Sir Richard Wynn, of Gwedder, in the county of Caernarvon, Bart., who dying September 20th, 1689, left issue two sons and two daughters."—Peerage (1812), vol. ii. p. 21.

This Robert, afterwards Duke of Ancaster, was the eldest son of Robert Bertie, third Earl of Lindsey, and at the time of his marriage with the daughter of Sir Richard Wynn, he bore his father's second title, that of Lord Willoughby of Eresby.

The foregoing statement will, I think, enable SIR THOMAS WINNINGTON to extricate himself from the manifold inaccuracies with which he has been perplexed.

I avail myself of the opportunity of drawing the attention of your readers to a singular circumstance in the descent of the title of Lord Willoughby of Parham. Charles, the second baron, who died in 1603, had six sons. The title descended in the line of the eldest son till the death of Charles, the tenth baron, in 1679. The line of the eldest son of the second baron having then become extinct, Thomas Willoughby, who traced his descent from the fifth son, was allowed the barony on the supposition—which turned out to be erroneous—that the issue male of all the elder brothers was extinct. The title, however, descended in the line of the fifth son, till that line became extinct on the death of Hugh, fifteenth baron, in 1765.

On his death, Henry Willoughby, who traced his descent from the third son of the second baron, claimed the dignity, which was ultimately adjudged to him, and he took his seat in the House of Peers, April 25, 1767.

It thus appears that the issue of the third son had been kept out of their right for nearly a century. What was there to prevent their making their claim during that time?

STAFFORD CAREY.

ARUNDEL OF LANHERNE (3rd S. vi. 248, 523; vii. 167.)—TRETANE, in his note last referred to, mentions Humphry Arundell, the leader of the Cornish Insurgents of 1549, as the brother of Sir John Arundel of Lanherne, and the son of Sir Thomas, by Catherine daughter of Sir John Dinham. This is unquestionably a mistake. He was the son of Roger Arundell, of Helland, near Bodmin, by Johanna, daughter and heiress of Humphry Culwoodleigh of East Stodleigh, and of Culwoodleigh in Devon, son and heir of Thomas C. by the daughter and heir of Otho Colyn of Helland. Humphry Culwoodleigh died 15th Nov. 12 Hen. VIII., when Johanna, the wife of Roger Arundell, was declared to be his heir (her brother, William C. having died previously). (Inq. post mortem, 12 & 13 Henry VIII.) Roger Arundell died 12 June, 28 H. VIII., when Humphry Arundell was declared to be his heir, and to be of the full age of twenty-three years and more. (Inq. p. m. 27 & 28 H. VIII.) Johanna, widow of Roger Arundell, died Sept. 29 H. VIII., when her son Humphry Arundell was declared to be her heir, and to be of the age of twenty-four years and more. (Inq. p. m. 30 H. VIII.) The Manor of Culwoodleigh, in Devon and Hellands, and other manors and estates in Cornwall held by Humphry Arundell were, of course, forfeited upon his attainer, and were granted to Sir Gawen Carew for his zeal in suppressing the rebellion. (Pat. Rolls, 4 Edw. VI. p. 6.) Hals says that Humphry Arundell was of the Lanherne family. I should be very glad if TRETANE can connect Roger A., Humphry's father, with that family; and I shall be pleased to hear from him privately, if he will do me the favour to write direct.

JOHN MACLEAN.

Hammersmith.

CONFIRMATIONS OF ARMS (3rd S. vii. 65.)—I must apologise to MIDDLE TEMPLAR for not complying sooner with his request. In the first case, the party wants his arms confirmed and his crest altered. Dalton, Norroy, recites the arms and crest hitherto used, and changes the crest. In the second case, the applicant wants his arms confirmed and a crest granted, he not having one. Dalton confirms the arms and grants a crest without any make believe that he is only confirming that appendage. Both documents are dated 1580, and both families are registered as bearing arms in the Visitation of 1533.

Heralds required positive proof, when this could be given. If the first grant had been lost, a confirmation would be the next best thing. And as the original grant, if existing, would be with the head of the family, confirmations would be of great importance to the younger branches, as saving them from the trouble of going over all their proofs again whenever the Herald went his rounds. Hence the number of these documents.

P. P.

DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM (3rd S. vii. 94.)—In the Gallery at Hampton Court Palace, your correspondent X. will find two portraits of the Duke of Buckingham, described by the late Mrs. Jameson in her Guide to the Public Galleries, 1845, as No. 197:—

"The family of George Villiers, 1st Duke of Buckingham, by Honthorst. The Duke is seated; on his right is his Dutchesse (Lady Katherine Manners), and another lady in a rich dress (probably his sister Lady Denbigh), on the left his mother (Mary Beaumont, widow of Sir Geo. Villiers, created 1618 Countess of Buckingham for life). Two men in black are standing by. There are three children, the youngest of whom is his son, afterwards the witty Duke of Buckingham, the favorite of Charles II., who was born 1627, consequently this picture must have been painted just before the Duke was assassinated by Felton, 1628.

"It was in King James's Collection, and is engraved in Jesse's Memoirs of the Stuarts."

The other picture is described as "No. 652 by C. Jansen; Villiers, 1st Duke of Buckingham, half-length in the robes of the Garter."

ALBERT BUTTERY.

TITHE BARNES (3rd S. vii. 137, 163.)—

"The Devil's Barns in Hell are filled as full of the damned souls of those that have defrauded God's ministers of their maintenance as the Tythe-Robber's Barns, Houses, and Purses have bin and are filled with unjust gain."—Richard Culmer, in his Laudes Tythe-Robbers Discovered: who make Tythe-Renue a mock Tythe-maintenance. London, 1655, 4to (pp. 39, and one leaf.)

Culmer appears to have been a hot-headed and eccentric man, and he wore blue in opposition to black, and was hence dubbed "Blue Dick of Thanet," and MR. STUART will find the parson's side of the case urged in the above tract with some vigour and more asperity. The "generation and spawn of unconscionable men!" as he terms the farmers, had no doubt something to say on the other side, but for this your correspondent must look elsewhere.

A. CHALLSTEIN.

1, Verulam Buildings.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND AND IRELAND (3rd S. vii. 160.)—O. T. D. asks whether the reformed Churches were so designated under Henry VIII.? In Part III. of the valuable State Papers of that reign, p. 564, he will find "The Church of Inglande and Ierlande" treated as the official designation of that church, of which the King was "Supreme Hedde in yerthe immediate under Godd."

S. P. V.

This matter has been ventilated with the most satisfactory results. It only remains to embrace

MR. POWER's offer of further references, that shall show how far back the identity of the English and Irish Churches has been assumed.

A reference to the Bullarium Magnum, or kindred publications inaccessible here, might possibly prove that in the time of Henry II., or at any period intervening between his date and that of the Reformation, the Popes recognised the Church of the Pale, at least, as one with the Roman Catholic established Church of England.

O. T. D.

CLASSICAL WASHERWOMAN (3rd S. vii. 34.)—My son reminds me that this is a translation of the chorus beginning Ὁκεανὸς τις ὕδαρ in the Hippolytus of Euripides, line 121.

E. H. A.

COLOURS IN HERALDRY (3rd S. vii. 191, &c.)—A Nuremberg Wappenbuch (1605) in my possession marks the sable only, and that with lines in any direction; in fact shades the sable, giving no other distinction between the metals or tinctures. When the field is sable the lines are always horizontal, and in one or two cases crossed with a few perpendicular scratches; when an ordinary is sable it is marked by lines which vary according to its size or shape, generally with slanting lines drawn from its dexter to its sinister side.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

HYMNOLOGY (3rd S. vii. 180.)—I have not seen the hymn-book mentioned by D. Y., but from what he quotes of No. 61 there is, I think, reason to suppose that it is taken from No. 19 of the "Translations and Paraphrases in Verse of several Passages of Sacred Scripture, made under authority of the Church of Scotland, and used in it and the other Presbyterian Churches in that country." That to which I have referred begins as follows, and is a paraphrase of Isaiah, chap. ix. 2nd to 8th verses:—

"The race that long in darkness pined
Have seen a glorious light,
The people dwell in day, who dwelt
In death's surrounding night;
To hail thy rise thou better sun,
The gath'ring nations come
Joyous as when the reapers bear
The harvest treasures home."

These beautiful translations of the Scotch Church are transferred to various hymn-books used in English Established and Dissenting Churches, sometimes entire, often injured by attempts to improve them, but in no case which I have seen is any acknowledgement made of the source from which they are taken—a want of candour not to have been expected.

G.
Edinburgh.

"HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN" (3rd S. vii. 179.)—Hymn 20 is from the Parisian breviary, and is of course many centuries old. The English words are by the Rev. Isaac Williams, but are somewhat altered from his translation. The tune in the Ancient and Modern collection is "Innocents."

D. Y.

JACKSTONES (3rd S. vii. 34, 143.)—In reply to the last query of SIR J. EMERSON TENNENT, the term jackey-stones is quite common in Cumberland and Westmoreland. In Yorkshire the pebbles are called jacks and five-stones. The game is played in Durham and Northumberland under the name of chucks, and as to chuck anything in those counties means to throw or toss it, the suggestion in the second query is probably correct. There is, however, a curious application of the word jackey, both in the north of England and in Scotland to a pocket knife, such a knife being called a jackey-legs knife. Do any of your numerous readers know the origin of the expression?

J. WETHERELL.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?" (3rd S. vii. 115.)—How would our Literary Artillerymen like to call themselves the Pennyroyals, or to band themselves together for the defence of their country under the title of the Press-Gang, their motto being "All right," or "write," as they might choose to spell it?

ST. SWITHIN.

"MORS MORTIS MORTI," ETC. (2nd S. ix. 445, 513.) The distich annexed, whose author was inquired for in vain some years ago, is inscribed on the tomb of the Twemlow family in Witton churchyard, Northwich, co. Chester; and is said to have been the composition of the late incumbent, the Rev. — Litler. (See Grocott's Familiar Quotations.)

There is an immaterial difference between the lines given by W. B. and the subjoined. W. B.'s version reading dedisset for dedisses:—

"Mors mortis morti mortem nisi morte dedisses, Æternæ vitæ janua clausa foret."

JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

SEA SERPENT (3rd S. vii. 178.)—A friend going some short time ago on a trip in a yacht in the north of Scotland, saw what he thought was the undoubted sea serpent. There was a long succession of undulations of a black substance swimming in the sea, and extending several hundred yards. The motion was exactly like the up and down contortions of a snake or eel, certain portions alternately appearing above, and sinking beneath the waves. His friends smiled, and steered towards the object, which gradually developed itself as a number of porpoises following (as often is their custom) closely in the wake of each other, and swimming in a straight line much as wild ducks fly. Their alternate pitching, head and tail, gave so exactly the appearance of the wriggling motion of a huge snake that my friend says it was a considerable time before he could possibly believe that it was not one long animal. He is firmly of opinion that similar appearances have given rise to the story of the Great Sea Serpent.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

HERALDIC (3rd S. vii. 95.)—There is no doubt a misprint as to the first coat. It should probably be "bordé composé de mesme." The blason would then be quarterly gu. and or, a fess quarterly counter-changed within a bordure gobonated of the same.

It should be remembered in delineation that the bordure should pass round the ends of the fess as well as the sides.

The second coat may be tricked thus—Draw a line across the shield as per fess. Below this, at the width of a fess, draw another line potentée. The blazon will be—A fess abased potentée of Champagne towards the point. The peculiar potent of Champagne may be seen in Bouton, Nouveaux Traités de Blason, p. 190 (Paris, 1863.) See also Berry, art. "Potentée," and vol. iii. pl. xv. fig. 27.

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

SOBRIQUETS OF REGIMENTS (3rd S. vii. 5, 168.) Perhaps some one of your numerous readers may be able to afford me information, not of the sobriquet, but about the proper patronymic of the 25th regiment of foot. This regiment is said to have been originally raised in Edinburgh, and to have at first borne the name of that city; but, according at least to what I have often heard, the authorities there having prohibited it bearing for recruits within their bounds, Lord George Lennox, who was its colonel for about forty years, felt so displeased that he got permission to change the name. I observe from almanacs in my possession, that it was named "Sussex," at least from 1781 till 1807, when it appears as the "King's Own," which name it retained till 1818, when it is styled "The King's Own Borderers," by which it is still designated; but in 1833 it got permission to wear on its colours the arms of Edinburgh with their motto, "Nisi Dominus frustra," and continues to do so.

This shows the probability of its having at first borne the name of the city; and possibly some of your correspondents may have access to Army Lists previous to 1781 (beyond which the almanacs I have do not go back) which may bear on the point, and may be able too to confirm the explanation I have heard, and stated above, as to the reason of the change of name.

G.

Edinburgh.

If MR. WOODWARD will refer more carefully to page 5 of this volume, he will find that the statements there made originated with a General Officer in Her Majesty's service, and not with JUVERNA, who only quoted the General's letter written fourteen years since. The statement relative to the Queen's Royal Regiment, inserted at page 49, originated with the Naval and Military Gazette newspaper, and MR. WOODWARD will find it at p. 652 of the number of that journal which was published on October 8, 1853. According to Mr. Cannon's Historical Record of the 2nd or Queen's Royal Regiment, page 2, this regiment "was designated 'the Queen's;' and the Paschal Lamb, the distinguishing badge of Portugal, was placed on its colours, and has ever since continued to be borne by the regiment." I have seen a statement in print that this badge was granted to the regiment in consequence of its having been a Guard of Honour to Queen Catherine, Infanta of Portugal, wife of King Charles the Second, on her progress to London on the occasion of her marriage.

JUVERNA.

THE PASCHAL LAMB IN THE ARMS OF PORTUGAL (3rd S. vii. 5, 168.)—When the arms of Portugal are represented in full, with crest and dragon supporters, the chain of the Order of Christ hangs round the shield, from behind which the points of a cross are seen. This is the cross of the Order of Christ, and in all probability has the Paschal Lamb on it; but as I have never seen more than its points, I am unable to say for certain whether it is so or not. The earliest account I can find of this order is (in the words of my book) "Heinrich der Seefahrer Grossmeister des Christ-ordens, 1415," son of John I. of Portugal.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

YEW TREES CALLED PALMS (3rd S. vii. 96, 167.) Is there not some little error in CYWRM's communication? Palm Sunday has only preceded the 17th March four times during the last eighty years—viz. in 1788, 1845, and 1856, when it was on the 16th March, and in 1818 when it was on the 15th March.

THOMAS LEWIS.

Dover.

"GOD US AYDE" (3rd S. vii. 153.)—This motto, with the cipher "I. N.," is on one of the bells of Rylstone church. See Canto VII. of Wordsworth's White Doe of Rylstone.

CUTHBERT BEDE.

THE QUEEN'S MARIES (3rd S. vii. 69, 166.)—In the latter notice (p. 166) G. gives three verses as the only three verses which are preserved. This seems a mistake. I refer to Robert Chambers's Scottish Ballads, printed by William Tait, 78, Princes Street, Edinburgh, 12mo, p. 120, "Marie Hamilton." Where many more verses are given, and much information respecting them, and many references to authorities.

J. SS.

SCARLETT FAMILY OF SUSSEX (2nd S. x. 196; xi. 192; 3rd S. i. 231, 299.)—The first notice of this name is also to be found in the same list of Pevensy freemen, in 1342, as John "Schakelot." They remained at Pevensy till the time of Elizabeth, if not later.

WM. DURRANT COOPER.

ST. MARY ROUNCIVAL (3rd S. vi. 320.)—Sundry lands that belonged to the Guild of our Lady of Rouncival were granted by Edw. VI. on Nov. 16, in the sixth year of his reign, to Edward, Lord Clinton, and Lord Saye. In my History of Deptford (p. 148), I have given reference to Augmentation Off. Box G. 34.

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

Dartford.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

History of the Reformation of the Church of England. By Gilbert Burnet, D.D., Bishop of Salisbury. A New Edition carefully revised, and the Records collated with the Originals. By Nicholas Pocock, M.A., late Michel Fellow of Queen's College. 7 Volumes. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

When Burnet published the first part of this book in 1680, the thanks of both Houses of Parliament were voted to him. Nay, the Commons did more: they desired him "to proceed with, and complete, that good work begun, in writing and publishing 'The History of the Reformation of the Church of England.'" Though it may perhaps be doubted whether a similar vote would now receive the sanction of either Lords or Commons, the work has assumed such a position among Standard Historical Books, as to justify all the pains which a judicious editor could bestow upon it. The Delegates of the Clarendon Press have therefore shown good judgment in issuing a new and carefully-revised edition of it. Seven years have been devoted by Mr. Pocock to a task which he had originally supposed he might have accomplished in two; while every page furnishes evidence of his industry, the list of corrigenda and addenda which appears in the seventh volume shows that, like a true scholar, Mr. Pocock has been more anxious to make the book as complete as possible than "to spare," to use his own words, "his own reputation as an editor." Another point for which Mr. Pocock deserves high commendation, is the facilities which, by means of precise references, he has afforded to the critics to discover whether he has committed any errors either of copying or of any other description. How numerous were the errors in former editions one short fact will show:—In the Catalogue of Resignations from the Augmentation Office, the errors averaged one in every line.

The seventh volume of the present edition contains an elaborate preface by the editor occupying nearly 250 pages, in which he exhibits a view of the literary history of the book, its origin, its gradual progress, the various collections of MSS. which Burnet made use of, the assistance which he received, and the criticisms which he provoked—all which points the editor has investigated with much care and patience. This is followed by the Corrigenda and Addenda, to which we have already referred. We have then a Chronological Index of the Documents used by Burnet, an Index drawn up at the suggestion of one who well knows the value of such aids to students, the Rev. J. S. Brewer; and thus by a General Index to the whole book (adapted from the good index compiled for the edition of 1829) which occupies no less than 329 pages.

Such is the new edition of Burnet's work, which, though it can never be considered an adequate account of the Reformation in this country, must, with its Records and Strype's Ecclesiastical Memorials, which are a supplement to it, be used as the groundwork by any one who may hereafter undertake to write the Church History of the period, and be consulted by all who are at all interested in the history of those eventful times. It is scarcely necessary for us to add, that Burnet can only hereafter be safely consulted in the edition for which we are indebted to the learning and industry of Mr. Pocock,—an edition which must at once take its place in every library which claims to be considered as approaching completeness in the department of English History.

The Autograph Souvenir. A Collection of Autograph Letters, interesting Documents, &c., executed in Facsimile by F. G. Netherclift. With Letter-press Transcriptions, and occasional Translations, &c. By Richard Sims. Part XII. (Netherclift.)

This twelfth part of The Autograph Souvenir contains autographs of the Cardinal de Lorraine; St. Vincent de Paul; Katherine, Duchess of Buckingham; George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham; Henry, Prince of Wales; Louis XIV., and General Delambre. This completes the first volume of this very interesting and ably executed collection. The title-page, index, and dedication to the Prince of Wales, are issued with the present part.

Artemus Ward, his Book. With Notes and a Preface, by the Editor of the "Biglow Papers." (Hotten.)

A series of short papers replete with humour, but disfigured by that intermixture of sacred allusions which characterises the writings of too many modern humorists, especially among our American brethren. Mr. Hotten, who has edited the volume, ingeniously attempts to derive this peculiarity from the old Puritans.

Notices to Correspondents.

MR. KNIGHTLEY'S "SHAKESPEARE EXPORTER."—We have received another Letter from Mr. Knightley reiterating his assertion, that the publication of this work was a part of the scheme connected with his edition of Shakespeare. But if we insert Mr. K.'s letter, Messrs. Bell and Daldy will claim to be heard in reply; and we cannot afford space in "N. & Q." for such a controversy.

T. T. DYER. Similar stories of persons being "kept above ground" are current everywhere.

W. T. should consult vols. vii. viii. and ix. of our First Series respecting the line—

"Could we with ink the ocean fill."

W. R. TATE. The coins are of no value.

P. S. C. will find references to Demosthenes' praise of Action in our 2nd S. vi. 114, 115.

T. C. H. F. "What will Mrs. Grundy say?" is a phrase which occurs repeatedly in Morton's comedy, Speed the Plough.

D. will find some notices of artificial teeth among the Romans in "N. & Q." 2nd S. xii. 417, 481.

R. C. L. The book was written in sober earnestness. The author, a man of learning, was convinced of the truth of his theory.

MR. WILKINS will find specimens of early Naval terms in a Military and Sea Dictionary of which the 4th edition was published in 1711.

ERRATA.—3rd S. vii. p. 230, col. i. line 1, for "other sentiments" read "higher sentiments"; p. 222 col. i. line 20, for "Norwich" read "Nonsuch."

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 25, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

MOORE CURES OF ASTHMA AND COUGHS BY DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONARY WAFERS.—"Lyttim, Cheshire.—In allaying any irritation of the chest or lungs, checking all disposition to coughing, and promoting that inestimable boon, a comfortable night's refreshing sleep, they certainly stand unrivalled.—J. H. EVANS, Druggist." They give instant relief of asthma, consumption, coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. They have a pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d., per box. Sold by all medicine vendors.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 170.

NOTES:—Remarks on the Origin of "Cold Harbour," 253—Hercules in Dante's "Divine Comedy," 254—Words in Dailly's "Scottish Poems," 255—Letters of the Stadtholder John de Witt, 255—Original Portraits of John Wesley—Dr. Bisset, Bishop of Raphoe—Manual of Palaeography—Coshering—Ship v. Sheep—Postage Stamps—St. Anne's Chapel on Caversham Bridge—Caesar a Grammarian, 254.

QUERIES:—Wyvil of Constable Burton, 257—Agudeza—Anne, Countess of Argyll—Francis Dickens—De Queiros Family—General Richard Fortesque—Hawke and Bladen Families—Hever, or Aeber, or Eaver—"Ireland in Past Times"—Lobbeck's "Aglaophamus"—Numismatic Query—Payer and Cary—Mary Price—Ward, 258.

QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS:—"Oh! Nanny wilt thou gang with me?"—Sir Thomas Burgh, or Borough—Manoah Sibby—Painted Window at St. Margaret's, Westminster—Addison Family—"Biographical Anecdotes of the Founders of the French Republic"—Bradshaw's "Railway Companion, or Guide"—Dr. Ferne and Lord Capel—"Wire-in," 259.

REPLIES:—Historical value of Popular Ballads: Malbrough, 261—Sir William Weston, &c., 263—Epigrams, 264—Apple-pie Order—An old Rapier—Truffles—My—Ragusa—Holy-Water-Sprinkle—Burial in Coffins—King of Jerusalem—Seals of George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury—Passage from "Macbeth"—Works on Satan and his Dwelling-place—Heraldry—Pew—Dr. Moisey—Physicians' Fees—H. H. Prince Rhodocanakis—Note for Spanish Scholars—Fag: a Remnant—Waterhouse of Kirton—Philip van Macheren—Englishmen buried Abroad—Queen of Querumania—Thomas Sanden, M.D., &c., 265.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

REMARKS ON THE ORIGIN OF "COLD HARBOUR."

In different parts of England, Ireland, and America we still meet with the name of Cold Harbour given to places, farms, lanes, &c. Persons not acquainted with the etymology of this expression, and who only think of harbour in its more restricted signification of a port for shipping, are generally at a loss to understand how "Cold Harbour" can be found in the middle of a wood or on the top of a mountain. This apparent anomaly is, however, easily explained if we trace the word back to its origin and original application.

In old English writers we frequently meet with a place called "Cold Harbour," often corrupted into Coal or Cole Harbour, and which, according to Nares, was an ancient mansion situated in Dowgate or Downgate Ward, London. This place was the residence of Tunstall, Bishop of Durham, in the reign of Henry VIII., when probably it obtained the privileges of a sanctuary,* and was pulled down by Earl Gilbert about the year 1600. At an earlier period, in a grant of Henry IV., it is called "quoddam hospicium, sive placeam, vocatum le Cold Herbergh." Now herbergh is an old Germanic word, introduced into the English language from the Anglo-Saxon.

* Small tenements being afterwards built on the spot, which let well, being a protection to persons in debt.

In Ettmüller's Lexicon Anglo-Saxonicum we find, "Hereberge, statio militaris, hospitium." In Graff's Althochdeutscher Sprachschatz (Old High German dictionary), we have—"heriberga, from heri, an army, and bergan, to cover, to shelter—hospitium, statio, castra." In the present German, herberge signifies an inn, &c.; with which compare mediæval Latin, herebergum; Span. albergue; Ital. albergo; Fr. auberge.

Our English word harbour, therefore, meant originally a military station, a shelter, a retreat; and Cold Harbour—cold, from Anglo-Saxon ceald, cald—now signifies nothing more than a cold abode, a cold retreat, the primitive signification of the word harbour being still kept up in the present English, as is easily seen by opening Walker, where we find—"Harbour, a lodging, a place of entertainment, a port or haven for shipping, an asylum, a shelter."

The transition form of our word from herbergh, as found in the grant of Henry IV., to our present harbour, was herborow or herborw. The Germanic gutturals g, k, preceded by z, softened down under the influence of the Norman-French to ow (e. g. Germ. Mark, Sorge; Eng. marrow, sorrow); and the form herborw is to be met with in Tyrwhitt's note to v. 342 of the Prologue to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, where T. says:—

"St. Julian was eminent for providing his votaries with good lodgings and accommodation of all sorts. In the title of his Legende, MS. Bod. 1596, fol. 4, he is called 'St. Julian, the gode herberjour.' It ends thus:—

"Therefore, yet to this day thei that over lond wende, Thei biddeth Seint Julian anon that gode herborw he hem sende," &c.

The proper name Cold Harbour was no doubt brought over to England by our Saxon ancestors, for Germany has also its Cold Harbours up to the present day. About four German miles south of Aix-la-Chapelle there is a village called Kalterherberg, which is proverbially known in those parts as one of the coldest, most dreary, and dismal places any one can possibly imagine, being situated in the middle of the forest of the Eifel, where snow lies during the whole of the winter.

In the southern part of the Grand Duchy of Baden, in a mountainous country, there is a large farm called Kalteherberg situated about 1750 feet above the level of the sea, also a small village, Kaltenherberg, near Lörrach, on an elevated spot. Having lived chiefly abroad I am not acquainted with the different Cold Harbours in England; but from a passage in Hall, quoted by Nares, the London Mansion Cold Harbour was a cold place; and a friend of mine tells me there is a Cold Harbour farm near Exeter, situated on the brow of a hill, and much exposed to wind and weather.* The German Cold Harbours in the Eifel and Baden, are all very cold places, so that I very much suspect that wherever we may meet with other Cold Harbours, whether in England or Germany, we shall find them all in refreshing situations. I mention this particularly to show that cold is the Anglo-Saxon ceald, cald; Germ. kalt = frigidus, and by no means an old Celtic word, with an unknown signification, as some persons have been led to believe.

* On the road to Holscomb Burnell from Ide.

An interesting paper might be written on this proper name, and I much regret only being able to offer the above few remarks, not having the necessary works of reference at my command to enter into a fuller investigation of the subject.

J. C. HAHN, Ph. D.

Heidelberg.

P.S. There is a Cold Harbour Lane at present at Brixton. Dowgate was granted for ever, so Mr. Lodge says, to the College of Heralds by King Richard III., who had lately granted them their charter; and Henry VII., willing to annul every public act of his predecessor, gave it to the then Earl of Shrewsbury.

In Ben Jonson (Silent Woman, Act I. Sc. 3) we find —

"Or its knighthood shall do worse, take sanctuary in Cole Harbour sanctuary and fast."

"Here is that ancient modell of Cole Harbour, bearing the name of the 'Prodigall's Promontorie,' and being as a sanctuary for banquerupt detters."—Healy's Discovery of a New World, p. 182.

HERCULES IN DANTE'S "DIVINE COMEDY."

To those who know the diligence with which Dante studied the classical mythology (especially as illustrated in Virgil's sixth Æneid), and the subtlety with which he expounded it, it will not be uninteresting to consider whether he has visibly introduced the majestic shade of Hercules, to whose exploits, in connexion with the Centaurs, Cacus, Antæus, and the rocks at the entrance of the Mediterranean, he has so many striking references. I think he has introduced him; and I should be obliged to any of your correspondents who can inform me whether this opinion has yet been propounded and discussed.

When Virgil and Dante have traversed half the infernal circles (see cantos viii. and ix.), they reach the city of Dis; corresponding historically to the defences of Tartarus in the Æneid (mœnia Ditis), and morally to the barrier between sins of infirmity (incontinentia) and sins of perversity (bestialitas, malitia). Here a troop of fiends shut the gates in their faces, and Virgil remains outside awaiting help from a higher power. The Furies appear on a tower, threatening to call up the Medusa; which makes it likely that Dante was acquainted with the 11th Odyssey, where Ulysses, amid his communings with the spirits of heroes, stops short in fear that Proserpine will make the dreadful Gorgonian head appear to him. Then a mighty form, whom Virgil has been awaiting, comes to the rescue. The choleric spirits plunged in Styx flee before him. The Demons and the Furies are seen no more. He reaches the gate, "appearing full of disdain;" opens it by a touch of a wand, and retires without noticing the two poets—after he has rebuked the powers of Hell for their vain resistance to the will of Omnipotence, and has, in conclusion, recalled to them the example of what Cerberus suffered through their obduracy:—

"Your Cerberus, if ye recollect it well, Keeps yet therefrom his chin and throttle peeled."
(Rossetti's Translation).

Now this deliverer ("sent from heaven," as we read,) has been considered as an angel; but Dante is less accustomed to feign angelic interpositions than those of human spirits; besides which, an angel need not have appeared disdainful or discourteous even in Hell, nor have —

"^{semblance made}
Of a man whom other care constrains and bites,
Than that of him who is before his face."

Hence the late Professor Rossetti judged that we had here a spirit from Limbo, or a virtuous Pagan, who allegorically represented an important personage in Dante's own time. As a general view, I have no doubt that this opinion is perfectly correct; but I question the propriety of the added intimation that this spirit is specially, according to the letter, Julius Cæsar; because the conjuncture demands a man of physical strength, and not a general or an emperor. In brief, I think that he who here bursts the gate of Hell, is the same hero who long before performed a like exploit, according to the ancient poets; and the reference to Cerberus, which in the mouth of any other would be abrupt and uncouth, comes naturally from Hercules; who, with his own hands, chained the hell-hound after dragging it from under the throne of Pluto, as Virgil writes —

"Tartareum ille manu custodem in vincla petivit, Ipsius a solio regis traxitque trementem."
Æn. vi. 395.

Dante may have seen more full and particular accounts of the transaction in Seneca's Hercules Furens.

It may seem strange that Hercules should not be expressly named in the canto; but we hear that Virgil gave Dante some explanations, which the latter's troubled feelings prevented him from bearing in remembrance. C. B. C.

WORDS IN DALYELL'S "SCOTTISH POEMS."

At the end of the Glossary to this book, Dalzell gives a list of "Words imperfectly Understood." Many of these I fancy I can understand, but there are others of which I can make nothing:—

Hag matines.

Their haly hag matines fast they [the priests] patter." P. 189.

Can this have anything to do with "Hog-may?"

Foster.

"The sisters gray before this day,
Did crune within their closter:
They feit ane frier their keyis to beir,
The feind reassave the foster;
Syne in the mirk he weill culd werk,
And kittil them wantonly."—P. 192.

Query. One who is over pampered, or one who a guardian, or a rogue? See Florio, s. v. "Bricco, rogue, a foist, a nip."

Tinsell. (Kittie=wench, a name of contempt.)

slkhy speich and counsell
That she did heir of sum curst kittie tinsell."—P. 244.

Pluckup fair.—The Sege of the Castel of Edinrgh, by R. Sempill. "Lanuoy to the Ambassade," p. 299.

Half mark steikis.

"Vpone that spuilzie I will spend na tyme,
Sum gripit gold, and gat the thing he seikis;
Sa gat their handfull of thir half mark steikis,
Will have na mair within ane 3eir nor we." Ibid., p. 294.

andit (is an old word for fed, and a common word for clothed, but neither makes sense).

[Prelattis] Makand thair godis of warldie gudis and geir,
The flock new foundit, and thay in furringis happit." The Legend of the B. of Sanctandros Lyfe, p. 303.

Tottis, adj.; Kelt, sub.

"Of tottis russet his ryding breikis;
Ane hanelie hat, a cott of kelt,
Weill beltit in ane lethrone belt."—Ibid., p. 327.

cashmaries. (Query, Cadge-mary, possibly a name for a female pedler?)

"Na mulettis thair his cofferis caries
Bot lyke a court of auld cashmaries,
Or cadyers cūig to ane fair."—Ibid., p. 328.

Bryde. (Query, Brood, family?)

"Bot ay the mair this smatcher gettis
The closer garris he keep the yettis;
Feidinghis bellie, and his bryde
Begging and borrowing ay besyde."—Ibid., p. 340.

Dysertis Duschet: Dussie. Ibid., pp. 312, 317 ("Dussie"), 315.

bedene. (Query, Offer, promise, i. e. of thy love to sinners?)

"My lippes, Lord, then louse thou sall,
Whilke closed lang haue beene
From thy louing, sair bound in thrall,
Brekand thy sweet bedene."—Ibid., p. 119.

I am quite sure of all the rest, but my notes are at the service of anyone who finds a difficulty with the interpretations. J. D. CAMPBELL.

LETTERS OF THE STADTHOLDER JOHN DE WITT.

A very interesting and important work has recently been published, in Holland, by way of supplement to M. Groen van Prinsterer's Archives, ou Correspondance inédite de la Maison d'Orange-Nassau. It consists of an analysis of the letters in the Royal Library at the Hague, written in reference to the Act of Seclusion and its repeal; and of a very valuable essay, by M. J. W. Van Sypesteyn, on the state of Dutch-English politics from 1552 to 1688. Among the letters given in the Appendix are two, written confidentially, by the Stadtholder John de Witt (which have never before been published) to the Dutch Ambassador in London.

Whatever may be said—and much may with justice be said—of De Witt's complete statesmanship, these letters can scarcely fail to bear condemnatory witness to his time-serving state craft. I append copies of those letters for such of your readers as may feel any interest in a matter which even the researches and industry of Ma-caulay have not exhausted.

John de Witt to Louis of Nassau, Lord of Beverweerde, Ambassador in England:—

"Monsieur,

"Je m'assure que le Roi de la Grande Bretagne aura eu occasion de pénétrer au fonds de tout ce qui s'est passé à l'égard de l'acte de séclusion de Monsieur le Prince d'Orange en l'année 1654; et qu'il aura trouvé que non seulement l'on n'a donné aucune occasion de ce côté-ci pour disposer le feu protecteur à demander la dite séclusion, mais qu'au contraire les ministres de cet état, tant ceux qui étoient sur le lieu, que ceux qui participoient au maniment des affaires ici, ont fait toute la diligence et tous les devoirs possibles pour détourner cet esprit capricieux d'une si fâcheuse demande, et quoiqu'en ce regard il ne leur peut rester en leur particulier aucune inquiétude ni scrupule, et que Messieurs les États d'Hollande et West-Frise, par une résolution publique se soient expliqués nettement sur la direction de cette affaire et en ayant déchargé absolument les dits ministres; néanmoins, considérant qu'il y a encore des esprits qui par malice ou parceque le soupçon leur est naturel, tâchent de se persuader eux-mêmes, et de faire croire aux autres le contraire, et que l'on a fomenté cette affaire d'ici, ce me seroit une satisfaction particulière comme aussi à tous ceux qui participent au maniment des affaires, et que l'on peut tirer sans le même soupçon s'il plut à sa Majesté, renvoyant l'instrument de séclusion à Messieurs les États d'Hollande, de donner ce témoignage de vérité dans sa lettre de laquelle il accompagneroit le dit instrument. Et si vous trouvez moyen d'obtenir ce témoignage, vous aurez acquis une nouvelle obligation sur celui qui est et demeurera toujours," etc.

Copy of the letter (accompanying the foregoing) which De Witt requested the King of England to send, with the original Act of Exclusion, to the States of Holland. The request was not complied with by his majesty:—

"Hauts et puissants Seigneurs,

"Le Sieur de Beverweerde m'a donné part de votre résolution solennelle par laquelle il vous a plu déclarer que l'acte de séclusion, touchant l'emploi du Prince d'Orange, mon neveu, dont je vous renvoie ici l'original, selon vos desirs, est et demeurera, à l'avenir mortifié et de nulle valeur, et comme ce m'a été une nouvelle preuve de la bienveillance et de l'affection que vous avez témoigné pour lui en plusieurs autres occasions, aussi ne m'a ce pas donné une moindre satisfaction d'avoir rencontré ici des occasions pour pénétrer au fonds du tout ce qui s'est passé à l'égard de la dite séclusion en l'année 1654; et surtout d'avoir eu cet éclaircissement, que non seulement de votre côté l'on n'a donné aucune occasion pour disposer ceux qui n'étant pas contents d'espérer ici leur domination, la tâchoient aussi d'étendre sur vous, à demander la dite séclusion; mais qu'au contraire vos ministres, tant ceux qui étoient ici sur le lieu, que ceux qui participoient au maniement des affaires chez vous, ont fait toute la diligence et tous les devoirs possibles pour détourner ces esprits capricieux d'ici d'une si fâcheuse demande.

"1 Octobre, 1660."

C. H. GUNN.

Municipal Collegiate Institution,
Amsterdam, March, 1865.

ORIGINAL PORTRAITS OF JOHN WESLEY. — In 1790, the year before he died, John Wesley paid his last visit to Sunderland, in the county of Durham, and was the guest of Mr. Lipton, who resided in Green Street, Bishop Wearmouth. During his sojourn, he was prevailed upon by his host to sit for his portrait to Mr. Thomas Horsley, a local artist of considerable eminence (who studied under Romney), and from whose surviving son, Mr. Thomas John Horsley, also a Sunderland portrait-painter, I derive this information. Mr. Horsley, senior, then produced a replica, somewhat varied in detail, which now hangs in the large vestry of Sans Street Chapel. The first of these pictures remained in the family for which it was painted till a recent period, when it was presented to the Methodist Institution at Richmond, in Surrey. My father, who knew Mr. Wesley well, used frequently to tell me that the best likenesses of him were Romney's portrait, taken Monday, Jan. 5, 1789, and a bust of black porcelain, I believe by Wedgwood. The portrait made up by John Jackson, R.A., for the Methodist Conference from a series of likenesses of various dates, my father said conveyed no idea of the man. The Conference picture makes him look full-faced, portly, and rather tall; whereas Wesley was meagre in feature, slender, and short of stature. The two Horsley portraits seem to have been the last taken from the life; and the late Mr. George Harrison, shipowner, of Sunderland, who stood at the Great Methodist's side, Sunderland Street, opposite the Pann Field, Bishop Wearmouth, when he preached to several thousands of people on Sunday evening, June 13th, 1790, frequently told me that Mr. Horsley's pictures were striking likenesses. Why not engrave one or both?

G. H. of S.

DR. BISSET, BISHOP OF RAPHOE. — In Mr. Fitzpatrick's Memoirs of Archbishop Whately, there is a statement at p. 169, vol. i., which gives pain to the surviving relatives of Dr. Bisset, the Bishop of Raphoe, in 1831. Having referred to a report that the archbishoprick of Dublin had been declined by Dr. Bisset, Mr. Fitzpatrick says, —

"No offer of the see had been made to Dr. Bisset at all; but a translation to Derry, which fell vacant at the same time, was tendered to him, but which, owing to advanced age, he declined."

A friend of mine, who was nearly related to the bishop, and who passed some years of her life under his roof, has written to me to say, that there is not the shadow of a doubt but that the archbishoprick of Dublin was distinctly offered to Dr. Bisset; and, as indisputable evidence of that fact, the lady has in her possession an autograph letter of the bishop to herself, dated Sept. 24, 1831, mentioning the official letter which he had received tendering to him the see of Dublin, and his feelings that the arduous and important post could be better filled by a younger man, and that he had consequently declined it. The lady has also preserved a newspaper called Stewart's Despatch, which thus refers to the death of Bishop Bisset. After deploring the loss sustained by the diocese of Raphoe, the writer adds, —

"When the see of Dublin became vacant by the death of Archbishop Magee, the government offered to Dr. Bisset the vacant archiepiscopal dignity; but his lordship declined it, assigning as his reason the increasing and multiplying infirmities of age, and his anxious desire to spend his days among the clergy whom he knew and loved."

Additional evidence could be produced, but what has been given is probably enough to show that Mr. Fitzpatrick was mistaken when he wrote the paragraph to which I have taken exception; and if you will allow this correction to appear in your columns, you will afford satisfaction to the feelings of my friend, and be doing justice to the memory of a prelate, to the appreciation of whose character such an offer as that of the archbishoprick of Dublin, affords a most distinguished testimony.

E. S. S. W.

MANUAL OF PALEOGRAPHY. — Permit me to attach my signature to PROF. MASSON's plea for a Palaeographical Manual for English students. I know Wright's Court Hand Restored, which is a useful book; and I also know the two valuable manuals of M. Chassant, the Paléographie, and the Dictionnaire des Abréviations mentioned by your correspondent. There is also a third work by the same author on the reading of "seals," &c. But we want more than we have—a comprehensive manual, which shall serve as a key to the writing of successive centuries in our own country; and which shall furnish an introduction to French, Italian, Spanish, and other documents not of modern date. The difficulty of decipherment leads to the neglect and destruction of many important records. I believe, therefore, that the compiler of such a work as M. Masson recommends would be a public benefactor; and if undertaken I shall give my name as a subscriber.

B. H. C.

COSHERING.—The Times, in its issue of March 11, says of this word—"Its derivation is more than doubtful." This may be true of London, but elsewhere its derivation is not doubted. The English verb "to cosher" is formed from cios, rent, and the offence under the statute was the levy of rent in kind or otherwise by those who had been, or who pretended to have been, dispossessed.

II. C. C.

SHIP v. SHEEP.—The agricultural pronunciation of the word sheep, which is sounded as ship, is common, I believe, to most English counties. I had imagined that the proverb about "spoiling a ship for a ha'porth of tar," referred to the sailing vessel; but a farmer, the other day, used it in my hearing, as applying to one of his sheep, and the tarring upon its back of his initials or private mark. "Losing a hog for a ha'porth of tar," is another variation of the proverb, given by Ray, and used in Northamptonshire and Yorkshire—the hog being the yearling sheep.

CUTHBERT BEDE.

POSTAGE STAMPS.—In a notice of the late William Humphrys, the engraver, in the Athenæum of Jan. 28 of this year, it is stated that—

"The well-known portraits of Queen Victoria, on the postage stamps, are all produced by mechanical multiplication from the one steel plate originally engraved by Humphrys."

I know not on what authority this statement is made, but it is erroneous. The plate in question was engraved by Frederick Heath, son of the celebrated engraver Charles Heath.

Q.

ST. ANNE'S CHAPEL ON CAVERSHAM BRIDGE.—Tanner, p. 427, ed. 1744, mentions a patent of the 50th of Edw. III., by which was granted to the Canons of Nottely, in Buckinghamshire, the Chapel of St. Anne on Caversham Bridge, in which, says Dr. Louden, one of the visitors in Henry VIII.'s time was a famous relict, being "An angel with one wing, which brought to Caversham the spearhead that pierced our Saviour on the cross."

The foundation of this chapel is still to be seen under the houses upon Caversham Bridge, and one of the arches is likewise remaining. The Canons of Nottely had probably a cell at Caversham, and the church itself was part of the endowment, as appears in the Monasticon, tom. ii. p. 154.

The ancient house close to the church now occupied by Mrs. Monck was built by Cardinal Wolsey, and still has great remains of antiquity.

One wing was taken down some years ago; the long gallery was converted into bed-rooms. The chapel I went to see some years ago under the centre arch of the bridge; the boatman kept his oars there, which prevented me going to the east end or ascertaining the length of it.

JULIA R. BOCKETT.

Bradney, near Burghfield Bridge.

CÆSAR A GRAMMARIAN.—The following paragraph, quoted by The Times, March 23, 1865, may interest some of your readers:—

"We are surprised to find no mention of his [Cæsar's] fondness for grammatical studies. On a point so illustrative of his inquisitiveness and versatility, we are glad to quote the words of Professor Max Müller:—

"We learn from a fragment of Cæsar's work, De Analogia, that he was the inventor of the term Ablative in Latin. The word never occurs before, and of course could not be borrowed, like the names of the other cases, from Greek grammarians, as they admitted no ablative in Greek. To think of Cæsar fighting the barbarians of Gaul and Germany, and watching from a distance the political complications at Rome, ready to grasp the sceptre of the world, and at the same time carrying on his philological and grammatical studies, together with his secretary, the Greek Didymus, gives us a new idea both of that extraordinary man and of the times in which he lived."

F. PHILLOTT.

Queries.

WYVIL OF CONSTABLE BURTON.

The following queries respecting the ancient Norman family of Wyvil of Constable Burton, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, are asked, from no mere spirit of idle curiosity, or desire to pry into matters that do not concern me, but only to clear up some papers in my hands. I need not say I shall be greatly obliged to any one who can assist me.

Before putting the queries, it will be necessary to prefix some genealogical details.

Sir William Wyvil, fourth baronet of Constable Burton (born 1645), left two sons: Sir Marmaduke, fifth baronet, and D'Arcy. The line of Sir Marmaduke the fifth, failed in his grandson the seventh Sir Marmaduke; who died s. p. m. in 1774, when the succession reverted to the descendants of D'Arcy, second son of the fourth baronet as above.

D'Arcy Wyvil had two sons: 1st, William, who settled in America and left a son Marmaduke, de jure, eighth baronet, on the death of Sir Marmaduke, seventh baronet above, in 1774; and 2nd, Edward, general supervisor of Excise at Edinburgh in 1737, who married Christian Catherine Clifton, daughter of William Clifton, Esq., Commissioner of Excise there, and left a son, the Rev. Christopher Wyvil, who succeeded to the estates in 1774, on the death of Sir Marmaduke the seventh baronet.

My queries are:—

1. Did the eighth Sir Marmaduke ever assume the title; did he marry; and are any of his descendants still in existence? Perhaps some of your Transatlantic correspondents (and they are numerous) can furnish information on this point.

2. If there are any descendants still in America, are they not (being naturalised Americans) debarred from succession to the title; and should it not, therefore, come to the descendants of the Rev. Christopher Wyvil?

3. Of what family was William Clifton descended, whose daughter Christian Catherine was the mother of the successor to the estates in 1774, and from whom the present family is descended? That he was an Englishman I know; and it seems probable that he was a member of the neighbouring family of Clifton and Lytham in Lancashire. I am very anxious to know more of his descent, and where he was settled before going to Edinburgh. He had one son William (?), Vicar of Embleton, in Northumberland; and David Clifton, Clerk of Excise in Edinburgh, 1745, was probably another.

Possibly there may be some monument in the churches at Fingall, Spennithorne, or Masham, which may throw light on the last query. Any notice of such, communicated to me privately, or through "N. & Q.," will confer a great favour.

As the Wyvils were connected with Edinburgh, may not Sir Walter Scott have taken the idea of Waverley-Honour, or Osbaldistone Hall, from Constable Burton?

Finally, Has the novel, Marmaduke Wyvil, by H. W. Herbert, published in 1843, any reference to the family?

F. M. S.
229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

AGUDEZA.—If any of the readers of "N. & Q." could offer me an explanation of the "point" of the following agudeza, I should be much obliged; as, although I have asked many Spaniards, and among them several Andalucians, to explain it, not one has been able to do so:—

"Acababan de nombrar alcalde de un pueblo muy desmoralizado á un vecino que se propuso por cuantos medios estuviesen á su alcance moralizarlo. Con este fin suplicó al cura que le indicase las mujeres que daban escándalo y que convenia amonestar. Acordaron ponerse juntos en la plaza y que cuando fuesen entrando las susodichas, diria el cura:—Haba. Pero fué el caso que á cuantas entraban decia el cura:—Haba. Señor, reponia el alcalde, si es la mujer de mi compadre. . . . Haba! recalaba el cura. Llegó en esto la mujer del alcalde. Haba! dijo el cura. Señor, si es mi mujer y dice Vd. haba!! Y Tarragona, repuso el cura."—Fernan Caballero, Cuentos y Poesias Andaluces.

The joke evidently lies in the "haba—y Tarragona."

ANNE, COUNTESS OF ARGYLE.—Anne, daughter of Sir William Cornwallis, the second wife of Archibald Campbell, seventh Earl of Argyle, was living in 1633. The date of her death is required. Her husband died in 1638. S. Y. R.

FRANCIS DICKENS.—What were the arms and crest of Francis Dickens, Esq., M.P. for Northampton for the fifth time, 1802. Whom did he marry? And had he other issue besides Maria-Isabella, wife to the last Earl Cornwallis; and Mary, married to Samuel Ravenscroft, attorney-at-law? SAMUEL TUCKER.

20, Doughty Street, Mecklenburgh Square.

DE QUEIROS FAMILY.—Your correspondent SCOTUS (1st S. ii. 478) appears to have access to an ordinary of Portuguese heraldry. I should be much obliged to him, or to any correspondent of "N. & Q.," for the arms of the Portuguese family De Queiros. H. W. T.

GENERAL RICHARD FORTESCUE.—Who was General Richard Fortescue, a Parliamentary officer, who died about 1650 while Commander-in-Chief in Jamaica, as appointed by Cromwell? His will shows that he had a house and land at Bray, houses in Reading, and an estate at Halskott bought from the trustees of the Marquis of Winchester. To what branch of the Fortescues did he belong? KAPPA.

HAWKE AND BLADEN FAMILIES.—Who was the grandfather of the first Lord Hawke, and where did the family spring from? The father was Edward Hawke, a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, and it is supposed that the family originally came from Cornwall.

Also, What is the origin of the Bladens, and where did they hold property? Col. Martin Bladen, uncle of the first Lord Hawke, at one time held the property of Barmoor Castle, in the parish of Lowick, in Northumberland; and also some property at Alborough Hatch, in Essex; but how these properties were inherited, or parted with, is not known. This Col. Martin Bladen was a Lord of Trade. There was a Col. Thomas Bladen, Governor of Maryland, after whom Bladen county, in North Carolina was named; as the town of Bladensburg, in Virginia, was named after another member of the family. The Governor of Maryland is thought to have married a daughter of a Sir Theodore Janssen, Bart., said to be a grandson of the Baron du Hèze, who was Governor of Brussels in Alva's time. Another daughter married Calvert, Lord Baltimore, and hence the Governorship of Maryland came. A William Bladen is supposed to have been a Lord Mayor of Dublin a long time ago. The Governor of Maryland is supposed to have been a brother of Col. Martin Bladen. E. W.

Hampstead.

HÆVER, OR AEVER, OR EAYER.—I do not know the exact orthography of the above word, and hence have made as near an approach to the pronunciation as I could. It is a common Lancashire word, denoting the direction of the wind. "What æver is the wind in this morning?" is a frequent inquiry; and the answer may be from any point of the compass, as the case may be. What is the etymology of the word? T. T. W.

"IRELAND IN PAST TIMES."—Two octavo volumes, entitled Ireland in Past Times; an Historical Retrospect, Ecclesiastical and Civil, appeared anonymously in London, 1826. By whom written? ABHBA.

LOBECK'S "AGLAOPHAMUS."—There is no copy of this work, to my knowledge, in Australia. I have noted references to it in De Quincey's essay on "Secret Societies," and in Mr. W. C. Kent's article on the "Eleusinian Mysteries" in Blackwood's Magazine some years ago, which article has since been included in that gentleman's collection of miscellanies, entitled Footprints on the Road (Chapman & Hall, 1864).

Will any of your correspondents who have recently been referring to the Aglaophamus in your columns be kind enough to inform me where a review, or analytical account, of the work may be found in any accessible book, English, French, or German? D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

NUMISMATIC QUERY.—I shall be obliged to any correspondent of "N. & Q." who will explain to me the mint marks upon the present French coinage. Taking the copper series for an example, I find on the obverse, on each side of the date, a mint mark: before 1856, it is (almost) invariably a greyhound's head on the right side; but after 1855, an anchor takes its place. The left side is occupied by a bee, an antique lamp, crossed hammer, and pick, &c., apparently without regularity. Has this mark, on the left of the date, anything to do with the number struck on the reverse? Again occurs another mint mark, showing the place where struck: A—Paris; B—Bordeaux; BB—Lille (?); W—Lyons (?); D—(?).

Will some correspondent of "N. & Q." correct and complete this list? M. Huhlmann, who was the Mint Master of Lille (the mint there is now converted into a school, the last coins struck there being some silver jettons celebrating the visit of their majesties to the bourse, 1853; and the monument erected in the bourse to Napoleon I., 1864), gave me a list of the mint and their marks, but I have lost it.

I should also like to know how many five or ten centime pieces there are differing in their mint-marks. JOHN DAVIDSON.

PAYLER AND CARY.—Can you afford me any information respecting the persons mentioned in the following note, taken from the Administration Acts at the General Registry, York?—

"Admon., 3 Dec. 1680, of Dame Mary Cary alias Payler, late of Nun Monkton, to James Porter, principal creditor."

She also administered the same day to her husband George Payler of Nun-Monkton, Esq., and to Nathaniel Payler his son—all of whom died intestate.

I can find nothing in Dugdale's Visitation of Yorkshire, 1666; or in the brief pedigree of Payler, given in Sir B. Burke's Extinct Baronetage.

C. J. R.

MARY PRICE, Spinster, born about 1700, married, in or near London, to one Mr. Reynolds; and died, prior to 1789, leaving a daughter if not more issue. Can any reader oblige by giving any further particulars to William Price, Glannantylan, Llanffwyst, Abergavenny? GLWYSIG.

WARD.—Rev. Nathaniel Ward, who was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, taking the degree of A.M. in 1603, is said to have died in 1653, at Shenfield, in Essex, of which parish he was the minister. Cotton Mather, in his Magnalia (ed. 1702, part iii. p. 167), informs us that he was "born at Haverhill, in Essex, about 1670." Subsequent writers have copied this date from Mather; but there is reason for believing it to be too early.

Will some reader of "N. & Q.," residing at Shenfield, ascertain if there is a tablet to his memory in that church giving the exact date of his death and his age? And, if so, copy them for me?

I would like also to obtain the date of death and age of his father, Rev. John Ward of Haverhill, whose quaint Latin epitaph is quoted by Fuller in his Worthies of England, edit. 1840, vol. iii. p. 186. MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, U. S.

Queries with Answers.

"OH! NANNY WILT THOU GANG WITH ME?" (3rd S. vii. 179).—SENESCENS, alluding to a hymn which is sung to music identical with that of the beginning of the beautiful song, "Oh! Nanny, wilt thou gang with me?" inquires by whom each was composed. It is not very clear whether he asks about the words or the tunes; but the editor assumes the latter, and acquaints him with the names of two persons, to each of whom the music has been attributed. Is there any doubt as to the authorship of the words, which in the north of Ireland have always been ascribed to Dr. Percy, the Bishop of Dromore, and author of the Reliques of English Poetry? They are believed to have been addressed to his wife, who rests in the same grave with him in the transept of the cathedral. In Ulster the first line is always written "gang wi" me, thus rendering it consistent with the Scottish idiom which prevails in the county of Down.

J. K.

[Bishop Percy's ballad "O, Nannie wilt thou gang wi' me?" may have been suggested by "The Young Laird and Edinburgh Katy," by Allan Ramsay (Tea-Table Miscellany, 1724). We quote as a specimen the second verse from the edition of 1733, vol. i. p. 67:—

"O Katy, wiltu gang wi' me,
And leave the dinsome town a while?
The blossom's sprouting frae the tree,
And a' the summer's gawn to smile:
The mavis, nightingale and lark,
The bleating lambs and whistling hynd,
In ilka dale, green, shaw, and park,
Will nourish health and glad ye'r mind."

The occasion of Bishop Percy's writing this exquisite ballad is thus related by Miss Lætitia Matilda Hawkins, in her Memoirs, Anecdotes, Facts, and Opinions, ed. 1824, i. 271: "It is well known that Bishop Percy was the author of the elegant popular song, 'O Nanny, wilt thou gang wi' me?'" And in a note she adds, "Recollections of the tenderest kind are called up by the mention of this exquisite ballad, which I have been told was Dr. Percy's invitation to his charming wife, on her release from her twelvemonths' confinement in the royal nursery, in attendance on her charge, Prince Edward, the late Duke of Kent. 'His Royal Highness's temper as a private gentleman did not discredit his nurse, for his humanity was conspicuous.'"]

SIR THOMAS BURGH, OR BOROUGH, heir-general of Lord Cobham of Sterbury, created Baron Burgh by Hen. VIII. [VII. ?], had a son Edward. I am very anxious to know whom this Edward married. He had also another son William, Lord Burgh; who married Catherine, daughter of the Earl of Lincoln, by whom he had Thomas, Lord Burgh, K.G. I wish also to know to whom this Thomas was married? Whoever she was, she was "famous for charity," and died in Westminster about 1638—1640. The name is now commonly written "Burgh."

C. P.

[Edward Burgh, the second Baron, married Anne, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Cobham of Sterborough. William Burgh (son of Thomas, the fourth Baron), who married Catherine, daughter of Edward Clinton, Earl of Lincoln, was the fifth Baron, and was succeeded by his son Thomas, K.G., who died Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in 1597. We cannot discover the family name of his wife Frances, who, says Fuller, "was famous for her charity, and skill in chirurgery." She died in 1647.]

MANOAH SIBLY.—This man was a short-hand writer and bookseller in London, and the author of several works, which he published between the years 1777 and 1795. Can any of your readers refer me to any particulars of his life, and when and where he died, &c.?

G. P. O.

[Mr. Manoah Sibly is better known as the Pastor of the New Jerusalem Society assembling at a meeting-house in Friars Street, Blackfriars, where he officiated from the year 1792 until his death on Dec. 16, 1840. The following inscription has been placed on his tombstone in Bunhill Fields burial-ground: "Sacred to the memory of the Rev. Manoah Sibly, who for fifty-two years faithfully, ably, and zealously preached the doctrines and truths of the New Church, signified by the New Jerusalem in the Revelations, from her commencement in the year 1788, and rejoined his beloved conjugal partner in a glorious and blessed state of Immortality, on the 16th of December, 1840, in the eighty-fourth year of his age." For biographical particulars of Mr. Sibly consult The Intellectual Repository, and New Jerusalem Magazine, for 1841, being vol. ii. of the New Series, pp. 40, 132—139, and 238. Mrs. Sibly died on Oct. 31, 1829, and some account of her is given in the same periodical for 1831, vol. i. p. 45.]

PAINTED WINDOW AT ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER.—Can any of your correspondents inform me if the fine painted glass at St. Margaret's, Westminster, is of Flemish origin? I have heard it was once in Westminster Abbey.

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

[It was presented by the magistrates of Dort to Henry VII., and intended for his chapel at Westminster, but never put up there. It was at Waltham Abbey, and removed by the last prior to a private chapel at New Hall. This estate passed through many hands—Ratcliff, Earl of Sussex, Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, Oliver Cromwell, General Monk; and the window having eventually become the property of Mr. Conyers, of Copt Hall, Essex, was sold by him in 1758 to the parish of St. Margaret's, Westminster, for four hundred guineas.]

ADDISON FAMILY.—Can any one tell me whether the family of which Joseph Addison was a member is extinct, and whether he had brothers or sisters who left issue? Also his mother's maiden name?

R. W. E. L.

U. U. C.

[Joseph Addison's mother was Jane, daughter of Nathaniel Gulston, Esq., and sister to Dr. William Gulston, Bishop of Bristol. Addison's only child, born just before his death, survived her father seventy-eight years, and died unmarried at Bilton Hall in March, 1797. He had two brothers and three sisters: 1. Jane died in her infancy. 2. Gulston died Governor of Fort St. George in the East Indies. 3. Dorothy, who married first Dr. Sartre, formerly minister at Montpellier, afterwards prebendary of Westminster. Her second husband was Daniel Combee, Esq. 4. Anne, who died in early life. 5. Laurencot, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.]

"BIOGRAPHICAL ANECDOTES OF THE FOUNDERS OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC."—This work was published in the year 1797 in two volumes, and I should feel much obliged if you could give me information concerning the author of it. At the beginning of vol. i. there is a plate, with the following inscription: "Address of Louis XVI. at the Bar of the Convention, on the 26th of Dec. 1792;" and at vol. ii. "Attack of the Thuilleries, on the 10th of Aug. 1792, sketched by an eye-witness."

T. T. DYER.

[This work is the first literary production of the late John Adolphus, the celebrated common-law barrister. He also assisted the historian Coxe in preparing for the press The Memoirs of Sir Robert Walpole, 3 vols, 4to, 1798. Mr. Adolphus died on July 16, 1845, aged eighty.]

BRADSHAW'S "RAILWAY COMPANION, OR GUIDE."—What is the exact title, size, and date, or other distinguishing mark of the first edition?

KAPPA.

[The work was originally entitled Bradshaw's Monthly Railway Guide, Manchester, 1842, 16mo, and continued as Bradshaw's Monthly General Railway and Steam Navigation Guide for Great Britain and Ireland, Manchester, 16mo. We have only met with one number of Bradshaw's Railway Time Tables for Sept. 1842, Manchester, Sm. sh. fol.]

DR. FERNE AND LORD CAPEL.—In the Catholic Miscellany, 1825, it is stated that Dr. Ferne, who, after the Restoration, was made Bishop of Chester, was previously chaplain in Lord Capel's family. To this Anthony Wood makes no allusion, neither is it noticed in Ormerod's History of Cheshire. I wish to ask, therefore, what documentary, or other satisfactory evidence, is there to substantiate the above statement?

LLALLAWG.

[The statement has probably been made from the fact, that Dr. Ferne accompanied Lord Capel and the other commissioners from King Charles I. to treat with the Parliamentarians at Uxbridge in matters relating to the Church. Vide Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, ed. 1849, iii. 498.]

"WIRE-IN."—Mr. Hotten, who, in his amusing and interesting Slang Dictionary, solves so many difficulties of our London vernacular, has himself met with a poser, as he intimates at p. 271:—

"WIRE-UP, a London street phrase in general use at the present time, the meaning of which I have not been able to discover."

Can any one clear up this difficulty?

SPECTACLES.

[Wire-in and wire-up are Dorsetshire phrases. A friend who in 1863 passed his summer holidays at Weymouth in that county formed the acquaintance of a resident, who occasionally employed one expression or the other, wire-in or wire-up—both, apparently, in the same sense. They seemed to be familiar and conventional terms of invitation, exhortation, and encouragement. Thus, in sitting down to dinner: "Now then, wire-in."]

Replies.

HISTORICAL VALUE OF POPULAR BALLADS: MALBROUGH.

(3rd S. vii. 127.)

There is in the Library of the Sacred Harmonic Society a volume of French chansons published at Paris about the year 1842. It is of a large octavo size, has no general title, nor any signatures or paginal or other numbers to indicate the order of succession of its contents, which are printed in sections of eight pages, each complete in itself, and containing one long or two short chansons, and terminating with the printer's name (F. Locquin, 16 Rue N. D. des Victoires), showing the work to have been issued in numbers. Each chanson is preceded by an historical notice, and followed by the music to which it is sung, and each page of the words of the chanson itself is surmounted and bordered by ably-designed and well-executed etchings, many of them of a remarkably humorous kind, illustrating the song.

The first song in the volume is the same which your correspondent A. A. has described. It is here given under the title of Mort et Convoi de l'Invincible Malbrough. The introductory notice is so curious and interesting, that I think it better, notwithstanding its length, to transcribe it in extenso than to give a condensed account of it. It is as follows:—

"NOTICE.

"La célèbre chanson de Malbrough fut certainement composée après la bataille de Malplaquet, en 1709, et non après la mort de Jean Churchill, duc de Marlborough, en 1722, comme l'ont pensé quelques graves commentateurs de cette facétie historique.

"Aucune des circonstances de ce petit poème populaire ne peut se rapporter à la mort véritable du duc de Marlborough. Lorsque cet illustre général mourut, dans sa terre de Windsor-Lodge, le 17 Juin 1722, des suites d'une attaque d'apoplexie, il n'avait point paru à la tête des armées depuis plus de six ans; depuis plus de dix, il ne jouait qu'un rôle obscur et secondaire dans la politique de l'Europe, et les Français, plus légers encore à cette époque qu'ils ne le sont aujourd'hui, avaient en tout le temps nécessaire pour l'oublier. George I., en arrivant au trône, rappela le duc de Marlborough à la cour, dont la reine Anne l'avait éloigné ainsi que sa femme; mais il ne lui demanda plus des conseils qu'il ne suivait pas toujours. Le duc vivait donc fort tristement dans ses domaines, où l'argent lui manquait pour l'achèvement du magnifique château de Blenheim, que la reine Anne et le parlement d'Angleterre avaient voulu faire bâtir, à leurs frais, en mémoire de l'éclatante victoire d'Hochstett: il tomba presque en enfance, et s'éteignit enfin sous les yeux de Lady Marlborough, qui se chargea elle-même de lui faire des obsèques triomphales.

"La chanson est donc antérieure à cette mort, qui n'eut guère d'écho au delà de l'Angleterre, et, à défaut d'autres preuves, nous pourrions citer l'ancienne légende en prose qui accompagne la chanson, et dans laquelle il est dit que Malbrough fut tué à la bataille de Malplaquet, qui se donna entre Mons et Bavay, le 11 Septembre, 1709. Dans cette bataille si glorieuse pour les Français, de l'aveu même des historiens Anglais, le maréchal de Villars fut blessé au genou, lorsqu'il allait envelopper le duc de Marlborough et l'écraser entre les deux ailes de l'armée Française; en ce moment décisif, Marlborough courut les plus grands dangers et faillit partager le sort de cinq de ses lieutenants-généraux, qui furent tués dans la mêlée.

"Le bruit de sa mort se répandit sans doute, et quelque chansonnier badin lui fit cette oraison funèbre, au bivouac du Quesnoy, le soir de la bataille, pour se consoler de n'avoir pas de chemise et de manquer de pain depuis trois jours: ainsi va l'esprit Français. Le duc de Marlborough, grand capitaine et négociateur habile, avait fait bien du mal à la royauté de Louis XIV: pendant trente ans, il l'avait poursuivie, attaquée et affaiblie sur tous les champs de bataille et dans tous les cabinets de l'Europe; il s'était montré digne élève de Condé et de Turenne à Höchstett, à Oudenarde et à Ramillies: son nom faisant la terreur et l'admiration du soldat. Faute de pouvoir le vaincre, on essaya de la chansonnier, et chacune de ses victoires fut marquée par une nouvelle chanson satyrique. La chanson était encore en France, comme au bon temps du Cardinal de Mazarin, l'expression la plus ordinaire des vengeances et de représailles du peuple.

"Et cependant la chanson de Malbrough ne survécut pas au héros de Malplaquet; elle se conserva seulement par tradition dans quelques provinces, où l'avaient rapportée probablement des soldats de Villars et de Boufflers; elle ne fut pas même recueillie dans les immenses collections des chansons anecdotiques qui faisaient partie des archives de la noblesse Française. Mais en 1781, elle retint tout à coup d'un bout à l'autre du royaume.

"Marie-Antoinette mit au monde un dauphin qui devint le nourrisson d'une paysanne, nommée Madame Poitrine, qu'on avait choisie, entre toutes, à son apparence de santé et de bonne humeur. Madame Poitrine chantait en berçant le royal enfant, qui ouvrit les yeux au grand nom de Marlborough. Ce nom, les paroles naïves de la chanson, la bizarrerie de son refrain, et la touchante simplicité de l'air, frappèrent la reine, qui retint cet air et cette chanson. Tout le monde les redit après elle, et la roi lui-même ne dédaigna pas de fredonner à l'unisson Malbrough s'en va-t-en guerre. On chantait Malbrough des petits appartements de Versailles aux cuisines et aux écuries; la chanson faisant fureur à la cour, quand elle fut adoptée par la bourgeoisie de Paris, et elle passa successivement de ville en ville, de pays en pays; elle retourna d'abord en Angleterre, où elle fut bientôt aussi populaire qu'en France.

"A Paris, Beaumarchais, dans son Marriage de Figaro, fit chanter à Chérubin l'air de Malbrough, en remplaçant l'antique refrain Mironton ton ton, mirontaine, par ce vers langoureux, Que mon cœur, que mon cœur a de peine!

"A Londres, un gentilhomme Français, voulant se faire conduire par son cocher à Marlborough Street, et ne se rappelant pas le nom de cette rue, chanta l'air de Malbrough, et le cocher comprit aussitôt l'adresse qui lui indiquait la chanson.

"Goethe, qui voyageait en France dans ce temps-là, fut assourdi par un concert universel de mirontons, et prit en haine Marlborough qui était la cause innocente de cette épidémie chantante. Malbrough donna son nom aux modes, aux étoffes, aux coiffures, aux carrosses, aux ragouts, &c., Malbrough revenait sans cesse à propos de tout et à propos de rien. Le sujet de la chanson était peint sur les paravents, sur les éventails, sur les écrans, brodé sur les tapisseries et sur les meubles, gravé sur les jétons, sur les bijoux, reproduit sous toutes les formes et de toutes les manières. Cette rage de Malbrough dura plusieurs années, et il ne fallut rien moins que la chute de la Bastille pour étouffer le bruit d'une chanson.

"A présent que nous sommes loin de la chanson et de

Marlborough, qui sont à jamais acquis à la France, nous avons recherché quelle devait être l'origine de cet air guerrier et mélancolique à la fois, que Napoléon entonnait à haute voix, malgré son antipathie pour la musique, chaque fois qu'il montait à cheval pour entrer en campagne, et nous ne répugnons pas à croire, avec M. de Chateaubriand, que ce pourrait bien être le même air que les Croisés de Godefroid de Bouillon chantaient sur les murs de Jérusalem, pour s'encourager à délivrer la ville sainte et le tombeau du Christ. Les Arabes le chantaient encore, et l'on prétend que leurs ancêtres l'avaient appris à la bataille de Massore, où les frères d'armes du sire de Joinville le repétaient en choquant leur boucliers et en poussant le cri national, Montjoie Saint Denis!

"P. L. JACOB, Bibliophile."

This "Notice" occupies two pages, the next four are devoted to the words of the chanson, the engravings round which represent, 1. The hero in ancient armour on horseback, preceded by trumpeters and drummers, and attended by a numerous train, emerging from the gates of a fortified town; 2. The duchess on the top of her tower, with two ladies; the black-habited page on a terrace beneath, bowing; 3. The funeral procession, the body preceded by the four officers carrying the arms of the deceased; and 4. The ascent of the soul (a very substantial figure crowned with a nimbus, rising from a tomb), the prostration of the soldiers, and their departure, gaping, to their homes. The music fills two pages more.

There are upwards of thirty other chansons in the volume, amongst which are Le Juif Errant, Le Roi d'Yvetôt, La Machine Infernale [de la Rue Nicaise], Le Comte Orry (from which the plot of Rossini's opera is taken), Fanfan la Tulipe, Paris à cinq heures du Matin (which possibly suggested the well-known "London at Five in the Morning," sung by the late Charles Mathews), L'Enfant prodigue and Le Roi Dagobert et Saint Eloi.

W. H. RUSK.

Five generals had fallen on the field of Malplaquet, and Churchill's completion of the half dozen was too desirable not to be—telegrammed, I was near saying—to Paris without waiting its verification. So the chanson was extemporised in the guard-room, and—

"Malbrough s'en va-t-en guerre," sung and whistled over Louis le Grand's dominions, while its living subject—présenti largimus honores—was knocking his majesty's maréchaux about right and left. So tells us P. L. Jacob, Bibliophile (La Croix).

Like other celebrities "Malbrough" had its day, and was heard only in the provinces till "Madame Poitrine" (the nom de lait, I suppose, of a βαβυκόλπος paysanne) brought it back to the Tuileries; Louis Seize sang it in the royal nursery, whence it was caught up the courtiers, echoed by the bourgeoisie, and reverberated over France. Silenced by the cannon of 1789, its refrain found a patron in the elder Buonaparte, who, little as he loved music, sang it at the overture of his several campaigns. I wonder, did his biographical nephew hum it at Balacava?

What, however, are these reminiscences to the Orientalism ascribed to this popular tune by Chateaubriand, as having been picked up by Godfrey of Bouillon's Crusaders in the Holy Land? Of a truth, the duke in his chain-mail, the duchess on the top of her tower, and Buttons at the barbican in his black dittoes, as they appear in A. A.'s illuminated broadsheet, have a very troubadourish aspect.

When, why, and from whom will be heard the next revival of "Malbrough"? E. L. S.

Your correspondent A. A. does not seem to be aware that this ballad is a permanent memorial of a false and transient rumour. Neither, indeed, could the writer, who bears the literary name of Father Prout, have been aware of its origin when he wrote the remarks which you extract, though I doubt not that he has long ago learned it. After one of Marlborough's battles a report was spread that he, already renowned and dreaded, had been slain. The news ran like wildfire, and for a few days was believed, amongst others by one who vented his feelings in an air and words, which the dissipation of the delusion could not deprive of immortality. The whole subject was treated in an exhaustive article in Chambers's Journal of Jan. 20, 1844, in which were given full particulars of the date and occasion of the false report, the authorship of the ballad, and its speedy and continued popularity. K.

The following anecdote respecting the popular ballad of "Malbrough" is related in the Biographical Memoir of the Hon. Wm. R. Spencer, prefixed to his Poems, ed. 1835, p. 18:—

"Whilst at Harrow Mr. Spencer frequently visited his uncle at Blenheim, of whom he was a great favourite, as well as of the Duchess of Marlborough. During one of his visits to them, the Duchess received from the unfortunate Queen of France, Marie Antoinette, a present of a very beautiful fan with the well-known song of 'Malbrough' written upon it, and a letter by which it appeared that she supposed it to have been written on the great Duke of Marlborough, according to the general belief. In the discussion that took place as to whether her mistake should be set right, or be left unnoticed, when the Duchess wrote a letter of thanks to her, Mr. Spencer learned that this popular and hacknied song was in fact written on the Duke's father, Charles, second Duke of Marlborough, when he set off from a village in Germany, to take the command of the British forces serving on the Lower Rhine, and that the village barber was the author of it. The author of the music is still unknown."

J. Y.

SIR WILLIAM WESTON,

LORD PRIOR OF THE ORDER OF ST. JOHN OF JERUSALEM,

(2nd S. vii. 317, 405, 406: 3rd S. vii. 224.)

As I ventured in the last number of "N. & Q." to question the accuracy of the interpretation, and assignment by Cromwell (History of Clerkenwell, pp. 187-191), of the motto sculptured beneath the arms of Sir William Weston on the once splendid monument of that knight, it may not be uninteresting to consider the correctness or otherwise of the description, and of the engraving given of the armorial bearings themselves. The following remarks, however, chiefly apply to the engraving. After describing the injuries from which the monument had suffered from the ravages of time, the wanton mischief and the thefts of the sacrilegious, and the beautifying it received in 1780, Cromwell continues:—

"The other indentations appear to have been made by plates of arms, one of which had evidently been Sir William Weston's coat, as represented among the decorations at top: bearing ermine in chief 6 bezants; quartering 3 camels passant; crest, a Saracen's head on what appears to be intended for a Prior's cap; motto, ANX BONO."

Aubrey, in his description of Sutton Race, Surrey, the residence of Sir Richard Weston, says:—

"In the hall is the crest of Weston, viz. a Saracen's head with a black beard, and a wreath of white linen. This does not exactly tally with our crest: but the difference may have arisen from the sculptor's ignorance."—P. 189.

The Westons bore five not six bezants, but the causes above adverted to doubtless led to the inaccuracy. In the "Description of the Standards borne in the Field by Peers and Knights in the reign of Henry VIII." in the College of Arms, Sir William Weston's banner bears—1st and 4th Erm. on a chief Az. five bezants; 2nd and 3rd Ar., three camels statant Sa. The cross of the Order of Knights Hospitallers is borne in chief, and the banner is supported by a camel Sa. crined, hooped, and garnished Or. His crest is not given, but in the same MS. where the standard and arms of his brother Sir Richard Weston are emblazoned, occurs the Saracen's head, not full, but three-quarter faced, bearded, and with protruding tongue, collared, bound with a fillet Ar. and Az. and resting on a wreath Ar. and Sa. The head has all the characteristics of the best type of Arab, with high features, massive brow, flowing hair, full beard and moustache, and rich brown complexion; and the face, in spite of its distortion and fierceness, is not ill-favoured. In the crest on the monument the sculptor fell into the modern and conventional rendering of the heraldic Saracen, the thick-lipped, beardless, black, bloated, woolly-haired negro.

The fillet round the head was converted either by the sculptor, draughtsman, or engraver into the jewelled or embroidered band of a kind of skull-cap, and in the arms the bezants have, in the first and fourth quarters, been sown broadcast on the field.

In the first quarter they have fallen in two equal and parallel rows, whilst in the fourth they have distributed themselves more artistically in three rows, numbering three, two, and one respectively. The engraver, moreover, has allowed his fancy to run wild in the adornment of the chief in the above bearing, which is far beyond any attempt at heraldic description.

I should be glad if some of your correspondents would reply to MR. PINKS' query (2nd S. vii. 490) regarding the Lord Prior's monument. Is it still at Burghley, and in whose memory has it been erected?
W.

EPIGRAMS.

(3rd S. vii. 97, 117, 147.)

Plus its Laconism, the "Epigram upon an Epigram," recorded by M. N. S., is better conceived and more neatly pointed than Warton's—which of the brothers, Tom or Joe, I forget. Unless it be too familiar for repetition, here it is:—

"One day in Christchurch meadows walking,
Of poetry and such things talking,
Cries Ralph—a merry wag:
'An Epigram, if right and good,
In all its circumstances should Be like a Jelly-bag.'

"Your simile, I own, is new;
But how dost make it out?' says Hugh.
Quoth Ralph 'I'll tell thee, friend:
Make it a-top both wide and fit
To hold a budget-full of wit,
And point it at the end.'"

Ausonius's "Dodra"—which he relished well enough to give its receipt in two Latin epigrams (epigraphs rather), and one Greek—had tempted me to a translation. May I, notwithstanding MR. HAMILTON's note, venture to append it?—

"Men call me Niner: bread, broth, water, wine, Salt, pepper, oil, herbs, honey, make my Nine,"— a mixture, fit only to wash down the classical dinner of Smollet's Antiquarian!

As also one of Martial's, which is eminently terse and poignant:—

"Cum sitis similes, paresque vitâ,
Uxor pessima, pessimus maritus,
Miror, non bene convenire vobis."
Lib. viii. Ep. xxxv.

"So like your tempers and your lives,
The worst of husbands, worst of wives,
'Tis odd, how ill your union thrives."

Before I had seen MR. MACKENZIE's note of the Ausonian "Dodra," I was thinking of its monoliner version. To compress nine ingredients (three of them being impracticable dissyllables) within an English heroic line, were about as easy as packing Falstaff into a pepperbox: so I tried it with an Alexandrine's twelve, which, I need not say, is shorter by five than the original Latin; and will be accounted, I hope, at least as condensate as Ausonius's seventeen. No easy task it was; but easier than it would have been to swallow its practical brewage:—

"Men call me Niner. Why? Thrice three is nine: Bread, broth, salt, honey, herbs, oil, pepper, water, wine."

Martial's "duri ingeni puer" is simply a block-head: fit only to be a town-crier, a costermonger, an auctioneer's or tumbler's touter, or such other brazen-lunged præco; or else a bricklayer or hodman. Heraldry and architecture are beyond his blockheadism. The trivial class of these præcones was oddly played upon by our grave lexicographer—paronymously, he would term it:—

"If the man who turnips cries,
Cry not when his father dies;
'Tis a proof that he had rather
Have a turnip than his father."

The point of this epigram is, I believe, contemporaneous with Jack Bannister's story.

Dryden uses the term "hardhead" as a street-mêlée word; wherein the "roughs" butt each other in the Taurine fashion—a brutal sort of headwork: yet preferable to the Italian knife. In some old play (I forget its title) there is a parish-constable—a cross between Dogberry and Bumble—by name, Authority Hardhead.

Turning, too abruptly perhaps, to a very different view of our subject, long ago I "made a note of" a distichon, which we may not term an epigram. What other than parvaria, animo concepta, an illustration applicable only by something lower than itself of "The Mystery of Mysteries," I know not how to term it:—

"Nix, Glacies, et Aqua; tria Nomina, Res tamen una:
Sic in personis trinus Deus, et tamen unus."

Having common-placed it, in the days when "N. & Q." was not, I unfortunately neglected to set down its authorship; but among the learned contributors to our weekly nécessaire est, it will hardly fail of a reference. I venture this inadequate rendering:—

"Snow, Ice, and Water; one, yet three in name—Father, Son, Spirit; three, yet each the same."

E. L. S.

I do not think the following are generally known. They are given as original in The Green Book (Dublin, J. Duffy, 1845):—

"When I meet Tom, the purse-proud and impudent block-head,

In his person the poets' three ages I trace:
For the gold and the silver unite in his pocket,
And the brazen is easily seen in his face."

Feb. 16, 1830.

On Two Pretty Girls.

" 'How happy could I be with either,' was said
By Macheath to his wives in the play;
But were two such charmers as you in their stead,
He could not wish either away.
" Oh! no, until death with such angels he'd grapple;
Then both are so temptingly fair,
That, as Adam lost Heaven by eating an apple,
I'd forfeit my chance for a pair."

On Miss —

" Thrice happy the man who gets thee for a wife!
Thrice happy, indeed, since he's sure of salvation!
For if Heaven's to be gained, we are told that this life Must be spent in Repentance and Mortification."
Jan. 20, 1830.

The author of the volume, which is a curious Irish nationalist production, was "John Cornelius O'Callaghan, Esq., a 'literary agitator.'" C. W. 43, Union Grove, Clapham, S.

The maxim "Cœpisse," &c., is certainly older than Anonius. See Horace, 1 Epis. ii. 40 —

"Dimidium facti qui cœpit habet: sapere aude: Incipe."

Where does the other maxim referred to in the same note come from, "Bis dat qui cito dat"?

O. P. Q.

APPLE-PIE ORDER (3rd S. vii. 133, 209.)—A lady has very kindly informed me that she remembers being told by an ancestress, the custom many years ago was to take off the top crust of an apple-pie, to mash up the fruit with sugar and cream, and then to cut the crust into triangular pieces like sippets, and stick them ends downwards into the fruit in various patterns, as circles, crowns, stars, &c. This seems to be a more probable origin for the phrase than any yet offered. A. A.

AN OLD RAPIER (3rd S. vi. 308, 521.)—By a strange oversight I had not observed, until three months after its appearance, MR. W. J. BERNHARD SMITH's obliging reply to my query. I would add that the blade is not flat, but rounded on both sides. What is the meaning of the four perforations in the blade immediately below the hilt? Were they to make the thrust more deadly if it reached as far? Being unskilled in such matters, I will not venture to describe the hilt, but I send an accurate drawing of it, with this further query, and hope it may reach my correspondent's hands.

ALFRED GATTY, D.D.

TRUFFLES (3rd S. vii. 167.)—Truffles are plentiful occasionally in Hampshire. In the village of Cheriton, about three miles south of Alresford, when I was a boy, there were two families whose principal means of support depended upon the success of their truffle-hunting; and, remarkable enough, their name—like that of the man said by MR. M. A. LOWER to come from the West Indies—was Leach. At present there are three brothers in the village who follow the occupation of their sire. These men do not, as your correspondent says, bribe the dogs by giving them meat to prevent their eating the luxury, but they give them a piece of bread now and then as a reward for their discoveries. Nor do the dogs, as might be inferred from the communication, get possession of the truffles. They find them, and their master digs them up with a pike he carries on purpose. The dogs used by these men are white ones, very similar to the French poodle. The hunting is not limited to any particular places; but in all the hedgerows round, and fir plantations are the truffles found.

J. W. BATCHELOR.

MY (3rd S. vii. 164.)—I am very glad to find from MELETES' reply, that the use of the egotistical my is not universal; but that it is very prevalent I know by fatal experience; and surely Thackeray's ridicule of the Irish for their adherence to Walker, as I may term it, was proof sufficient of my statement. Let not, however, the neophonists lose courage; they are sure to carry the day; for novelty, however erroneous, always beats old-fashion, however logical and correct. Has not kerb-stone nearly driven curb-stone out of use? While we write epigram, diagram, &c., have we not programme, à la Française? Do we not meet, even in books of some pretence, to clearly see, to truly narrate, and such like atrocities? I could, of course, find many other instances of the triumph of ignorance over knowledge, but where would be the use?

THOS. KNIGHTLEY.

RAGUSA (3rd S. vii. 180.)—Triers, in his Einkleitung zu der Wapen-Kunst (p. 785), gives the arms of Ragusa thus:—

"In silbernem Felde drey blaue rechte Schräg-Balken mit dem Worte LIBERTAS, welches mit golden Buchstaben quer durch geschrieben ist." (Arg. three bendlets az.; over all, the word "Libertas" in fess or.)

He adds: "Es ist nicht ausgemacht zu welcher Zeit diese Republique entstanden."

J. WOODWARD.

HOLY-WATER-SPRINKLE (3rd S. vii. 200.)—This was a weapon of the mace kind, and was another name for the "Morning-star," the head being furnished with a number of radiating spikes. In the Tower Survey of 1547, penes Soc. Ant., is the following entry:—

"Great holly water sprinkles, 118; Holly water sprinkles with gounes in th' ende, 7: Little holly water sprinkles, 392: Holly water sprinkle with three gounes in the topp, 1."

This is no doubt the MS. cited by Grose (ii. 286), and the last item, in all probability, the arm called King Henry VIII.'s Walking Staff, still preserved in the Tower. See Hewitt's Anc. Arm. iii. 604.

S. D. S.

This weapon is properly a long club of wood; its head armed with iron spikes, standing out in all directions at right angles from its axis. It was a rude implement, mostly used in the defence of breaches and trenches, and sometimes called a "morning star." The name was derived from the resemblance to the "Aspergillum" for holy water, which is much in the form of a bottle-brush. A modification of the weapon was, and perhaps is still used, by the watchmen in Denmark and Sweden. It may be remembered that the late Marquis of Waterford was nearly killed by a Scandinavian watchman, armed with a "morning star." That instrument was, however, described at the time as a long staff with a spiked shoe, and leaden ball at its top. The spiked head was probably thought too formidable to be entrusted to a guardian of the peace. There are examples in the Tower, and elsewhere, of match-lock guns combined with the weapon; but they formed no part of the "morning star" proper, which was simply a thick staff, or club, studded with iron points.

W. J. BERNHARD SMITH.

Temple.

BURIAL IN COFFINS (3rd S. vii. 113.)—It would seem from the apparently studious avoidance of any mention of coffins in the Burial Service of the Church of England, that at the period of compilation of that service, uncoffined interments were common. "Corpse" or "body" alone is spoken of. Sir Henry Spelman says in his Works, interments without coffins were common amongst the humbler classes even so late as the year 1650. Some decent involucre, or coverings, were deemed to be necessary, but this was all.

GEO. VICKERS.

Shimpling, Bury St. Edmunds.

KING OF JERUSALEM (3rd S. vii. 202.)—My query, what present or more recent potentates call themselves by the above title, awaits an answer. In proclamations, or coins, I see that the King of Sardinia, King of Naples, Queen of Spain, and Grand Duke of Tuscany, all claim the title. Have the rulers of Austria, Germany, Turkey, France, or any other kingdom, since Frederick II. in 1229-39, in public deeds or coins, been so styled?

E.

The only reigning sovereigns of Europe who use this title, and habitually quarter the arms of Jerusalem with their own, are, I believe, the Emperor of Austria and the King of Italy. The other potentates who have, or have had, pretensions to the sovereignty are, the Pope, the King of Spain, the King of France, the King of the Two Sicilies, the Duke of Lorraine, and the Duke of Mantua. The Republic of Venice, on the involuntary abdication of the throne of Cyprus by Catarina Cornaro, the last queen, annexed her dominion to the Republic; and at her decease, whatever rights she possessed over the throne of Jerusalem, escheated to the state of which she was an adopted daughter, and the arms of Jerusalem, with those of the kingdom of Cyprus, were incorporated with those of the Venetian Republic.

JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

In answer to the latter half of E.'s question, think that at the present time no potentate bear the title of King of Jerusalem. The title was born by the kings of Sardinia, and on their coins generally ran as follows (legend of a Doppia in full 1773)—"Victor Amadeus Dei Gratia Rex Sardiniae Cypriae et Ierosolymae."

The arms of Jerusalem are in the first quarter of the full Sardinian shield quartered with Cyprus, Armenia, and Luxemburg—rather a funny combination.

A year or so ago the King of Sardinia changed his title to Re d'Italia, and then I should imagine dropt the inferior titles.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

SEALS OF GEORGE ABBOT, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (3rd S. vii. 179).—MR. HOWARD wishes to be referred to an impression of the archiepiscopal and personal seals of Archbishop Abbot. Among the muniments of Lord Willoughby de Broke at Compton Verney in this county, I found some years ago the appointment of his ancestor, Sir Robert Heath, to be one of the Governors of the Charter House, signed and sealed by this Archbishop, January 26, 1 Charles I. (1625); in others, his personal seal, of course, is used, and I enclose a very rough sketch of it; it is a plain shield, bearing a chevron between three pears.

E. H. SHIRLEY.

PASSAGE FROM "MACBETH" (3rd S. vii. 51.) In old English Dictionaries, probably in Bailey's, the word blonket, which means a thunder-cloud, is given. It may be that this is the original reading of the passage.

B. T.

WORKS ON SATAN AND HIS DWELLING-PLACE (3rd S. vi. 533; vii. 144.)—I have now before me two editions of the work of Dr. Swindon, one being the second ed. 1727, described by your Kentish correspondent, and the other an anonymous edition of 1724; full title, An Enquiry into the Nature and Place of Hell. London: Printed by W. Bowyer, for W. Taylor at the Ship in Paternoster Row, and H. Clements at the Half-moon in St. Paul's Churchyard, 1714. Frontispiece of the sun taken from Kircherus and Scheinerus. Are these works scarce? The edition of 1727 only is mentioned in Bohn's Lowndes, and not as a second edition.

A. B. MIDDLETON.

The Close, Salisbury.

HERALDRY (3rd S. vii. 134.)—I am very much obliged to your correspondent H. W. T. for having called attention to an error in my Blazon of Episcopacy. The coat of Bishop Lyndewode ought there to have been given as a chevron between three leaves, the latter clause having slipped out in the transcription of my memoranda for the press. The coat will thus be found to be the same as that upon the brass for John de Lyndewode (of 1421), at Linwood, co. Lincoln. I have examined the edition of the Provinciale referred to by H. W. T., and I cannot believe that the coat there engraved is intended for the arms of the bishop; as in addition to the supporters, a most unlikely adjunct to episcopal arms, they are surmounted by a close helmet. I hope to be able to discover to whom they really appertain; but if intended even for the bishop's, I should prefer the contemporary evidence of his own Register to the coat attributed more than half a century after his decease.

Had your correspondent's friend who made the extract from my book looked back to the name before Linwood's, Thomas Rodburn, 1433 to 1442, he might have saved himself the trouble of correcting the obvious misprint of 1422 for 1442.

W. K. RILAND BEDFORD.

Pew (3rd S. vii. 155.)—A pew, somewhat similar to the one described by MR. FERREY, is extant in the small church of Shellesley Walsh, in the valley of the Teme, Worcestershire. It is enclosed with richly carved woodwork, to the height of the rood screen to which it is adjacent, on the south side of the small nave; and, I presume, was the seat in ancient times of the lord of the manor.

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

DR. MOISEY (3rd S. i. 290.)—Perceiving that the query of MR. R. INGLIS concerning this gentleman has never been replied to, I mentioned the fact to a friend; who, I conceived, might possess a "note" upon the subject. We at once dived into his MS. collection:—

"MS. S—20. Othello and Il Bondorani, see Bill. The 'Othello' of this evening is said to have been a Mr. Moisey, of the medical profession—he failed decidedly." [Saturday, December 20, 1800.]

This immediately caused a search to be made high and low—"up stairs and down stairs," in the literal sense of the word; and amongst almost endless histrionic archives, stowed away in huge cupboards, the following extracts formed the total result of our searchings:—

"19. [20].—Othello. A gentleman of the name of Moisey, whom we had only an opportunity of seeing in one scene, made his debut in this arduous character. We understand that he spoke with 'good emphasis and discretion;' but having other prospects in life, and his success not being such as to promise a very lucrative engagement, he has prudently resigned all thoughts of the stage as a profession."—The Monthly Mirror, 1801, vol. ix. p. 55.

"20. [December, 1800]. A Gentleman of the Faculty (of the name of Moisey) made his debut at Covent Garden in the part of Othello. Of the expression of his countenance, the disguise did not permit us to judge: his person appeared to be genteel, and above the middle size. His action was rather free than graceful, though he trod the stage not without dignity; but whatever merits he may possess, they were all insufficient to compensate for a voice without volume or compass, having neither modulation for scenes of pathos, nor strength for declamation. The impression it made on us was similar to what we should have received from a person enacting Othello in a small parlour, and restraining his voice lest he should be heard by the people overhead. We need only add that, though he was not loudly censured, his reception was such as we think would not encourage him to renew the attempt, at least in the higher walks of Tragedy."—The European Magazine, 1801, vol. xxxix. p. 40.

EDWIN ROFFE.

Somers Town.

PHYSICIANS' FEES (2nd S. v. 495.)—Sir Alexander Croke, in his edition of the Regimen Sanitatis Salernitanum gives quotations from some works written in imitation of the subjoined celebrated compound of poetry and physic, which is thus prefaced:—

"The following prudential advice, given by Otho of Cremona to medical practitioners, enters too deeply into the mysteries of the profession to have been designed for the use of the profane:—

"De prudentiâ Medici sumentis pro labore.

"Non didici gratis, nec sagax musa Hippocratis
Ægris in stratis serviet absque datis.
Sumpta solet care multum medicina juvare,
Si quæ datur gratis—nil habet utilitatis.
Res dare pro rebus, pro verbis verba solemus.
Pro vanis verbis montanis utimur herbis,
Pro caris rebus, pigmentis et speciebus.
Est medicinalis Medicis data regula talis,
Vt dicatur 'da, da,' dum profert languidus 'ha, ha.'
Da medicis primo medium, medio, nihil imo;
Dum dolet infirmus, Medicus sit pignore firmus;
Instanter quære nummos, ut pignus, habere.
Fœdus et antiquum conservat pignus amicum,
Nam si post quæris, quærens semper eris."

JUVENA.

H. II. PRINCE FRANCIS RHODOCANAKIS (3rd S. iv. 453.)—Besides the History of the Ancient Dukes and other Sovereigns of the (Greek) Archipelago, &c., mentioned in "N. & Q.," he wrote many other literary and philosophical works; among which may be noticed the following biographical one, as its perusal will greatly assist your correspondent DE RHODES in his researches regarding the state of the Byzantine nobility after the conquest of Constantinople by the Turks:—

"Les Hommes Nobles et Illustres de l'Isle de Chio; écrit par Son Altesse Monseigneur le Prince François D. Rhodocanakis,* Duc de la Tour Rhodocanaki, Seigneur de la dite Isle, etc.; et adressé à S. A. le très-illustre Prince Gaston, Duc d'Anjou, etc. [afterwards Duc d'Orléans, younger brother of H. M. King Louis XIII. of France]; à Paris, Sam. Thiboust, 1620, in 4^e."

* He assumed the family name of his wife after his own, two years after his marriage; and he dropped it a few years afterwards, having ascertained that her only brother, and consequently the inheritor of the titles and name of Justiniani, had not been killed in the battle, as reported. (See p. 5 of the above-mentioned biographical work.)

It contains the biographies, not only of all the members of the author's family who flourished before him, but of many others of the nobility of the island of Chios, who distinguished themselves by their talents.

C. R.

NOTE FOR SPANISH SCHOLARS (3rd S. vii. 73.)—I beg to submit the following, as a more correct translation of Cervantes' sentence than that given by MR. PLATT:—

"And observe, Sancho, that those works of charity which are done reluctantly and lazily, possess no merit, and are of no value."

H. W. T.

FAG: A REMNANT (3rd S. vii. 110.)—This word is now of common use; but the original term for an end, strip, or remnant, was the Saxon dag. In the History of Henley (p. 256), is an account of the goods of John Knight, in 1438, which were forfeited by the killing of his wife: "In primis j daggon de Walssh clothe, verid color." And in Chaucer's Sompner's Tale, the mendicant friar begs:—

"Or yeve us of your brawne, if ye have any,
A daggon of your blanket, leve dame
Or suster dere."

JOHN S. BURN.

The Grove, Henley.

WATERHOUSE OF KIRTON (3rd S. vii. 138.)—The county of Lincoln is divided into three "parts," namely, Lindsey, Kesteven, and Holland; but, until the answer to P.'s query, I had never heard of either the "parts of Lindsey, or Holland," being again subdivided, so that there should be a district known as Low Lindsey.* P. may possibly feel interested in learning that there is, in the church of Kirton in Lindsey, the recumbent figure of a knight in chain armour, which may probably be that of Sir Gilbert Waterhouse. It was discovered, some four years ago, deeply embedded under the floor of the church at the eastern end of the south aisle; and, after narrowly escaping a "restoration," found a resting-place upon the top of the old stone altar of Catholic times.

I may add, that the name of "Waterhouse" may frequently still be met with in villages adjoining the River Trent, which is only a few miles distant from the town of Kirton, in Lindsey.

WM. E. HOWLETT.

Kirton in Lindsey.

PHILIP VAN MACHEREN (3rd S. vii. 135.)—

"A marine painter, who lived at Middelbourg towards the end of the seventeenth century. In 1672 he entered one of the vessels of war of the republic, for the express purpose of seeing a naval combat—a subject which he delighted to represent. He also made several voyages in [* "Holland is divided into two parts, the Upper and the Lower; the Upper contains the two wapentakes of Skirbeck and Kirton; and the Lower only the wapentake of Ellow."—Magna Britannia, 1720, ii. 1406.—ED.]

Danish and Swedish vessels for the same purpose. His works are rarely seen with his name; nor are there any further particulars recorded of him, except that Balkema says he died at Amsterdam, and Immerzeel at Rotterdam."—Bryan's Dictionary of Painters, London, 1849.

'Allee's.

Dublin.

ENGLISHMEN BURIED ABROAD (3rd S. vii. 120.)—Some years ago, visiting a school-girl relative, in the English convent at Bruges, I was admitted to its beautiful chapel, where I copied the following:—

I.

"D. O. M.

Hic

manet depositum

COR

Generosæ Domine

MARIE ANNÆ GIFFORD,
filie Joannis Gifford equitis
aurati et illustrissimæ
Domine Catharinæ Middleton.

Ætatis suæ 58 obiit

Die 23 Aprilis, An.

Dom. 1759.

R. I. P."

II.

"Deo optimo maximo.

Hic prope jacet

Prænobilis Puella

CAROLINA MARIA TALBOT,

Filia nobilissimi Domini Caroli Talbot ex antiquâ et nobilissimâ familiâ de

Shrewsbury,

et illustris Domine Mariæ

Mostyn.

Annos nata 16

obiit ad hunc conventum,

Die 10 Januarii, 1782.

Hoc marmor in testimonium sui amoris afflicta mater
poni jussit.

R. I. P."

I noted at the same time two other epitaphs in this chapel: the one on "Lucia Theresa Herbert de Powis," professed 1693, deceased 1744; and the other over "Maria Augustina More," a descendant of the great Sir Thomas More, ending: "Sacrae huic Domui annos præfuit 41. R. I. P."

JOHN W. BONE.

41, Bedford Square, W.C.

QUEEN OF QUERUMANIA (3rd S. vi. 287.)—On the death of Chrononhotonthologos, Aldiberontiphosphormio and Rigdum Funnidos are about to fight for the hand of the Queen Fadlodinida, who stops them with—

"Well, gentlemen, to make the matter easy,
I'll have you both, and that I hope will please ye."

She afterwards changes her mind, and settles the matter more in accordance with the court-morals of those days than of the present.

In the early editions of Tom Thumb, the passages imitated are given in the notes. No such assistance is given in any copy of Chrononhotonthologos which I have seen. Some parts look very like parodies. Are they such, or only general imitations of the grand style? W. D.

THOMAS SANDEN, M.D. (3rd S. vii. 74, 148.)—He was an eminent physician at Chichester, and the author of the—

"Three Discourses: 1. On the Use of Books. 2. On the Result and Effects of Study. 3. On the Elements of Literary Taste," &c.

He also published Strictures on Dr. Dawson's Treatment of Acute Rheumatism, 12mo, 1781; and contributed articles to Duncan's Annals of Medicine. His name will be found in the Biographical Dictionary of Living Authors, 8vo, 1816.

F. B.

Caton.

"IN THE TIMES" (3rd S. vii. 153.)—The poem thus entitled will be found in London Society for November, 1862, p. 449. The poem is anonymous, and is illustrated by J. D. Watson.

CUTHBERT BEDE.

The verses so entitled appeared in London Society, vol. ii. 449. MR. GASPEY probably has access to this publication; but if not, I shall be happy to furnish him with a copy of the lines.

ST. SWITHIN.

CARABOO (3rd S. vii. 190.)—The utility of MR. BATES's interesting communication would be enhanced if Caraboo's maiden name were given. Cannot your correspondent MR. PRYCE supply it, as also the exact date of her death? S. Y. R.

I well recollect the imposture of "The Princess Caraboo" in Bristol. My father was mainly instrumental in her detection. As a linguist, he had been invited to pay her a visit, with a view to ascertaining what language she spoke. When he entered the room some gentlemen had just placed before her an Oriental MS., making signs to her to read it. She at once began to read it with great apparent facility, and aloud. My father observed quietly to a gentleman near him, but loud enough to be heard by "Caraboo," that the language of that MS. was read, like Hebrew, from right to left. In a few minutes she had changed her mode of pretending to read, and now traced the words from right to left. This opened the eyes of those in the room to her imposition, and she was soon forced to own it. She afterwards said that when she saw my father enter the room she dreaded him. He was persuaded from the beginning that she was an impostor, and probably his countenance and manner indicated such persuasion. I remember that, among other tricks, she used to go upon the roof of the house every day to worship the sun.

F. C. H.

WINTHROP FAMILY (3rd S. vii. 100.)—Corrections of Typographical Errors: Second column, sixth line, for "Sindall" read Lindall, and the same on twenty-first line. On line twenty, omit the comma between Gurdon and Saltonstall: the former being the Christian name, as we term it, but as the Americans (I think more properly) term it, the given name.

A late writer, in speaking of the Winthrop family, has assumed that John Winthrop (only son of Wait Still Winthrop) had returned to England. I presume in consequence of his death occurring at Sydenham, in Kent. Such, however, was not the case; he was merely on a visit to England (leaving his wife and daughters in New England), attending to a law-suit that he had against Samuel Sparrow and others, arising from a contract with these parties to work a blacklead mine on his estate on Long Island, near New York city. He was accompanied by his son, John Still Winthrop; and they were for some time, between 1737 and 1743, residing with Mrs. Henrietta Hyde, "in the parish of St. Mary-le-bone," widow of Nathaniel Hyde of Harriott, in Hampshire, and second cousin of John Still Winthrop. The son returned to New London; and the cousin (Mrs. Hyde) went to New London, probably in company with him, and there resided till her death. She was the daughter of Robert Woodward, D.D., Dean of Salisbury. Her grandmother's sister was the wife of Wait Still Winthrop, and mother of John Winthrop, the father of John Still. It is presumed that Nathaniel Hyde was related to the Hydcs, Earls of Clarendon: Sir Lawrence Hyde, uncle of the first Earl of Clarendon, residing at the Close in Salisbury.

I shall be glad if any of the readers of "N. & Q." can inform me whether a Nathaniel Hyde was a grandson of Sir Lawrence. Robert, second son of Sir Lawrence, was Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and died in 1605; and Alexander, the fifth son, was Bishop of Salisbury, and died in 1667.

Mrs. Hyde had three children, who all died in infancy, or very young. An interesting portrait of her and her children is in the possession of Thomas C. Winthrop, Esq., of New York city.

GEO. ADLARD.

Barnsbury.

COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK (3rd S. vii. 94, 169.)—I doubt very much whether S. P. V. has hit upon the right person. I think it much more likely that the Countess of Suffolk, to whom a portrait by Zuccaro has been assigned, should be Catherine, the second wife of Thomas Howard, first Earl of Suffolk of that name. But if X. will kindly furnish a description of the portrait to which his inquiry relates, the problem might easily be solved.

In the collection at Gorhambury there was, and probably there still is, a full-length portrait of the Countess of Suffolk above adverted to. She there appears as a lady of well-developed embonpoint, and altogether an easily recognisable personage. Who was the painter?

In the collection at Castle Howard there was, born near Halifax, in Yorkshire. The first of which he was a member came from Brabant, and settled and acquired in the neighbourhood of Halifax, temp. I. Branches of the family lived at Swift Hoyle House, Light Hazels, and Hollings, same locality. They continued to rank as there till the end of the eighteenth century. One representative of the family is Frederick W. Hoyle, of Ferham House, near Rotherham, who bears for arms, ermine, a mullet sable; crest, an eagle's head erased proper; and another branch, Richard Hoyle, of Denton Hall, near Newcastle, bears ermine a mullet or; crest, a griffin's head erased. I am not aware that any memoir of the family of Hoyle has ever been written.

RANGIORA.

ANONYMOUS (3rd S. vii. 109.)—The Meditations of a Divine Soul, 1703, inquired about by Mr. Lloyd, is a work of Charles Povey's, and was published again in 1705. The dreamy author was mighty proud of this curious compound; in his Torments after Death, seventh edition, 1742, he says,—

"My work entitled Meditations of a Divine Soul (ten thousand copies of which have been sold at four shillings each) contains several tenets of atheism," &c.

Povey's books are numerous. I have before brought some of them to notice in "N. & Q.", and hope, as his name is again on the tapis, that some of your curious contributors will ventilate through the same channel any notes they may have about the life or works of this remarkable man, who died in 1742 or '43, at the great age of ninety.

J. O.

The Dramas (five not six) of the Princess Amalie of Saxony, were introduced to the English public by the late Mrs. Anna Jameson, under the title of Social Life in Germany, 2 vols. 1840, Saunders and Ottley. My copy is one of a second issue published by G. Routledge in 1848, and has Mrs. Jameson's name on the title-page. ABHBA will find the translation attributed to her in Men of the Time, p. 838, ed. 1857, Kent and Co. (late Bogue).

ARCHIMEDES.

HUGH MORRELL (3rd S. vii. 200) was a merchant at Exeter; and afterwards, for several years, agent at Paris for the English government. It seems that he was residing at Dover in November, 1602; and we find him mentioned in a letter of Dorset to Secretary Bennet, in which it is probable that he was then

ii. 61; and

Dom. State Papers, &c.

iii. 71.

C. H. & I. N. M.

Cambridge.

OLD HOUSE AT HASTINGS (3rd S. vii. 199.)—The woodcut facing p. 100, in the 15th volume of the Sussex Arch. Collections, is one of the old house of which Mr. Prout made the sketch in 1815. The woodcut has his monogram, and the date. In my day, the house (which stood at the extreme eastern entrance of the town, not precisely in High Street, but eastward of the space where All Saints Street and High Street diverge,) was used as a place for storing wool.

WM. DURRANT COOPER.

"STILL WATERS RUN DEEP" (3rd S. vii. 156.) Is not the following line from Shakspeare's Second Part of Henry VI., Act III. Scene I. the original of this phrase?—

"Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep."

E. R.

"Vada sonant, alta quiescent."

By whom written?

R. W. F.

FORGED ASSIGNATS (3rd S. vi. 217.)—The late MR. GEORGE OFFOR gave me for my Dartford collections an assignat, the paper for which was supposed to have been made at Dartford. It purports to be an

"ASSIGNAT de cent francs
Série
621

No.

237.

"Ogé."*

The border of the assignat has classic emblems. On the top of the assignat is printed, in lower-case type, about the size of that known in England as bourgeois (but the printing was certainly done in France, and with type cast from French matrices): "Hypothéqué sur les domaines nationaux;" and at the foot, "Créé le 18 nivose l'an 3^e de la République française." On the sides, in small capitals, upright:

"LA LOI PUNIT DE MORT LE CONTRE-FAC-TEUR."

"LA NATION RÉCOM-PENSE LE DÉNON-CIA-TEUR."

The hyphens show where the words have been divided in upright columns. MR. OFFOR, in the note he sent to me with the assignat, said:

* The signature "Ogé" is printed in script character in the centre, from a small wood block. At the end the accented é is a flourish, which might have been intended for either a Q or L.

"The one enclosed is the kind said to be the forgery. It was pasted tight down on a sheet of paper. Soaking it to get it off has injured the stamp [this damage it has now partially recovered]; otherwise it is in fine condition, with the water-marks very perfect. The cap of liberty [these are on the opposite top corners] was a good emblem." "I have two large sheets, showing every form of assignat, with emblems," &c.

Mr. Finch, who made the paper for the forged assignats at the Dartford paper mills, has repeatedly told me that he entered into a contract with a stationer in St. Paul's churchyard to make the paper. The moulds were sold by Mr. Hubbard, the auctioneer, in 1832, after the failure of Mr. Towgood, who, till then, occupied the mills. For further particulars, vide my father's History of Dartford, p. 233*, 310.

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

Dartford.

REV. JOHN LAWSON (3rd S. vi. 311, 439.)—A memoir of this distinguished geometer, by T. T. Wilkinson, Esq., F.R.A.S., &c., will be found in Alfred John Dunkin's Archæological Mine, vol. i. p. 109. A.

BELL CRACKED (3rd S. vii. 169.)—I am happy to be able to give MR. ELLACOMBE a little information on this subject. Several years ago I paid a visit to the church at Hanbury, near Burton-on-Trent, and ascended the tower, in which a new set of bells had recently been hung. I was then informed that, on the completion of the restoration of the church, the workmen employed obtained permission to sound the bells in honour of the architect. One of them, by way of a practical joke, thinking to deaden the sound, suddenly clasped his legs around one of the bells at the moment when his comrade struck it. He succeeded beyond his wishes; for the bell cracked on receiving the blow, and had to be recast. On some surprise being expressed at this accident, the founder observed, that a piece of packthread tied tightly round a bell would have produced the same result. The story made an impression on my mind at the time, and I am now glad that I remember it. W. J. BERNHARD SMITH.

Temple.

PEPYS'S MEMOIRS (3rd S. vii. 93, 171.)—I have little doubt that the peculiar expressions, occurring in the printed version of Pepys's Diary, are due to want of care in decyphering the shorthand characters in which the original is written. The stenographic system used by Pepys was that known as "Rich's;" and one peculiarity of it is, that the letter s, when terminating a word, is denoted by a small dot placed under the preceding consonant. Very probably experienced writers of the system often omitted this dot, trusting to the general context to render the meaning sufficiently precise; and I think it extremely likely, that a minute examination of the MS. would show that this has led to most of the peculiarities of phraseology alluded to by your correspondent JAYDEE. I would venture to suggest that, in case a new edition of the Diary should be contemplated, the present printed text ought to be diligently compared with and corrected by the original shorthand MS.

In offering the above remarks, I have no desire to disparage the labours of the Rev. John Smith, the original decypherer of the Diary. He appears, on the whole, to have performed a very tedious and difficult task in an extremely satisfactory manner. Indeed to him belongs the chief merit of giving the inimitable Diary to the public: for, though the late Lord Braybrooke has gained all the credit for doing so, his sole share in the work consisted in making omissions from Mr. Smith's transcript, and adding the foot-notes.

GAMALIEL EVANS.

"SEDES STERCORARIA" (3rd S. vii. 102.)—See the preface to Peter Langtoft's Chronicle, p. xli., where Hearne quotes an ancient MS., entitled "The Ceremonies of the Holy Church of Rome," giving a curious account of what takes place on the occasion of the newly-elected Pope's visit to the Lateran. E. H. A.

WHITBREAD FAMILY (3rd S. vii. 35.)—There were two distinct families in Sussex, temp. Edward III. The one inquired for by your correspondent, as being of the German family "Weitbrecht," was probably of Pevensey, where Stephen "Witberd" was a resident freeman in 1342. They were distinct from the Witbreds who were freemen of Seaford. WM. DURRANT COOPER.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Polychronicon Ranulphi Higden Monachi Cestrensis; together with the English Translations of John Trevisa, and of an Unknown Writer of the Fifteenth Century. Edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., &c. (Vol. I.) Published under the Authority of the Master of the Rolls. (Longman.)

This edition of the Polychronicon of the worthy monk of Chester, to whom we owe not only this curious and interesting work, but the equally curious and interesting Series of Chester Miracle Plays, promises to be one of the most valuable of the Series of Chronicles now in the course of publication under the authority of the Master of the Rolls. In the first place it will furnish English students with a genuine text of Ranulph Higden; to this is added the translation by Trevisa, a work of great interest to English philologists; and, lastly, a more recent English translation, now printed for the first time from a MS. in the British Museum, No. 2261, in the Harleian Collection. The edition was originally entrusted to Archdeacon Hardwick; but in consequence of his lamented death, has been transferred to Mr. Churchill Babington, who is obviously well qualified to do full justice to Higden and his translators.

Historical Narrative of certain Events that took place in the Kingdom of Great Britain in the Month of July, in the Year of Our Lord 1553. Written by P. V. Now first reprinted from the Latin. (Bell & Daldy.)

A reprint and translation of an interesting cotemporary tract, written it is supposed, by Peter Vermilly, alias Peter Martyr, for the purpose of showing that the death of Edward VI. was not the result of natural causes, but accelerated by unfair means.

Atalanta in Calydon: a Tragedy. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. (Moxon & Co.)

Moulded on the form of the ancient tragedy, and introduced by a long tribute, in Greek verse, to the memory of Walter Savage Landor, this very able and powerfully written drama does not present temptations to general readers. But the time will come when its merits will be widely recognised.

A Dream of Idleness and other Poems. By W. Cosmo Monkhouse. (Moxon & Co.)

A little volume, which shows that the writer is one who thinks deeply, and finds utterance for his thoughts in graceful and flowing verse.

The Herald and Genealogist. Edited by J. Gough Nichols, F.S.A. Part XIII. (Nichols & Son.)

The new number of this periodical, which stands in such high favour with genealogists, opens with the first of a series of interesting papers on the Origin and Development of Coat Armour by the editor, which will be found novel and instructive. The number contains also some good papers on the Bibliography of Heraldry, Historical and Heraldic Cards, the Cary Family, &c.

The London Diocese Book for 1865, containing a Variety of Information for Clergy and Laity. By John Hassard, Private Secretary to the Bishop. (Rivingtons.)

A little volume, carefully compiled, containing much more information respecting the ecclesiastical arrangements of the diocese of London, both for the Clergy and Laity, than was contained in its predecessor, The London Diocesan Calendar.

Stammering and Stuttering: their Nature and Treatment. By James Hunt. (Sixth Edition.) (Longman.)

The sixth edition of a work, which all ought to consult who have friends afflicted with impediments of speech.

Notes on the South Lancashire Dialect. By J. A. Picton, F.S.A.

This curious and interesting pamphlet has just come to hand. On the title-page are the warning words, "printed for private circulation," which is as much as to say to the critics "procul estote." Our present impression is, if the author will venture to make the brochure public, we should certainly spare a good word for the little work. If he chooses to maintain his privacy, it is not for us to invade it.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

NEWMAN'S APOLOGIA. Part VI.
COCKRELL'S PINDAR. Part III. NEWMAN AND ISTERMIAN ODES.
WILMOTT'S SACRED POETS. 2nd Series.
SIR A. GRANT'S ARISTOTLE. Vol. I.
JOURNAL OF CLASSICAL AND SACRED PHILOLOGY.
E. GRISWELL'S TRANSLATION OF CUMUS.
THE CLOISTER AND THE CROWN. Wix, 1834.

Wanted by R. S. D., Union Society, Cambridge.

TAPPAN'S TREATISE ON THE WILL. († Boston, Mass.)

Wanted by the Rev. J. Maskell, Tower Hill, London, E.C.

THE LIFE OF ROBERT RAIKER, THE FOUNDER OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Wanted by Mr. John Handcock, 26 & 27, Commercial Street, Leeds.

Choir Books (early), especially any containing Music by Dr. Fairfax and other early English Composers.

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, 4to. Barker, 1620.

small 12mo, 1660.

Edinburgh, 1637. Any of them perfect or imperfect.

MISALS AUGUSTINER. Meyre, 1555.

Any edition by Radhalt.

CANON MISAL. Folio on vellum.

Wanted by Rev. J. C. Jackson, 5, Chatham Place East, Hackney, N.E.

Notices to Correspondents.

J. C. (Cambridge.) Consult Truster, or some of the other commentators on Hogarth.

OUR SHAKESPEARIAN CORRESPONDENTS will, we hope, not be offended at our postponing their communications until Saturday, April 22.

T. D. DIVINE. Heraldic Anomalies was written by the Rev. Edward Nares, D.D., the biographer of Lord Burlington.

J. B. ROWLANDS, whose query respecting the "Delalaunde" family appears in "N. & Q." 3rd S. v. 377, is requested to say where a letter will reach him.

SCOTTS. The best edition of Alexander Ross's Helenore; or the Fortunate Shepherdess, was published by his grandson, the Rev. Alexander Thompson (Dundee, 12mo, 1812), to which is prefixed a Life of the Author. There is also an excellent account of Alex. Ross in Chambers's Biog. Dict. of Eminent Scotsmen, iv. 198.

P. (Oxford.) The New Monthly Magazine commenced January, 1814. It was a separate series that commenced in January, 1821.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 4d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. BATES, 22, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all Communications FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

ANOTHER CURS OF COUGH BY DR. LOCOCK'S POLMONIC WAFERS.—"8, Wilson Terrace, St. Leonard Street, Bromley, E.—I can myself testify that they have relieved me of a most severe cough, so bad that I was unable to lie down, and I shall do my best to recommend them. Wm. NICHOLAS." They give instant relief to asthma, consumption, coughs, colds, and all disorders of the breath, throat, and lungs. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. per box. Sold by all Druggists.

MR. EDWARD THELWALL, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, reads with pupils preparing for the Universities, the Army, the Civil Service, &c., at his Residence, 7, Carlisle Terrace, Kensington.

This Day, 8vo, price 1s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE'S EDITORS and COMMENTATORS. By the REV. W. R. ARROWSMITH, Incumbent of Old St. Pancras.

London: J. RUSSELL SMITH, 36, Soho Square.

RARE BOOKS, BLACK-LETTER BOOKS,

Miscellaneous Books, Curious Books, Facsim. Jests, Wit, and Works in most departments of Literature. A NEW CATALOGUE is now ready, sent by post on receipt of a Stamp. THOMAS REET (late ROWELL), 15, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

Libraries and Small Collections of Books purchased. Highest price given. Established nearly a Century.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.—MESSRS. STEVENS BROTHERS, American and Foreign Booksellers, 17, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., receive the DAILY, the SEMI-WEEKLY, and the WEEKLY TRIBUNE by every post, and respectfully solicit Subscriptions and Advertisements.

WHAT WILL THIS COST TO PRINT? is a thought often occurring to literary men, public characters, and persons of benevolent intentions. An immediate answer to the inquiry may be obtained. A SPECIMEN BOOK OF TYPES, and information for authors, sent on application, by

RICHARD BARRETT, 13, Mark Lane, London.

TO THE CLERGY and CHURCHWARDENS.—

STURPICES and COMMUNION LINEN, ALTAR CLOTHS and ROBES for Presentation.—GILBERT J. FRENCH, Bolton, Lancashire. Carriage paid. No Agents.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 171.

NOTES:—Precedency of Bishops' Wives, 273—Folk Lore: Cakes on Palm Sunday—How to prevent a Wound from leaving a Scar—Turkish Folk Lore—Waits at York—Jewish Folk Lore—"Take a Hair of the Dog that bit you"—Dragon in Hertfordshire, 275—Old Agrarian Words, 276—Leeds Dialect, 277—Words used in different Senses—Copy of St. Matthew written by Barnabas—Art in Australia, &c., 278.

QUERIES:—The American Regiment—Viscount Chaworth—Delved, Dove, or Dalf?—Disciple—Power of Franking—Fustian in Naples—The O'Connors of Kerry—"Mabonny," a Cornish Beverage—St. Magnus, Orkney—Powlett M.S.A.: Mary Queen of Scots—Quotations wanted—Thomas Buddiman and John Drummond, M.D.—Roman Tensers—Song—Spinning Jenny—Stained Glass in Cologne Cathedral—Joseph Vien, Artist—Williams Family—Richard Wiseman, Serjeant-Surgeon to Charles II., 279.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Motto of the Arms of Nova Scotia—Reformades—Salt Spilling: alluded to by Classic Writers—"Jerusalem the Golden"—Heraldic, 282.

REPLIES:—William, Son of King Stephen, 283—Voltaire, 284—Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie, ib.—Watte vocat—Malloway, co. Dorset—Stale Mate—Barley—The Mace of Kinale—Goodrich Family, Lincolnshire—The Dodralls Potio—Inscription at Chillingham Castle—American Depreciation of Currency—Massachusetts Stone—Dr. Percy—Lady Tempest's Jury—The Crosses of St. George and St. John—De Beauvoir Family—Slow Tunes and Quick Tunes—Fiennes Family: Saye and Sele—Bampers—Morocco—Medieval Churches in Roman Camps—"Picis Flotans," &c., 285.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

PRECEDENCY OF BISHOPS' WIVES.

The exclusion of the Wives of Bishops from any defined precedence in the social order of Society, has been at various periods subject to remarks and complaints, which in some respects have been considered not altogether unfounded.

The accompanying letter, written many years since, though not publicly avowed, was said to be from the pen of a very eminent Prelate, and as showing his views and arguments upon the subject, may be worthy of preservation in a page of "N. & Q.," as affording all the arguments which could be offered in favour of the exercise of the Grace of the Crown which the writer was anxious to obtain; and which went so far as to suggest the form of an Order, by which he might accomplish the object under royal authority.

In suggesting the rank of daughters of Barons for their Wives, it is singular that the style and title proposed was that of Earls' daughters.

X. Y. Z.

It is said (vide Blackstone, bk. i. c. ii. ed. 14), that "the Bishops are not in strictness held to be Peers of the Realm, but only Lords of Parliament," and (vide Brydson's View of Heraldry, that "the maxims of the municipal Law in contradistinction to that of Chivalry, ascribes Nobility of Blood to none but the Peerage (or Temporal Lords) only," and that, "hence it results that the Spiritual Lords are not Barons by tenure or otherwise, in the same sense wherein the Peers or Secular Lords are, else their Wives and families would certainly share in their honors, though they be not transmissible by inheritance." But this statement is by no means an explanation of the ground for the custom which has hitherto prevailed respecting Bishop's Wives, but merely an ingenious supposition to account for it. It cannot, when compared with the principles, or fact, upon which the Temporal Rights of the Spiritual Lords are founded, be made to apply to the case in point; and the real origin of the custom is to be found in a combination of circumstances which history very fully displays.

It is certain (vide Blackstone, bk. i. c. ii. p. 156, cd. 14) —

"The Archbishops and Bishops hold or are supposed to hold, certain antient Baronies under the King, for William the Conqueror thought proper to change the Spiritual tenure of frank-almoigne or free-alms, under which the Bishops held their lands under the Saxon government, into the Feudal or Norman tenure by Barony, which subjected their estates to all civil charges and assessments from which they were before exempt, and in right of Succession to those Baronies which were unalienable from their respective dignities, the Bishops and Abbots were allowed their Seat in the House of Lords."

"Baronies (vide Brydson) were formerly territorial, but have long become merely personal." Thus it appears that the Bishops sit in the House of Peers not in right of their Bishoprics or Spiritualities (which give their place in Convocation), but in right of the Temporal Baronies annexed to the Bishoprics, whence is derived their title of Spiritual Lords—and this is further proved, by all the Writs of Summons—by their title of Baron, Viscount, or Earl, according to the title attached to each See—by the Ceremonies of Investiture of Temporalities—and by the title of Lordship being given constantly to the Bishops, and not only when in the House of Parliament. It is therefore evident that their Dignity is personal and not merely Official, like that of the Judges in the Courts of Law. "Bishops are comprehended under the denomination of Nobility, and enjoy the privileges common to all Peers." (Vide Porney, Blackstone, Clarendon, Hume, &c.) And although it be allowed that the Spiritual Lords hold their dignities by a "Tenure in some sense different" from the Temporal Lords, it cannot be proved that this difference affects the point of right in question. The Temporal Lords receive the Right of Succession upon their creation, which ennobles their blood, and transmits their honors to their posterity, because theirs are only personal; but the Spiritual Lords cannot receive this Right of Succession because their temporal dignity is unalienably attached to the Bishopric, and therefore their blood is not ennobled. And it is for this reason they are not "in strictness Peers (Pares) of the Realm," viz. because they do not possess this right in common with all other Peers; but in all other respects it is certain "they enjoy the privileges common to all Peers." It may be further observed, in answer to the supposition that Bishops sit in the House of Lords as Lords of Parliament in their Ecclesiastical character, that this is true only in so far as their Ecclesiastical office enables them to hold the Barony annexed to the Bishopric (in token of which Bishops vote in their Episcopal robes, not in their Baronial robes); but it is clearly the Barony only which gives them their Temporal rank.

"When the Parliament (vide Burnet's Hist. of the Reformation, Part ii. Book 1. p. 47) was divided into two Houses, then the Clergy made likewise a Body of their own, and sate in Convocation, which was the third Estate. But the Bishops, having a double capacity, the one of Ecclesiastical Prelature, the other of being the King's Barons, they had a Right to sit with the Lords as a part of their Estate, as well as in Convocation."

Bishops are indeed Barons in a twofold manner, viz., Feudal, in regard of lands as Baronies annexed to their Bishoprics; and by Writ, as being summoned by Writ to Parliament. That the Barony alone gives Bishops their Temporal rank is clear, because Temporal rank cannot be derived from Ecclesiastical Office. It cannot be a part of it—it must be distinct from it, though connected with it by the authority of the Sovereign. In its Origin, and traced from its origin, it will be found to be in nothing different from the Baronies of the Secular Lords, except the right of descent, from the cause above mentioned—(even the now commonly supposed mark of inferiority of Bishops not sitting in Judgment as Peers in all cases, originated in a claim of Privilege.) This Barony therefore must, and in fact does, give Personal Rank.

The point of Personal Rank being ascertained, it follows consequently, that the Wives of Bishops have a right to share in their dignity as Barons, since it is a maxim in Law and in Heraldry that "all Wives participate in the Rank of the Husband, either Personal or Hereditary."

"By Marriage (vide Blackstone, bk. i. c. xv.), the Husband and Wife are one person in Law . . . upon this principle depend almost all the legal rights, duties, and disabilities that either of them acquire by Marriage . . . married women and widows are entitled to the same rank among each other, as their husbands would respectively have borne among themselves, except such rank is merely professional or official."

And to make the case yet stronger, it may be observed, that the Wives of Judges and of Privy Counsellors (an Office held only during Pleasure), take place of the Wives of Baronets. "The Wives of Privy Counsellors, Judges, &c. are to take the same place their husbands do" (Vide Porney's Elements of Heraldry), which rule must include the Wives of Bishops, even if Bishops were only Lords of Parliament, since there is no-where any exception in their disfavor. The rank of Privy Counsellors' Wives has indeed been recently ac-knowledgeed in a very remarkable manner. At the Marriage of the Prince of Wales, the Wives of Privy Counsellors were admitted to the Royal Presence, while Bishops' Wives, though the Wives of Peers of the Realm, were excluded—a circumstance very generally considered as a striking indignity to the Bishops themselves, as well as a glaring proof of the impropriety of the present situation of their Wives. * It was expected that this opportunity would be taken to raise the Wives of Bishops to their proper station in society; and it has been said that the difficulty of fixing the place of Archbishop's Wives prevented it. But this supposed difficulty will be entirely removed by recurring to the foundation of the claim of Archbishops and Bishops to Temporal rank, and to the causes which have hitherto operated against the acknowledgment of the Right of their Wives to share that rank. Thence it will appear evident that in strictness the Wives of Archbishops can only rank as the Wives of Barons. The right to personal rank as Barons, Bishops and Archbishops equally possess, in virtue of original grant and by the laws of the realm; but precedence among the Peers (originally Lords alike) is determined solely by the King's pleasure. When, therefore, King Henry VIII. assigned to the Archbishops their high place in the Table of Precedence, it must be considered as a mark of respect due to their Ecclesiastical character—upon which principle the Spiritual Lords are named before the Secular Lords in all acts of state—but the marriage of Bishops not being allowed when the order of precedence was determined, and the claim of Bishops' Wives to rank being derived from the antient Baronies annexed to the Bishoprics by William I., it seems very clear that the Wives of the Archbishops are not entitled to the same elevation with their husbands in the precedence granted to their Arch-episcopal, and therefore official character; which is a matter quite distinct from their right to rank as the Wives of Barons—a right which they also possess by the laws of the realm, the maxims of heraldry, and the courtesy of England, although it has hitherto lain dormant from a combination of circumstances, which shall be briefly mentioned in order to account for a custom as singular as it is mortifying to the persons concerned, both in its origin and its consequences. At the time of the Reformation the Bishops were not all agreed concerning the important point of marriage; and those Bishops who did marry, married very privately, and kept their wives concealed, and in a sort of obscurity, in order to avoid giving offence to those who, from Popish prejudices in favour of celibacy, questioned the lawfulness of their marrying. Queen Elizabeth's avowed aversion to the marriage of the clergy is well known. She even chose to consider their wives as concubines, and yet on one occasion she confessed the strange impropriety of their situation, though she could not bring herself to allow them any rank. (Vide Strype's Life of Archbishop Parker, Hunne, &c.) In the succeeding reigns the prevailing spirit of Puritanism on one side, and the continual attempts to effect a reconciliation of parties on the other, contributed alike in their turn to lower the rank and importance of Bishops themselves; and it could not therefore be possible for their wives to acquire any new privilege declaratory of rank which it seemed the common object to deny. In a late reign, however, rank was actually promised to the Wives of Bishops; but a circumstance of a peculiar and personal nature postponed the performance of this promise, and a change of Court taking place before that impediment was removed, this promise was left unfulfilled. In the present times, various causes concur to make the acknowledgment of this right politically desirable, and it will be peculiarly hard if, when titles and honors have been so profusely distributed among all descriptions of people, the class of persons who possess a right to them should be suffered to remain in their present humiliating condition, which is now most universally confessed to be more strikingly improper than ever. The condition of Prelates' Wives is, indeed, truly termed humiliating, not only because, according to the wish and design of Queen Elizabeth to throw an odium upon all married Bishops, it does, in fact, resemble the state of "concubinage" rather than that of marriage, since the common privilege enjoyed by all other wives of sharing the personal dignity of their husbands is withheld from them—but because no place being appropriated to them in that society in which they are necessarily led to live, they are thus singularly subjected, by the elevation of their husbands, to the awkward and distressing situation of persons suddenly brought forward into a circle, without being directed to their place, and involuntarily exposed, often without the protection of birth or connexions, to the coldness of disdain, and the impertinence of envy, while they are expected to support the indefinable dignity, of which they cannot but be conscious, of their undefined station—and farther, because the wives of physicians, surgeons, painters, drawing-masters, bankers, merchants, grocers, &c. &c., are continually invested with titles and rank, denied to them, though the Wives of Peers of the Realm; and all the daughters of all Baronets have precedence, however circumstanced, though it sometimes happens (as in an existing case*), that the

* From this it would appear that the letter was written soon after April, 1795.

* At Norwich the Bishop's Chaplain's Wife constantly takes her place as the daughter of a baronet above the Bishop's Lady, though the Bishop himself is of a noble family.

*Wife of the Bishop's Domestic Chaplain thus takes place of the Wife of the Bishop.

(To be concluded in our next.)

FOLK LORE.

CAKES ON PALM SUNDAY.—It has been the custom from time immemorial to mark the return of Palm Sunday at Hentland church, Herefordshire, in a peculiar manner. The minister and congregation receive from the churchwardens a cake or bun, and, in former times, a cup of beer also. This is consumed within the church, and is supposed to imply a desire on the part of those who partake of it to forgive and forget all past animosities, and thus prepare themselves for the festival of Easter.

I should be glad to know whether these peace-offerings are a relic of a more general custom, and whether it prevails in any other part of England. Hentland is memorable as the site of Dubritius's College, from whence issued the opponents of Pelagianism.

C. J. R.

HOW TO PREVENT A WOUND FROM LEAVING A SCAR.—One of my children being badly cut on his forehead, a Huntingdonshire woman told his nurse that if she wished the wound not to leave a scar, she must wet it every morning with her spittle before she had eaten or drunk. The force of the charm lay in the latter part of the injunction; and the woman said that she had always known it to be effectual when strictly carried out.

CUTHBERT BEDE.

TURKISH FOLK LORE.—The Anatolian Turks will not eat the red-legged partridge, because they say its legs are bloody, which arises from this circumstance:—A prophet had taken refuge in a poplar tree (kavak in Turkish); and when his pursuers came up, the partridge pointed him out by calling Ka-karak kavak ka ka kavak. Of course, the version varies.

It will be observed that this legend is, from its nature, peculiar to a Turkish population. It depends for its basis on the cry of the bird and the name of a tree. It is most likely very old, and brought in from Turkestan. It cannot exist among the allied Madyars, as the word for poplar is different in that language.

HYDE CLARKE.

Smyrna, Jan. 14, 1865.

WAITS AT YORK.—I am not aware if a custom which exists in York, in connection with the

* This lady was Sarah, daughter of Sir John Hinde Cotton, of Landwade, Bart., wife of the Rev. John Oldershaw, Archdeacon of Norfolk, 1797, and Chaplain to the Right Rev. Charles Manners Sutton, Bishop of Norwich, 1792 to 1805, when he was translated to the see of Canterbury.

waits, has yet appeared in your pages. For the five successive Mondays preceding Christmas, a band of waits perambulate the principal streets; and after serenading the inhabitants with an air, proceed to salute the heads, and sometimes the individual members of each house, by name. Not long ago I was en pension at St. Mary's convent, better known as "The Bar," from its vicinity to Micklegate Bar—one of the many grand old gates of the city. Being a light sleeper, and having a quick ear, I was always deputed on these exciting occasions to be the rouser of the seven other girls, who formed the complement of our jealously guarded dormitory. Arrived beneath the convent windows, the one air common to the nocturnal entertainment was performed. This over, a stenorian voice roared out:—

"Good morning to the Lady Abbess!—Good morning to the nuns!—Good morning to the young ladies!—Three o'clock in the morning: a fine [or otherwise] morning!—Good morning to the chaplain! [his house immediately adjoined the convent].—Good morning to all!—Good morning!—Good morning!"

Immediately after Christmas, the waits called at all the houses thus honoured; and a tradition existed among the girls, that half-a-crown was presented on the occasion to these speculative philanthropists by the Reverend Mother.

BRUSSELS.

JEWISH FOLK LORE.—A Polish Jew once gravely informed me that it was his own firm belief, and that of his co-religionists, that the sun is sure to shine on some part of every Wednesday; because the sun was "created" on the fourth day of the week.

H. W. T.

"TAKE A HAIR OF THE DOG THAT BIT YOU."—This homœopathic cure of the effects of excessive joviality is, at least was, very well known; but I have never met with any account of its origin. This may no doubt be owing to the limited extent of my reading; but I will venture to give the following passage from La Gitanilla, one of Cervantes' Novelas:—

"A young man, on approaching a gipsy-camp by night, was attacked and bitten by the dogs. An old gipsy woman undertook to cure his wounds, and her procedure was, 'she took some hairs of the dogs, and fried them in oil, and having first washed with wine two bites he had in the left leg, put the hairs and oil upon them, with a little chewed green rosemary over them; she then bound the wounds up with clean cloths, and made the sign of the cross over them,' &c.

The wine and oil may remind us of the parable of the good Samaritan. THOS. KEIGHTLEY.

DRAGON IN HEREFORDSHIRE (3rd S. vii. 133, 210.)—In addition to other answers it may be stated, that the tradition of the "Dragon" still lives in this neighbourhood of Mordiford in the name given to a deep ravine and pathway leading from the main road overhanging the Wye, far away and up into the hilly tableland and forest district of the "Woolhope Valley of Elevation." Serpent's Lane is well known to all here, and even to geologists and fern-hunters from a distance. The whole of this region has a special interest geologically and archæologically. Not only are fossils of the Devonian and Silurian periods to be found, but traces of British and Roman camps and battle-fields still survive in the names of many places; e. g. Cradock = Caractacur; Caplar Wood = (a camp) Ostorius Scapula; Oyster Hill (latterly called Din-dor Hill = Dun-Dwr, the fort by the water), which commands the Wye near Hereford, and traces its pedigree from the same commander, Ostorius; Colwall = Collis Vallum; and many others. In later days Offa's Dyke, which joins the Wye near Byford, west of Hereford, formed the limit of the Mercian kingdom. Welsh names consequently prevail on the south and west of this boundary line, Saxon on the north; but Roman traces appear on both sides. It should be added that the Dragon was the heraldic bearing of Wales, and it is possible that the Mordiford legend may represent some defeat near that place in Saxon times of a local Cymric chieftain, who may have still held out, like his greater chief in earlier days, Uther Pen Dragon, in the rough and inaccessible district forming the "Silurian upheaval" of Sir Roderick Murchison, and of which Woolhope is the centre.

T. W. W.

Hampton Bishop, Hereford.

OLD AGRARIAN WORDS.

In a Wiltshire Rent Roll of temp. Elizabeth, I have met with the following words and phrases, some of which are now obsolete, others not quite so. To students of words they may be interesting, as there are some that I do not see in our Archaic and Provincial Glossaries.

Relating to land.

"One messuage and other housing, containing in all six romes or feilds, and one acremen of land, and two cotes containing three closes of pasture."

"A messuage, &c., containing one stych and one acremen." [Stitch means ridge.]

"One messuage, and one place, and one acremen of land, which contain three closes and xxv acres of land."

"Every of the place-holders shall fynde a maker to make the hey: lykewyse shall the vij acremen-holders."

"Every place-holder, whereon any house is standing," &c.

"A roulease tenement, and half yarde lands with common for two ruther beasts."

"Any tenant being a place-holder of a roulease tenement without a house belonging therto," &c. [I have elsewhere seen "a ruinose or rolleuse tenement."] "

"Four cotes, which contain one smyth's forge, one close of pasture called 'The four cotage,' and sundry other small parcels of ground."

"One rod and one shermegold of mead." "Two plecke of void ground." "A little pocke of meade." "One par-rock of pasture." "A corsettell of land." "A farwandell" [sometimes 'A fardingale'] of land." "Half an acre and two hornes of land containing three rodde: of lotts in Westmead acre."

"The Lord to enter to the steamead and vallo [fallow] at Lammas."

Relating to Timber.

"Except to the Lord all timber trees and trees of warrant."

"Towards the reparacyon of their houses, the tenants to be allowed wyndfalls and starvelings that leave noe green leaves."

"The tenant to take and have fryth bryars and thornes."

Relating to Commons.

"None but their feild, wherein they stynte themselves with sheep as they thinke most meete."

"Pasture for cc sheep, four oxen, and two hallyers."

"For vij rather beasts, one horse beast and one colt called a hallyer."

"Heyne."

"Eckmead to be keyned at th' annuncyacion of Our Lady, and to be cutt before Midsummer." ["To heyne a field" is still a phrase in constant use, meaning to close it up for the grass to grow.]

To "Showle-cast."

"To carry out once in the yere all the donge that shall happen to be made in the shepe-house, and also to showle-cast together one third part of the soyle upon the grange barten." ["To showle cast" is of course to heap together with a shovel always called a "showle" by Wiltshire labourers.]

"Mow."

[To mow, according to modern usage, always means to cut with a scythe; but in the next extract it clearly meant, temp. Eliz., some variety of stacking, as "a barley-mow," i. e. barley stacked under cover."] "To hold for xxi yeres, paying yerely of rent the thirde and tythes of the corne growing upon the errable land: the tenant to sow and dress 60 acres with wheat and 60 with barley: to cut down, sheafe, pooke, and rake the said thirde and tenths, and when ready to be carryed, to carry for the Lord into hys barn or rokehey, there to be mowed or ranked at the choice of the Lorde."

Farm-house Words.

"The south-end of the ox-house belonging to the grange, containing two feilde, the old kytchen," &c.

"A shelling house containing fyve feilde, whereof two are newly builded."

"One parlour, a buttery, a whyte-house [dairy], one house for farne."

Livery.

Tenants to wear livery. On the back of a lease an agreement was written—"That the said John shall during his life serve the said Sir Walter and wear his livery, if the said Sir Walter will bestow his cloth upon hym: and also ride with the said Sir Walter upon reasonable warning, and to make hys lyving hymself at his own charges."

Another tenant "Shall and wyll make and weare the Lorde's livery when yt shall please hym to geve the cloth to make the same, and also shall not at any tyme wear the livery of any other person without the Lorde's good wyll shewt fynt had."

A Mortuary Fee for Pigs.

"Every tenant shall pay to the Lord for pannage of piggs, for every pigge that every of them shall kill at slaughter time, 1d."

"Imphayes."

This is the name of a field. In a second parish it is called "Nymph-hay." In a modern rate-book of that parish it has been degraded into "Empty field."

"Far-leve."

"The best piece of plate, bedde, or other chattell, in the name of an heryott, or far-leve."

"Hipple."

"Two acres at the hipple of stones in Hide-field."

J. E. J.

LEEDS DIALECT.

I have cut the following from a Leeds newspaper, and send it to you, as you may think it worth preservation in "N. & Q." It gives with much correctness the peculiar pronunciation of the district, and the sentiment is unobjectionable. The phraseology is also characteristic of the class, amongst whom the speaker might be expected to be found. In my early days I have heard sermons, by local preachers, in the same style as to language and utterance. And I much question whether pure English, as spoken by the educated classes, would have been understood by many of those to whom such sermons were addressed.

"T'OWD COLLIERS' LAST WORDS.

(Founded on a true incident.)

"Cum in and see me agean lad,
Sed t'Collier tul his mate;
Am gettin varry owd,
An sadly aght a date.

"Sumhah I feel sa wake nah,
But wunce wor strong enuf;
Wi' dewin t'least it world
Am clean knock'd aght a puff.

"We've hed a lot a barns—true,
But then I luv 'em, mun;
An I sud find it hard
Ta pairt wi' even wun.

"They may hav kept uz poor,
But still I'll trust an pray
At God al bless em all
Wen I am tane away.

"An then there's t'wife—poor lass—
It trubbles me, indeed,
Ta think wen I am goan
At shoo may ivver need.

"But then I pray agean,
An sooin I think I hear
A anser thro' aboon,
At bids me niver fear.

"It seems ta giv ma hoap
At t'barns al nut neglect
Ta lewk ta all her wants,
An show her due respect.

"An then my thowts go back
Tut bygone, happy day,
When t' parson made us wun
On that bright morn e May.

"We've trudged on hand e hand,
Till ower t' top ut hill;
But I mun leave her nah,
I feel it's Natur's will.

"Then cum an see ma agean lad,
It glads my heart ta see
Owd mates I've knawn sa long,
Nah, wen am bahn ta dee."

T. B.

WORDS USED IN DIFFERENT SENSES. — It has been remarked, I think by Archbishop Trench, and is well known, that several words in the English language, which were formerly used in different senses, have gradually become restricted to one, and that the worse signification. Resentment and censure, the former of which was once used to express gratitude as well as revenge, and the latter an opinion generally either good or bad, are instances that occur to me. Officious is a word generally, I think, now used in the bad sense of fussy and meddlesome; yet it could not have been always so, or an old parishioner of mine on her deathbed would not have told me that her relatives had been very officious, evidently meaning that they had been kind and attentive; in short, mindful of their duty towards her. In a letter from John Johnson, Esq., to Henry Liddell, Esq., dated Newcastle, Oct. 9, 1715, and printed in the Appendix to Lady Cowper's Diary, is proof of another word—viz. insinuation having once been capable of a good as well as a bad meaning:—

"Sir Charles Hotham's regiment is expected here upon their route for Berwick, but I hope, through the insinuation [i. e. the friendly interposition] of Lord Scarborough to keep them here till further orders from Government."

E. H. A.

COPY OF ST. MATTHEW WRITTEN BY BARNABAS. The following curious passage, in an obscure chronicle, will no doubt interest some of your readers:—

"A.D. 477. Hoc tempore corpus Barnabe Apostoli, et Evangelium Matthaei stylo ejus scriptum ipso revelante reperitur."—Hermann. Contract. Chron. ed. 1579. p. 205.

A copy of St. Matthew written by Barnabas would be of inestimable value. I believe a recent publication professes to contain a facsimile of part of the first gospel from a MS. of the apostolic period. Of course all such professions are more than suspicious.

B. H. C.

ART IN AUSTRALIA.—In these days when there is scarcely the person who has not a relation or friend at the antipodes, it becomes very interesting to watch the efforts of our Australian colony to advance itself in the polite arts. By English artists in particular, I think the following extract will be read with exceeding gratification. I take it from the South Australian Government Gazette, No. 23, Adelaide, Thursday, June 2, 1864, and "Published by Authority." This number contains pp. 443 to 476, 4to:—

"TO ARTISTS.

"Notice is hereby given that the Government of Victoria has determined to offer the sum of 200L for the purchase of a painting or paintings, by an artist or artists resident in Australia, provided such painting or paintings possess sufficient merit to qualify it or them to compare favourably with the works of eminent living artists in Europe. Such painting or paintings to be placed in the Public Gallery of Art of Victoria.

"Every picture submitted must be painted and finished in oil on canvas, panel, or other suitable material, or in water colours.

"The subject of the picture is left to the judgement and taste of the artist."—[&c.]

EDWIN ROFFE.

Somers Town.

BISHOP HEBER. — Amongst the recollections of Bishop Heber's early life, in the first volume of Mrs. Heber's biography of her deceased husband, there are at p. 346 some humorous lines sent to a fellow collegian (Lord Ebrington), from Birmingham, where, on his way to Oxford, he had been kept awake throughout the night by the noisy revelry of a public ball held at the Hen and Chickens. The fifteen Greek lines are a supposed Homeric fragment, with a bald translation into Latin, and copious notes in the old editorial style, and describe his then present situation. The whole jeu d'esprit is well worth turning to; but the object of this communication is to "make a note" elucidating, on the authority of personal recollection, the supposed commentator's explanation of the first line:—

"Ὁ πόντος ἡ μέγα πένητος ὁδοιπόρον ἔσσεται ἀνδρῖ.

V. 510. ὁδοιπόρον ἀνδρῖ. Quis foret ille peregrinus non adhuc satis constat. Herculem scholiastes, Thesæa alii intelligunt. Non animadvertere scilicet boni interpretes de seipso poetam hic loqui, quem Poetam Jaspida fuisse Anglo-Phoenicem ipse suprâ demonstravi: Excurs. i. ver. 17 hujus libri. Et tamen cl. Turnebo Moses his versibus annui videtur; quàm verè judicent alii.

The few surviving contemporaries of the good bishop may remember, 1st the fact, though perhaps none ever knew the wherefore, of his having always gone amongst his familiars in college by the name of Jasper; and, 2nd, that he was a most popular member of the Phoenix, the membership of which club was then, and probably is still, sought after as a social distinction by the undergraduates of Brasenose. It may be right, for the instruction of posterity, to whom it must otherwise be lost, to note this meaning of the bishop's own description of himself, as "Jaspida Anglo-Phoenicem."

SEPTUAGENARIUS.

HAZLITT'S EDITION OF TUCKER'S "LIGHT OF NATURE."—In a very able criticism of Tucker's well-known book, in the Saturday Review for Nov. 12, 1864, the reviewer speaks of the desirableness of publishing a condensed edition of that work, and states his conviction that such a volume would be both valuable and popular. He appears not to be aware that there is in existence an abridgement of Tucker by William Hazlitt, with a preliminary essay written with all Hazlitt's accustomed acuteness and power of abstract thought. The copy I possess is of the first edition (John Johnson, London, 1807). I am inclined to think no second edition was ever published. But I am convinced, with the Saturday Reviewer, that a reprint of an abridgement of Tucker would pay well, and there can be none better than Hazlitt's.

D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

GREAT SEAL OF SOUTH CAROLINA.—Without affecting, avowing, or disavowing proclivities, as they are called, I may fairly at the present moment extract the following from the Universal Magazine for February, 1778 (p. 107), for the readers of "N. & Q.":—

"February 10.

"The device for the Great Seal of South Carolina:—A palmetto tree, supported by twelve spears, which, with the tree, are bound together in one hand [qu. band], on which is written, 'Quis separabit?' On the tree are two shields, the one inscribed March 26, the other July 4; and at the foot of the palmetto an English oak fallen, its root above the ground and its branches lopt.

"In the Exergue,

'MELIOREM LAPSA LOCAVIT,'

1776.

"Legend: 'South Carolina' immediately over the palmetto, and on the opposite part of the circle, 'Animis ad fata paratis.'

"Reverse:—

"Hope advancing over a rock, which is rugged and steep behind her, but smooth and of gentle ascent before. The way is strewn with the arms of an enemy. She holds a laurel-flower in her right hand, and has a view of the sun rising in full splendour.

"In the Exergue,

'SPES.'

"Legend: 'Dum spiro spero.'"

W. J. B.

Queries.

THE AMERICAN REGIMENT.—Where can I find a list of the officers in Colonel Gooch's regiment (the Americans) in 1741? When the regiment was disbanded in October, 1742, what became of the Colonel?

P. S. C.

VISCOUNT CHAWORTH.—Can any one furnish me with the date of the death of the last Viscount Chaworth, which took place between the years 1673—1700?

F. P. L.

DELVED, DOLVE, OR DALF?—The Athenæum of March 18, points out some printer's errors in a very useful book of quotations, compiled by Mr. J. Bain Friswell, and just published under the title of Familiar Words. In this work are given the lines:—

"When Adam dolve, and Eve span,
Who was then the gentleman?"

According to the Athenæum there are two mistakes here, and the lines ought to run,—

"When Adam delved, and Eve span,
Where was then the gentleman?"

Thinking delved (a "weak" form) much less likely to be the past tense of to delve, in Richard II.'s reign, than dolve (a "strong" form), I turned to the only histories I had at hand, and found the lines differently given in each. Keightley gives—

"When Adam dalf, and Eve span,
Who was then the gentleman?"

Hamilton reads—

"When Adam delved, and Eve span,
Who was then the gentleman?"

Will some of your readers settle which of the four versions is correct? It seems odd that there should be so many different versions of the lines, and it seems to me unfair to condemn Mr. Friswell in two mistakes because his version does not agree with the Athenæum's. Mr. Keightley's seems to me the best, and the Athenæum's the worst: for Richardson shows that Chaucer makes the past tense dalfe, and the perfect participle dolven. Any reader of Chaucer would require the citation of some authority before believing that the past tense of delve was delved in Richard II.'s time. As to where versus who, I should vote for the latter, on the score of probability.

N. N.

DISCIPLE.—Where did the word discipulus get its letter p, which appears also in disciplina? But for its presence in the latter word, I should have suggested puellus as its possible parent, i. e. discens puellus. But etymologists only give disco as the root; whereas, it is clear to me, that somewhere there must exist another root which supplied the p; unless, indeed, it is simply euphonious.

ALPHA BETA.

POWER OF FRANKING.—I have in my collection of franks one of the late Duke of Gloucester's. It is not signed, as would be expected, with the name of H. R. H.'s peerage, as is the case with all the other royal franks I have; but with his Christian name, "William Frederick," being the usual way in which royalty signs except in the cases of franks. This leads me to ask, whether the royal family had the power of franking independently of the peerages they held? I shall be glad of information on the subject, either in "N. & Q." or privately from any one who could tell me. With whom I should be glad to exchange franks, or autographs, if they liked.

H. F.

Union Club, Oxford.

[* This is the reading adopted by Southey in his Wat Tyler.—ED.]

FUSTIAN IN NAPLES.—The following occurs in an inventory of the time of King Henry VIII. What does it mean?—

"Itm, a new cushion of fustian in naples w^h knoppes of black silke."

A. O. V. P.

THE O'CONNORS OF KERRY.—I am desirous of knowing whether there has been any late publication in regard to the history of this Sept. David O'Connor, of this race, founded the "Siol-t-Da," a sept of Kerry. Where can I find a full account of him? What are the sources (at present available) for information? X. Y. X.

"MAHOGANY," A CORNISH BEVERAGE.—In Croker's Boswell's Life of Samuel Johnson (edit. 1835, vol. viii. p. 53), we read:

"Mr. Eliot mentioned a curious liquor peculiar to his country, which the Cornish fishermen drink. They call it 'Mahogany'; and it is made of two parts of gin and one part treacle, well beaten together. I (Jas. Boswell) begged to have some of it made, which was done with proper skill by Mr. Eliot. I thought it very good liquor; and said it was a counterpart of what is called Athol porridge in the Highlands of Scotland, which is a mixture of whisky and honey. Johnson said, 'That must be a better liquor than the Cornish, for both its component parts are better.' He also observed: 'Mahogany must be a modern name: for it is not long since the wood called Mahogany was known in this country.'"

1. Who was Mr. Eliot?*
2. Does any one know of Cornish fishermen having a drink called "Mahogany"?
3. If so, can the name "Mahogany," applied to this drink, be explained?

GEORGE C. BOASE.

Penzance.

ST. MAGNUS, ORKNEY.—Is it true that Sir Henry Dryden, of Canons Ashby, co. Northampton, Bart., went several successive summers to Orkney for the purpose of taking drawings, and architectural plans, with other details, of the cathedral of St. Magnus? Is it true that he entered most perseveringly into the whole scope, plan, and particulars of this ancient and interesting building, and compiled an elaborate record of its present state? Is it true that, in his zeal for minuteness, he had scaffolds erected under the vaulting of the roof, and thereon lay upon his back, close under the bosses of the ceiling, in order that he might copy them the more correctly? If these things are true, as alleged, and that only one copy of these drawings and memoranda exist, it is highly desirable that others be made therefrom. Surely this point is worthy the consideration of Scotland, if Sir Henry would permit his handy work to be multiplied. P. HUTCHINSON.

[* Edward Eliot, created Baron Eliot of St. Germaines, co. Cornwall, Jan. 30, 1784; ob. 1804. He is frequently mentioned in Lord Chesterfield's Letters to his Son.—ED.]

POWLETT MSS.: MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.—I have heard it asserted that there was formerly in the possession of the Powlett family a collection of MSS., contained in several volumes, bound in old red morocco, small folio size; consisting principally of copies of letters to and from Sir Amyas Paulet, during the time that he was Governor of Fotheringhay Castle and gaoler of Mary, Queen of Scots; and that, about twenty-six years ago, these papers passed into the hands of a Mr. Blackett, a surgeon in Green Street, Grosvenor Square.

Mr. Blackett has been dead some time. Is it known what has become of these MSS., or in whose keeping they are at present? They may possibly be known to some of the many writers who have made the history of this unfortunate Princess their peculiar study; and there can be no doubt that they must contain information of the highest interest in connection with the last years of her life. E. M'C.

QUOTATIONS WANTED.—

"The sun slept on his clouds, forgetful of the voice of the morning."

"Immortal till his work is done."

"The storm that wrecks the winter sky,
No more disturbs their soft repose,
Than summer evening's latest sigh
That shuts the rose."

[The second stanza of a poem entitled "The Grave," by James Montgomery. See "N. & Q.," 1st S. x. 353.]

F. R. S.

Can any of your correspondents tell me where I shall find these lines:—

"Sometimes the young forgot the lesson they had learn'd,
And loved where they should hate (—) like thee."

Is not this the original of the saying attributed to Napoleon I. about the sublime and the ridiculous?—

"L'on ne sauroit mieux faire voir que le magnifique et le ridicule sont si voisins qu'ils se touchent."—Fontenelle, Dialogues des Morts, Sénèque et Scarron.

X. H.

"Retribution in a human hand is Havock, and not Justice."

J. H.

Youghal.

THOMAS RUDDIMAN AND JOHN DRUMMOND, M.D.—Some time ago I purchased a copy of a book published in Edinburgh, 1720, called—

"The Letters and Negotiations of Sir Ralph Sadler, Ambassador to King Henry 8th of England to Scotland; containing the Transactions of two memorable Embassies."

On the fly-leaf, written in Ruddiman's fine bold manly style, was the following interesting memorial of friendship for a man of whom we should like to know something more; and an important literary acknowledgment not mentioned in Lowndes:—

"Viro longe optimo ac eruditissimo Joanni Drummond, M.D., hunc Librum, sua precipue cura in lucem editum, labens meritoque dono mittit, studii sui in eum, existimationis, et grati animi qualecunque monumentum futurum.

—THO. RUDDIMAN.

"22 Junii, 1720."

Can any of your readers give information about Dr. Drummond? J. G.

ROMAN TESSERÆ.—Some years ago I purchased about a peck of tesserae which had been taken from the floors of a Roman villa, some portions of which had been discovered in a field about two miles from Lyme, in Dorsetshire. (The discovery is mentioned in Arch. Journal, March 1854, p. 49.) These tesserae are made of chalk, white lias, blue lias, and red brick. About one-third part of them have been reset, and placed in the centre of the floor of a small antique building belonging to me. They were reset, not on the earth, but in a shallow hollow, or dish, about an inch deep, cut out of a slab of stone. The cement used was Portland cement: the water was from a well in the valley of Sidmouth, away from the sea—good, pure, drinking water. Not long after the slab of stone, with the tessellated pavement set in it, all in one solid mass, had been placed in the floor resting on the solid earth, I observed that a white efflorescence formed on the surface of the pavement; as if some salt were issuing from the work, and crystallising. This crystallisation proceeded, and proceeds most rapidly in dry weather. After an absence of a month, I once found that the undisturbed action had produced an effect nearly an inch thick: so that the tessellated pavement looked as if it were covered with a quantity of white cotton wool. This, however, is only one instance out of many. On brushing it off, and putting my tongue to it, it tasted like saltpetre; and it produced combustion, like that salt, when thrown into the fire. I am anxious to stop the formation of this salt, be it nitrate of potash or anything else: for not only does its appearance spoil or hide the colours of the tesserae, but they themselves are thereby receiving injury, as in some places their top surfaces have broken up and flaked off. Some have suggested painting over the work with oil, but I fear this would darken the colours of the tesserae. I have several times applied washes of Bartlett's silicate of potash, but altogether without any good effect. Could any correspondent of "N. & Q.," learned in chemistry, point out to me any remedy? P. HUTCHINSON.

Sore.—"When he thinks of the days that are gone." Some fifty years or more since, I met with a short piece the burden or refrain being the above line. As an old man, I would be thankful to any one who would help me to it again.

SEXAGENARIUS.

SPINNING-JENNY.—What is the origin of the name "Spinning Jenny"? Guest, in his Com- pendious History of the Cotton Manufacture, says, at p. 13, that Highs "produced the ingenious machine known by the name of the Spinning Jenny, and which he so called after his daughter, her Christian name being Jane."

Most, if not all, other writers on the subject state, that Hargreaves (for whom the invention is also claimed) named it after his daughter Jane; but he never had a daughter. B. W.

STAINED GLASS IN COLOGNE CATHEDRAL.—In the north aisle of Cologne Cathedral, near the western entrance, are four or five of the finest old stained glass windows I have ever seen. They are, I think, immediately opposite to the beautiful modern windows in the south aisle, presented by Ludwig, King of Bavaria, and contrast curiously with them. I should be glad to know the date, artist, and donor of them—the latter especially.

The only shield of arms that I remember is that of the Counts of Leiningen (ancestors of Her Majesty the Queen), which is several times repeated. JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

JOSEPH VIEN, ARTIST.—In the Athenæum of the 25th of March, there is the following paragraph relative to the chestnut tree which is popularly believed to burst into leaf about the 20th March. I should be glad if authorities can be given by any one for the tradition with regard to Vien, and if any record of the trial can be found.

"The celebrated chestnut-tree of the Tuileries that bursts into leaf before its neighbours, and generally enters an appearance by the 1st of March, is a laggard this year. Crowds stare up at its bald crown in disappointment. The tradition which has given the people faith in the precocity of this tree dates, neither from the birth of the King of Rome, nor from Napoleon's return from Elba. The date is the 20th of March, 1746. A celebrated painter was accused of having assassinated his rival at the Royal Academy on that day. The painter's name was Joseph Vien. He proved before the tribunal of the Châtelet that at the moment of the murder he was standing, gossiping with the Duchess de Roncevaux, under a chestnut-tree. He said he could identify the tree, for it was the only one in leaf. 'This alibi,' we are told, saved Vien's head; and from that time the people have watched the precocious tree. It has seldom failed; but the cold of the present year has been too much for it."

PERCY B. ST. JOHN.

WILLIAMS FAMILY.—Roger Williams died 1691, aged sixty-eight; David Williams died 1726, aged seventy; John Williams died 1741, aged seventy-

[* In Puleyn's Etymological Compendium, edit. 1853, p. 64, it is stated that "the term Jenny was derived from Hargreave's wife, whose name was Jane, but whom he used to address by the familiar name of Jenny; thinking, no doubt, as the latter had been very prolific (which was the case), that his new invention would be equally so, under a similar appellation. The result justified such a conclusion." On turning, however, to Baines's History of the Cotton Manufacture, pp. 177, 178, we find that Elizabeth was the name of Hargreave's wife.—ED.]

seven. Three inscriptions on the same gravestone, inside Lantarnam church, co. Monmouth; presumed to have been a father and two sons. Can any reader of "N. & Q." give any clew to the ancestry of either of those? He will oblige by giving such through "N. & Q.," or to Mr. Wm. Price, Glannant-y-lan, Llanfoist, near Abergavenny. GLWYSIG.

RICHARD WISEMAN, SERJEANT-SURGEON TO CHARLES II.—When and where was he born? In what year did he die? And where was he buried? JAYDEE.

Queries with Answers.

MOTTO OF THE ARMS OF NOVA SCOTIA.—I enclose a woodcut taken from a Halifax newspaper representing the arms of Her Majesty's old and flourishing province of Nova Scotia, and shall be glad if any of your readers can explain the meaning of the motto, which is a standing puzzle to the learned on that side of the Atlantic. The arms are thus described in the patents granted to the baronets of Nova Scotia by Charles I. previous to 1629:—

"Ar. a cross of St. Andrew azure charged with an inescutcheon of the royal arms of Scotland, supported on the dexter by the royal unicorn, and on the sinister by a savage or wild man ppr.; and for the crest a branch of laurel, and a thistle issuing from two hands conjoined, the one being armed, and the other naked, with this motto—'Munit hæc et altera vincit.'" — Berry's Encyc. Heraldica.

The usual local rendering is "One defends and the other conquers." Or it might be "He defends these, and conquers the others." Either way how does it apply? X.

[The true import and bearing of an old motto is often a hard nut to crack; but we think the specimen before us admits at any rate of a fair conjecture. From one hand issues a thistle; from the other a sprig of laurel: the one protects, the other vanquishes. The protective or defensive character of the thistle, indicated by its prickles, is clearly referred to in the motto of "The Knights of the Thistle," "Nemo me impune lacessit" (No one provokes or attacks me with impunity). The laurel is now so generally recognised as the emblem of victory, that not a word need be said on the subject.

It is remarkable that as the old motto of the Baronets of Nova Scotia now figures as the motto of the colony, so the motto of the Knights of the Thistle is the motto of Scotland.

Some of our readers may be old enough to recollect that in former days the national motto, "Nemo me impune lacessit," was malevolently transferred from the Scotch thistle to a certain cutaneous malady disagreeably affecting the interstices of the fingers. No one, it was pretended, could safely shake hands with his dearest friend

[* See a note respecting this eminent surgeon in our 1st S. x. 424.—ED.]

if he came from North Britain: the motto of his own land indicated the danger—"Nemo me," &c. But with reference to this vulgar prejudice we beg leave to place on record a little anecdote. A venerable friend, a physician still living in Canada West, was ere the present century had entered its teens, surgeon to a Scotch regiment, the Musselburgh militia. Talking over the various forms of disease which he had to treat, while serving in the regiment, an acquaintance remarked, "I suppose you had plenty of this," scratching with one hand between the fingers of the other. "No," said the doctor, "during the whole time I was in the regiment, we had not a single case.—Oh, yes, I forget. On one occasion our men went into barracks that had previously been occupied by an English regiment, and a few days after several of them had the itch."]

REFORMADES.—In the Holy War of Bunyan, which is the second best religious allegory in the language, and, in Lord Macaulay's opinion, narrowly escaped being the first, the author being his own successful rival in his Pilgrim's Progress, occurs the following stirring picture:—

"But when they set out for their march, oh, how the trumpets sounded, their armour glittered, and how the colours waved in the wind! The Prince's armour was all of gold, and it shone like the sun in the firmament: the Captains' armour was of proof, and was in appearance like the glittering stars. There were also some from the court that rode reformades for the love they had to the King Shaddai, and for the happy deliverance of the town of Mansoul."—P. 88, Tract Soc. Ed.

Reformades—what and why, and instances of equally early use? The word occurs again on p. 106: "Those that rode reformades, they went about to encourage the captains."

By-the-way, is there any commentary on Bunyan's Holy War? Pilgrim's Progress has been annotated in profusion. LECTOR.

[Bunyan's Holy War has been illustrated with notes by William Mason (8vo, 1782), by the Rev. George Burder (8vo, 1803); as well as by Mr. George Offor in the collected edition of Bunyan's Works (3 vols. roy. 8vo, 1862). Mr. Burder has the following note on the above passage: "Reformades, an old word signifying volunteers. The angels are intended, because 'ministering spirits,' who delight to explore the wonders of redemption, and to serve the heirs of salvation." Mr. Offor adds, "Reformades, angel volunteer officers, not attached to any troop or company." Phillips, in his New World of Words, fol. 1706, explains "Reformado, or Reformed Officer, as an officer whose company or troop is disbanded, and yet he continued in whole or half-pay; still being in the way of preferment, and keeping his right of seniority. Also, a gentleman who serves as a volunteer in a man-of-war in order to learn experience, and succeed the principal officers."]

SALT SPILLING: ALLUDED TO BY CLASSIC WRITERS.—Is there any allusion, in Latin or Greek classical authors, to the superstition about spilling salt? Any kind friend who will supply a reference, or references, will much oblige

IGNORAMUS.

[There are very many allusions to the sacred character of salt, not only in the Holy Scriptures, but also in the classic writers. Salt was used in all sacrifices (St. Mark, ix. 49), and was especially offered to the Penates (Horace, Ode iii. 23; Livy, xxvi. 36); but we remember no classic allusion to the superstition attached to spilling it. Our correspondent will find a very interesting investigation of the subject in Sir Henry Ellis's excellent edition of Brand's Popular Antiquities, London, 1842, vol. iii. p. 82. The earliest notice given there is from Bishop Hall (characters of Virtues and Vices, 1608—The Superstitious Man); but here the idea of the ill-luck is the salt falling towards a person, not merely the spilling it. In Leonardo da Vinci's wonderful picture of the Cenacolo ("Last Supper"), at Milan, Judas Iscariot is represented as overturning the salt-cellar as he stretches out his hand to receive the sop. Some persons have supposed this action alludes to the superstition, and some in fact say it was its origin; but in Italy very little is thought of upsetting salt—the dread there is to spill oil. This is thought to be an omen of severe sickness or death. Spilling wine, on the contrary, is thought lucky, and everybody cries out "allegria." We should be glad to receive from our readers the earliest notice they may come across of this superstition.]

"JERUSALEM THE GOLDEN."—I shall be much obliged to you if you will inform me where I can find the Latin original of the hymn commonly known by the name of "Jerusalem the Golden."

E. F. S. S.

[The Latin original of this beautiful hymn, by Bernard, a monk of Clugny, is printed in Abp. Trench's Sacred Latin Poetry, second edition, 1864, p. 307, to which is appended the following note: "In these lines the reader will recognise the original of that lovely hymn, which within the last few years has been added to those already possessed by the church. A new hymn which has won such a place in the affections of Christian people as has 'Jerusalem the Golden,' is so priceless an acquisition that I must needs rejoice to have been the first to recall from oblivion the poem which yielded it. Dr. Neale, as is known, no doubt, to many of my readers, in his Rhythm of Bernard de Morlaix on the Heavenly Country, London, 1859, has translated a large portion of the poem."]

HERALDIC.—I should feel much indebted to any of your readers who would be obliging enough to tell me to what families the subjoined arms belong:—

(a) Bendy of six gu. and arg. within a bordure erm. ♀, charged with seven bezants.

(b) Paly of six az. and ar., a fesse chequy az. and or.

[The coat which most resembles (a) is that of Valetot: bendy of six arg. and gules on a bordure sable—bezants. See Papworth's Ordinary, p. 345.

(b) Is probably not quite correctly blazoned, and might be paly with a fess, counter-company, Courtoys, or Curtis.

We are glad to learn that Mr. Papworth is fast recovering from his late severe illness, and that his excellent and useful work is likely to proceed as heretofore.]

Replies.

WILLIAM, SON OF KING STEPHEN.

(3rd S. vii. 201.)

The Art de Vérifier les Dates makes this William the second legitimate son of King Stephen, by Maude, heiress of the Counts of Boulogne. When Stephen seized the English crown, he transferred the county of Boulogne to his eldest son, Eustace, who died without issue 11 Aug. 1153, when this William (with Stephen's consent) inherited Boulogne and Moreton. In 1159 he joined the expedition to Toulouse, and died, either there (Vaissette), or on his return (Ralph de Diceto), leaving no issue by Isabel de Warren, his wife. Thereupon his sister Mary, Abbess of Ramsey, in England, becoming his heir, was induced to abandon her nunnery, by Matthew, brother of the Earl of Flanders, and to marry him, who thereupon seized the county of Boulogne, and maintained himself in its possession in spite of the pope's efforts to have it given up to Constance, widow of Count Eustace, who claimed it in dower; Matthew's marriage with a nun being deemed of no validity. Nevertheless Ida, daughter of this marriage, being legitimated by the pope, inherited the county of Boulogne (Art, &c. iii. 2nd part, p. 298.) S. P. Y.

I beg to send the following answers to HERMENTRUDE'S queries (3rd S. vii. 201):—

1. The Williams she mentions are identical. See Watson's History of the Earls of Warren and Surrey.

2. King Stephen had a natural son named William. His mother was named Dameta. See Rapin's History.

3. The legitimate son married the Countess Isabel.

The fact that the husband of the Countess was confessedly Earl of Boulogne and Lord of the Eagle appears to me in favour of his legitimacy: for these were hereditary honours in the house of Blois, and it will be remembered that this William, if legitimate, was his father's only surviving son and male representative, as the two eldest sons, Baldwin and Eustace, died ritâ patris.

CHARLES F. S. WARREN.

VOLTAIRE.

(3rd S. vii. 211.)

Though I cannot produce evidence of the dreadful dialogue between Voltaire and his physician, it will not appear improbable, when the following authentic account is considered. In the work entitled, "Voltaire, particularités curieuses de sa vie et de sa mort," par M. Elie-Harel," occurs an exact copy of the Memoir of the Abbé Gaultier, presented by him to the Archbishop of Paris, detailing all that passed at the death of Voltaire. This contains the notes that passed between the Abbé Gaultier and Voltaire, his visits to Voltaire, and the retractation which Voltaire wrote himself and signed. This, however, was not sufficiently ample to satisfy the Archbishop, and M. Gaultier prepared a fuller form of retractation, which he read to Voltaire's nephew, the Abbé Mignot, when he came at six o'clock in the evening of the 30th of May, 1778, to fetch the Abbé Gaultier to hear his uncle's confession. "Votre dernière lettre," said he "lui a fait une grande impression: il veut se confesser, et ne se confesser qu'à vous."

The Abbé Gaultier handed the form of retractation to the nephew, who quite approved of it, and promised him that Voltaire should sign it. They went to call the curé of the parish, St. Sulpice, and they all three entered together the room where Voltaire lay. They found him wandering so much in his mind that the abbé could not say anything to him, either about confession or retractation: he could only request that he might be sent for again when Voltaire should be more composed; and this was promised. After these priests had left him, his physician, M. Tronchin, came and found him dreadfully agitated, and crying out in despair: "Je suis abandonné de Dieu et des hommes; et portant les mains dans son vase de nuit, et saisissant ce qui y était, il le mangea."

This Dr. Tronchin related to several respectable persons, and added: "I wish that all those who have been seduced by Voltaire's books had been witnesses of his death; no one could have borne such a spectacle." Voltaire died at about eleven o'clock on the same night. I think it, therefore, very likely that the dialogue referred to did occur between Voltaire and Dr. Tronchin. F. C. H.

I cannot trace any reliable evidence as to Voltaire's death-bed. The Penny Cyclopædia (vol. xxvi. p. 438, art. "Voltaire," states "the details of his death are contradictory: he seems to have been exhausted, and only to have wished to die quietly."

W. POLLARD.

"Herts Guardian," Hertford.

The Biographie Universelle, generally considered to be a very trustworthy authority, says on this point that —

"A cloud of obscurity and contradiction surrounds the last moments of Voltaire. . . . It has been constantly asserted that, when summoned by the curé of St. Sulpice to say whether he acknowledged the divinity of Jesus Christ, he turned round and said: 'Laissez-moi mourir en paix.' According to other authorities he said: 'Au nom de Dieu ne me parlez plus de cet homme-là.' This sacrilegious antithesis is not very probable, considering his extreme weakness both of body and mind at that time. However this may be, the curé, turning to the Abbé Gauthier, said with prudent moderation: 'Vous voyez bien qu'il n'a plus sa tête.'"

RICHARD B. PROSSER.

25, Southampton Buildings, W.C.

SIR ROBERT DOUGLAS OF GLENBERVIE.

(3rd S. vii. 223.)

The following inscription, copied from the tombstone of Sir Alexander Douglas, Bart., in the Howff burial ground, Dundee, may interest your correspondent S. Y. R.: —

"Sacred to the Memory of SIR ALEXANDER DOUGLAS, Bart., of Glenbervie, physician in Dundee, and of Dame Barbara Carnegie of Finhaven, his spouse; also of Robert Douglas, Esq., their only son—who all lie interred here. Sir Alexander, born 1738, died 1812; Lady Douglas, born 1741, died 1815; Robert, born 1776, died 1780. By the heirs of Lady Douglas.

Sir Alexander was physician to the forces in North Britain. His name appears upon the Staff down to 1802, and for several years previously.

I may add, that I have in my possession a copy of Sir Robert's Baronage of Scotland, printed upon large and fine stout paper, beginning at p. 1 and ending at p. 562 (properly p. 560, for that folio, as well as the three preceding, are misprinted); being (as stated in foot-note to p. 563 of the complete book) the portion of the work as far as carried on by Douglas. This copy of the Baronage bears the book-plate of George, Lord Macartney; and contains a MS. index to the families, with corrections and additions throughout the volume, written in a small neat hand. To the first marginal note on the left of p. 13 (Innes of Innes), are added the words: —

This Charter is lost, but there is a Transcript of it in the possession of the family under the subscription of Gavin Dunbar, Lord Register in the reign of King James the 5th.

"This Charter is in the possession of the Family," is added to the first note on the right of same page.

At p. 47 (Moncreiff of that ilk), the following curious note is written, opposite to the paragraph beginning, "XI. THOMAS": —

"This Person was a servant of John, 14th Earl of Crawford, Lord Treasurer. He made much money by the purchase of Prizes in the time of the 1st Dutch War in K. Cha^s the 2^d Reign. 'Tis said that his name was not Moncreiff, but that he assumed that Name upon his purchase of the Estate of Moncreiff."

Can any reader of "N. & Q." throw light upon the origin or truth of this statement, and the original surname of the person referred to? Or give any idea of who wrote these notes? The writer seems to have been well acquainted with the history of Scotch families, particularly those in the North. The following, inserted after the word "deduced," line 11 from foot, col. 2, p. 335 (Cuming of Altyr), may afford an additional clew to the writer:—

"... He bought several Debts against the Family Estates, which his brother James had much encumbered; had it adjudged and brought to sale, and became the Purchaser. He died unmarried, leaving his fortune to his grand Nephew Alexander [the undoubted head or chief of that illustrious family], who married — daughter of Sir Ludovick Grant, of Grant, Baronet, and has issue."

The Alexander above referred to married in 1773; was created a baronet in 1804, died in 1806, and was grandfather of the present Sir A. Gordon-Cuming, Bart. A. J.

WATTE VOCAT (3rd S. vii. 221.)—The verses referred to by your correspondent H. W. T. are to be found in a note to p. 119 of Pinnock's Goldsmith's England, where they are attributed to Gower the poet, and are said to have been written on Wat Tyler's insurrection. I subjoin a copy of the verses as given, with Andrews's translation.

"Watte vocat, cui Thoma venit, neque Symme retardat,
Bat que, Gibbe simul, Hykke venire jubent.
Colle furit, quem Bobbe juvat, nocumenta parantes,
Cum quibus ad damnum Wille coire volat.
Grigge rapit, dum Davie strepit, comes est quibus Hobbe,
Larkin et in medio non minor esse putat.
Huddle furit, quem Jude terit, dum Tibbe juratur,
Jack domoque viros vellit, et ense necat."

The translation by Andrews is as follows:—

"Wat cries, Tom flies, nor Symkin stays aside;
And Bat, and Gibb, and Hyke, they summon loud,
Colle and Bob combustibles provide,
While Will the mischief forwards in the crowd;
Gray hawls, Hob hawls, and Davy joins the cry,
With Lark, not the least among the throng;
Hodge drubs, Jude scrubs, while Tib stands grinning by,
And Jack with sword and firebrand madly strides along."

P. M.

KELLAWAY, CO. DORSET (3rd S. vii. 220.)—The hamlet or tything of Weston, or Stalbridge Weston, co. Dorset, the early residence of the Weston family in that county, and more anciently in deeds and monuments called Calewe Weston (from its proximity to the river Cale), is doubtless the place indicated by your correspondent. Thomas, son of Sir Wm. Weston, Knight, Lord Chief Justice of Ireland (most probably referred to by G. W.) is buried on the north side of the chancel of Stalbridge church. (Vide Hutchins's Dorset, under "Stalbridge," where a description of the monument is given.) Some notices of the Weston family will be found in "N. & Q.," 2nd S. x. 266, 395, 500. Although Hutchins, in the earlier editions of his work, states that no pedigree of the family occurs in the Visitation Books, there is a descent of four generations of Westons of Callew Weston, deduced from the Lord Chief Justice given in Her. Visit. co. Dorset, 1677 (penes Coll. Arms, Lond.)

HENRY W. S. TAYLOR.

Halifax.

There can be but little doubt that Thos. Weston of Kellaway, co. Dorset, must be Thos. Weston of Callow-Weston, a manor in the parish of Stalbridge, belonging to the Abbots of Sherborne, and long held by the family of Weston. In a monument in Stalbridge church, of about a hundred years since, the word is spelt Calewe, as also in a much older one; and in the registers of Sherborne, the name, now more commonly written Kellaway, appears under the various forms of Calway, Callway, Keylway, and Keyleway.

C. W. BINGHAM.

STALE MATE (3rd S. vii. 221.)—Check-mate (German, schach-matt) is in French échec-et-mat, while schach-patt (stale-mate), has its equivalent in the French pat, the final t being pronounced in the French as in the German words. Landais derives pat "(suivant Ménage) de l'Italien patta ou patta, qui signifie la même chose, et dont l'origine est très-incertaine." In Spanish stale-mate is mate ahogado, literally "smothered mate," a term known in our own game in a different sense.

JOHN W. BONE, B.A.

41, Bedford Square, W. C.

I think DR. BELL will find pat to be the French term for stale mate; and faire pat to be the phrase for giving stale mate.

P. M.

BARLEY (3rd S. v. 358; vi. 481; vii. 84, 162.) The remarks on "barley" and the Lincolnshire dialect, by LINDENSIS, remind me of a boyish play in which I was once very fond of indulging. We used to form ourselves into a line, and then select one of our company to stand out a few yards to the front. As soon as he had taken his position he called out at the top of his voice,—

"Black-thorn, Black-thorn;
Blue milk and barley-corn.
How many geese have you to-day?"

Our reply was,—

"More than you can catch and carry away."

A race then took place to certain points, and the one he caught not only took his place at the mark in front, but was obliged to carry him on his back to the line. We called this "playing at black-thorn." I may add, that from long and careful observation, I have come to the conclusion that East Lancashire is quite as Danish as Lincolnshire. The Ordnance Maps supply us with numerous farmsteads, &c., whose names are very little changed, either in orthography or pronunciation, from their Danish originals. Our local dialect, too, abounds in terms from the same source. "I can't fin o' my hart," is to be heard any day amongst us; and to be "witsherd" this snowy and wet weather is no uncommon occurrence. "Eearn yo felly ah durnd kno, but yo ma gooa raand't cornur and then spee," was a reply given to me by a female not long ago, of whom I asked the road to a street in the town of Preston. I afterwards found that she came "fra Blegburn" (Blackburn), and was no longer surprised at her answer. Mr. Arnold, in his recent History of the Cotton Famine in Lancashire, has noticed the Anglo-Saxon element in our local dialects, but he seems to have been unaware of the extensive admixture of Danish and Scandinavian terms. A stranger, such as Worsaae, would also find the intermixture of races quite as remarkable as the dialect. The inhabitants of this portion of Old Northumbria have not yet lost all traces of their descent from the Danes and Northmen who at different times colonised the county. T. T. W. Burnley, Lancashire.

THE MACE OF KINSALE (3rd S. vi. 159).—The old mace of this corporation did not long remain in the possession of the Rev. Dr. Neligan after its sale. I found it in the hands of Mr. Cooper of Holborn, and purchased it from him at the request of my friend, Sir George Bowyer, who wished to present it to the mayor and corporation of Margate. A notice of this presentation has appeared in the present volume of "N. & Q." and in several papers. It is engraved in the Illustrated News. When I obtained it the cross was lost from the mound: this has been restored.

W. J. BERNHARD SMITH.

Temple.

GOODRICH FAMILY, LINCOLNSHIRE (3rd S. vii. 134).—There is now living at Hagg, near Spilsby, a Mr. Thomas Goodrich, aged eighty-one, whose progenitors were allied to the East Kirkby Goodriches, and no doubt that of the old Bishop of Ely.

WM. BAILEY.

THE DODRALIS POTTIO (3rd S. vii. 208).—I am very well pleased with the four lines of your correspondent, F. C. H., but I think it necessary to translate a distich by a distich. This was my difficulty, which I now try to meet:—

"The Nonal Drink.

"I'm Nine, for I bread, water, honey, wine,
With broth, salt, pepper, herbs, and oil combine."

K.

NOTION AT CHILLINGHAM CASTLE (3rd S. vi. 134).—Antologica Eliana, new series, explanatory of the castle-upon-volume, p. 279, by me respecting the authorship of it.

AMERICAN DEPRECIATION OF CURRENCY (3rd S. vii. 6.)—This note reminds me of an "hist doubt" which I would much thank you to sc for me in relation to the American counterfeit money, hundreds of dollars of which, fallen to from my ancestors, I have from time to time gi away to curious collectors. Is it true that British government, or its officers with its kn ledge, helped the depreciation by the issue counterfeit bills? The last four of the follow lines, from the fourth canto of John Trumbu Mc Fingal, printed at Hartford, in America, 1782, point to the popular belief:—

"When lo! an awful spectre rose
With languid paleness on his brows;

His breast-plate grav'd with various dates,
'The faith of all th' United States.'

I started, and aghast I cried—
'What means this spectre at their side?'

'Alas!' great Malcolm cried, 'experience
Might teach you not to trust appearance:
Here stands, as drest by fierce Bellona,
The ghost of Continental Money.'

In vain great Howe shall play his part,
To ape and counterfeit his art;
In vain shall Clinton, more belated,
A conq'rer turn to imitate it."

In a late reprint of this "epic poem" (York, 1864,) the editor does not hesitate to: that such counterfeits were distributed "by loads," and adds—"Such was one of th honourable modes of warfare employed by British commanders here." S.

MASSACHUSETTS STONE (3rd S. v. 208).—have properly consulted the indexes of "the query under the above reference has been answered. In Mr. Laing's Trans. Sturleson's Heimskringla, Lond. 1844, or the Preliminary Dissertation thereupon p. 172), will be found some extende upon the well-known stone on the rive in Massachusetts, covered with what called Runic characters, and known as ton Writing Rock. The commentat of the historical value of the inscr high. On p. 176 is a drawing of th p. 176 a larger copy of the writing s Baylie and Mr. Goodwin in 1790, an rican antiquaries in 1830. The at Antiquitates Americanae (Hafniae, communication of the Rhode Isla the Soc. of Northern Antiquaries of America, far from the coast—as on the Alleghany and Connecticut Rivers, about Lake Erie, on Cumberland River, about Rockcastle Creek. I have an impression that there is also an account of the Deighton Rock in one of Prof. Edward Hitchcock's Reports and in Silliman's Journal.

ST. TH.

DR. PERCY (3rd S. vii. 181.)—

"Dr. Percy knowing himself to be the heir male of the ancient Percies," and having the warmest and most dutiful attachment to the noble house of Northumberland, could not sit quietly and hear a man praised who had spoken disrespectfully of Alnwick Castle, and the Duke's pleasure grounds, especially as he thought meanly of his (Pennant's) travels."—Boswell's Life of Johnson, 9th edit. vol. iii. p. 278.

E. H. A.

LADY TEMPEST'S JURY (3rd S. vii. 136, 224.)—The Lady Tempest, who was tried for high treason, was Anne, wife of Sir Stephen Tempest, of Broughton, the eldest daughter of Sir Thomas Gascoigne, of Barnbow, the second baronet, who at the time of his trial must have been about eighty-four years of age. See Dugdale's Visitation of Yorkshire (edit. Davies), 289, 381.

The following extracts from Luttrell's Diary may further elucidate the matter to which your other correspondents refer:—

"1679-80, March. The Lady Tempest, daughter to Sir Thomas Gascoigne, by order of council was the 3^d committed to the Gatehouse, in order to her tryall at next assizes at York, whither she is to goe.

"The 17th, at the assizes at York, the Lady Tempest, Thomas Thwing, and Mary Pressick were arraigned on an indictment of high treason for conspiring the death of the King, &c.; but they excepting against so many of the jury, their trial could not be proceeded with, but is putt off till next assizes.

"1680, July. At the assizes at York, the 24th, Thomas Thwing and Mary Pressicks came to their tryall on an indictment of high treason on account of the Popish Plott; and on consideration of the evidence, the jury found Thomas Thwing guilty, and Mary Pressicks not guilty.

"At the same assizes Sir Miles Stapleton came to his

"* See this accurately stated, and the descent of his family from the Earls of Northumberland clearly deduced, in the Rev. Dr. Nash's excellent History of Worcestershire, vol. ii. 318. The Doctor has subjoined a note, in which he says: 'The editor hath seen and carefully examined the proofs of all the particulars above mentioned now in the possession of the Reverend Dr. Thomas Percy.' The same proofs I have also myself carefully examined, and have seen some additional proofs which have occurred since the Doctor's book was published; and both as a lawyer accustomed to the consideration of evidence, and as a genealogist versed in the study of pedigree, I am fully satisfied. I cannot help observing, as a circumstance of no small moment, that in tracing the Bishop of Down's genealogy essential aid was given by the late Elizabeth, Duchess of Northumberland, heiress of that illustrious house; a lady not only of high dignity of spirit such as became her noble blood, but of excellent understanding and of lively talents. With a fair pride I can boast of the honour of her grace's correspondence, specimens of which adorn my archives."

tryall; but he challenged so many of the jury, that he could not be tried this assizes, but was to stay till next.

"The same assizes, the Lady Tempest (daughter to Sir Thomas Gascoigne) and Mr. Charles Inglesby came to their trial for high treason on account of the plott, and were by the juries acquitted."

It is satisfactory to add, that Sir Miles Stapleton (who was a nephew of Sir Thomas Gascoigne) was acquitted in July, 1681.

The right name of the priest, who is called Thwing, was Thwenge. He was also a nephew of Sir Thomas Gascoigne. (See Howell's State Trials, vii. 1181.)

From Dugdale's pedigree of Gascoigne we ascertain that this Thomas Thwenge was a son of George Thwenge, of Kilton Castle, in Cleveland, by Anne, fourth daughter of Sir John Gascoigne, the first baronet.

A Mrs. Ravenscroft, Sir Thomas Gascoigne's granddaughter, appeared at his arraignment and trial. Can the Yorkshire genealogists assign her place in the pedigree?

C. II. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

THE CROSSES OF ST. GEORGE AND ST. JOHN (3rd S. vii. 200.)—The cross of St. George is borne by the following families, &c., as well as by those in Mr. DAVIDSON's list:—

St. Georges, Marquis de Verac.

St. Georges de Kerroualt. (Brittany.)

Giorgi (Italy) in chief.

Cibo, Prince of Massa, in chief as an augmentation from Genoa.

Sedeigno, arg. a cross gu., within a bord. az. (otherwise az., an escutcheon of St. George.)

Grégoire, the cross slightly patée throughout. This is also the case with the cross in the dexter half of the arms of the Abbey of Creutzling.

The city of Lincoln bears the cross of St. George charged with a fleur-de-lis or. Arg. the cross of St. George, in the dexter canton a sword erect gu., are the well known arms of the city of London.

The cross of St. George is also the armorial bearing of the most noble Order of the Garter. With a different chief in each case it forms the arms of the four Kings-at-Arms, Garter, Norroy, Clarencieux, and Ulster. It also appears in the arms of the College of Arms, of the Trinity House, and of the East India Company. With other charges it forms the arms of the kingdom of Sardinia (not the duchy of Savoy, which bears the cross of St. John), and of the Florentine family of Machiavelli.

The cross of St. John is also borne by the following:—

Bishopric of Vienna (with an escutcheon of the arms of Austria).

Bishopric of Costnitz.

Family of Aspremont.

Family of Bécherel.

Family of Kinzich (Prussia).

Family of Roquette.

Counts de Rottal, Bohemia.

Family of Rougé (usually patée throughout).

Family of Bulgarini (Tuscany) surmounted by a chev., reversed az. moving from the chief. As given by Siebmacher, the cross in the arms of the Bishopric of Constance is slightly patée.

The cross of the Order of St. John is never eight-pointed in the arms of the order or of its knights. It was only the decoration which was so formed.

JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

DE BEAUVOIR FAMILY (3rd S. vi. 147.)—Allow me to refer Juxta Turrill to Smyth's Life and Services of Captain Philip Beaver, R.N. (London, 1829); and to inform him that in the early part of the last century, a gentleman named Peter Beaver, whose daughter, Martha, was married in 1739 to Latham Blacker, Esq. of Rathescar, in the county of Louth, resided in the old and fashionable town of Drogheda. I have their portraits, which are large-sized and in good preservation.

ABEBA.

SLOW TUNES AND QUICK TUNES (3rd S. vi. 27.)—I have heard the anecdote attributed to Rowland Hill; who, being annoyed at his foot-boy singing profane songs whilst cleaning the knives and the forks, ordered him, under the penalty of dismissal, to sing hymns. But as the work proceeded only to the tune of the solemn yet slow measure, Rowland Hill was compelled to tell the boy to return to his old style of profane music, otherwise his knives and forks would not have been ready for dinner.

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

Dartford.

FIENNES FAMILY: SAYE AND SELE (3rd S. vi. 455.)—Amongst my father's MSS., I find in a MS. pedigree that—

"Sir W^m Fienys, Kt, made Viscount Say and Sele by Pat. 7 Jul., 22 Jac. I., ob. at Broughton, 1662. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Temple of Stow, co. Bucks."

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

Dartford.

RAMPERS (3rd S. vi. 45.)—The root of this word is ripa, a bank. Whence the shoal off Dungeness is termed Rip-rapps. In my Cæsar's Cantian Campaigns, I have given the present French name for this shoal, which is Celtic.

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

Dartford.

MOROCCO (3rd S. vii. 73.)—I tasted this drink when at Levens. It is, as C. C. P.'s friend states, "almost dark, pours like oil, and tastes mild as milk in its treachery." The Morocco is always brought in an immense and curiously wrought glass to every one who dines at Levens for the first time; and the visitor is expected on no account to refuse the glass, but to taste it and say—"To the health of the Lady of Levens!" there being a current story of a curse on the house, viz. that, since the alienation of certain property from the Grahams, there should never be a male heir to Levens. I believe the recipe for making Morocco, is kept strictly secret.

Your correspondent has made two mistakes in his query. Levens Hall is in Westmoreland, not Cumberland, as stated by C. C. P.; and it belongs to a branch of the Suffolk, not the Carlisle family.

W. I. S. HORTON.

Rugely.

MEDIÆVAL CHURCHES IN ROMAN CAMPS (3rd S. vi. 37.)—The churches of Caistor, Lincolnshire, and Porchester, Hants, are built in Roman enclosures.

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

Dartford.

"PISCIS FLOTANS" (3rd S. vii. 55, 124.)—In acknowledging my obligations to MR. BINGHAM, I must at the same time express my regret that in my former communication I did not give some further intimation of the context: for, with that before him, I am persuaded that he would not have suggested the possibility of a duty having been laid specially on the exportation of dabs, or flounders. In the days of King John and Henry III., the fishery of Guernsey consisted mainly of congers—at that time a considerable article of trade. In summer they were dried. In winter they were pickled. In either case, there was a duty paid on them. Besides which, if Piscis flotans was exported to Normandy, a duty was imposed upon the boat. This Piscis flotans I suppose to have been the fish that was neither dried nor pickled; but sent off, as it was caught, fresh and flabby. I should, however, be glad to have some authority to support this conjecture of mine.

P. S. C.

THE COLLIER'S CONFESSION OF FAITH (1st S. v. 523, 571.)—I have just met with an earlier mention of the above than any yet referred to. It is quoted by Erasmus in his excellent treatise, De Preparatione ad Mortem:—

"Narrant quiddam non quidem à sacris voluminibus, sed tamen ad id quod nunc agimus satis accommodatum, de duobus quos imminente morte de Fide tentavit Diabolus: alter philosophiæ peritus erat, alter nihil aliud quam Christianus, rudis et anormis. Priori suggestit quid crederet, an Christum Deum et hominem, an natum de Virgine, an Resurrectionem mortuorum. Cœpitque Philosophiæ rationibus demonstrare, non posse conjungi in unum ea inter quæ nulla esset affinitas, velut inter finitum et infinitum, creatum et increatum. . . . Quid multis? Vacillavit homo, et præcipitatus est; hostis victor abiit. Alter ille rudis percontanti quid de hoc et illo crederet respondit compendio, Quod credit Ecclesia. Rursum objicienti quid crederet Ecclesia, Quod ego, inquit, Quid tu? Quod credit Ecclesia. Quid Ecclesia? Quod ego. Ab hoc imparato ad disputandum, sed simpliciter sibi stabili, Tentator victus discessit. Hoc responsum satis est ad abigendum insidiosum hostem. Maxime tamen valet in obscuris ac dubiis."—Editio princeps, Basil, 1534, 4to, pp. 69—70.

EIRIONKACH.

THE ANSTRUTHER LIBRARY (3rd S. vi. 326.)—Will J. M., who speaks with such gusto of "the glorious Anstruther Library," or some other learned Scot, kindly give me some information respecting the same? This collection was dispersed, I believe in 1832, but I have never seen the sale catalogue. I possess a volume of pamphlets which belonged to this library, having the autograph of "W. Anstruther," written in a fine bold hand, apparently at the close of the seventeenth century; also having a book-plate, with the arms of "Sir John Anstruther of that ilk, Baronet." The name Anstruther is now commonly shortened into Anster.

EIRIONKACH.

MR. GOODWYN, THE MATHEMATICIAN (3rd S. vii. 114, 167.)—I do not think there are any papers by Mr. Goodwyn in the Philosophical Transactions. In 1823, he published a work in two volumes royal 8vo, of which the following is the title:—

"A Table of the Circles arising from the Division of a Unit, or any other Whole Number, by all the Integers from 1 to 1024; and a Tabular Series of Decimal Quotients for all the proper Vulgar Fractions."

The late Dr. Olinthus Gregory, of Woolwich, proposed Question 1418, or the Prize Question for the Ladies' Diary, 1824, as an example of the use which could be made of Mr. Goodwyn's series. He terms them "Curious Tables of Circulating Periods." The work appears to have been sold by "Richardson, Cornhill."

T. T. W.

DOCKING HORSES (1st S. vi. 13; 3rd S. vii. 185.)—OMEGA does not give any authority to show that his version of the epigram is a more correct one than that of F. B. I send you my version and my authority.

In my youth, more than sixty years ago, an uncle of mine had in his garden a summer parlour, the walls of which were adorned with caricatures—some of them French. One, and one only, has fixed itself in my memory. It was this:—

The drawing represented a macaroni in a phaeton, driving a pair of long-tailed ponies, and his footmen standing behind the carriage. The ponies had their tails buckled up in large bunches, to keep them out of the mud. The master, and each of his footmen, had large heads of hair, also tied in a large knot behind. And beneath the picture was this inscription:—

"Les Anglais barbares, du même couteau, Courent aux rois leur têtes et les queues aux chevaux;
Les Français plus polis laissent aux rois leur têtes,
Et aussi, comme vous voyez, les queues à leur bêtes."

Mine probably is only an adaptation of the lines to the picture. I however give some authority for my version.

J. Se.

"CONFESSIONS OF A METHODIST" (3rd S. vii. 223.)—The first number of the Confessions of a Methodist appeared in The Satirist of January 1, 1809, and was continued in subsequent numbers.

No. 1 of The Satirist is dated October 1, 1807. The 23rd, and last number of the New Series, was dated June 1, 1814. It then changed hands; and, July 1, appeared under the title of The Tripod, or New Satirist. Of the last work I have the first two numbers, and I doubt whether any more were published. The caricatures of these numbers have the titles:—"Satirist, July 1st, 1814. Doctor Blucher." "Satirist, August 1, 1814. The Modern Don Quixote, or the Fire King." I do not know who was the editor.

E. H.

THE MICKLETON HOOTER (3rd S. vi. 464.)—Can any of your correspondents say whether our ill-used little English bear (the badger) haunts Mickleton Wood? Years ago, in Rockingham Forest, I heard his cry. It is eerie enough.

C. W. BARKLEY.

7, Paulton's Square, Chelsea.

SANCROFT (3rd S. v. 290.)—All the sources of information so kindly suggested by your correspondent were, I find, tested some years ago, without result. Your correspondent says that, about the year 1661, Archbishop Sancroft's sister Catherine lived with him; but in the same communication states that the Archbishop had six sisters—Deborah, Elizabeth, Alice, Frances, Mary, and Margaret—which agrees with my own information. Was Catherine a seventh sister, or is the name a second name of one of those in the list? Who were the two nephews to whom the Archbishop made a deed of gift shortly before his death?

ST. TH.

COOKERY: "AU BLEU" (3rd S. vii. 202.)—The editorial note appended to the query of CLERICUS explains the process of cooking au bleu, and the blue tinge imparted by it to fish. The change of colour thus effected is associated with an anecdote of the Court of Louis XV. of France.

When the Marquise de Pompadour, daughter of Poisson, a butcher to the Invalides, but apocryphally elevated by the flattery of her quondam friend Voltaire to the status of a farmer of Ferté-sous-Jouarre, and wife of the Sous-Fermier, Le Normand d'Etoile, solicited the French monarch to invest her brother, Abel François Poisson, with the Order of the "Saint Esprit," the riband of which is blue, Louis declined, observing, or his court circle for him, that the brother of the favourite, "était trop petit poisson pour être mis au bleu." The monarch, however, relented; and yielding to the fascinations and influence of "sa Pompadour," later in the same year, an office connected with the coveted Order was granted to Poisson, which authorised him to bear a decoration rivalling in lustre those of the Garter and the Golden Fleece. Marmontel waited on the parvenu to offer his compliments on the distinguished honour thus achieved, when the new Cordon Bleu, more consonantly with truth and fact than elegance and self-esteem, exclaimed to Marmontel's astonishment, "Le Roi me dégrasse."

The territorial designations of Abel François Poisson were changed three times. When created Marquis de Vandières, the wits of the court happily termed him "Marquis d'Avanthier"; and, in reference to this play of words, when the name of Marigny was assumed by him (why does not appear), he remarked, "On m'appelle Marquis d'Avanthier; on m'appellera encore Marquis de Marinée, sachant que je suis né Poisson." Succeeding under the will of his sister to the estate of Menars, he finally adopted that name.

The title of Pompadour, become unenviably historic as associated with the scandal and disgrace of a corrupt court, was that of an honourable family which had but recently become extinct before the assumption of its designation and arms by the daughter of M. Poisson.

The editorial note does not reply to the concluding inquiry of CLERICUS; nor can I contribute to supplying the omission unless by the suggestion that, as we speak of "the Derby" being, in allusion to the riband of the Garter, the "Blue Riband of the Turf," so the Cordon Bleu of the Order of the Saint Esprit is figuratively assigned to expert artistes de la cuisine by the French.

JOHN HUGHES.

STICK (3rd S. vii. 200.) — Does not "stick" in the sentence quoted suggest in sound, as also in signification, the adoption of a German word which may have been in use in this country in 1692? "Stück, a piece, is constantly used in German in an analogous manner: ein Stück Eitelkeit, a piece of vanity; ein Stück Frechheit, a piece of arrogance; ein Stück Spott, a piece of railing. Thus,—

"Our author, to shew how angry and froward he resolves to be . . . makes his first paragraph a compleat Stick [Stück, piece] of Railing."

PHILIPPA SWINNERTON HUGHES.

"THE WHOLE DUTY OF MAN" (3rd S. vii. 124.) Allow me to correct an error in the reference made by JUXTA TERRIM to the Journal of Sacred Literature. The articles he alludes to are in N. S. vol. v.* (pp. 185, 433), and not vol. xiv. I am the more anxious to point out this error, as I happen to know of one person, at least, who on the faith of "N. & Q." has been disappointed on purchasing the wrong volume. Q.

BELL INSCRIPTION (3rd S. vii. 219.) — It often happens that in inscriptions in what is here called "church text," a letter i and an n in close proximity appear so like an m as to be read for it. I believe this has been the case in reading the word on the bell at Abbotsham. I have no doubt that the word is intended for elemosinary, the initial e being either omitted, or indicated only by a small ('); and that the word was adopted to signify that the bell was presented as an elemosinary, or deed of pious alms to the church. F. C. H.

THE ORIGIN OF VALENTINES (3rd S. vii. 221.) — The custom of choosing a patron saint for the year prevails among Catholics; but choosing a monthly patron is perhaps more common. The choice of a patron for the year is not observed on St. Valentine's Day among seculars; but in religious communities, it is quite customary on St. Valentine, not to choose, but to draw a billet for the ensuing year, which is headed by the name of some saint, followed by the virtues for which he was most remarkable. Here is a copy of one of these billets lying now before me: — "St. Mechtildes V. Abbess. Compunction, zeal for the observance of regular discipline, and abhorrence of all worldly discourse." This was drawn in a Dominican nunnery, several years ago. The person who draws the billet, proposes to invoke the intercession of the saint, and to endeavour to imitate his virtues, particularly during the ensuing year. As to the profane custom of choosing on St. Valentine "special loving friends," I think there can be no doubt that it is a remnant of the Pagan practice in honour of Juno Februatæ, on which I enlarged in a former article on St. Valentine in "N. & Q." vol. iii. of the present series, p. 169. F. C. H.

"THE FOURTH OF MARCH" (3rd S. vii. 197.) — In "N. & Q." of March 11, 1865, there is a reference to this day as not often occurring on a Sunday. My friend, Mr. Robert Robson (a man far too modest for his attainments), has given me the following retrospective and prospective Sundays falling on the fourth of March; and of course they might be extended: —

"Fourth of March on Sunday.

"1804, 1810, 1821, 1827, 1832, 1838, 1849, 1855, 1860, 1866, 1877, 1883, 1888, 1894, 1900, 1906, 1917, 1923, 1928, 1934, 1945, 1951, 1956, 1962, 1973, 1979, 1984, 2001, 2007, 2012, 2018, 2029, 2035, 2040, 2046, 1057, 2063, 2068, 2074, 2085, 2091, 2096, and so on."

JNO. KITTS, Librarian, Sunderland.

MOUNT ATHOS (3rd S. vii. 199.) — The catalogues referred to by F. M. S. are in the possession of Professor Carlyle's daughter, Mrs. Maclean, of Lazony Hall, in the county of Cumberland.

E. F. BURTON.

Carlisle.

OLD SAYING (3rd S. vii. 219.) — I believe the saying is in general use, though I can speak from my own experience only of Oxon and Bucks,

* I. c. Nos. 9 and 10 (April and July, 1864).

where it is applied to persons supposed to be living beyond their means:—

"To bring a noble to ninepence, and ninepence to nothing."

"Il fait de son teston de six sols. To bring an abbey to a grange. Fare di trenta tre undici. The Italians also say, Far d'un lancio un fuso. To cut a cloak to a button." (Bohn's Hand-Book of Proverbs, p. 172.)

II. B. C.

T. T. Club.

SUN-DIALS (3rd S. vii. 200.)—Very simple directions for making sun-dials will be found in Procter's Dictionary of Arts and Sciences. For an account of the various kinds of sun-dials consult Brewster's Ferguson's Lectures. II. FISHWICK.

TRADITIONS OF AN ANCIENT WORLD (3rd S. vii. 97, 141, 210.)—There is a very interesting article on the speculations of Isaac de la Peyrère, in the fifth number of the Anthropological Review, May, 1864. There is also, I believe, some mention of him in Bayle's Dictionary, and M. M. Hagg's La France Protestante.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

FLEMISH STAINED GLASS IN ENGLAND (3rd S. vi. 472.)—In Gessert's Geschichte der Glasmalerei in Deutschland und den Niederlanden, Frankreich, England, &c. (8vo, Stuttgart, 1839), an attempt is made to give a list of the stained glass windows in the principal countries of Europe, and of the artists by whom they were executed. The celebrated windows of Fairford are particularly mentioned as having come from the Netherlands, owing to the capture, about the year 1492, of a Spanish ship, which Dallaway supposes was bound for South America; but whose destination was more probably Spain itself, as at that time there were no churches in South America; and Columbus only returned from his first voyage, after an absence of seven months and twelve days, in March, 1493.

Martin Guerards, of Bruges, is mentioned by Herr Gessert as one of the innumerable Flemings who emigrated to England about the year 1500; and who is more celebrated as a designer of outline sketches for stained windows, than as a painter of them. I cannot find any other particulars at all relevant to MR. WEALE'S inquiry, in this German compilation.

J. MACRAY.

Oxford.

THE BIDDING PRAYER (3rd S. vii. 152.)—BIBLIOPOLA closes his extracts from the Oxford MS. Sermons with portions from the Bidding Prayer. Could you find room for the whole prayer, as it would prove an interesting addition to your bill of fare? I heard Dr. Hook, at Leeds, use the Bidding Prayer before sermon; entering into much detail of title and function of the nobility and gentry of Yorkshire, with good effect.

A. B. C.

[The Bidding Prayer varies according to circumstances.—Ed.]

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Life and Times of Sir Joshua Reynolds, with Notices of some of his Contemporaries: commenced by Charles Robert Leslie, R.A. Continued and concluded by Tom Taylor. In Two Volumes. With Portraits and Illustrations. (Murray.)

A biography of the great English painter, whose immortalising pencil has preserved to us "in their habits as they lived," so many hundred likenesses of his contemporaries eminent for wit, beauty, or eloquence, with such a fidelity that we feel we know them all;—a biography of the painter friend of Johnson, Burke, and Goldsmith; a biography of Reynolds, which should be at once worthy of the man and of the artist, has long been wanted. To produce such a work was a labour of love which the late worthy successor of Sir Joshua, Leslie, the Royal Academician, had imposed upon himself, and it occupied him until the last moment of his life. On his death, the task of completing and concluding what he had left unfinished, was entrusted to Mr. Tom Taylor, who clearly has entered heart and soul into the work. He has felt that to write the Life and Times of Reynolds was to record, not only the history of the painter's works, but to tell, it may be briefly but still distinctly, who were his sitters, and not to give us a bare list of their names, but to recall them to our memory by characteristic illustration. To do this he shows us Sir Joshua at all seasons, and in all company; and the result is, that while the life of Sir Joshua forms the prominent object of his picture, the background is a rich mixture of anecdote and gossip, called forth by the mention of all the chief men and women of his time for beauty, genius, rank, power, wit, goodness, or even fashion and folly, who were either his friends or the subject of his pencil. A very full Index gives completeness to the book, which is to be followed by a Catalogue Raisonné of the Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, with Notices of their present Owners and Localities, by Mr. Tom Taylor and Mr. Charles W. Franks, who invite information on the subject.

A Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art; comprising the Definitions and Derivations of the Scientific Terms in General Use, with the History and Descriptions of the Scientific Principles of nearly every Branch of Human Knowledge. Edited by W. T. Brande, D.C.L., &c., and the Rev. George W. Cox, M.A. Assisted by Gentlemen of Eminent Scientific and Literary Acquirements. Part I. (Longman.)

Such of our readers as have, like ourselves, been in the constant habit of referring to Brande's Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art, will be well pleased to know that a new and enlarged edition of this useful compendium of useful knowledge is in course of publication. How much it is enlarged we may show by a very simple statement. The number of articles has been so greatly increased that, judging from the examination we have made of this first part, they are half as many again in the present edition as in the edition of 1852; so that it is clear the book is keeping pace with the advancement of knowledge. One other claim to public favour which the new issue puts forth deserves especial notice—namely, it is even more clearly and distinctly printed than the last—a great virtue in a book of reference. So there can be little doubt that whatever may have been the popularity of the book in its original shape, that popularity will increase in the ratio of the increased utility and fulness of the present enlarged and reconstructed issue.

The Lineage and Pedigree of the Family of Millais; recording its History from 1331 to 1865, being an Extract from the "Armorial of Jersey," by J. Bertrand Payne. With Illustrations from Designs by the Author. Privately printed.

The words "privately printed" forbid criticism; but the work is so beautifully printed, got up, and illustrated, that it cannot fail to be eagerly sought after by all admirers and collectors of handsome books on genealogy. The "Millais" are traceable in Jersey as early as A.D. 1331; and, from the names of those well-known localities Les Monts Millais and the Cueillette de Millais, are supposed to have been, in yet earlier times, among the opulent and powerful "dwellers within the isle."

BOOKS RECEIVED.—

An enlarged and illustrated Edition of Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language. Thoroughly revised and improved. By C. A. Goodrich, D.D., and Noah Porter, D.D. Parts III. and IV. (Bell and Daldy.)

Every fresh part of this work which we receive serves to justify the high terms in which we spoke of it on its first appearance. When completed it will be a most valuable dictionary.

Lives of the Queens of England, from the Norman Conquest. By Agnes Strickland. A New Edition carefully revised and augmented. Vols. V. & VI. (Bell and Daldy.)

Though grave critics may deny the claim of this work to be considered of historical authority, there can be no doubt of its great popularity; and by reproducing it in its present form—it now occupies only six volumes—Miss Strickland will assuredly largely increase the number of her readers.

The Autographic Mirror (L'Autographe Cosmopolite), Nos. 26, 27, 28.

This marvellously cheap collection of photo-lithographic facsimiles of the autographs of illustrious and distinguished persons of past and present times is continued with great spirit. Every number contains articles of considerable interest.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c. of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

FLETCHER'S FAMILY DEVOTION. Second-hand copy.

Wanted by Mr. Joseph Simpson, Bookseller, High Street, Edgware, London, N.W.

TOUR OF DR. SYNTAX IN SEARCH OF THE PICTURESQUE.

Wanted by Dr. Fisher, 5, Appian Way, Upper Leeson Street, Dublin.

PSALTERIUM S. BONAVENTURÆ. Manuscript or printed.

Old English Manuscripts.

Good Specimens of Binding.

Wanted by Rev. J. C. Jackson, 5, Chatham Place East, Hackney, N.E.

Notices to Correspondents.

G. S. MITCHELL. "A Henck Gill" is half an English pint, and a "Tappit Hen," a tin measure containing a quart.
J. K. FOWLER. So much depends on state, date, &c., it is impossible to answer your inquiries. A fair price will no doubt be procured for them from Mr. Taylor, or any other respectable dealer in coins.

S. & H. STEAMBOATS which date from 1815, railways from 1825.
SYDENHAM FERRAGE. Charles Poulett Thomson was created Baron Sydenham, Aug. 19, 1840, and died Sept. 19, 1841, never having taken his seat.

HERALDIC ANOMALIES. I beg to correct the statement in your Notice to Correspondents (p. 278) that this book was written by the Rev. Edward Nares, B.D., the biographer of Lord Burghley. It was a work of the Ven. Robert Nares, M.A., Archdeacon of Stafford, author of the valuable Glossary of Old Words and Phrases, and for some time editor of The British Critic.—N.

Our authority was the New Edition of Lowndes.—Ed. "N. & Q."

E. W. We cannot find that the three Bibles of 1632, 1637, and 1681, are of any special value. Len Wilson states that the edition of 1637 "is very incorrect, but the typography good." That of 1681 has the mistranslation in Acts vi. 5, "Whom ye may appoint."

ERRATA.—3rd S. vii. p. 238, col. i. line 18 from bottom, for "struck on the reverse?" Again, read "struck?" On the reverse again; line 13 from bottom, for "Huhlmann" read "Kuhlman."

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 22, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS for THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION are immediately relieved by Dr. LOOCC'S PULMONIC WAFERS. Another Testimonial this week from Mr. R. W. Cooper, Surgeon, 22, Stanley Street, Enniscaorthy, 28th March, 1865: "I have used them myself, and ordered them with marked benefit." They give instant relief, and a rapid cure of asthma, consumption, cough, colds, and all disorders of the breath, throat, and lungs. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. per box. Sold by all Druggists.

CROMBIE'S ETYMOLOGY AND SYNTAX.

Ninth Edition, just published, in post 8vo, price 7s. 6d. cloth.

THE ETYMOLOGY and SYNTAX of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE EXPLAINED and ILLUSTRATED. By the REV. ALEX. CROMBIE, LL.D., F.R.S., M.R.S.L., &c.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO.

Just published, fcap. 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

A GUIDE to DOMESTIC HYDROTHERAPEIA: the Water Cure in Acute Disease. By JAMES MANBY GULLY, M.D., &c., &c., Author of the "Water Cure in Chronic Disease."

Ninth Edition, fcap. 2s. 6d. sewed; or 3s. cloth.

THE WATER CURE in CHRONIC DISEASE: an Exposition of the Causes, Progress, and Termination of various Chronic Diseases of the Digestive Organs, Lungs, Nerves, Limbs, and Skin; and of their Treatment by Water and other Hygienic Means. By JAMES MANBY GULLY, M.D., L.R.C.S., and F.R.S.P., Edinburgh; F.R.M.C.S. London, &c.

"Dr. Gully has published a large and elaborate work on the Water Cure, which is, we think, the best treatise on the subject that has yet appeared."—Westminster Review.

"Dr. Gully's book is evidently written by a well educated medical man. This work is by far the most scientific that we have seen on hydropathy."—Athenæum.

"Of all the expositions which have been published respecting the Water Cure, this is the most tangible and complete."—Lancet.

Lancet Gazette.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO., Stationers' Hall Court.

Now ready, the 36th Thousand, post 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

SOYER'S MODERN HOUSEWIFE. Comprising Receipts for the Economic and Judicious Preparation of every Meal of the day, and for the Nursery and Sick Room. By the late ALEXIS SOYER. With Illustrations on Wood, &c.

"Should be in the hands of every keeper of a kitchen and larder in the kingdom."—Lancet.

Also, by the same Author,

SOYER'S GASTRONOMIC REGENERATOR; or, System of Cookery for the Kitchens of the Wealthy. With Plates. Ninth Edition, 8vo, 15s. cloth.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO., Stationers' Hall Court.

THE PUBLIC RECORDS.

In the Press,

A REVIEW of the REPORT made to SIR JOHN ROMILLY by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY and J. S. BREWER, ESQRS., on "Record Revelations." By AN IRISH ARCHIVIST.

Ready, Second Edition, royal 8vo, bound, 200 pages, 6s. post free.

RECORD REVELATION; or, the History, Position, and Treatment of the Public Records of Ireland. By AN IRISH ARCHIVIST.

"We do not remember to have seen in England or Ireland any work of the same nature in which so much critical knowledge has been displayed, or which indicates a greater familiarity with archaeological studies than 'Record Revelations.'"—House of Commons Report.

Dublin: W. B. KELLY, 6, Grafton Street.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 172.

NOTES:—Site of Golgotha, 293—Precedency of Bishops' Wives, 294—Hog Feast, 295—Junius—Ignition of Wood by Friction—Names of Rivers—Hunterian Society—The third Plague of Egypt—Abraham Lincoln a Poet—The Bell of St. Ceneu, or St. Keyna, 296.

QUERIES:—Bibliographical—Breton Music—Curious Coincidence of Names—Diogenes' Lantern—Information wanted for a Scotch Monasticon and Episcopal Chronicle, &c.—Katherine Harman—Lavington Burnt—"Oculum Sacerdotis"—Plants in Rooms—Quotations wanted—"The Sentimental and Masonic Magazine"—Shaw of Saughie and Greenock—The "Simple Cobbler's" References—Woodward Family, 297.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—"Londres," 1770—Death of Admiral Byng—Monumental Inscription—The Church of Notre Dame, Calais—Episcopus Hamensis—Earl Spencer's "Boccaccio," 1471—Saint Niersis—High Church and Low Church—"The Political Magazine," 230.

REPLIES:—Shelves in Wiltshire, 301—The Storm of 1703, 302—"Cold Harbour," 303—The Order of Christ: The Paschal Lamb, 303—Welsh Parallels for Cornish Proverbs, 304—Dante: Hercules, 305—Lobcock's "Aglaophamus"—Angus M'Diarmid—"Oh, oh, ray, oh, Amboah"—Red Lion—Locality of Zion in Early Writers—Nolo Episcopari—Jackey-legs Knife—Tamese—Yew Trees called Palma—Letter of Our Lord to Abgar—Church Desecration—Death caused by drinking cold Water—Marriage Rings—Supernodes—Satirical Engraving—Gaelic Grammar—Singular Christian Names—Sleathery—Metrical Sermon—"No Man is a Hero to his Valet-de-Chambre"—Plain Sermons by Contributors to Tracts for the Times—Arms of Lyndwood—Donkey, &c., 305.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

SITE OF GOLGOTHA.

Those who deny that the Church of the Holy Sepulchre does or can occupy the real locality, and that the true Golgotha and the true sepulchre must have been elsewhere, have been accustomed boldly to assert that before the investigation of Constantine there is no trace whatever in Christian writers of any acquaintance with the locality; this argument e silentio was strongly pressed by the late Dr. Robinson, and his remarks have been so re-echoed by others, that this assertion has been allowed to pass as a fact. Thus, those who show that the Church of the Holy Sepulchre was not included within the wall of Jerusalem in our Lord's time, have admitted too readily that no notice is to be found that before the time of Constantine the Christians knew the spot. It has been continually said that this is admitted on both sides.

But what if there is evidence that the Christians did know the place? What if Robinson imagined, from his want of acquaintance with early Christian writers, that nothing was to be found in them which would not suit his theories? and what if his opponents, in this case at least, gave him credit for completeness and accuracy of information to which he was not entitled?

Now in the answer of the martyr Lucian, before he suffered, there is a passage which bears closely on this subject. After speaking of the sufferings and resurrection of our Lord, he thus continues:—

"Quæ autem dico, non sunt in obscuro gesta loco, nec testibus indigent. Pars pene mundi jam major huic veritati adstipulatur; urbes integræ: aut si in his aliquid suspectum videtur, contestatur de his etiam agrestis manus ignara figmenti. Si minus adhuc creditur, adhibebo vobis etiam LOCI IPSIUS, in quo res gesta est, testimonium. Adstipulatur his ipse in Hierosolymis locus, et Golgothana rupes sub patibuli onere disrupta; antrum quoque illud, quod avulsis inferni januis corpus denuo reddidit animatum; quo purius inde ferretur ad cælum."—Routh, Rel. Sac. iv. 6, 7; c. Ruffini Hist. Ecc. ix. 6.

The cogency of this passage must depend on its genuineness; as to which, however, there seems to be no reasonable ground for distrust. For though it may be said that this may be an embellishment brought in by Ruffinus, yet, on the other hand, it is important to notice that it contradicts Ruffinus's own opinions relative to the discovery of the places. It could scarcely therefore be an invention of Ruffinus. The whole tone of the reply of Lucian savours of the beginning and not the close of the fourth century; if it be Lucian's own, it shows that before the reign of Constantine the localities of the suffering and burial of our Lord were well known; but even if it be argued that the statement proceeds from some one subsequent to Lucian, though prior to Ruffinus, even then it would show that it was the opinion of Christians that the localities were known before any investigation on the part of Constantine.

I have no doubt that this quotation from Lucian the martyr will be to many a piece of perfectly new evidence; for although I brought it forward nine years ago (in the Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology, March, 1856), I am not aware that it received the smallest attention. I was thus like George Primrose, whose "Paradoxes" were thus treated by the world, as he had to inform his father, the Vicar of Wakefield. I showed the passage in Lucian to a foreign writer on the Holy Land, who has declaimed earnestly against the fraud of those who defend the received localities of Jerusalem; but to my astonishment he asserted that it could not really mean what the words say; I then found to my surprise that this writer, although in his books he most fluently quotes ancient authors, is wholly ignorant of all ancient languages. I quite expect that publication in "N. & Q." will be enough to call attention to this piece of evidence, so that it will not in future be passed by in silence by those who discuss the localities of Jerusalem.

But perhaps Lucian is not a mere solitary witness; perhaps there is some evidence, direct or indirect, that the place was known between his time and the apostolic age. Origen seems to know something of the place:—

Περὶ τοῦ κρανίου τύπου ἦλθεν εἰς ἡμᾶς ὁτι Ἑβραῖοι παραδιδάσκουσιν ὅτι τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Ἀδάμ ἐκεῖ τέταπται· ἵνα ἔπει ἐν τῷ Ἀδάμ πάντες ἀποθνήσκουσι, πάλιν ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ πάντες ζωοποιηθῶσι (iii. 920, ed. De la Rue).

If a tradition be attached to a place, it assumes (without proof being needed) that the place is known. However groundless be the story that Adam was buried at Golgotha, yet this was the Jewish tradition in the former part of the third century, and whether Origen personally knew the place or not, he knew that the Jews attached that story to the place—a known and definite locality. The same traditions are mentioned by Epiphanius, a native of Palestine, and a Jew by nation, after the time of Constantine.

Ὡς ἐν βίβλοις ἠγρήκαμεν τὸν κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν τῷ Γολγοθᾷ ἐσταυρώσθαι, οὐκ ἄλλη που ἄλλ' ἢ ἐνθα ἔκειτο τὸ τοῦ Ἀδάμ σῶμα . . . ἐκεῖσε ἐτάφη ἐν τῷ τόπῳ τῷ Γολγοθᾷ· ὅθεν εἰκότως τὸ ἐπώνυμον ὁ τόπος ἔσχε. (Panarium, i. 394, ed. Petavii; ii. 415, ed. Dindorf.)

We may be very sure that Epiphanius did not use Origen as an authority, but it is evident that they both of them mention the same Jewish tradition; both of them thus appear to refer to the same place. Epiphanius, of course, means that on which Constantine had built a church, the locality of which has never from that day been forgotten; and Origen, by speaking of the tradition, identifies the spot as that which was known in his day.

Why did Constantine search on that spot? The only reasonable answer is, because the Christians knew it to be Golgotha. The idol temple marked it; and even if hid, yet the words of Lucian show that they knew the cleft rock and the empty sepulchral cave to be there.

Recently some have chosen to mix up the narrative of Eusebius with later accounts about "the invention of the cross," and dreams and miracles of which he says not a word; and after ridiculing these tales they say,—"These are the grounds on which the identity of the Holy Sepulchre rests." But this is an entire misrepresentation: they might as well affirm that the real existence of the Khalif Haroun-al-Rashid, and of the city of Bagdad, depended on the authenticity of the Arabian Nights. We know of the existence of that Khalif and of that city, although they are introduced into amusing fictions.

S. P. TREGELLES.

Plymouth.

PRECEDENCY OF BISHOPS' WIVES.*

With respect to the political expediency of publicly acknowledging this right, the advantage to be derived from giving weight and consequence to a class of persons who seem absolutely obliged by their situation to observe a peculiarly exemplary course of conduct, and to form some barrier against the sweeping torrents of irreligion and licentiousness, cannot be deemed a trifling consideration: and it should be observed that this acknowledgment would furnish a complete answer to the various Sectarists, who in the old style of Puritanism, and in the new style of Socinianism, profess themselves scandalized at this semblance of Popish error respecting ecclesiastical rank and title, and inveigh against the rank of Bishop being now so opposite to their situations and pretensions in the primitive ages of Christianity, in a matter which excites doubts of its propriety even among zealous Episcopalians. It being in vain to urge that it is the Barony annexed to the Bishopric which gives them temporal rank, while rank is withheld from their Wives. For it is artfully maintained, in order to degrade the Bishops, and to stigmatize the Church in the eyes of the people, that this singular distinction proves not only that they sit in the House of Peers in their Ecclesiastical character, but that they have no other—"no temporal rank as Peers"—and that "having no rank in right of their Temporalities, or Baronies, as they are called, they can have no right to the title of Lords, (except when sitting in the House officially as Lords of Parliament or Counsellors of State) which it is highly improper to give them as Bishops, &c. &c."—an opinion growing more and more prevalent in this age of research into the foundation of rights, titles, claims, and privileges, and of invidious attack upon all. The declaration and protection of a right considered to be, or pretended to be considered to be, of a doubtful nature, cannot be esteemed any innovation, or alteration of a long established system in the estate of the Bishops. This right to personal rank and dignity the Bishops have, in fact, possessed ever since the Conquest, and their Wives have consequently a right to share that rank and dignity. Were they to assert this right of place as Barons' Wives, it could not be denied them with the shadow of justice. But many circumstances connected with the spirit of the times, and the peculiar situation of the Wives of Bishops, render it far more desirable that this right, which has been suffered to lie dormant so long, should be called forth by a special command from the throne, rather than be claimed by the parties themselves. And as the suppression of a privilege without just cause is an acknowledged grievance, from which every subject may properly demand relief, it is surely advisable in every case to redress a grievance (especially one not likely to be silently endured much longer) as a mark of favor, before a just complaint of neglect from persons who really deserve attention, precludes the idea of gratitude, and yet secures its object. With a view to such a measure, the following Form of an Order for the public acknowledgment of the right in question is subjoined to this private representation of this literally singular case.

[* Continued from p. 275.]

It is presumed that this Order may easily be made applicable to the Bishops on the Irish Bench by special grant, if they cannot plead a claim; and that it will be found to preserve the distinction of blood so highly valued by the hereditary nobility. Bishops precede Barons upon the same principle which placed Archbishops before Dukes; but the Wives of Barons must precede the wives of Archbishops and Bishops, because "Hereditary dignities have place before Temporary dignities, except when otherwise ordered, as some of the Officers of State, &c." (vide Pomey, Blackstone, &c.), though the Baronies annexed to the Bishoprics are, with few exceptions, the most antient. And the antient Baronial fillet, which the Bishop's mitre now surmounts in like manner as the Archbishop's mitre surmounts the ducal coronet, instead of the coronet given to the Secular Barons by King Charles II., will further distinguish the Wives of Bishops from the Wives of Barons; and their title, according to the signature of their husbands, will distinguish them from the Wives of the younger sons of Dukes and Marquises who take the name of their family. Bishops have a right to the style of "Right Hon^{ble}" as Barons. They were addressed by titles of equivalent temporal rank, as well as by others of ecclesiastical dignity, before titles and precedence became fixed and appropriate; and the custom of sinking the "Right Hon^{ble}" in the superior title of "Right Reverend" or "Most Reverend," upon the principle already mentioned, and of adding the inferior title of "Hon^{ble}" as a mark of distinction, which has lately prevailed, has contributed something towards the error respecting their real dignity as peers which it is the object of the following order to correct.

PROPOSED FORM FOR THE ORDER.

The King having taken into his Royal Consideration that the Wives of the Archbishops and Bishops have a just Claim to Rank and Precedence as the Wives of Barons from the Antient Baronies annexed to each of the Bishoprics (by virtue of which Baronies, or Temporal and Personal Dignities, the Bishops and Archbishops take their Seats in the House of Lords, and possess the Privileges common to all Peers), and this Right having been suffered, hitherto, to lie dormant, His Majesty is graciously pleased to Command that from henceforth the Wives of Archbishops and Bishops shall take their Rank as Wives of Barons, for Life, and shall take their Style and Title according to the Signature of their respective Husbands, their Family distinctions, and the accustomed Precedence in the manner following:—

The Right Hon^{ble} Lady John Canterbury.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady William York.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Bielby London.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Shute Durham.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Brownlow Winchester.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady James Ely.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Richard Worcester.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady John Hereford.

The Right Hon^{ble} Lady James Litchfield and Coventry.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Richard Llandaff.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady George Lincoln.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady John Salisbury.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady William Bangor.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Samuel St. Asaph.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Richard Bath and Wells.
The Right Hon^{ble} The Lady Anne Edward V. Carlisle.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Charles M. Norwich.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Spencer Peterborough.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Henry R. Exeter.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Poliot II. W. Bristol.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady John Chichester.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady John Oxford.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Henry W. Chester.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady George Murray St. Davids.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady George F. Gloucester.
The Right Hon^{ble} Lady Thomas Rochester.

The King is pleased to Command that the Wives of Archbishops and Bishops, or Spiritual Barons, shall rank after the Wives of the Temporal Barons; and that the Widows of Archbishops and Bishops shall give Place to the Wives of Archbishops and Bishops.

HOG FEAST.

I am called upon to-day to write a letter for a poor neighbour, in reply to an invitation from his granddaughter, that he would come and visit her "for hog-feast." I am not aware if this Huntingdonshire expression and custom obtains elsewhere; and, as it has not yet been mentioned in the pages of "N. & Q." I here make a note of it. The Huntingdonshire "hog-feast" is the domestic rejoicing that follows upon that important event in a cottager's family—the killing of the pig. The relatives and friends of the pig's proprietor are summoned by him to partake of a feast, the chief dishes of which are composed of those portions of the pig's interior economy which are unsuited for the purposes of salting. A part of the spare-rib, or one of the choicer joints, is usually cooked; but the brunt of the hog-feast is borne by those other porcine parts which may not be cured into bacon. In return for their dinner, the guests assist the good wife in the salting of her pig. The old man for whom I wrote the letter waxed loquacious as his memory recalled the various hog-feasts in which he had taken an active part. Said he:—"I mind the time when hog-feast cost a mort' o' money. That was before George the Fourth took the tax off salt. When you killed a pig, before George the Fourth's day, you was obligated to part with the bald-ribs and spare-ribs, and all the best joints, to buy salt with, afore you could salt the fitches and hams. And now, look at the salt that you can get for fourpence! Oh yes! we are greatly obligated to George the Fourth; and when I lived as ostler at the Inn on Alconbury-hill, George the Fourth he came and slept the night there. Our boys went out to meet him beyond Buckden; and he came with two fours and a pair. There were a many gentlemen with him, but no ladies. It was the time when he and Caroline didn't keep company. We all hurrahed, and Old Tom, that's now dead and gone, blessed him for cheapening hog-feast; but I don't suppose as George the Fourth would know the meaning of hog-feast. He went away the next morning for Wansford; and then turned off somewhere Wisbeach way, and back home by way of Cambridge: so he did not come again by our Great North Road. When he started off I was close to him, putting in the near wheeler; and George the Fourth was smoking a long pipe that came as low as the bottom of his waistcoat. It wasn't a clay, you understand; but had a large bowl to it, and a great gold stopper on it. He made himself very free and pleasant; but what we thought most of was, his taking the tax off salt and cheapening hog-feast."

There is a story current of a clodpole who had been at a dinner, and was asked as to the bill of fare. His reply being: "There was all sorts o'meat, Sir; there was roast pork, biled pork, pig's face, and bacon, Sir." Which repast, doubtless, was a superior kind of hog-feast.

CUTHBERT BEDE.

JUNIUS.—In the Intermédiaire (a professed and very deserving French imitation of "N. & Q.") there appeared in the No. for June 15, 1864, a communication signed "E. Pieraggi" (Suresnes) to the following effect, on the subject of the Letters of Junius:—

"Among some old papers that belonged to my mother, an Englishwoman, and daughter of Walsh Porter, of Alfathing, who was a frequent visitor at the Court of the Regent, afterwards George IV., I found a card, enclosed in a slip of paper, on which was written: 'A Secret.' On the card was written, in two different hands, one of them very tremulous, no doubt designedly: 'The author of Junius, Charles Lloyd. LOYD. He was private Secretary to the present Lord Grenville; father and teller of the Exchequer.' The words Charles Lloyd are underlined once, and Lloyd twice. But this is not all. The words, 'Honor bright, until the poor son be provided for,' are written inside of the envelope. There is no date or signature; and even the handwriting is unknown to those of my mother's relations whom I have interrogated on the subject. However, what may give some value to this little document is the fact of its evidently having passed through the hands of my grandfather, who lived in a circle where this secret was no mystery: perhaps in his childhood he had even known Junius. In short, Charles Lloyd figures among the number of supposed authors, as well as Lord Grenville. The objection derived from the style of Junius, which is so remarkable, and betrays, it is said, the composition of Sir Philip Francis; and from the cessation of the letters the day after his departure for America, is this objection as insurmountable as it seems to be? Have we not here a three-fold coadjutorship, an inspiration—to make use of a term employed by writers for the newspapers? Has not Sir Philip revised, annotated, and corrected this work, inspired by Lord Grenville, and edited by Lloyd?"

"Here, it seems to me, is an interesting occasion for having recourse to comparative bibliography; and for inquiring whether there are not circumstances, either in the style or in the lives of these three individuals, which correspond with certain expressions or allusions contained in the Letters. Lloyd's situation in the Exchequer, and his intimacy with Lord Grenville, and consequently in the ministerial world of that time, would singularly facilitate that merciless knowledge of secret affairs of which the author gives proofs.
E. PIERAGGI."

J. MACRAY.

Oxford.

IGNITION OF WOOD BY FRICTION.—In an early number of "N. & Q.," I inquired whether there was any known instance in this country of success in the experiment of producing fire by rubbing one piece of wood against another, as constantly practised among the South Sea islanders and elsewhere. I believe the answer was in the negative. But in the last number (p. 239) we are told that it is possible—not to say was once common in Yorkshire—to "set the teinse on fire," by merely rubbing the rim of a riddle on the top of a flour barrel! I say nothing about the actual meaning of the familiar phrase alluded to, and I hope P. is not joking; but surely a more unfounded notion than that of the possibility of setting a "teinse on fire" by the domestic operation described—and which, when a boy, I often witnessed—would only be the likelihood of setting the "Thames on fire" by some of the steamers plying thereon!

J. H.

NAMES OF RIVERS.—In a recent number of "N. & Q." there were some remarks on the origin of the names of rivers. May I suggest that the name of Esk, in the Lowlands of Scotland, is probably not derived, as stated, from a word signifying water, but from the old Scotch word for an asp.

In the ballad of the "Young Tamlane," the youth was transformed while in the arms of his mistress into an esk (asp). The idea of likening the course of a stream to a snake is common enough. Serpentine in modern times is well known.

Appropos, the Goomtee on which Lucknow stands is synonymous with our adopted meaning of the word meander.
S.

HUNTERIAN SOCIETY.—I know no receptacle but "N. & Q." in which to lodge the following amusing blunder. In a publication entitled The Royal Album, designed partly for tradesmen's advertisements, but edited, it seems, by French and German editors for the guidance and information of their countrymen in London, and printed in English, French, and German, appears in a list of public societies, "The Hunterian Society," translated "Société des Chasseurs," and "Jagd-Gesellschaft."

Foreigners, and particularly Frenchmen, when they know a little of English have unbounded confidence in that little; and I once myself received at Havre a tradesman's card in the following terms:—

"So-and-so, Merchant, and Fabricant of Umbrellas and Parapluies. Make and repair all things who concern his state, at juste price. The persons whom ar far can write him he shall go directly."

F. J. J.

THE THIRD PLAGUE OF EGYPT.—When Aaron was commanded to smite the dust of the land with his rod, he did so, and the dust "became lice in man and in beast," according to the rendering of the Authorised Version (Exodus, viii. 16). Dr. Kalisch, however, in his Historical and Critical Commentary on the Old Testament (Exodus, chap. viii. p. 137, ed. London, 1855) endeavours to prove, and I think successfully, that the Hebrew word בְּעָרָם = Kin-nim, ought to be translated by the term gnats. His reasons for this rendering are given at length in a long and learned note (pp. 136-137). The Septuagint, which is of great authority in all points relating to the natural history of insects in Egypt, translates the Hebrew word by swipes, mosquito gnats. Niebuhr mentions (Description de l'Arabie, Pref. p. 39), that when he was in the East he once inquired into this very subject, and asked the Greek Patriarch, and also the Metropolitan at Cairo, what they supposed was the species of insect mentioned in Exodus, chap. viii. ? Their answer was, that they believed the gnat was the insect. (Kitto's Cyclop. of Biblical Literature, vol. ii. p. 249, ed. Edinburgh, 1847.) Kalisch observes, that though Josephus, Jonathan, Onkelos, Hesychius, Taylor, Buxtorf, Le Clerc, and Bochart, adopt and maintain, as the most correct translation, the word lice, yet their arguments are not supported with sufficient proofs. As, however, there are great names on both sides of the question, it is now probably impossible to ascertain for certain whether the little animals were lice or gnats. Either must have been very tormenting, especially the gnats, which, according to Philo and Herodotus, have always been numerous in Egypt.

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN A POET.—I have not seen any allusion to the curious instance of involuntary rhyme afforded in the President's recently delivered inaugural address, yet it seems worth making a note of. The President said—

"Fondly do we hope,
Fervently do we pray,
That this mighty scourge of war
May speedily pass away:
Yet if it be God's will
That it continue until—"

but here the strain abruptly ceases, and the President relapses into prose.

W. S.

THE BELL OF ST. CENEU, OR ST. KEYNA.—Perhaps the following may be worthy of preservation in "N. & Q.," copied from Mr. Kerslake's Bristol Catalogue, 1859, pasted in my copy of Jones's History of Brecknockshire. Where now its place of deposit?

"ANCIENT-BRITISH CHURCH BELL: THE BELL OF ST. CENEU OR ST. KEYNA, daughter of Brychan, Prince of the province called from him Brecknock, found on the site of her oratory at Llangeney, Brecknockshire.

"This most venerable relique of the ancient British Christianity is of an oblong plan, and conical figure. It consists of a single plate of iron, gathered up into its present form, and rivetted down through the middle of each of the narrow sides. At the top is a bow or loop for the handle, and it was evidently intended to be rung by swinging in the hand. The strip of metal which forms the handle is continued through to the inside where it formed a smaller loop, from which the clapper was suspended but is now wanting. After the iron substructure was finished, the whole appears to have been coated with bell-metal, or other brass-like compound; and this was evidently applied by dipping or washing the finished iron utensil in fluid metal, as all the joints, and the rivets themselves are covered, and the seams and interstices filled with it. Being corroded through in some places, the amalgamated contact of the metals is apparent. The result is similar to that of electrotype. Iron was perhaps in ancient times, as now, very commonly washed with tin and its compounds; but was brass usually applied in this manner?

"In Jones's History of Brecknockshire, published 1809 (ii. 469), there is a long account of this bell and of its discovery; but there appears to be some mistake in his description of the dimensions. The actual height is 10 inches, without the handle; size at top, $5\frac{1}{2}$ by 3 inches; at the mouth, $7\frac{1}{2}$ by 6 inches; weight rather more than 6 lb. 15 oz.

"The town of Keynsham, near Bristol, arose out of an oratory founded there by this St. Keyna. See her legend in Cressy's Church History of Britain, A.D. 490, b. x. ch. xiv.

"Two views of the bell of St. Mura, attributed to the seventh century, may be seen in the Ulster Journal of Archaeology, No. 4, Oct. 1853. This has a general resemblance to that of St. Ceneu; but was decorated, and not so large.

"Although the sonorous quality of the bell is, no doubt, diminished by the holes which are fretted through it, the voice which called our countrymen to church, perhaps even before St. Augustine came from Rome for the same purpose, can still be most distinctly elicited."

GLWYSIG.

Queries.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL.—Perhaps a reader of "N. & Q." who has a marked copy of "Bibliotheca Reediana, the Catalogue of the Library of Mr. Isaac Reed sold 1807," would kindly inform me who was the purchaser of "Lot 8538," viz. "Shaksperiana,—a large assembly of Tracts by various Authors relative to Shakspeare, neatly bound in 9 vols. 8vo." I am desirous also to learn if it is known in whose possession these volumes are now. Were any copies of Douce's Illustrations of Shak- speare, 2 vols. 1807, taken off on large or thick paper? E. N.

BRETON MUSIC.—The air called "An Aliké, or the Shepherd's Call," in Tom Taylor's Songs of Brittany, is that called "Ballinderry," in Bunting's Collection of the Ancient Music of Ireland. In Jephson's Walking Tour in Brittany occurs a tune which is identical with that in the Irish Melodies, to which Moore has written the words "Silent, O Moyle, be the roar of thy water!" What was the original home of these tunes? Ireland or Celtic France? O. T. D.

CURIOUS COINCIDENCE OF NAMES.—In the third volume of the Sussex Archaeological Collections (for 1850), p. 117, there is a paper communicated by Mr. R. Willis Blencowe, containing extracts from the journal and account-books (1683-1714) of Timothy Burrell, of Ockenden House, Cuckfield; which house, then (1850) in the occupation of Mr. J. P. Fearon, belonged to the late Sir C. Merrik Burrell, of Knepp. In the Universal Magazine for November, 1747, p. 245, it is stated that the present [members for Great Marlow, Bucks.] are William Ockenden, Esq., of Temple Mills, and Merrik Burrell, Esq.

Query, was there any original connection, local, personal, or family, to account for this coincidence? W. J. B.

DIOGENES' LANTERN.—Can any one tell me the authority on which the repartee about "the lantern" and the "honest man" is ascribed to Diogenes? And why does Æsop, to whom Phædrus gives the credit of the saying, never come in for the benefit of it? MEDIO SOLE.

INFORMATION WANTED FOR A SCOTCH MONASTICON AND EPISCOPAL CHRONICLE, ETC.—As I am presently preparing a Chronicle of all the Bishops in Scotland, down to the present day, with minute details of their lives and jurisdiction, from correspondence, &c., based on Keith's Catalogue, but much amplified; as also a Scotch Monasticon, containing notices of abbeys, abbots, religious houses, &c., will you be so kind as allow any information thereabout, or corrections and defects in Keith, to come through your columns, if this intimation should be replied to, which it is certain to be? Any correspondence, if too lengthy for "N. & Q." can be posted direct to myself.

J. F. S. GORDON, D.D.,
Incumbent of St. Andrew's Church, Glasgow.
247, Atholl Terrace, Bath Street, Glasgow.

KATHERINE HARMAN.—In 1692 Dame Katherine Harman, widow of Admiral Sir John Harman, was living. Her daughter (heirress of Sir John and of her brother James Harman) was wife of Dautesey Brouncker, of East Stoke, Wilts. He was the last heir male of the Brounckers of East Stoke, and died, 1693, leaving two daughters married, who died without issue. I am anxious to ascertain whose daughter Lady Harman was, and also any particulars of Admiral Harman's birth and parentage which may be matter of record. The arms on his picture are those of Harman of Suffolk. I am aware of the notices of him in Pepys's Diary. E. W.

[* Twelve copies were printed on large paper of Douce's Dance of Death; but we have never met with a large paper copy of his Illustrations to Shakspeare.—ED.]

LAVINGTON BURNT.—In an old almanac by Gabriel Frend, 1598, I find the following memorandum in the handwriting of that period:—

"August 20. Lavington burnt by mishape."

Can any readers of "N. & Q." inform me to which of the Wiltshire Lavingtons this refers, or where I can probably meet with some particulars of a brief issued, or the like, and thus fix the place either as Lavington Forum or Lavington West? E. W.

"OCULUM SACERDOTIS."—Is anything known of a mediæval treatise called Oculum Sacerdotis, by an Englishman, somewhat similar to Pipilla Oculi? J. C. J.

PLANTS IN ROOMS.—Will any plants grow in rooms in which gas is burned; or does the gas poison all plants? Is there any way of preserving plants from its poisonous effects? Will covering them with a bell glass at night do? P.

QUOTATIONS WANTED.—In the Simple Cobbler (p. 25) will be found this passage:—

"I can hardly forbear to commend to the world a saying of a lady living sometime with the Queen of Bohemia. I know not where she found it, but it is pity it should be lost:—

'The world is full of care, much like unto a bubble; Women and care, and care and women, and women and care and trouble.'"

This couplet sounds familiar. Does any reader of "N. & Q." know its origin?

On p. 34, the following occurs:—

"Some ten or twelve years before these Wars, there came to my view these two Predictions:

1. 'When God shall purge this Land with soap and nitre,
Woe be to the Crowne, woe be to the Mitre.'
2. 'There is a set of Bishops coming next behind,
Will ride the divell off his legs and break his wind.'

Can these predictions be found in print or manuscript before that time?

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, U. S.

"THE SENTIMENTAL AND MASONIC MAGAZINE."
May I ask you to be so kind as to tell me how many volumes of the above-named periodical were published? I have a copy of six half-yearly volumes (from July, 1792, to June, 1795), and I have never met with any others, though I have searched the library of Trinity College, Dublin; but I am informed by a friend, that, to the best of his belief, five more subsequently appeared. To judge from what I have seen, it was a really good Dublin publication of the last century. Who was the editor?*

ABHBA.

SHAW OF SAUGHIE AND GREENOCK.—Where can I see a pedigree of this family? F. M. S.
229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

THE "SIMPLE COBBLER'S" REFERENCES.—In the Simple Cobbler of Aggawam—a book written in New England in 1645 or 6, and published at London in 1647, four editions being issued that year, there are some references that I should like explained, viz.:—

1. The Cobbler says:—

"If Truth be but One, methinks all the Opinionists in England should not be all in that One Truth, some of them I doubt not are out. He that can extract an unity out of such a disparity, or contract such a disparity into an unity, had need be a better Artist then ever was Drebell."—P. 10.

Is Cornelius Drebell, the Dutch alchymist, who died at London in 1634, meant?

2. In another place he says:—

"Brethren, have an extraordinary care also of the late Theosophers, that teach men to climb to heaven upon a ladder of lying figments. Rather then the devill will lose his game, he will out-shoot Christ in his own bow. He will outlaw the Law, quite out of the word and world; over-Gospell the Gospell, and quidaway Christ with Sugar and Ratsbane. He was Professour not long since at Schlestat in Alsatia, where he learned that no payson is so deadly as the payson of Grace."—P. 17.

What Professor is referred to?

3. Addressing King Charles I., the Cobbler says:—

"Is your father's Sonne grown more Orthodox then his most Orthodox father, when he told his Sonne that a King was for a kingdome, and not a kingdome for a King?"—P. 54.

Did James I. so tell his son?

4. The Cobbler tell us that the Irish—

"Have a Tradition among them, That when the Devill shewed our Saviour all the kingdomes of the Earth and their glory, that he would not shew him Ireland."—P. 72.

Is this a fact?

5. Again, he says:—

"Not long since I met with a book, the best to mee I ever saw, but the Bible: yet under favour, it was somewhat underclad, especially by him who can both excogitate and expresse what hee undertakes, as well as any man I know—

The world is growne so fine in words and wit,

That pens must now Sir Edward Nicklas it.

He that much matter speaks, speaks ne'er a whit,

If's tongue doth not career 't above his wit."

"Sir Edward Nicholas," I take it, means Secretary Nicholas. But what book is referred to?

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, U. S.

[* Our correspondent is the fortunate possessor of a printed net to be found in the British Museum.—Ed.]

WOODWARD FAMILY.—

"In 1552 King Edward VI. by Letters Patent, 8 March, granted, inter alia, a field called Le Humme, with its appurtenances in the Lordship of Ditton, to George Woodward for twenty-one years @ 106s. 8d. rent; and on its surrender in 1563, Queen Elizabeth regranted the same premises to John Woodward for a farther term of twenty-one years on the payment of a fine of £21 6s. 8d. In 1584 (26 Eliz.) the Queen demised the same premises to George Woodward, gent., and Edward and George his sons, at the same rent, for their lives and the life of the survivor, with a heriot of 26s. 8d."

These Woodwards were of Upton, co. Bucks; the first George and Richard his second son were "Clerks of the honor and Castle of Windsor." (Visitation of Hampshire in 1576 and 1602.)

Can any one of the readers of "N. & Q." inform me whether Robert Woodward, D.D., who was Dean of Salisbury from 1691 to 1701, was of this family; and if so, was he descended from Edward or from George, the last named in the above grant?

Lipscombe, in his History of Buckinghamshire, states that there is a monument of white marble at Hillesden church, co. Bucks, to George Woodward "Envoy Extraordinary from the King of Great Britain to the King and Republic of Poland," that he was the grandson of George Woodward, of Stratton Audley, co. Oxford, and that he died at Warsaw, March 10, 1735, in the thirty-eighth year of his age, and was buried at Hillesden.

Query, Were these descendants of the Upton family?
GEO. ADLARD.

Queries with Answers.

"LONDRES," 1770.—Being at Paris in 1862, I fell in with a book, in four duodecimo volumes, entitled Londres, and containing an account of a Frenchman's travels in England in 1766-7. It is anonymous. My copy is a new edition, "corrigée et considérablement augmentée," printed at Lausanne in 1774. The preface tells me that the first edition was printed in 1770, and that mine is the second. It also contains a notice that, in 1773, an English translation of Londres, by Dr. Nugent, was published "avec le plus grand soin, par l'Imprimeur de la Société Royale;" and complaints are made of pirated editions being printed in Flanders and elsewhere: and of the author of the Voyageur François, who, in his work, "a fait entrer le Londres à large dose, c'est-à-dire par paquets de 4, de 7, de 18 pages continues." It is also mentioned, that the book had been reviewed in the Journal Encyclopédique of Oct. 1773, by M. de la Condamine, who had since honoured the author with his friendship, and to whom several corrections in this new edition were owing. The writer of the preface (who seems not to be the

c) indulges in a bit of sarcasm against one of his critics:—

our ne rien omettre de ce qui peut présenter avancement un ouvrage que j'ai l'intérêt de faire valoir, et qu'il a complètement déplu aux auteurs de l'écrit Littéraire."

have not been able to discover any traces of name or quality of the author. He evidently is a learned man, and had access to the best society. I shall be glad if any of your correspondents can give me information respecting the authorship.

I may mention, that my attention was drawn to the book from the circumstance of four exceedingly well-bound volumes being offered for sale at a bookstall on the Quais at 60 cents the volume. I was again in Paris the other day, and saw copies for sale at 40 cents the volume.

H. A.

Deanery, Canterbury.

[The author of this work was Peter John Grosley, a French antiquary, born at Troyes, Nov. 18, 1718, and educated in the profession of the law; but a decided turn for literary pursuits induced him to travel, in search of knowledge, twice into Italy, twice into England, and once into Holland, besides passing a considerable part of every year at Paris, where he was received into the best company. He died at Troyes on Nov. 4, 1785, being then an Associate of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres, and a member of the Royal Society of London. Although in his Tour to London the author appears as a philosopher and a man of taste as well as learning, nevertheless his remarks on England and its inhabitants are very imperfect, and frequently erroneous. At the particular request of Mons. Grosley, Dr. Nugent in his translation corrected some of those obvious inaccuracies animadverted upon by the writer in the Journal Encyclopédique. For some biographical notices of Grosley, and a list of his numerous productions, consult the new Biographie Universelle, 1857, xvii. 604, and the Nouvelle Biographie Générale, 1858, xxii. 179.]

DEATH OF ADMIRAL BYNG.—I find it stated that Sir George Rooke refused to sign the death-warrant of Admiral Byng, saying: "It might be presumptuous in an individual to differ from so great an authority as the opinion of the twelve judges; but when the shedding of blood was concerned, a man must act on his own conscience and not the opinions of other men." As Sir George Rooke had been dead many years, who was the member of the Board of Admiralty who refused to add his signature to the death warrant? It is undoubted that Sir George Rooke observed to a friend, just before his death, that his property was such, "it had never cost a sailor a tear or the nation a farthing." These two speeches seem to have been strangely jumbled together.

H. W. D.

[It was Admiral John Forbes, then one of the Lords Commanders of the Admiralty, who refused to sign the warrant for carrying out the Byng, and prepared a paper in which he gave reasons for his refusal. Admiral Forbes's "Reasons for not signing Admiral Byng's Death Warrant," were printed in 1757 as a hand-bill in small folio, and we possess a cutting of the document from some periodical of the time. The original, we believe, is still in the Admiralty Office at Whitehall. Who were the members of the court-martial, and other circumstances connected with the trial, may be found in Schomburgk's Naval Chronology, i. 281; The London Magazine for Feb. and March, 1757; and The Gentleman's Magazine for Feb. and March, 1757.]

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTION.—Does the following very remarkable inscription, quoted by Bishop Jeremy Taylor in his Rule and Exercises of Holy Dying, chap. iii. sect. ix. § 6, still exist in the parish church of Faversham, Kent?—

"Whoso him bechoft
Inwardly and oft
How hard it were to flitt
From bed unto the pit,
From pit unto pain
That nere shall cease again,
He would not do one sin
All the world to win."

H. W. T.

[This epitaph on Richard Colwell, Mayor of Faversham, ob. 1535, is printed in Weever's Funeral Monuments, p. 276, and in Pettigrew's Chronicles of the Tombs, p. 432. It would seem that the brass was still at Faversham in 1804, from the following notice of it in The Beauties of England and Wales, viii. 740: "In the south aisle are various memorials for different civil officers of Faversham, one of whom, Richard Colwell, Mayor in 1555 [1535?], is represented by a brass figure standing between his two wives, with groups of children beneath, and at the corners a well, with the letters C. O. L. forming the rebus of his name."]

THE CHURCH OF NOTRE DAME, CALAIS.—Can you furnish information as to whether the church at Calais called "St. Mary's," or "of Our Lady," is the time of the English occupation of the town was built or only enlarged by the English?

M. E.

[It is stated in most topographical dictionaries that St. Mary's at Calais was built during the English occupation of the town. Mr. T. Mot, F.S.M., minutely inspected the large church in April, 1816, and communicated an interesting account of it to the Gentleman's Magazine in 1816, p. 220. He says, "The church, from its structure and appearance, I have no doubt, was erected when Calais was in the possession of the English, i. e. in the fourteenth century, as was the castle of St. Risban, Bass church, and many other of the public buildings, excepting some of the present houses, and most of the fences of the town." An engraving of St. Mary's church by Mr. Topping is given in the Gent. Mag. for May 1816, p. 433.]

EPISCOPUS HAMENSIS.—Amongst the illustrious persons who were buried in the Carmelite convent at Norwich, occurs the following record: "Frater Gilbertus de Norvico, Episcopus Hamensis (alias Hamerensis), obiit A.D. 1287, 9 Die Octobris.* Query, What is the modern name corresponding with Hamensis or Hamerensis? J. DALTON.

[This suffragan bishop is noticed in Stubbs's Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum, p. 143: "Gilbert Hammensis; buried at the Carmelites, Norwich, Oct. 9, 1287. Granted forty days' indulgence to all who should attend the preaching of the Carmelites, 1273, 1274, and 1276. He was probably the Bishop Hamerensis in Norway, consecrated 1263." Hammer, the modern name, is a town in the province of Aggerhuus in Norway, which was formerly the see of a bishop, until removed to Christiana, from which it is distant 100 miles to the N. E.]

EARL SPENSER'S "BOCCACCIO," 1471.—I have seen this celebrated edition at Althorpe, but have never read, except in Dibdin, a really accurate account of the purchase of it, and of the exact price given for it by his lordship. Is there any other account extant besides that given by Dibdin, which I understand is exaggerated? J. DALTON.

[We have consulted the priced Catalogue of the Roxburghe Library, and find that the enormous sum given for this single volume, as stated by Dr. Dibdin, is perfectly correct. "Il Decamerone di Boccaccio, fol. first edition, printed at Venice by Valdarfer, 1471." To which is added the following note: "Of the extreme scarcity of this celebrated edition of the Decameron, it will perhaps be sufficient to say, that no other perfect copy is yet known to exist, after all the fruitless researches of more than three hundred years." It was knocked down to the Marquis of Blandford for 2260*l.*! when it was said Lord Spenser took off his hat, and, bowing to the Marquis, thanked him for saving him four hundred a year.]

SAINT NIERGIS.—When did St. Niersis live, and where can I find an account of him? I have a work in twenty-four languages printed at Venice, 1823, entitled Preces S. Niersis Clajensis Armeniorum Patriarchæ Viginti quatuor Linguis coitæ.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

[NERSIS IV., surnamed Shnorhali (i. e. the graceful), patriarch of Armenia, was born shortly before the close of the eleventh century, and died in 1173. During the last twenty-six years of his life, he resided at Hromkla, commonly called Rumkala, a fortified place on the Euphrates. He is considered as the inventor, or principal cultivator, of rhymed poetry. With the exception of a brief History of Armenia, his works are mostly theological. A long account of him is given in the new edition of the Biographia Universelle, xxx. 323.]

* Bale, Cent. Script. iv. 81. See also Kirkpatrick's History of the Religious Orders and Communities of Norwich, p. 172, 1845.

HIGH CHURCH AND LOW CHURCH.—Is there any small work which states clearly the differences both as to points of doctrine, and as to forms and practices, between the parties of the Church of England, known popularly as the "High" and "Low" Church? P.

[Our correspondent will probably find as much as he desires to know on this subject in the concise Essay, entitled "Church Parties," by the late W. J. Conybeare, M.A., which originally appeared in The Edinburgh Review for October, 1853. The Essay has been frequently reprinted, and the fifth edition of it will be found in Mr. Conybeare's Essays Ecclesiastical and Social, pp. 57-164, Lond. 8vo, 1855. Consult also "N. & Q." 1st S. viii. 117; x. 260, 278.]

"THE POLITICAL MAGAZINE."—Can you inform me how long The Political Magazine and Parliamentary, Naval, Military, and Literary Journal was issued, printed for J. Bew, Paternoster Row? It was commenced in 1780. I have the volumes for 1780, 1781, and 1782, and am desirous of obtaining any further volumes which may have been published. W. TUCK.

15, Milsom Street, Bath.

[A copy of The Political Magazine in the British Museum consists of twenty-one volumes, 8vo, 1780-1791.]

Replies.

SHELVES IN WILTSHIRE.

(3rd S. vii. 241.)

MR. MEWBURN'S note refers to a most interesting subject, and one to which the attention of those archaeologists who have applied themselves to the study of pre-historic earthworks has long been directed. The reason why some definite theory as to those shelves, or rather terraces, has not been submitted to the public is the fact that they are to be found all over the kingdom—from the lowlands of Scotland to the Downs of Wiltshire; that they are not like a camp, a thing to be surveyed in an hour, but extending as they do for miles and miles, and varying in breadth from a few feet to many yards, many of them would be the work of weeks. Therefore, until the details of a sufficient number collected by local antiquaries can be obtained, it would be utterly futile to make any attempt at a general theory. Every fact regarding them is however of importance, and I am certain if MR. MEWBURN will be so good as to draw up a detailed statement of the length, elevation and breadth of any such terraces in his neighbourhood, it will not be the least interesting paper that will be read at Durham during the next congress of the British Archaeological Association.

In the meantime I may inform him that there is a capital description of one of those groups of terraces (Peeblesshire) in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, 1861, 2, or 3, and that the well known Scotch antiquary, Mr. Sim of Culter, pointed out to me a most remarkable instance occurring on his property in Lanarkshire, which I hope to have an opportunity of surveying next month.

The most striking Scotch instance, however, occurs in Galloway, where an insulated hill overlooks the mouth of the River Orr (pronounced Urr). The terraced outline of this hill strikes every one that approaches it. It is known as the Moat of Urr, and there is a tradition that it was the place of a Witagemot.

It might be interesting to ascertain how far the valleys which these terraces overhang were not swamps in olden times. GEORGE VERE IRVING.

What Cobbett termed "Shelves in Wiltshire" are common in Scotland, Ireland, and all hilly and grazing countries. And Cobbett's notice of them is an instructive fact, showing how readily an otherwise shrewd man may commit a gross absurdity, for the sake of finding a convenient peg to hang a theory upon. Similar "shelves" in Ireland have frequently been pointed out to me as positive proofs of the very great population, and the superior knowledge of agriculture possessed by those in Ireland in ancient times. But the real truth is, that those so-called "shelves" are not ancient plough-marks: they are simply formed by sheep and black cattle when grazing on the hill-sides, as any person who chooses to use his eyes may almost any day observe; for these ancient tracks, though formed by the constant treading of centuries, are still used by sheep and black cattle when grazing on steep hill-sides.

WILLIAM PINKERTON.

THE STORM OF 1703.

(3rd S. iii. 168, 197, 273, 319; v. 504.)

Admit the following correction of the last article above quoted. I know not whether the error is the printer's or mine. The work referred to in the eighth line, is "The City Remembrancer," &c. &c.

When writing my last note on the subject, I had not time to look over my collection of pamphlets. I have now pleasure in sending you the following:—

"An Elegy on the Author of the True-born Englishman. With an Essay on the late Storm. By the Author of the Hymn to the Pillory. London: Printed in the Year 1704.

The tract is in verse, and the essay on the Storm occupies eighteen pages quarto. In the list of Defoe's works, contained in the new edition of Louides, it is stated to be in 8vo:—

"The Lay-man's Sermon upon the late Storm; Held forth at an Honest Coffee-House Conventicle. Not so much a Jest as 'tis thought to be. Printed in the Year 1704." [4to pp. 24, and Title.]

This is also attributed to Defoe; making, with the 8vo volume referred to by J. H. G., three distinct works on the subject, by the same author, during one year.

"Mr. Collier's Dissuasive from the Play-House; in a Letter to a person of Quality, Occasion'd by the late Calamity of the Tempest. London, 1703," 8vo, pp. 15.

On the last page, the writer says:—

"What Impression this late calamity has made upon the Play-House, we may guess by their acting Macbeth with all its Thunder and Tempest the same Day: where at the mention of the chimnies being blown down (Macbeth, p. 20,) the Audience were pleas'd to clap at an unusual Length of Pleasure and Approbation," &c. &c.

The last work I shall notice, at present, is entitled—

"An exact Relation of the Late Dreadful TEMPEST: or, a Faithful Account of the most Remarkable Disasters which happened on that Occasion. The Places where, and the Persons' Names who suffer'd by the same, in City and Countrey; the Number of Ships, Men, and Guns that were lost, the Miraculous Escapes of several Persons from the Dangers of that Calamity, both by Sea and Land. Faithfully collected by an Ingenious Hand, to preserve the Memory of so Terrible a Judgment. Nos fatis agimur Variis: contenditur fatis. London: Printed and Sold by A. Baldwin at the Oxford Arms in Warwick Lane, 1704," 4to, pp. 24.

W. LEE.

"COLD HARBOUR."

(3rd S. vii. 253.)

Taking up my last number of "N. & Q." I was surprised to find, at the reference indicated, a note professing to contain "Remarks on the Origin of Cold Harbour." The author, DR. J. C. HAHN, certainly has the good sense to conclude by saying, "an interesting paper might be written on this proper name, and I much regret only being able to offer the above few remarks," &c. &c.

Permit me to state for the information of DR. HAHN, and your readers interested in such inquiries generally, that a series of learned, and I may add exhaustive, papers on this and its kindred nomenclature, written by your frequent correspondent, DR. HYDE CLARKE, appeared in the Freemason's Magazine (vol. v. July to December, 1858), under the title of "Anglo-Saxon History, as illustrated by Topographical Nomenclature." These papers will be found at pages 99-102, 163-8, 213-7, 251-4, 350-6, 399-403, 448-53, 492-6, 546-50, 630-5, 678-82, 733-7, 871-6, 967-9, and 1117-19. The portions that more particularly relate to the Cold Harbours are those at pp. 213 and 350, they enumerate the positions of the various Cold Harbours, and the forms of "hill," "cool," "harbour," "bower," and "wind."

We are all prone to give the Germans credit for searching and multifarious reading on almost every subject they write upon, but the article in "N. & Q." is so superficial when placed in juxtaposition with that of our English Mezzofanti that, in justice to him, and believing the Magazine one not much known to your readers, I have taken the earliest opportunity to indicate where a series of papers on Cold Harbours may be found.

MATTHEW COOKE.

The Rev. Mr. Hartshorne, an eminent antiquary, whose recent death we lament, once told me that he believed this name was a corruption of Coluber. He said it was to be found in some twenty places in England, and always near to a make-like curve in an old Roman road.

LYTTELTON.

In reference to the word "herbergh" I would observe that the Charter of Foundation of the Abbey of Holyrood, by King David I. of Scotland, a copy of which is in Maitland's History of Edinburgh, pp. 144-5, contains the following grant to the Canons,—"Concedo etiam eis herbergare quoddam burgum inter eandem ecclesiam et meum burgum." Maitland makes the mistake of supposing that "herbergare" was an old name of the Canongate of Edinburgh, or of a town which formerly stood on that site; but Arnot, the more recent historian of the city, shows (foot note, p. 4) that it is the infinitive of a barbarous Latin word, signifying to build, in which sense of it the grant can obviously be read. He refers as his authority to Dalrymple's Annals, p. 97, and he is confirmed by the Cartulary of Coldingham, a copy of which is in the Advocates' Library, in p. 15 of which it will be found that it is used in the same signification. The similarity of the word to those noticed by your correspondent is somewhat curious. G. Edinburgh.

THE ORDER OF CHRIST: THE PASCHAL LAMB. (3rd S. vii. 5, 168, 251.)

In directing JUVENA's attention to the discrepancy which appeared to me to exist between the account on p. 5, and that on p. 49, I did not at all mean to imply that he was responsible for the accuracy of the statements contained in the "General Officer's" very interesting letter; but I was and am anxious to know how, and when, the Paschal Lamb was connected with the Portuguese royal arms. This connection up to the present time I have failed to discover.

I have to thank Mr. DAVIDSON for his ingenious suggestion, but fear it is untenable for the following reasons. First, the cross behind the shield of Portugal is not that of the Order of Christ. Secondly, the cross of the Order of Christ is not, and I venture to say never has been, charged with the figure of the Paschal Lamb.

The badge of the Order of Christ, which is suspended from the triple gold chain around the arms, is—"A cross patée, red, charged with a cross white." While the floriated green cross, placed behind the shield, is the badge of the Order of Avis.

Out of abundant proofs of the correctness of these assertions I may cite the following:—

"Um den Schild hängen der Orden Jesu Christi, und hinter demselben ragen die Spitzen des Avischen Ordens-Creutzes hervor."—Triers, Einleitung zu der Wapen-Kunst (Leipzig, 1744), p. 286, Wapen des Königs in Portugal.

Again, Spener, the great German herald, in his Insignium Theoria, or Opus Heraldicum (Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1680), pars specialis, lib. i. cap. lxxii. p. 283, says:—

"Ordo militaris est, quem Jesu Christi vocant, cum cruce inde dependente; additur etiam post scutum crux viridis in liliorum flores terminata, pro ordine Avisio."

In Siebmacher's Wappenbuch (Nürnberg, 1734), vol. vi., the arms, &c., are correctly engraved.

The Order of Christ, which arose out of the ruins of the Order of the Knights Templars, was founded by King Dionysius about the year 1320. The Order of Avis arose about the middle of the twelfth century. Mr. DAVIDSON will find full information about both Orders in Favyn's Théâtre d'Honneur et de Chevalerie (Paris, 1620), pp. 1265—1272; Carlisle's Account of the Foreign Orders of Knighthood (London, 1839), pp. 231—234, 238; Marquez, Tesoro Militar di Cavalleria, Madrid, 1642; Sansovino, Della Origine dei Cavalieri, Venetia, 1570; and in the books of Clarke, Ashmole, Robson, Burke, &c.

JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

Your correspondent, Mr. JOHN DAVIDSON, says:—

"When the arms of Portugal are represented in full, with crest and dragon supporters, the chain of the Order of Christ hangs round the shield, from behind which the points of a cross are seen. This is the Cross of the Order of Christ, and in all probability has the Paschal Lamb on it."

On referring to Elias Ashmole's Order of the Garter, I find this not to be the case. He has given an engraving of the Cross of "Jesus Christ in Portugal" on which no Paschal Lamb appears. At p. 83 he describes the dress of this religious order of knighthood:—

"They were clothed black, wearing upon their breasts a cross patée of red silk, and upon that another of white. This Order (as that of Avis) became at length annexed to the Crown of Portugal; whose kings have ever since taken upon them the title of perpetual administrators of both."

Elias Ashmole gives the following interesting account of the origin of "The Order of Knights of Christ in Portugal:"—

"As the Knights of Montesa sprung from the ruins of the Knights Templars in Valentia, so did this Order of Christ (or of the Warfare of Christ) succeed them in the Kingdom of Portugal. For the Knights Templars having been very serviceable to the Kings of Portugal, in their wars against the Moors, the Kings gave unto them divers lands and revenues, which, when their Order came to be dissolved and their estates confiscated, King Dom Denys, surnamed Perioca, sent to Pope John the 22nd (then at Avignon) to desire that the Knights Templars' lands might not be disposed of out of his kingdom; which, though he did not readily grant, yet he gave way for the King, to render him the reasons of his request. Hereupon King Denys sent his ambassadors to the Pope, in the year 1316, not only to back his desire, but withal to declare to his Holiness the great vexations and evils the neighbouring Moors in Algarves did to his kingdom. And forasmuch as the town of Castra Marin was a frontier of the enemy, and the site thereof very commodious for the building of a fort to resist them, he farther moved the Pope for licence that an Order of Knights might be instituted in that town, and withal offered to him the rents and jurisdiction thereof, and all dominions over it. This request being thought just, and the remedy so necessary, the Pope did afterwards (namely in the year of Our Lord 1315) give foundation to this new Order, dedicating it to the honor of God, and the exaltation of the Catholick Faith, under the title of the Military Order of our Lord Jesus Christ, because of the miraculous apparition which this King had seen of Christ crucified when he went to fight against the Moors."

It appears also from the same author that "The Order of Knights d'Avis in Portugal" have for badge a green cross flory, for he says—

"The badge of this Order is a green cross flory, such as the Knights of Alcantara wear, and said to be given them by Don Pedro, but before they used the like cross with those of the Order of Calatrava, two birds being added at the foot thereof, in allusion to the later name given to this Order, as appears from the ancient seal."

In neither of these Orders does the Paschal Lamb appear. Did the Kings of Portugal use badges like the Kings of France, and was the Paschal Lamb a badge of one of them?

W. H. C.

The Knights of this Order, founded by Dom Diniz King of Portugal, A.D. 1318, were clothed in black, and wore upon the breast "a cross pattée of red silk, and another full cross over the red." (Favyn, ii. 188); i.e. a cross pattée gules, surmounted of a plain cross arg.

There is nothing in Favyn's description to indicate that the Paschal Lamb, or any other emblem, formed any part of the original badge. Nor is there any addition to the above description of the cross of the order in the shield of Dom Henrique (second son of King John of Portugal by Philippa of Lancaster), which is sculptured on his monument in the church of Batalha, and figured in Mr. Murphey's beautiful work on that edifice.

An exact representation of this double cross may be seen in a portrait of Charles III., Prince of Monaco, published some years ago in the Illustrated London News.

H. W. T.

WELSH PARALLELS FOR CORNISH PROVERBS.

(3rd S. v. 208, 275.)

In reading the two chapters on Cornish Proverbs contributed by your correspondent TREPOLPEN, it occurred to me that I had often heard similar sayings among the folk of this locality; and on making search I was able to find very literal parallels to some of those adduced by him, which I herewith transmit you. If you deem them worthy of insertion in "N. & Q." they are at your service; and with your approbation, I shall on another occasion send some more:—

I. Cornish.

"He that hurts robin or wren
Will never prosper boy nor man."

Welsh.

"Ysawl â dorro nŷth y draw
Ni chaffi iechyd tra fo byw;
Ysawl a dorro nŷth ywennol
Ni chaffi iechyd yn dragwyddol;
Ysawl a dorro nŷth y robin
Agaiff waed ô fewn e'i goffin," which I have thus Anglicised into doggerel rhyme:—

"Whoso the wren robs of its nest
Health loses in a day;
The spoiler of the swallow's house
Will ail and pine for aye;
And he who with his ruthless hands
Shall tear the robin's cot,
In his coffin shall have a guilty mark—
A deep-red gory spot."

The wren was, and still is, a general favourite in this neighbourhood. Not long ago an old custom was prevalent of carrying about a wren secured in a cage, decorated with ribbons and artificial flowers in the most fantastic manner, on the Twelfth Night. The owners of the concern used to visit the principal houses in the neighbourhood. On their arrival they formed themselves into a crescent, and sang encomiums to their little "king," as they termed their little prisoner; for this they were rewarded by the good folks of the house with some money, and a free libation of "cwrw da."

The swallow is also an object of veneration, as it is the happy harbinger of the pleasant summer-tide. But the favourite is the wee red-breasted robin, whose solitary note breaks the monotony of a dull winter's day; and any one guilty of cruelty to her is doomed to a violent death (for such, I presume, is the signification of "gaiff waed yn e'i goffin").

We shall now proceed to the magpies:—

II. Cornish.

"One for sorrow, two for mirth,
Three for a wedding, four for a birth."

Welsh.

"Piogen â chroesdra."—A magpie and disappointment.

This unfortunate bird in this part of the country is no more the bane of gamekeepers than it is the dreaded enemy of all superstitionists. If a person is on a journey, and one of the species cross his path, it will turn out unlucky. If one is in search of something and see a magpie, he will not find what he seeks. It is always an evil omen, and invariably "one for sorrow" in this locality; and it is customary with the superstitious whenever they see one, to draw the figure of a cross with their right foot on the ground, and then to spit on it,—a charm powerful enough to resist the impending doom even of magpyism. A person affirmed to me the other day that whenever he hears magpies chattering near his house, it is a certain forerunner of a word-battle between him and his better half. Little regard have magpies for domestic felicity!

J. R. PHILLIPS.

Cardigan.

DANTE: HERCULES.

(3rd S. vii. 254.)

The conjecture of C. B. C., that it was Hercules who opened the gate of the city of Dis for Virgil and Dante (Inferno, ix.), is hardly to be sustained. It is indeed less probable than that of the old commentator Benvenuto da Imola, who would have it to be Mercury; whose function in heathen mythology as the messenger of Jove, and duties (as described by Virgil) in the infernal regions would render him much more fit for such a task than Hercules, whose attribute of physical strength is not appropriate on an occasion of overcoming the resistance of evil spirits. But in truth both are very wide of the mark. The event to which reference must be made, in considering this passage, is the descent of Christ into hell, which took place on the day of the year to which the action of Dante's Inferno in this place must be referred; and nothing less than an angel sent from the immediate presence of God would satisfy the requirements of the poem—the allusion being to a similar resistance, supposed to have been made to Christ's entrance into hell.

All the associations of the passage point to a biblical, and not a pagan origin. In the service of the Roman Catholic Church for the Saturday in Holy Week (the time in question), there occur the words: "Hodie portas mortis et seras pariter Salvator noster disruptit." It is difficult also to believe that the magnificent line—

"Dinanzi polveroso va superbo,"— was not suggested by Psalm xxxv. ver. 1 to 5:—

"Plead thou my cause, O Lord, with them that strive with me: and fight thou against them that fight against me. Lay hand upon the shield and buckler: and stand up to help me. . . . Let them be confounded and put to shame, that seek after my soul: let them be turned back, and brought to confusion, that imagine mischief for me. Let them be as the dust before the wind: and the Angl of the Lord scattering them."

Comparison may also be made with a sentence from Augustine (De Resurrectione):—

"Portam Inferni et vectes ferreos confregit, et omnes justos qui originali peccato adstricti tenebantur, absolvit."

Much illustration, too, of the passage may be obtained, by reading the account of the Descent into Hell in the Vision of Piers Ploughman (probably composed in 1362):—

"What lord artow? quod Lucifer.

Quis est iste?

'Rex Gloria,'

The light soon seide,

'And lord of myght and of man,

And alle manere vertues.

Dominus virtutum.

Dukes of this dymme place,

Anoon undo this yates,

That Crist may come in,

The kynges sone of hevenc!

And with that breeth helle brak,

With Belialles barres,

For any wye or warde,

Wide opned the yates."

V. 12,710, &c. (London, Pickering, 1842).

W. F. P.

LOBECK'S "AGLAOPHAMUS" (3rd S. vii. 250.)—MR. D. BLAIR, of Melbourne, will find an analytical account of Lobeck's Aglaophamus and the controversy it provoked in Renan's Essais d'Histoire religieuse, article headed "Les Religions de l'Antiquité."

A. R.

ANGUS M'DIARMID (3rd S. vi. 507: vii. 43.)—I happened, within two or three years after the publication of Angus M'Diarmid's pamphlet, to be with some of my family and relations on a shooting party on the Breadalbane property at Lochearnhead. The house of Edinample is within a mile or two of it. We had several gillies in hired attendance upon us in our several shooting parties. In mine, I was very soon made acquainted with the talented Mr. Angus M'Diarmid, who was one of them; and in consequence, we became purchasers of his work, and got him to read it to us—to the great amusement of his fellow gillies as well as ourselves. They constantly called him the poet.

Angus's native tongue, of course, was Gaelic; and in it his work was originally composed. We were informed that, in translating it into English, he was much indebted to a dictionary; and his knowledge of English not being extensive, whenever he was in want of a word he looked into his dictionary, and adopted generally the most imposing-looking word connected with the one he was looking for, whether it might be noun, verb, adverb, or otherwise. Thus he used more than once the words "asperity aspect," to express the wild appearance of mountains.

Our information was that a Colonel O'Reilly, who had been shooting there two or three years before, had, for his own amusement and for the benefit of Angus, edited his work; and had got an edition printed, which he gave to Angus to sell for his own benefit. I still possess a copy of it at home.

The poet did not seem to be much the richer for the sale; as, though ground officer to the Earl, he was, I remember, the worst dressed of all the gillies: not in the highland fashion, as the others were, but with a black coat and a hat; and, as I remember his comrades observed, a pair of white cotton stockings not very sound at the heel.

J. Ss.

"OH, OH, RAY, OH AMBORAH" (3rd S. vii. 155.) This burden of one of Polly's songs in the Beggar's Opera, is an Anglicised version of "The Irish Howl," to the tune of which the words were sung in the Opera. Your correspondent refers us to Act II. Scene 2, but in the original edition (8vo, 1728) the words occur in the fourteenth scene of Act II. The air is printed at the end of the book as No. 21 of the second act. WM. CHAPPELL.

RED LION (3rd S. vii. 136.)—In Yorkshire the sign of the Lion is very common, and as many have changed since the last Directory (1857), the following numbers are given: Red Lion, 90; Old Red Lion, 13; Little Red Lion, 2; Golden Lion, 44; Old Golden Lion, 3; Blue Lion, 2; Black Lion, 16; Lion, 4; Lion and Lamb, 3; Lion and Key, 1; Rampant Lion, 1.

C. J. D. INGLEDEW.

LOCALITY OF ZION IN EARLY WRITERS (3rd S. vii. 215.)—Will DR. TREGELLES excuse me for saying that I am unable to see how the passage from Epiphanius shows that he supposed Zion to be the eastern hill? There were more akras than the one "north of the temple, on the same ridge." In truth, Josephus uses the word (1) in reference to the hill, or "lower agora;" (2) in reference to the fort upon that hill; (3) in reference to the fort on the higher hill, or "upper agora," which, however, he generally calls φρούριον; (4) in reference to Antonia, which however he generally calls Burris. The use of akra in the passage cited affords no clue to the site of the hill. Even in Josephus it is only from the context that you can know frequently which of the akras he is speaking of.

Let me suggest the following remark to DR. T. Zion was predicted to be "ploughed as a field." This has been fulfilled only of the southern hill; the eastern hill has always been built upon, not cultivated, and has always been within the city walls. If the eastern hill be Zion, how is this prophecy accomplished?

Zion is very frequently spoken of in connection with Judah. It was Judah's hill, David's hill.

If it was the eastern or north-eastern, it was not Judah's, but Benjamin's. DR. T. knows that the oldest Hebrew tradition draws the line between Judah and Benjamin right across Moriah, leaving all the southern part of Jerusalem and its hills in Judah. Taking this in connection with the fact that Zion was specially Judah's hill, we have immemorial Jewish tradition (as well as Christian) in favour of the southern hill.

It is likely that Gabaon is Nebi-Semwil; but there is no need to change the eight into five,—as Nebi-Semwil is, by the nearest road, seven miles from Jerusalem; by the farthest, nine. But, rather than alter the reading without MS. authority, I should have said Epiphanius meant the Herodium or Frank hill, which is quite as conspicuous an object from the city. Josephus, however, frequently mentions Gabaon (meaning Gibeon apparently), which lies down in the western valley below Nebi-Semwil; and Gabaon, if I remember right, was a crusading name for Nebi-Semwil.

IIORATIUS BONAR.

NOLO EPISCOPARI (3rd S. vii. 42, &c.)—Is the following statement, by a popular lecturer, a joke, or has it any true historic foundation?—

"A curious example of Nolo Episcopari was afforded by the Rev. Dr. John Bull, Canon of Christchurch, who refused the see of Oxford for the reason that he would not give up the venerable signature of John Bull for that of John Oxon—a species of pluralism at which his conscience rebelled."

DUROTRIX.

JACKY-LEGS KNIFE (3rd S. vii. 250.)—To shake is pronounced in Yorkshire (at least in north-east Yorkshire) to shak; and a knife, of which the blades have become so loose in the handle as to shake about, is called, not a jacky, but a shaky-legs knife.

D.

A corruption of the old Scottish word jocleleg, used for a knife, and itself a corruption of Jacques de Liege, whose name was stamped on large pocket knives used temp. Jac. VI. See Sir Walter Scott's Life, Letters, and Works, passim. CRYWM.

Porth yr Aur, Carnarvon.

TEMSE (3rd S. vii. 230.)—The word temse is in common use in Lincolnshire, to signify the sieve used by brewers to remove the hops from the beer.

K. P. D. E.

YEW TREES CALLED PALMS (3rd S. vii. 251.)—MR. LEWIS is quite right: I wrote hurriedly; I merely meant that the sprig of yew was worn in the hat by the peasants in Ireland for a considerable time, probably till about Whitsunday, or so.

CRYWM.

Porth yr Aur, Carnarvon.

I was not aware that yew trees were ever called palms until the quotation from Hunter's edition of Evelyn's Sylva appeared in "N. & Q.," but it had long been the custom in this part of England, though recently discontinued, to decorate the churches with yew boughs at the season of Easter. Their first appearance on Good Friday led me to suppose it was a funereal emblem appropriate to that solemn fast day. I venture now to suggest that possibly this yew decoration may have continued until its origin was forgotten, and that the greater celebration of Good Friday and Easter Day caused the village authorities to appropriate to these days the emblem originally intended for the preceding Sunday.

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

Stanford Court, Worcester.

LETTER OF OUR LORD TO ABGAR (3rd S. vii. 238.)—On this curious subject the following passage, from the Hon. Robert Curzon's Armenia, is worth reproducing:—

"Some years ago I was informed, while in Alexandria, that a papyrus had been discovered in upper Egypt in an ancient tomb. It was enclosed in a coarse earthenware vase, and it contained the letter from Abgarus to our Saviour, written either in Coptic or uncial Greek characters. The answer of St. Thomas was said not to be with it. I was told that the manuscript afterwards came into the possession of the King of Holland; but I have no means at present of ascertaining the truth of the story, or the antiquity of the papyrus of which it forms the subject."

K. P. D. E.

I can confirm the late Dr. Cureton's testimony respecting the popularity of this letter amongst the poor. I have seen it in many cottages both in Nottinghamshire and in Warwickshire. The copy now in my possession was given to me by a poor woman in the latter county as a kind of farewell memento.

H. W. T.

CHURCH DESECRATION (3rd S. vii. 153.)—The lines referred to by J. B. G. were written on a window in a spirit vault in Rothesay. The building was originally a church. In course of time the congregation had to erect a larger building, and the old property was then altered by flooring across the gallery. The upper portion of the building was used as a place of worship by another body of Christians, and the lower portion let as spirit and beer vaults. The lines as I have heard them repeated on the spot, were written thus:—

"There's a spirit above, and a spirit below,
A spirit of love, and a spirit of woe;
The spirit above is the Spirit divine,
But the spirit below is the spirit of wine."

The last time I visited the place, the old church was occupied by an auctioneer on the top story, and the same jolly old fellow who deals in the spirits and wine, as its first occupant, on the ground floor. I do not know the author. Wm. McK.
Glasgow.

A knowledge of the locality which called forth the epigram—

"There's a spirit above and a spirit below,"

may lead to the discovery of the author's name. The Independent Chapel in Bridge Street, Bristol, is the upper story of a wine and spirit vault, and I have heard that the lines were written by the late Rev. Robert Hall.

U. O. N.

Westminster Club.

DEATH CAUSED BY DRINKING COLD WATER (3rd S. vii. 236.)—How this subject can derive additional interest to a Christian from its connexion with the crucifixion of our Blessed Saviour, is to me inconceivable; for it has no connexion with it at all. Commentators may well omit to mention, "that drinking cold water whilst suffering very severe pain, produced by torture, causes immediate death," since the case never came before them. Our Saviour drank no water; he merely tasted a little vinegar. His death, therefore, in a mere natural sense, could not have been caused or accelerated by drinking cold water.

But can any Christian seriously suppose that our Saviour would have done anything to hasten his own death? or ought we, like modern infidels, to reason on the awful and mysterious death of the Son of God, as we might upon the death of any criminal? Does not the Gospel disclose the real motive, and describe the actual event, too clearly for the interference of any comment or calculation? Undoubtedly it does. St. John says that our Lord cried out, "I thirst" (xix. 28), in order "that the Scripture might be fulfilled." What was this Scripture? Evidently the prophecy of the Psalmist (Ps. lxxviii., Hebr. lxxix. 22): "In my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink." St. John says, "He knew that all things were now accomplished." There had remained only this prophecy; to fulfil it, it was necessary to make known his thirst; and therefore our Lord said, "I thirst." The sacred text informs us, that "there was a vessel set there full of vinegar." They dipped a sponge into it, placed the sponge in a bunch of hyssop, to be able to convey it safely, and having tied this to the end of a reed, lifted it to our Saviour's lips. He tasted the vinegar, and thus the last prophecy relating to his passion was fulfilled. If he died immediately, it was not from drinking cold water, for he drank none; nor from drinking vinegar, of which most probably he only tasted; but because then, as he declared, "all was consummated," and it only remained for him to die.

F. C. H.

MARRIAGE RINGS (3rd S. vii. 12.)—I am grateful for your reply to my query, so far as it goes; but I am still anxious to know if there are any recorded instances in which a plain gold ring has been determined to be indispensable for the marriage service; or in which a priest has refused to solemnise it with a ring of any other sort. One of my reasons for pressing for this information is, that I heard recently of a clergyman in India stopping the ceremony because the would-be bridegroom proffered a diamond ring instead of one of the fashion prescribed by "traditional practice," the only law, you say, on the subject. Your quotations from "N. & Q." (2nd S. x. 290), seem to confirm my belief that a couple might be lawfully married, even in England (as we all know is a frequent custom abroad), without any ring at all, in which case the rubric is of no legal force. But if the rubric is of legal force, is it true that "a ring" no longer satisfies its demands if an odd gem or two adorn it? And if so, I beg you will allow me again to ask—how, when, where, and why, did this innovation arise?

The truth is, I believe it is very doubtful whether the rubric is part of the ἄγραφτα νόμιμα, our common law, at all. A year or two ago this interesting question was raised in a curious case, which came before the Court of Queen's Bench, but was somehow shelved, and consequently never decided. A clergyman (not far from Windsor) refused to proceed with the marriage service, unless the man at its appointed stage laid the ring "with the accustomed duty," upon the book. Query, does the law give the priest a right to sue for this, because the rubric gives him a right to demand it?

R. C. L.

SUPERSEDEAS (3rd S. vii. 242.)—It often happens that a grave inquiry is made after some very common and obvious matter; and I strongly suspect that the present is only another instance. Might not the supersedeas entered by Newton in his private account book, as bought for a few shillings, have been merely a comfortable arm-chair, or some less honourable seat, which he preferred to enter in his accounts under this name?

F. C. H.

SATIRICAL ENGRAVING (3rd S. vi. 456; vii. 124.) I have looked through Machiavelli's few poems without finding the lines, which I think are translated from Æschylus:—

Μὴ νῦν θροτοῦς μὲν ὠφέλει καιροῦ πέρα,
 Ζαντοῦ δ' ἀκῆδαι δυστυχούντος ὥς ἐγὼ
 Ἐβελπίς εἰμι τῶνδ' ὅς' ἐκ δεσμῶν ἔτι
 Λυθέντα, μηδὲν μείον λυόμεν Διός.

Prom. Vinc. vv. 507-10.

The chief figure and the harpy, seem to be adaptations of Prometheus and the eagle. I am ignorant of their modern application. H. B. C.
 U. C. Club.

GÆLIC GRAMMAR (3rd S. vii. 75, 144.)—As J. E. O'CAVANAGH says, in answer to HIGHLANDER's query, Stewart's Gælic Grammar is the best, and the 1812 edition preferable to that of 1801. He might perhaps also consult with profit Shaw's Analysis of the Gælic Language, published in 1778, and the later works of Armstrong and Munroe. HIGHLANDER is throwing his time away if he studies the Gælic of Scotland except through the parent Irish, which once mastered, opens the door to all the cognate Celtic tongues. I divide the Irish grammars under the following heads:—

1. Early grammars: Kearney's Alphabetical Hibernicum, 1571; O'Molloy's Grammatica Latino-Hibernica, 1677; Lhuyd's English-Irish Do., 1707; McCurtin's Elements, 1728 and 1732; and Donlevy's Irish Language, 1742. 2. More modern grammars: Vallancey's Irish Grammar, best edition, 1782; Neilson's and Lynch's Introduction to Irish, 1808; McElligot's Observations on Irish, 1808; O'Brien's Practical Grammar, 1800; Halliday's, or E. O. C.'s Grammar, 1803; Lynch's Introduction to Irish, 1815; O'Reilly's Compendious Irish Grammar, 1817 and 1821; and S. O'M.'s Grammar, 1841. 3. Recent grammars: O'Donovan's Grammar of the Irish Language, 1845; Wright's Grammar of Modern Irish, 1855; O'Daly's Self Instruction, 1853; Bourke's Self Instruction, 1864. The last four are all that are needed however to master the Irish tongue. O'Daly's little book (McGlashan, Dublin, 1853) will enable one to master the pronunciation; Bourke's Easy Lessons (Mullany, Dublin, 1864) which are given à l'Ollendorf, will teach the colloquial Irish; and O'Donovan's Masterpiece (Hodges and Smith, Dublin, 1845) will exhaust all the student's other needs. The above information may be useful to some of your readers, and save them much trouble.

In conclusion I beg to add, that neither Irishman, Welshman, or Scotchman, should be without O'Reilly's Irish-English Dictionary, with O'Donovan's great Supplement, just finished, publishing in thirty-three sixpenny parts, by J. Duffy of Dublin.

W. EASSIE.

SINGULAR CHRISTIAN NAMES (3rd S. vii. 152.) I have noted in my parish register that the name "Marchina" was given in 1805 to the daughter of a temporary "sojourner" in the village. As the child was baptized, and probably born, in March, this singular name may be of the same class as "May," which is, I know, sometimes bestowed upon a child born in the month so designated.

H. W. T.

SLEATHERY (3rd S. vii. 239.)—Rather, perhaps, slithery (th as in wither), A.-S. slīðor, slippery, either physically or morally; and slither, sub., a slippery place on ice, made by and for sliding; also, a small stream that gently flows or slides out of a bottle. A woman unintentionally poisoned her child with laudanum. She said she had given it only three drops and a slither. D.

It may interest your correspondent CUTHBERT BEDE to know, that the word glid is in constant use in Lincolnshire for slippery; and the verb to slither, for "to slide." A LINCOLNSHIRE MAN.

METRICAL SERMON (3rd S. vii. 76, 143.)—In 1837, John Bromley (the author of Bromley Chapel, &c.) preached a sermon twice in verse in Bromley chapel, co. Kent. The second occasion was at "the particular desire" of his congregation. Portions of this production the author read to my father and myself, and we both advised him to print the sermon. I am inclined to think that it was printed, and the profits arising therefrom given to some charitable institution connected with the chapel; which was a pet child of Mr. Bromley's, as he wished to be known (as he phrased it) as "Mr. Bromley of Bromley Chapel, Bromley, Kent." Mr. Bromley in early life was an auctioneer. After retiring from business, he was the chief promoter of the construction of Bromley Chapel, where he preached for many years. Mr. Bromley was the cause of the public obtaining free admission into St. Mary's Chapel, in Moor Fields. Previously to his taking legal proceedings, entrance into that sacred fane could only be had by a cash payment. A notice of two of Mr. Bromley's publications will be found in J. Russell Smith's Bibliotheca Cantiana. The latter one contains the history of the differences between the pastor and his flock (p. 105).

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

Dartford

"NO MAN IS A HERO TO HIS VALET-DE-CHAMBER" (3rd S. vii. 150.)—In Smith's Classical Dictionary I find fourteen Antigoni. May I ask to which of them, and on what authority, the clever saying is ascribed? J. M. K.

"PLAIN SERMONS BY CONTRIBUTORS TO TRACTS FOR THE TIMES" (3rd S. vii. 57, 124.)—The following list of the seven contributors to this excellent series of sermons may be acceptable to GAMMA:—

A. 139.	(vols. i. ii. iv. vi. vii. viii.)	Rev. John Keble.
B. 78.	{ " ii. iv. vii. ix. x.)	" Isaac Williams.
C. 20.	{ vol. iii.)	" Dr. Pusey.
D. 36.	{ " v.)	" J. H. Newman.
E. 53.	{ vols. i. ii. iv. x.)	" Thomas Keble.
F. 12.	{ vol. vii.)	{ " Sir Geo. Prevost,
G. 7.	{ " vii.)	{ and Rev. W. J. Cope-
		{ land, but not known
		{ which is which.

341

GRIFFIN.

AGES OF LYNDWOOD (3rd S. vii. 134.)—The arms assumed by John Lyndewood, the father and John the brother of the bishop, are a chevron between three linden leaves (tinctures not expressed), as may be seen on their brasses in Linwood church, near Market Rasen, Lincolnshire.

F. P. L.

DONKEY (3rd S. vi. 432.)—Is not this word merely a corruption of Fr. donec, from the common ejaculation addressed to animals by their drivers, "Marche donec," interpreted for joke, as "Get a Donk"? There is a vehicle in Canada, which, has the same exp^t, is called a marche-donc.

P.

ALVOISE CONTARINI (3rd S. vii. 220.)—I am much obliged to the editor for the reference in his note to my query. I find that my list, as far as it goes, is correct; and I have been told that Alvoise is no more than a form of Luigi. Ludovicus, Ludwig, Louis, Lewis, Luigi, Aluisi, Aloise, Alvoise, Aloysius.

Is Aluisi (or any name of the sort to take its place in the above string) known as a Christian name? Alvizzo, which I thought was Alvoise, is, I fancy, a family name. JOHN DAVIDSON.

SIR JOHN FENWICK (3rd S. vi. 478.)—Sir John Fenwick's library exists at Castle Howard, and the papers relating to his trial, and a portrait of Lady Mary (née Howard) his wife, holding a miniature of his portrait in her hand. W. H. C.

PICTURE BY MR. LE JEUNE (3rd S. vii. 200.)—"Release of the Captives from Exodus" appeared in the number of the Art Journal for February, 1860. The number can still be had. R. W.

BAPTISMAL NAMES (3rd S. vii. 178.)—Bishop Aylmer's sixth son was—

"Tobel (i. e. God is good), of Writtle in Essex. Archbishop Whitgift was his godfather, and the reason for his singular appellation was his mother's being overturned in a coach without injury when she was pregnant."—Cooper's Ath. Cant. ii. 172.

"At Dr. Whitaker's death his wife is described as being 'partui vicina,' and a week afterwards her child was christened by the name of Jabez, doubtless for the scriptural reason, 'Because,' she said, 'I bare him with sorrow.'"—Ib. 197.

I was not long ago called upon to christen a girl by the name of Nicholas, and on my hesitating and expressing surprise, was told that the child's grandmother bore the name, the use of which, as a female appellation, was not at all uncommon in Scotland. E. H. A.

DUDLEY FAMILY (3rd S. ii. passim.)—Your correspondent H. S. G. and others also may be interested in the following extract from the Marriage Register of Newington Butts:—

"157th, Jan. 27. Thomas Dudley and Helen Winnington."

C. J. R.

BERNARDINO (3rd S. vii. 9.)—By reference to biographical and literary sketches of Italian authors, I find record of one who, I think, is most likely the man in question. Let me premise, what all Italian and other scholars well know, that it is usual to find men of note in Italy called by their first name as if it were the family name: for instance, Dante, whose second name is Alighieri; Galileo, whose added name is Galilei, and many others.

The one with which I have met is Bernardino Baldi, of whom it is recorded that he held lineage from a noble family, A.D. 1553. Having completed in his native land the course of elementary studies, he seemed to feel a special inclination for medical science. So his father sent him to the University of Padua, where he applied himself to everything else than medicine. He is said to have traced an encyclopedia of subjects of study, always excepting those of Hippocrates. He busied his mind with logic, mathematics, jurisprudence, and languages, of which latter he is said to have mastered fourteen. After this, clerical and pastoral engagements engrossed his fervent care. He produced various noble works in prose and verse, orations, idyls, &c. To cut short a biography of no small interest and moral worth, I offer the sequel and close in Tuscan tongue, from Costantini's Scelta di Poesie Italiane:—

"Nella sua patria di Urbino, il 10 Ottobre del 1617, chiuse il Baldi con morte assai pia una vita integerrima. Il genio enciclopedico di Monsignor Bernardino (Baldi) divagò intorno ad una soverchia varietà di fiori, così che ebbe in parte difetto di squisitezza il mele ch'ei distillò. Potrebbe egli figurar nobilmente come poeta, se lo stile non di rado raffinato e concettoso non gli scemasse una parte di merito. Egli in poesia fu assai fecondo, e scrisse prosopopeje di eroi romani, epistole, madrigali, epitaffi, concetti morali, etc.—oltre alcuni poemi in versi sciolti."

S. C. FREEMAN.

Adelaide House,
148, Highbury New Park, N.

EVER, AVER, OR EYER (3rd S. vii. 258.)—May not this be merely a peculiar pronunciation of ever, so that the inquiry would be in plain English, "Whatever is the wind in this morning?" that is, whatever point of the compass, or in whatever direction?

F. C. H.

"BIS DAT QUI CITO DAT?" (3rd S. vii. 265.)—This maxim comes from the famous poet, Publius Syrus, who flourished at Rome in the reign of Julius Caesar, and supplanted Laberius in his favour. He has another proverb somewhat similar: "Bis est gratum, quod opus est, ultro si offeras."

F. C. H.

CARABOO (3rd S. vii. 268.)—I have no doubt the real name of this impostor was Mary Baker. We are told that after her exposure she went to America, where she remained about seven years, when she returned to England, and exhibited in New Bond Street, London, from whence she made her way westward. The last I heard of her was that she married, and once more took up her residence in this city, where her latter days were spent very creditably as an importer of leeches, and in applying them when requested by her customers. She appears to have died about the close of the year 1864, leaving an only daughter. I believe the exact date of her decease is unknown, as well as her age and place of interment.

(GEORGE PRYCE.

City Library, Bristol.

CAREY FAMILY (3rd S. vii. 203, &c.)—I have heard it alleged that the names Curey and Carew were originally the same, and that the two families are both descended from the same stock. The assertion ran to the effect, that the name of the remote ancestor was written Careu, which, in Welsh, was pronounced pretty much as the modern word Cary or Carey; hence the name Carey, by those who followed sound only. On the other hand, others articulated the Welsh word more after an Anglicised bias, sounding the last letter u as an English r, thereby making it Caroo. A name pronounced Caroo would naturally be written Carew, differing only in its last letter from its infantine construction. I should like to know whether there is any philological or historical truth in all this.

P. HUTCHINSON.

JOHNSONIANA: CONTINUITY (3rd S. vii. 6, 42, 123.)—

"..... Leibnitz di Lipsia sino dal 1693 avesse fatto presentire nel mondo materiale e morale la grande legge di continuità nell' infinito del tempo o dello spazio." Idea fondamentale e bisogno d'una Storia delle Storie. See article in "Il Politecnico," Gennaio, 1865.

The Abbé Draghesti, in his Dissertazioni Psicologiche, asserts that the celebrated scholar, Pontanus (1420-1503), was the first who called attention to the law of continuity; and was also the first among the moderns who revived the opinion of Democritus on the subject of the milky way, which he maintained to be composed of an infinite number of small stars.

J. MACRAY.

Oxford.

RAGUSA (3rd S. vii. 180, 205.)—The arms given on the silver ducat and a half that I have of Ragusa, differ from those mentioned by Mr. Woodward, being Barry of eight, argent and gules; perhaps they are the arms of the governor (1773), whose bust is on the obverse. Was Ragusa ever independent of Venice?

As Mr. Woodward has been so kind as to answer my query and as he has given me an extract from a German work on heraldry, may I ask him what heraldic word have we for that triangular quartering one finds not uncommonly in foreign shields: a pointed quartering pushed up, as it seems to be considered; I mean "Die Spitze" "Der untere eingeschobene spitze Theil" seen in the Georges German shield, containing the arms of the city of Granada in the Spanish shield, &c. &c. Is it a pile issuing from the base?

JOHN DAVIDSON.

TITHES BARNES (3rd S. vii. 137, 240.)—Lord Lyttelton states accurately the clergy's right to the produce itself as it stood on the ground, previous to the Tithe Commutation Act. When at a school near Shrewsbury, where the master was also rector of the parish, I can remember the schoolboys' assistance in the harvest collection, which was effected by placing a stick on every

Notices to Correspondents.

SHAKESPEARIANA. "N. & Q." of Saturday next will contain several articles upon Shakespeare.

CHARLES FOTRY. Our next number will also contain an article of this extraordinary projector, the originator of the Sun Fire Office, &c.; together with a copy of his will.

E. U. (Croydon) will probably find what he requires in Collins' Peerage. Of course we mean the edition published by Sir E. Brydges.

T. The picture representing Edward VI. granting the Royal Charter to Bridenell is at Bridenell.

MAY MARRIAGES. "One who wishes to know" will find this subject very fully treated in our First Series.

OMEGA. The date of Wace's death is not known. He is supposed to have died soon after the completion of his Roman de Rou in 1171.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

See Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in Monthly Parts. The Subscription for Stamped Copies for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly Index) is 11s. 4d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 23, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all Communications for the Editors should be addressed.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—A Professional Man, residing in one of the best roads, is desirous of meeting with a Gentleman who wishes to board and lodge in a Private Family, and can afford to pay about 80l. per annum. — Address A. B., "NOTES AND QUERIES" Office, Wellington Street, Strand.

MR. EDWARD THELWALL, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, reads with pupils preparing for the Universities, the Army, the Civil Service, &c., at his Residence, 7, Carlisle Terrace, Kensington.

SHAKSPEARE FOR SCHOOLS AND FAMILIES.—Price 2s. 6d. EXTRACTS FROM SHAKSPEARE, for Schools. Every objectionable part omitted. Passages given from each Play, with a brief Account of the Plot or Fable. London: WHITTAKER & CO.

A Specimen Copy sent, Free by Post, on receipt of 20 Stamps by the Compiler, L. C. GENT, Whalley Range, Manchester.

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS, arranged for boys' and girls' perusal by the HON. MRS. SUGDEN.

The only edition of these fascinating tales with the objectionable passages omitted. Price 5s. cloth; 6s. gilt edges, with illustrations. London: WHITTAKER & CO.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.—MESSRS. STEVENS BROTHERS, American and Foreign Booksellers, 17, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., receive the DAILY, the SEMI-WEEKLY, and the WEEKLY TRIBUNE by every post, and respectfully solicit Subscriptions and Advertisements.

WHAT WILL THIS COST TO PRINT? is a thought often occurring to literary men, public characters, and persons of benevolent intentions. An immediate answer to the inquiry may be obtained. A SPECIMEN BOOK OF TYPES, and information for authors, sent on application, by RICHARD BARRETT, 13, Mark Lane, London.

TO THE CLERGY AND CHURCHWARDENS.—SURPLICES and COMMUNION LINEN, ALTAR CLOTHS and RUBES for Presentation.—GILBERT J. FRENCH, Bolton, Lancashire. Carriage paid. No Agents.

PATRIDGE & COZENS,

MANUFACTURING STATIONERS,
192, FLEET STREET, corner of Chancery Lane.

Carriage paid to the Country on Orders exceeding 20s.

The LARGEST and most varied Stock in the Kingdom of Note, Letter, and Fcap. Papers, Envelopes, Account and MS. Books, House-hold Papers, &c.

PATRIDGE & COZENS' celebrated GUINEA CASE of STATIONERY forwarded free to any Railway Station in England, on receipt of Post-office Order.

NO CHARGE for Plain Stamping Crest, Arms, or Address on Paper or Envelopes. Coloured Stamping (Relief) reduced to 1s. per 100. Polished Steel Crest Dies engraved for 2s. Business or address Dies from 3s.

BERMON PAPER, plain, 4s. per ream; Ruled ditto, 4s. 6d. An immense variety in all sizes and qualities always in stock.

Illustrated Price List of Inkstands, Despatch Boxes, Stationery Cabinets, Postage Scales, Writing Cases, &c. post free.

BOOKBINDING—in the MONASTIC, GROLIER, MAYOLI and ILLUMINATED styles—in the most superior manner, by English and Foreign Workmen.

JOSEPH ZAEHNSDORF,

BOOKBINDER TO THE KING OF HANOVER,
English and Foreign Bookbinder,

30, BRYDGES STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

CHUBB'S LOCKS and FIREPROOF SAFES,

with all the newest improvements. Street-door Latches, Cash and Deed Boxes. Full illustrated price lists sent free.

CHUBB & SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London; 37, Lord Street, Liverpool; 16, Market Street, Manchester; and Horseley Fields, Wolverhampton.

HEDGES & BUTLER, Wine Merchants, &c.

recommend and GUARANTEE the following WINES:—

Pure wholesome CLARET, as drunk at Bordeaux, 18s. and 24s. per dozen.

White Bordeaux 24s. and 30s. per doz.

Good Hock 30s. " 35s. "

Sparkling Epervay Champagne 36s. " 42s. "

Good Dinner Sherry 24s. " 30s. "

Port 24s. " 30s. "

They invite the attention of CONNOISSEURS to their varied stock of CHOICE OLD PORT, consisting of Wines of the Celebrated vintage 1830 at 120s. per doz.

Vintage 1834 " 108s. "

Vintage 1840 " 84s. "

Vintage 1847 " 72s. "

all of Sandeman's shipping, and in first-rate condition.

Fine old "boosing" Port, 42s. and 60s.; superior Sherry, 36s. 42s. 48s.; Claret of choice growths, 30s. 42s. 48s. 54s. 60s.; Hochheimer, Marobrunner, Rudesheimer, Steinberg, Ladframmich, 48s.; Johannisberg and Steinberg, 72s. 84s. to 120s.; Braunberger, Grunhausen, and Scharzberg, 48s. to 84s.; sparkling Moselle, 60s. 66s. 72s.; very choice Champagne, 60s. 78s.; fine old Brandy, Malmsay, Frontignac, Vermuth, Constantia, Lachryma Christi, Imperial Tokay, and other rare wines. Fine old Pale Cognac Brandy, 60s. and 72s. per doz.; very choice Cognac, vintage 1863 (which gained the first class gold medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1855), 144s. per doz. Foreign Liquors of every description. On receipt of a post-office order, or reference, any quantity will be forwarded immediately, by

HEDGES & BUTLER,

LONDON: 155, REGENT STREET, W.

Brighton: 30, King's Road.

(Originally established A.D. 1667.)

"Purity and Excellence of Quality."

COLMAN'S PRIZE-MEDAL MUSTARD

Bears their Trade Mark, the BULL'S HEAD, on each Package.

It was the only Mustard which obtained a PRIZE MEDAL at the GREAT EXHIBITION, 1862.

Their GENUINE and DOUBLE SUPERFINE are Qualities particularly recommended for Family Use.

FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES NOTHING FINER CAN BE PREPARED.

Sold by all Grocers and Druggists.

J. & J. COLMAN, LONDON.

THE CONGRESS OF FLOWERS. PIESSE and

LUBIN'S NEW PERFUME, made only at the Laboratory, 2, New Bond Street.

SALOM'S NEW OPERA and FIELD GLASS, and THE RECONNOITERER GLASS, price 10s. 10d., sent free.

This "Tourist's Favourite," through extraordinary division of labour, distinctly shows small windows 10 miles off, landscape at 30 miles, Jupiter's moons, &c.—The MASON OF CARMARTHEN: "The Reconnoiterer is very good."—Rev. LONG SCAWEN: "approves of it."—LORD GERRARD of Annesley: "Most useful."—LORD GARRARD: "Remarkably good."—Rev. DAVID GAVLEY of Brimpton: "It gives me complete satisfaction, and is wonderfully good."—Major STANLEY, of Wrenbury Hall, Nantwich: "Quite as powerful as that for which I gave 50s."—Capt. SWEENEY, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield Lock, "Presents his compliments to Messrs. Salom & Co., and begs to enclose 10s. 10d. for a Reconnoiterer Glass, having just tried that sent to Lieut. Hopkins, and found it effective at 1,000-yards range."—F. H. FAWCETT, of Farnley Hall, Esq.: "I never before met an article that so completely answered the recommendation of its maker, nor, although I have tried many, a Glass combining so much power for its size with so much clearness."—The Field: "We have carefully tried it at an 800-yard rifle range against all the Glasses possessed by the members of the Corps, and found it fully equal to any of those present, although they had cost more than four times its price."—Notes and Queries: "What intending tourist will now start without such an indispensable companion to a pleasant trip?" The celebrated "HYTHIE" GLASS shows bullet marks at 1,200 yards, and men at 3½ miles, price 31s. 6d. All the above Glasses, respectively bearing the registered trademarks, "Salom," "Reconnoiterer," and "Hythie," are only to be had direct from SALOM & CO., 25, Prince Street, EDINBURGH. No Agents of any kind anywhere.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 173.

NOTES:—Charles Povey, 313—Shakspeariana: New Shakspeare Emendation—Passage in "Pericles"—"A Dish of Carraways"—Passage from "Macbeth"—"Twelfth Night"—Cue—Bibliographic, 315—Assumption of Arms, 317—Robert Bruce, 319—Non-Con. Notes, 320—The Countess of Tyroconnel, 321—The Eastern Orthodox Church—Price of Salmon—Droitwich Register—Marriages of Knights—Significant Names—Julius Caesar and Britain: Line in Lucan—Latin Epigrams, 321.

QUERIES:—"The Tragedie of Alceste and Eliza, 1638, by Fr. Br."—Bremen—Early Britons—Clint Hills—The Crusaders—Epigrams addressed to the Duchess of Marlborough—John Fitzgibbon, first Earl of Clare—"The Goblins of Nespole"—Historiographer Royal—Letters of Alexander Knox and Hannah More—"Majestas Intemperate," &c.—"Ode to Spring"—Procurators—Spur Money in Belshie—"Willie is gone," &c., 322.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Osborne's Catalogues of Books—Cavelkind—Huntingdon Sturgeon—Atlas of History, 324.

REPLIES:—Evidences of distant Light and Smoke, 325—Bladen Family of Aldborough Hatch, 326—Mistletoe, ib.—The Word "Discipulus," 327—Quotation—Legitimation per subsequens Matrimonium—"Secret History of the Cabinet of Bonaparte"—Who was Philaethes?—John Barcroft—Richard Allestree—"Ivanhoe"—Jacobites and Jacobins—Bookbinding—"Bradshaw's Railway Companion"—William Williams—Freemason—Pagan Caricature: Quotation wanted—Lynchets, or Shelves in Wiltshire—Alvise Contarini—Words used in Different Seasons—Songs, &c., 328.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

CHARLES POVEY.

On paying a visit to the Probate Office lately, I had the curiosity to look up the last will and testament of this "extremely foresighted, thoughtful, but eccentric man," as he is styled in the new edition of Lowndes, and carried away in my memory as much of the curious contents as it would carry; particularly the fact, that the testator directed its publication in the daily papers twice within a month after his decease, which appears to have occurred on April 2, 1743.* At the Museum to-day I sought and discovered the document in the London Daily Post of the 1st and 8th July of that year; but on perusal, found it denuded of much of its Poveian peculiarities. However, I made a jotting, and now send the same for your inspection. If deemed of sufficient interest, it may obtain a place in the columns of "N. & Q.": for it serves to identify a few extraordinary books that sometimes fall into the hands of the collector of oddities, and lead to queries about their author,—Povey's works being privately, or irregularly published, and many of them anonymous. In the earlier part of his life, Povey was in a constant state of warfare with authorities of all kinds. The government deprived him of the advantage of his Halfpenny Carriage scheme; the Excise stripped his brewery at Hampstead of its utensils for their duty; his partners in his own invention of the Sun Fire Office, wheedled him out of the concern, by which he lost a fortune; the magistrates imprisoned him, with his servants, for writing his two large octavos—the Meditations and Holy Thoughts—rambling treatises eulogistic of King William and the Revolution, and abuse of the Highflyers: these, and many more of his grievances, are set forth at large in his English Inquisition, 1718, and his English Memorial, 1737. The first an appeal to the nation, and the last a representation to Parliament, unsuccessfully claiming indemnification for the sacrifices he had made for the public benefit. With his literary contemporaries he was in no better odour. John Dunton says, "Povey not only steals my projects, but reprints those very questions and answers I formerly published in The Athenian Oracle," in his General Remark upon Trade; which last publication was in rivalry, I think, of Defoe. He envied the popularity of Addison and Steele, and clumsily imitated the Spectator and Tatler in his Visions of Sir Heister Ryley; in his Virgin in Eden, he attacks Pamela; and, indeed, managed to render himself so unpopular that another of his complaints is, that the false wits were down upon every move he made, "taking the liberty to brand me with the odd characters of Maggot, Projector, Madman, or worse titles." Povey was, nevertheless, a man before his age in some respects, and crude though some of them may be, suggested many social improvements; professing a large philanthropy, and very latitudinarian views upon religious matters. Our subject was, moreover, an outrageous egotist; his works being filled with the most amusingly self-complacent examples of what he had done "to promote virtue, loyalty, wit, honour, truth, and moderation; and to extinguish vice, rebellion, bribery, pride, and ambition:" to say nothing of his magnified labours to ameliorate the condition of the poor, both physically and mentally. All of which can only, however, be effectively maintained by a cordial reception, and a large demand by the public for his works! * The suppressions in this printed will illustrate some of these points in the testator's character. His comments upon the dole to the widows, for example, inform us that he has been labouring all his life to reconcile religious sects; as far at least as to secure the Christian virtue of cordial co-operation in works of mercy and charity, of which he furnishes a practical proof. It is to be feared, however, that the literary gift which accompanied the pecuniary one must have been distasteful to both Church and Meeting-house—the orthodoxy of their widows being endangered thereby: for Povey, like some moderns, roundly rejects the belief of material fire in his Tophet:—with him, the torments after death are the immaterial stings of a guilty conscience. Again, the persecutions which Povey met with from unjust judges, false witnesses, &c., &c., all come afresh into the poor old man's mind when settling his worldly affairs, at the age of threescore years and ten; and his early cantankerous spirit returns to the charge, with an appeal to his Maker that he is innocent of the crimes they attempted to fix upon him: accompanied by a special denouncement against one Ladd, a judge or magistrate—one of the most virulent of his enemies.

[* Charles Povey died on May 4, 1743, aged ninety. Ed.]

[* Charles Povey must have been a most voluminous writer, as he tells us that "the large 4to and 8vo volumes, with other small treatises and pieces I have writ, exceed six hundred in number!" (English Inquisition, 1718, 8vo, p. 8.) Alas! how few of them are known to the present generation of bibliographers. A recent glance over the Registers at Stationers' Hall enables us to spot two works by this prolific writer which appear unknown:—1. A Memorial of the Proceedings of the late Ministry and Lower House of Parliament, entered Dec. 15, 1714. 2. The English Parliament represented in a Vision; this work was entered on March 7, 1714-5, at the same time as An Inquiry into the Miscarriage of the Four last Years' Reign, noticed in our 2nd S. i. 322. Some interesting particulars of Povey will be found in Park's Hampstead, 4to, 1814, p. 156.—Ed.]

The affair of the Sun Fire Office, too, comes again under review; and an intimation that, if his annuity from that flourishing concern is not continued after his death, the proprietors will forfeit their claim to be men of honour.

The widows and children, as well as the perjured and vile incendiaries who had embittered his existence, had intimation during his lifetime: a paragraph in his Torments announcing, that his benevolence to the first, and his remembrance of the last would be found in his Last Will and Testament; which he there says he had directed to be printed, not out of vanity, but to set his character in its true light; but we have seen that this rod in pickle for his enemies was suppressed in the copy for the public eye.

Except naming a brother, I nowhere observe that Povey mentions his family. Was he a son, or otherwise related, to Thomas Povey, who held a public office in the time of Charles II.?—whose house, and style of living “did surpass all that ever I did see of one man in all my life,” says the envious Pepys.

The Copy of Mr. Povey's will, published according to his own desire.

“In the name of God, Amen. I, Charles Povey, of the parish of St. Mary Whitechapel, in the county of Middlesex, Gent., being aged and infirm in body, but of sound and perfect mind, memory, and understanding (praise be given to Almighty God for the same), and considering the certainty of my death, and the uncertainty (of the time) thereof, do therefore, for the avoiding controversies after my decease, make, publish, and declare this to be my last will and testament, in manner and form following (that is to say): first, and principally, I recommend my soul to the mercies of God, believing I shall certainly rise again to life eternal through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ my Saviour and Redeemer; my body I commend to the earth, to be decently buried by my executors hereinafter named, in the parish church of St. Mary, Newington Butts, in the county of Surrey, in the same grave wherein my late wife Ann Povey now lieth interred: and as for and concerning the disposal of all such worldly estates and effects, which it has pleased God of his great goodness to bestow upon me, I give, devise, and bequeath, the same as followeth: and first, I will and order that only four or five mourning coaches and one hearse, shall be employed at my funeral, and that my pall shall be supported by six gentlemen whom my said executors shall think fit to appoint. Item, I give and bequeath unto Mr. Obadiah Jones of the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, London, all my land lying and being at Cheagle, near Boos in Staffordshire. I also give and bequeath to him, the said Obadiah Jones, all that which will descend of right belonging to me, after the decease of Dorothy Povey, widow of my late brother Josiah Povey, deceased; who was minister of Rodom and Kescom, near Lewes, in Sussex. Item, I give and bequeath to and for the use of the parish of St. Mary, Newington, aforesaid, my great organ, being 5 feet in depth, 6 feet in front, and 9½ feet in height: containing three sets of keys; Mr. Aaron Davis, an organ maker, having contracted and agreed with me to make, or cause the said organ to play six several Psalm tunes, and four voluntaries, and to perform the same from time to time at pleasure, without any person playing upon the keys thereof; as also the bellows of the said organ, to move and perform the same by clockwork. Item, I give and bequeath fifteen guineas for, or towards, the erecting and setting up the said organ in the said parish church, and for other uses which shall and may be necessary to or for the ornament thereof. Item, I give and bequeath to and for the use of the Charity School of the said parish, fifty guineas. Item, I will and direct that my said executors shall, on every Saturday during the space of six months next after my decease, give to the poor of the parish of Whitechapel aforesaid 100 penny loaves. Item, I give and devise to 100 poor tradesmen's widows, who shall be arrived at the full age of forty-five years, each one guinea a-piece. Item, I give and bequeath to 100 poor ministers' widows, of the like ages, five guineas a-piece; and I give and bequeath to each of the said 200 widows, one book of my treatise, intitled The Virgin in Eden, or, the State of Innocence; and one book each of my other treatise, intitled Torments after Death, upon Atheism and Charity. And I do direct and appoint that the said 200 widows shall be chosen in manner following (that is to say): the morning preachers who reside in and about London, and consecrate bread and wine of the parish churches of St. Mary Whitechapel, St. Botolph-without, Aldgate, St. Thomas's, St. George's, and St. Mary's, Newington, aforesaid; each of the said divines to nominate ten ministers' poor widows of the Church of England, and ten tradesmen's widows of the same Communion; and each of the said is to produce a certificate under the hand of one of the aforesaid clergymen, whereby it shall be sufficiently certified that they know and believe such widows to be reduced, and to be of sober conversation, and to have no settled income whatsoever: and the other 100 poor widows shall be chosen by the ministers of the Meeting-houses under named (that is to say): that of Dr. Watts, in Duke's Place; Mr. Denkam (?), in Old Gravel Lane, Houndsditch; Mr. Wilson, in Prescott Street, Goodman's Fields; Mr. Read, near Guy's Hospital; and Mr. Oldfield's, near Deadman's Place, Southwark: each of the said ministers to nominate ten Dissenting ministers' widows and ten tradesmen's widows, of the same persuasion; each and every of which said widows to produce a certificate signed by one of the said ministers, in the same form as those of the Church of England above-named; and I order and appoint all and every the said legacies to be paid within the space of four months next after my decease. Item, I give and bequeath unto J— S—, of the parish of Aldgate aforesaid, Gent., twenty guineas, to be paid him on delivering up to my said executors a bond and assignment from me, unjustly detained by — and —, clear of all charge except law expenses. Item, I give and bequeath unto A— H—, of the parish of St. Giles's-in-the-Field, widow, the like sum of twenty guineas, to be paid to her on the delivery of the said bond and assignment, upon the forms and conditions aforesaid. Item, I order and appoint Thos. James, now or late of the parish of St. Clement Danes, to be sole proprietor of all my copies of the several treatises here under-mentioned (being my works, that is to say): The Meditations of a Divine Soul, price 4s.; Holy Thoughts on God made Man, price 4s.; The Visions of Sir Heister Ryley, price 2s. 6d.; The Treatise of Trade and Employing the Poor, price 1s. 6d.; the treatise entitled The Virgin in Eden, or State of Innocency, price 1s.; and the treatise entitled Torments after Death upon Atheism and Charity, price 6d.; with all and every other copies whatsoever heretofore wrote and published by me; the testator, upon this condition, that he the said Thos. James, his executors, administrators, and assigns, do and shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, 1s. 6d. out of every pound or 20s., which he or they shall receive and take by sale of all and every, or any, of the said copies: 9d. out of every pound to be paid to the rector (for the time being) of St. Mary's, Newington Butts, aforesaid; and the other 9d. to be paid to Dr. Gayse, the elder Dissenting minister at the Meeting-house in Broad Street, London, or any other minister (for the time being) of the same congregation; the said monies to be by them (according to their discretion) distributed to and amongst poor ministers' widows of their own persuasion, who shall not have received any benefit by or under this my will. And the said Thos. James is to pay to my said executors a certain price, to be agreed upon between him and me, at or before the time of my executing this my will, for all the printed copies which are now in my possession of two of the said treatises entitled, The Virgin in Eden and Torments after Death; and shall sell and dispose of all reprinted copies thereof, before he shall be entitled to demand or receive the said several copies hereinabove devised to him; and all the rest and residue of estate, real and personal, of what nature or kind soever, after my debts and funeral expenses, and the above legacies are fully paid and satisfied, I will appoint the same to be fairly divided into three equal parts. Two-third parts, or shares whereof, I give, devise, and bequeath to my niece Eliz. Smith, widow, now living with me; and the other third part, or share thereof, I give and bequeath unto Margaret Stringer of St. Martin's-le-Grand, widow. And I do hereby make, order, constitute, and appoint my said niece Eliz. Smith, and the said Margaret Smith, joint executrixes of this my last will and testament. And lastly, I do hereby revoke and make void all former wills by me at any time heretofore made; and do declare this present writing, contained in three sheets of paper, to be my last will and testament. And I do order and direct my said executors, within one month after my decease, to cause the same to be printed twice in one of the daily papers. In witness whereof I, Charles Povey, the testator, have, to the bottom of the first and second sheets of this my will, set and subscribed my name; and the third, and last sheet, have subscribed and set my hand and seal this 13th January, in the year of our Lord, 1742, and in the 16th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c.

"CHARLES POVEY.

"Signed, sealed, published, and declared by the said Charles Povey, the testator, as and for his last will and testament, in the presence of us; who, in his presence, have set and subscribed our names as witnesses thereto, the day and year last above written:

(Signed) "JOHN DODD, REBECCA NEWTON,
SUSANNAH LOWE."

London Daily Post, Friday, 1st and 8th July, 1743.

A. G.

Shakspeariana.

NEW SHAKSPERE EMENDATION.

In Mr. J. A. Heraud's new work, Shakspeare, His Inner Life, he has ventured with some confidence to submit a suggested reading of a passage in Julius Cæsar, Act II. Sc. 1, which has long been regarded as corrupt. Coleridge, he tells us, had noticed the line —

"For if thou path, thy native semblance on," and had set it down as a misprint or a miscript; asking the pertinent question, "in what place does Shakspeare (where does any other writer of the same age?) use path as a verb for walk?" His own reading was put for path, ingenious, but, as we shall see, involving one objection. But Mr. Heraud, who is entitled to respectful hearing if only on the ground of having been Coleridge's friend and disciple, goes further than the master. He says, "To me it is clear that the line contains two errors. It should have run —

"For if thou pull thy native semblance o'er," and supports it by an allusion to the context, "their faces buried in their cloaks."

"It is to this statement," he says, "that Brutus refers in the line in question, which simply means that if the conspirators come with 'their faces buried in their cloaks' their conspiracy will be naturally suspected;—that the true mode of concealment is to let their naked faces (their 'native semblance') be seen, and only to 'hide' the 'monstrous visage' of conspiracy in 'smiles and affability.' With this interpretation the passage reads intelligibly enough, and the line as amended falls naturally into its proper place."

Now, is this so? I think not.

Let us examine the passage. Let us reduce it to simple prose, and see the result. Speaking in the language of every-day life, Brutus would have said, "O conspiracy! Do you fear to show your brow by night? Where then by day will you find a cavern dark enough to hide its monstrosity? Best seek none. 'Hide it in smiles and affability:' for if you appear in your native semblance, not hell itself is black enough to hide you."

Now, in this view of the passage, the text of Shakspeare as it stands, perfectly accords if we grant the use of path in the sense of walk.

With this also Coleridge's emendation is consistent, having only this objection, that conspiracy can hardly be required in strict sense to "put on" what is "native" or natural to it.

But how does it fare with my friend Heraud's reading?

Passing over his substitution of the conspirators for the abstract conspiracy (wholly indefensible as it seems to me), how does the passage read as he would amend it?—

"O, then by day
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To hide thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy.
Hide it in smiles and affability." [Not "conspirators."] Why?

"For if thou pull thy native semblance o'er."

That is, as Mr. Heraud tells us, "if thou 'hide' thy 'monstrous visage' in 'smiles and affability,' what will happen?—

"Not Erebus itself were dim enough To hide thee."

No! Shakspeare could not have meant to say that. If thou hide thyself Erebus is not dim enough to hide thee? Impossible! Adopt Mr. Heraud's reading, and the sequence should have been:—

"Not even Heaven itself has light enough
To reveal thee."

The fact is, Mr. Heraud has stumbled through confounding the "native semblance" of conspiracy with the naked faces of the conspirators, and the lection which this has induced him to offer is in consequence, in my judgment, wholly inadmissible.

One word more. I do not with Halliwell and Knight defend path. I think the solitary use of the word as an active verb in this passage lays it open to suspicion; but walk (with a comma after it) clearly gives sense, and any one who will write the two words in the style of the sixteenth century writing, beginning the w with a tail, and omitting to cross the t, will see that they are sufficiently alike to have deceived the eye of scribe or printer.

W. SAWYER.

54, Crowndale Road, Oakley Square, N. W.

PASSAGE IN "PERICLES" (3rd S. vii. 236.)—In the name of common sense what can your correspondent, WILLIAM BELL, mean by saying that the passage from Pericles which he quotes—

"The air-remaining lamps, the belching whale"— is an additional proof "of our great poet's intimate knowledge and consequent residence in Germany"? Will MR. BELL forgive me for saying, that as he has not produced one tittle of evidence to show that "lamps" means "lampreys," I do not accept that interpretation? But not content with assuming that "lamps" is put for lampreys, MR. BELL proceeds to point out that, as "a peculiar fallacy in natural history" still "prevalent among our neighbours of Fatherland," they call the lamprey Neunaugen; and this is a wonderful proof that Shakspeare was in Germany. One might almost be pardoned for exclaiming with Mr. Burdell, "Fudge!" Let MR. BELL refer to Halliwell's Glossary, and he will find that calling the lamprey "Nine eyes" is as much a "peculiar fallacy" in England as in Germany; and forgive me, Mr. Editor, if I add, that but for your well-known "proclivities" to the theory of Shakspeare's visit to Germany, I suspect we should have been spared MR. BELL's far-fetched and illogical attempt to improve a passage in Shakspeare rendered sufficiently intelligible by Malone's simple emendation "aye" for "air"—"the aye-remaining lamps." R. A.

"A DISH OF CARRAWAYS" (Hen. IV., Part II. Act V. Sc. 3.)—This passage has given rise to some amusing comments. Warburton was justly ridiculed for a note, which simply stated that in the sixteenth century the French were very fond of lozenges. Whereupon Goldsmith, with an air of authority, observed, that "the dish of carraways here mentioned was a dish of apples of that name."

Steevens, after giving four quotations to show that carraways were not apples, but some kind of comfit, added: "There is a pear, however, called a carraway." In a later note he cites a passage from Cogan's Haven of Health (1595), which, as he truly states, "settles the question." The old physician, with droll plainness of speech, says:—

"Howbeit, we are wont to eate carawaies or biakets, or some other kind of comfits or seeds, together with apples, thereby to breake winde ingendred by them; and surely it is a very good way for students."

Is it worth while to add another quotation, to corroborate this from Cogan? William Vaughan, in his Directions for Health, &c. (4to, London, 1626, 6th edition), says:—

"Apples, suffered to grow to their maturity and perfection, surpass all other fruits whatsoever, if they be eaten in winter with curraways or comfits."

JAYDEE.

PASSAGE FROM "MACBETH."—A correspondent, B. T., in your number of April 1, under the above heading writes, that "in old English dictionaries, probably in Bailey's, the word blanket, which means a thunder-cloud, is given;" and he suggests that this may be the original reading of the passage in Lady Macbeth's soliloquy (so long disgraced by the unquestionable corruption of blanket). I should be obliged to B. T. to inform me in what dictionaries the word blanket, with the interpretation he gives to it, is to be found. It is not in Bailey's; and the only one in my possession which contains it is that of Ashe, who calls it "an incorrect spelling of blanket."

Is it a provincialism, or has it been employed by any known author of any date, or is there any reasonable probability that Shakspeare could be cognizant of it?

I ask these questions because, if it can be shown that it is a word which an audience in the reign of King James I. would have understood in the sense of "thunder-cloud," it appears to me to solve the long vexed question; and, by the change of a single letter, supply an image at once correct and dignified,—qualities in which the word blanket is so offensively deficient.

G. K.

"TWELFTH NIGHT," ACT II. Sc. 3 (sub fin.)—

"Call me cut."

I do not know whether any of your readers are acquainted with the boyish game still in vogue in Cumberland, and with which I have been for many years familiar. It will throw, I think, some light upon the phrase above quoted. The game, or whatever it may be called, is conducted thus. Two boys of equal years and strength are pitted against each other; lots are drawn by means of two unequal straws or slips of paper, and the boy who draws the longest piece, if he wish to fight his schoolfellow calls him "cut;" the other, if in the same mind, retorts "Jack-hazel,"—then the mêlée commences.

I cannot doubt that Sir Andrew's "instinct" would have brought him well out of the difficulty, though he had called Sir Toby "cut," and left him "to take it how he would;" in fact to return or not "Jack-hazel." In calling "cut" it sometimes happens that a lad who wishes to stand well with his schoolfellows, but does not care to fight, spells the word deliberately "c-u-t" (which is not a challenge until every letter is pronounced to a "t"), in order that he may have time to calculate whether his antagonist will fight or not. Does this throw any light upon the mysterious letters in the fifth scene of this act? "Her C's, her U's, and her T's: why that?"

J. WETHERELL.

Middleton.

CUE.—The word cue occurs twelve times in the plays of Shakspeare, and once in the plural number. In the voluminous edition of 1803 we have six notes in illustration of its meaning, two of which I must transcribe:

"Had you not come upon your cue.] This expression is borrowed from the theatre. The cue, queue, or tail of a speech, consists of the last words, which are the token for an entrance or answer. To come on the cue, therefore, is to come at the proper time."—JOHNSON [1765. v. 297.]

"Cue and all.] A cue, in stage cant, is the last words of the preceding speech, and serves as a hint to him who is to speak next."—G [1790, ii. 484.]

Johnson and Steevens report correctly the stage cant of their times, which is also that of our time, but how was the word cue understood when Shakspeare flourished? On that point we have no information, unless we rely on Quince the carpenter and Bottom the weaver—entertaining fellows, no doubt, but quite inadmissible as authorities on philological matters. I shall therefore produce the sober decision of a learned grammarian of the year 1634:

"Q. A note of entrance for actors, (because it is the first letter of quando, when,) showing when to enter and speak." Charles BUTLER, M.A.

In confirmation of the statement of Butler, I add examples from the best authorities now at hand; the first, from the quarto edition in photolithography, and the others from the excellent reprint of the folio of 1623, published by Mr. Lionel Booth:

"Beatrice. Speake Counte, tis your Qu."

Much adoe, 1600.

"Ford. . . . The clocke giues me my Qu, and my assurance bids me search."—M. W. W.

"Mi. Ford. . . . Mistris Page, remember you your Qu." M. W. W.

"Mountjoy. . . . Now wee speake vpon our Q." Henry V.

"Buck. Had you not come vpon your Q my Lord." Richard III.

BOLTON CORNEY.

Barnes.

BIBLIOGRAPHIC (3rd S. vii. 297.)—The Shaksperiana of Mr. Isaac Reed, in 9 volumes. This lot was purchased by Lord Spenser at 23*l*. The copy of the Bibliotheca Reediana whence I derive this information has been just thirty years in my possession, and was priced by Mr. Alexander Chalmers. The prices are thus authenticated: "Twelve copies of this catalogue were printed on a large paper, and given by the auctioneers to the particular friends of Mr. Reed. The prices here are copied from one of these. A.C. March 1809."

BOLTON CORNEY.

ASSUMPTION OF ARMS.

I want to provoke a little discussion on a fresh branch of a subject often already treated of in the columns of "N. & Q."

I set out with two propositions:—

1. All cognizances, devices, or armorial bearings were, I apprehend, originally adopted at the fancy of their bearers; i. e. arms existed long before their multiplication gave birth to Heralds (in the Doctors' Commons sense of the word), and were, in all such cases, "arms of assumption," of which the college became, at some latter epoch, the registrar.

2. Whatever may have been the practical value of armorial bearings in actual middle-age warfare,—or whatever may be, now and hereafter, their importance as auxiliaries to historical, antiquarian, or genealogical inquiry (an importance which I am far from underrating),—they are not used now by those who bear them with the slightest view or reference to any such ends. Their principal and only present practical value is for purposes of harmless and elegant display, and ornamentation: to make a gay flag over a stall or in a pageant; to crown a stately entrance arch, or relieve a carriage panel; to mark a tankard or a dinner-plate; to make a fanciful heading-stamp for a sheet of note-paper, or an imposing device for a family seal on its envelope; to deck a leather chair back, or, more usefully, to enliven a “dull cold marble,” or enrich a gorgeous memorial window. In a word, to set on a multitude of chattels an elegant and distinctive mark of ownership. There may be plenty of enthusiasts (with whom I shall decline to dispute) to tell me that this is a disgustingly low view of the matter. I know that it is true in the main.

Now I who write this, by name Neumann Weissenschild, am by education, by membership of a learned profession, by all social habit and circumstance, and I hope, by higher and better intrinsic claims, a gentleman; and eke, by the courtesy of the nineteenth century, an Esquire: though I cannot, with strict veracity, Latinize the latter title into “Armiger,” because, though I can trace back my honest and worthy ancestors for a couple of centuries, I have no record or evidence of their having borne “arms.” Garter, Clarenceux, and Norroy have “in the great heap of their learning” no grain of information on that subject.

Being what I have above attempted to describe, and intending, from my union with a daughter of the ancient house of Eberswurst, to beget and leave behind me a numerous and flourishing family, I have—without the slightest yearning by any awful device to strike terror into the souls of modern Paynims, or to rally my faithful vassals round my banner in the approaching war with the North American States—I have, I say, a harmless enough desire to invent and adopt some badge, which shall serve henceforth to distinguish and adorn the carriages, books, plate, seals, &c. &c., of the Weissenschilds, a family of much future consideration, and make them recognizable thereby to the observant eyes of the twentieth and all subsequent centuries. And I mean this badge to take the shape of what is called a “coat of arms.”

What moral objection is there to my so doing? I know, of course, that I can do it without interference, save from the taxgatherer, so long as I don't assume the cognizance of any existing armigeri, or perhaps even if I do.

I also know that Norroy and the rest will, for “certain considerations,” be too happy to “grant” or “confirm” to me such bearings as I choose to assume, provided my tinctures are all “selon les règles,” and that I don't put metal upon metal, or commit some similar heraldic “gaucherie.” But I don't happen to care a farthing for the sanction of these worthies, and I certainly don't mean to pay the very serious “certain considerations” which they would extort for its accordance. As for the tax-gatherer, I have no notion of cheating the queen, and he is, or shall be, welcome to his annual receipt of her royal impost.

Well, then, I am about, without troubling the Heralds, to assume a “coat”—say on a field vert, within a bordure or, semée with cocoa-nuts, three monkeys gambadant, langued gules and queued azure (a bearing, I believe, which will not infringe upon the rights of any existing armigerous gens); with, for crest, on a branch proper, a female ape sejant and scalpent, with an appropriate motto from Juvenal. I may possibly make some alteration in the design before final adoption; but that is immaterial. Homo sum, and the coat is Darwinian and ingenious.

Now, what I want to know is—why am I, as I am told in all treatises of sound heraldry, a “snob” for so doing? My badge will not set up any claim of descent from Courtenay, Montmorency, or Plantagenet. If it did I should be the first to admit the justice of the appellation. But I make no effort to hang myself upon the Past, and only look forward to the Future. Why may I not mark my books (for instance), the weapons of the noblest warfare waged in our time, as old Raoul de Fitz-Battleaxe marked his shield and surcoat in darker days? Why may I not “assume” as he did before Rouge-Croix was born or thought of?

It may be that I am a “parvenu,” i. e. I have made my way in the world to a higher status than that of my fathers, and by my brains instead of my fists: a fact which, after all, is not much to my discredit. But what then? Is the register of families a closed “Libro d'oro?” and are no new ones to be founded, or rather no hitherto-undistinguished ones to become distinguished, hereafter? If I am capable of achieving and transmitting social position and consideration among gentlemen, why am I a “vulgar pretender” and a “snob” for adopting, albeit without the sanction of Messieurs the Heralds, a badge for myself and my posterity, any more than for setting up my brougham, butler, library, pianoforte, or any other article of luxury or fancy ordinarily used among the class to which I have ascended? Or is the whole thing only a wretched matter of £. s. d., and am I a "snob" only because Norroy and the rest don't get their "considerations"?

I know I can assume a name, and make my way with it as best I can without any leave either of her most gracious Majesty or Messieurs her Heralds; for being, as will have been observed, of Teutonic extraction, and whilome called "Schweinsfleisch" (and thereby the subject of much unseemly jocularity), I some years ago altered my patronymic to the more euphonious but unpretending "Weissenschild,"—a change for which the descendants I propose to leave will, or I mistake, be eternally grateful. Was I a "snob" for that too? I am afraid some folks will call me so, for I know I paid no fees for it.

Will somebody convince me that I am a "snob" (and, if so, an ass into the bargain)? or can and will some "novus homo" take up the anti-Heralds' College side of the question more ably than NEUMANN WEISSENSCHILD?

ROBERT BRUCE.

In support of his claim to the crown of Scotland in 1291, Bruce urged (among other arguments) that he had been formally recognised as rightful heir in the reign of Alexander II.

This argument is set out in several documents:—

1. In the appeal of the seven Earls of Scotland. See Documents and Records illustrating the History of Scotland, edited by Sir Francis Palgrave, p. 20.

2. In a Petition in the French Language presented by Bruce to Edward I. (Id. p. 26.)

3. In the Petition presented by Bruce to the Arbitrators at Norham. (Id. Illustrations, p. xv.; and Fœdera, n. s. vol. i. p. 777.

I here subjoin the statement contained in the French petition, as reduced into modern spelling by Sir Francis Palgrave:—

"Pour ce, que le Roi Alexandre, père du Roi Alexandre que de rein [dernièrement] mourut, quand il alla en guerre sur les îles, granta et ordonna (comme celui qui mieux fut ainsé de son sang) par commun assent des Evêques, Comtes, et de son Baronage que si Dieu voulût, qu'il mourût sans heirs de son corps, Sir Robert de Brus, comme plus prochain de son sang, fût tenu son hoir au Royaume d'Ecosse avoir. Et de ce fut fait un écrit, scellé du seel du Roi et des évêques et autres grands Seigneurs, lequel écrit demeura en la Trésorie du Roi."—Documents and Records, &c., Introduction, p. xxiv.

At what time is this recognition supposed to have taken place?

The warlike expedition to the Isles that Bruce speaks of would enable us to fix the date if it were itself known to history; but I have hitherto searched for it in vain.

In his petition to the arbitrators at Norham, Bruce furnishes us with another clue. Alexander II. is there spoken of as "desperans de hærede de corpore suo." The seven Earls of Scotland in their appeal enlarge upon this point. I quote from the translation given by Sir Francis Palgrave:—

"Alexander II. having advanced almost to the verge of senile age, and there being no expectation of his having an heir of his body, he assembled all the Nobles and Magnates of Scotland, the Bishops, and other Clergy and Laity, as many as could be brought together at a certain time and place, in order to prevent the dissensions which would arise in the event of his death without issue."—Introduction, p. xvi.

Poor old king! When did this despair come upon him? At the time of his death in 1249 he was only in his fifty-first year, and he left a son of seven years old and upwards. If ever he recognised Bruce as heir to the throne, it clearly must have been before the birth of this son in 1241. Sir Francis Palgrave carries the time somewhat further back:—

"The declaration," he says, "must have been of course made before there could be any probability of that event, and the period to which it must be assigned, must be found between the 4th March, 1238, when Queen Joan died, and the 15th May, 1239, when Alexander II. married his second wife, Mary de Coucy."—Introduction, p. xxviii.

We are thus required to believe that King Alexander, despairing of any issue of his own, must have looked out for a collateral heir before he had completed the forty-first year of his age, somewhere in the interval of fourteen months that elapsed between the death of his first wife, and his marriage with the second. Surely this has a very suspicious aspect.

But let us proceed with the statement of the seven earls:—

"Unto this Parliament or Convention he declared the state of his age, and that he had no issue of his body; but that his Uncle David had three daughters, the first of whom had a daughter, and the second a son; and he enjoined them all, as they were bound to him by their allegiance, fealty, and homage, that they would decide and adjudicate between the parties, which and whether of them should inherit the crown—the daughter of the eldest sister, or the son of the second sister. And the Great Council being assembled together, they decreed and adjudged by all their own laws, and by the imperial and other laws, that the son born of the second sister should inherit in preference to the daughter born of the eldest sister; and all present, clergy as well as laity, unanimously declared the same as a true judgment to the King. Such judgment being given by the Great Council, and accepted by the Sovereign, he, King Alexander, took Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale who now is, by the hand, and presented him to all the Nobles and Magnates, Clerks and Laymen then and there present, as his true and legitimate heir to the Kingdom of Scotland; and all such Magnates by the King's command, and in his presence took the oath of fealty to the Lord Robert Bruce upon the Holy Gospels."—Introduction, p. xvii.

It is material to observe that Alexander's object is represented to have been, not to select a successor, but to obtain the recognition of the rightful heir; and it is stated to have been the judgment of the council that Bruce, as the son of the younger sister was, in law, to be preferred before the daughter of the elder sister.

The question to which I would wish to invite attention is, whether any such judgment could really have been given? and upon this point I beg to offer the following observations:—

1. When the judgment was appealed to, no record of it was produced, nor has any trace of it been since discovered.

2. It is remarkable that in that part of the document where the issue of David, Earl of Huntingdon is spoken of, no mention should be made of his son John le Scot, Earl of Chester and Huntingdon, who, after surviving his father somewhere about eighteen years, died no longer before the date of the supposed judgment than the year 1237.

Here let me pause to remark by the way, that Dugdale erroneously assigns the death of John le Scot to the year 1244 (Baronage, vol. i. p. 45); and in this he is followed by Nicolas in his Synopsis, under the title of "Chester" (edit. 1825). Whether the error has been created in the new edition I do not know. At all events, under the title "Huntingdon," Nicolas gives the true date 1237.

But to proceed with my observations:—

3. At the time when the judgment is supposed to have been given, Robert Bruce's mother, Isabella, was alive; and no right, derived through her, could have vested in her son.

4. It must be borne in mind that Alexander II. had three legitimate sisters; and I may here take the opportunity of observing that, according to the allegations of Balliol (id. Illustrations, p. xxv.), Margaret was the eldest, Marjory the second, and Isabella the youngest. Margaret, the eldest, was married to Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent; and, from Balliol's allegations, it would appear that she had a daughter and heir also named Margaret, who died s. p. But without pursuing at present the inquiry respecting the issue of the Countess of Kent, it is sufficient to remark that at the time when the recognition is supposed to have been made, Margaret, the Countess, Alexander's eldest sister, was herself alive.

It may be proper to add, that the force of the last two observations does not in the slightest degree depend upon any critical inquiry into the precise date of the recognition.

Alexander II., by whom the recognition is stated to have been made, died on July 8, 1249.

Robert Bruce had livery of the lands of his mother's inheritance in 36 Hen. III. (1252). See Collins's Peerage (1812), vol. v. p. 112. She must therefore have survived Alexander II. by at least two years.

John de Burgh, on the death of Margaret, Countess of Kent, was found to be his next heir in 44 Hen. III. (1200.) See Dugdale's Baronage, vol. i.

p. 700. The countess must therefore have survived Alexander II. somewhere about ten years.

It will thus be seen that at no time during the life of Alexander II. could Robert Bruce have been recognised as the rightful heir to the throne without his mother Isabella being passed over; at no time during his life could Alexander II. have searched for an heir among the descendants of his uncle David without setting aside the undoubted right of his own sister. MELETES.

NON-CON NOTES.

The antiquities of the Conventicle are scarcely, it will be said, a vein worth the working; but I merely propose to jot down a few recollections and traditions that occur to me. Dissent, like everything else in this nineteenth century, is putting on new phases, and the old ones are being fast forgotten—rather a pity, methinks. In my boyhood the old folks would still talk of "going to meeting," though "chapel" had become naturalised; in our day the Quakers have the term to themselves. How did the change originate? Was it from the Wesleyans? "Chapel," an old minister once assured me, began in a Popish relic—St. Martin's Hat, or "chapello," which used to accompany the French Kings in their wars; the tent, or other receptacle for the hat (with its masses, ceremonies, &c.) in course of time taking its name. Let philologists settle that point.

Although a Presbyterian of three or four generations back, I could not but enjoy a grim jest upon my own "denomination," heard the other day for the first time. A friend, visiting the south, was inspecting an ironmonger's stock-inventory, in which he found, to his surprise, "Two Presbyterians," meaning, he was told, two of the cowls or hoods which are attached to certain chimnies, and shift with the wind. Herein lay the sting. "Turned by every wind of doctrine" was doubtless the sentence of some severe Independent or Baptist on his heterodox brother, whose primitive Calvinism of the Commonwealth has been insensibly "toning down" during the eighteenth century into a quiet contemplative Arianism, ending at length in Unitarianism.

Among the usages of the sect was the standing in prayer, and being seated at the singing. They partake of the Lord's Supper round a table, and a "Table-pew" may generally be noticed in front of the pulpit. Baillie, in his Report to Scotland on the Westminster Assembly of Divines (Hanbury, ii. 430), describes the Presbyterians as sitting round a table, but the Independents as keeping in their pews. The broad centre aisle in the late Edward Irving's gothic structure in London was, I believe, so arranged to allow of a long communion table or tables.

Nicodemus's Seat.—When a boy I remember a certain pew in the chapel I attended, which was so named of course from the disciple who came to Jesus by night. The pew was darkened by an overhanging staircase, and being close to the door seemed a tempting shelter for any timid listener, though scarcely contrived on purpose. A desponding prophecy used to be heard in dissenting communities, that when a family set up a carriage in the third generation, it would go back to the church. Priestley's remark was in the same spirit when signing a petition against the Test and Corporation Acts—viz. that he was petitioning for the break-up of his own flock. But I have trespassed long enough perhaps. NON-CON.

THE COUNTESS OF TYRCONNEL.

The following paragraph has once more been sent flying through the rounds of the papers by a late publication:—

"THE WHITE WIDOW.—The Strand Exchange, in the time of William and Mary, was the scene of the pretty story of 'The White Widow.' For several days a sempstress appeared at one of the stalls, clothed in white and wearing a white mask. She excited great curiosity, and all the fashionable world thronged her stalls. This mysterious milliner was at last discovered to be no less a person than the Duchess of Tyrconnell, widow of Talbot, the detested Lord Deputy of Ireland under James II. Unable to obtain a secret access to her family, and almost starving, she had been compelled to turn shopwoman. Her relatives provided for her directly the story became known. This duchess was the Frances Jennings mentioned by Grammont, and sister to the Duchess of Marlborough."—Thornbury's Haunted London.

This dateless story is wretchedly vague, and scarcely deserves a notice in these columns. It is almost beyond probability that the sister of Sarah Duchess of Marlborough, related to some of the first families of the kingdom, and an exceedingly clever woman besides, should have adopted such a course. When the dastard James, the first to fly, carried the news of his own defeat at the Boyne into Dublin, he ironically complimented Lady Tyrconnell on the quickness of her husband's countryman's heels, to which she readily rejoined, "His majesty in that respect had the advantage of them."

There is a doubt, however, respecting where the Countess of Tyrconnell died and was buried. I say Countess, for, as her husband did not receive the title of Duke till after King James had abdicated, the epithet Duchess is improper. According to Prior's Life of Goldsmith, we find that she lived in Dublin, where she died at her lodgings in Ormond Quay, on Sunday, March 7, 1730-1. I have seen an elegy by White, the Westmeath poet, on her death, among the eighty lines of which it is constructed there are the following:—

"Tyrconnel, once the boast of British isles,
Who gained the hearts of heroes by her smiles;
Whose wit and charms throughout all Europe rang,
From whom so many noble peers have sprang;
Whose virtue, carriage, parts, and graceful mien,
Made her a fit companion for a queen."

Notwithstanding we have the preceding testimony of her death at Dublin, there is still to be seen among the Jacobite sepulchral monuments in the chapel of the old Scots College, in the Rue des Fosses St. Victor, at Paris, a plain tablet bearing the following inscription:—

D. O. M.
Æternæ Memoræ
Illustrissimæ et Nobilissimæ Dominæ
Franciscæ Jennings,
Ducissæ de Tyrconnell,
Reginæ Mag. Brit. Matronæ Honorariæ,
Hujus Collegii benefactricis,
Quæ Missam quotidianam in hoc sacrario
Fundavit perpetuo celebrandam
Pro animâ suâ et animâ ejus Domini Georgii
Hamilton de Abercornæ, Equitis aurati,
Conjugis sui primi, et Domini Ricardi Talbot,
Ducis de Tyrconnell, Proregis Hyberniæ,
Secundi sui conjugis.
Obiit die xii Martii, An. Domini MDCCXXXI.
Requiescat in Pace.

Tyrconnell was undoubtedly a brave man, and la belle Jennings a fair and witty woman. Among hundreds of traitors, he alone was faithful to his king; that the latter was obstinate, pig-headed, and probably cowardly, was not Dick Talbot's fault. The greatest temptations were held out to Tyrconnell by William, but in vain. Rank, fame, fortune, all might have been retained by playing a double part, but Tyrconnell was faithful to the last; and so it is that, even at the present day, the absurd stories of venial Whig journalists are raked up in modern books of gossip, and the faithful nobleman is styled "the detested Lord-Deputy of Ireland." Risum teneatis amici?

I must add, that being away from my books at present, I am indebted for one notice of Tyrconnell expressed above to an able article on that nobleman, written by H. F. Hore, Esq., and published in vol. v. of the Ulster Journal of Archaeology.

WILLIAM PINKERTON.

THE EASTERN ORTHODOX CHURCH.—Whilst suggesting a reprint in "N. & Q." of the following paragraph, which appeared in the London Guardian, I cannot be supposed to be actuated by a desire to resuscitate the controversy on the churches, since the extract furnishes a very striking incident irrespective of their comparative orthodoxy, and the more memorable because it is toto cælo irreconcilable with the subjoined declaration of Dr. Constantine Simonides.

"An event which has recently taken place in America in connection with the movement of the renewal of friendly relations and intercommunion between the eastern orthodox and Anglican churches, deserves something more than a passing notice. If, as is possible, this step should lead to other and more important results, and if the courtesies interchanged between individual churchmen should extend to the clergy generally, the service celebrated on the 2nd of March, 1865, in Trinity Chapel, New York, will be referred to as an historical incident; for on that day, for the first time in a thousand years, the Liturgy (or Eucharistic Service) was celebrated in a western church by a priest of the Holy Orthodox Communion, and the creed of Christendom was chanted in English without that Filioque clause which caused the great schism of East and West." The Guardian, March 29, 1865.

Ἀπάντησις Σιμωνίδου σύντομος πρὸς τοὺς ἐρωτήσαντας αὐτὸν Ἀγγλοὺς περὶ τῶν ἐξῆς ζητημάτων.

Ἡ Ἐκκλησία τῶν ὀρθοδόξων ἡμῶν Ἑλλήνων, καθολικὴ καὶ ἀποστολικὴ οὐσα, καὶ κεφαλὴν ἔχουσα τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, οὐδεμίαν οὐδαμῶς ἀναγνωρίζει ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἐτέραν ἐκκλησίαν· οὔτε τὴν τῶν Ἀγγλῶν ἐκατονκέφαλον ἡγῶν δὲ λαόν, οὔτε τὴν Παπικέφαλον τῶν καυσοτόμων Ρωμαίων, ὡς οὐδ' ἄλλην τινα. Καλεῖ δὲ πᾶσας τὰς συναγωγὰς ἀνθρώπων αἰρετικῶν· ἀναγνωρίζει δὲ οὐδὲ τὴν ἱερωσύνην αὐτῶν· οἱ οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἱερωσύνην.

Ὁρθοδόξων Ἑλλήνων Θεολογικαὶ Γράφαι Τέσσαρες.

Ἐν Λονδίῳ, 1865, ad calc.

BIBLIOTHECAR. CHETHAM.

PRICE OF SALMON. — In an inquiry now being held at Limerick, before the Fishery Commissioners, Mr. Andrew J. Watson, who had managed the salmon weir there from 1827 to 1834, "in reply to Mr. Brewster, said, that in 1832 they caught an immense quantity of fish. The fish was so numerous, that he could see their fins over the water; and as there was then no demand for them, he opened the weir and let them all escape." He "recollected when he used to see salmon boiling at the head of cellars, and a cut of it could be had for one penny; and the price in the shops was twopence per pound." S. P. V.

DROITWICH REGISTER. — In the Register of St. Peter's Church, Droitwich, several Latin verses on the uncertainty of life, &c., are interpolated among the usual entries, and the following advice to his successors, by a rector in the olden time: —

"All you, my successors, that my benefice shall take,
Keep well this Register for my sake;
And as I have left yt faire and pure,
So I would have yt for ever to endure."

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

MARRIAGES OF KNIGHTS. — The following, from the Registers of Newington Butts, are worth a note: —

"1603, Feb. 10. Sir Anthonie Forester and Judith Riche. Lic.

"1638, May 27. Sir Thomas Bludder, Knt. and Mrs. Jane Lucas. Lic."

C. J. R.

SIGNIFICANT NAMES. — Have you a department in your Notes for curious names? Some firms present a curious conjunction. I add localities to prevent forgeries. Stone and Flint, London Bridge; Flint and Steel, Oxford Street; Heath and Waterfall, Sheffield; Salmon and Rice, Dublin; Blood, Phayre, and Furey (called commonly Blood, Fire, and Fury), Dublin.

Of single names I remember Tredaway, Shoemaker, Hammersmith; Last, Shoemaker, Exeter; Trulock, Gunsmith, Dublin. Ireland also has a Mr. Beauchamp Urquhart Colclough, pronounced Beecham Urcut Cokely, a rather odd trio of names to be borne by a single person.

Will you kindly admit additions to a list that ought to form an amusing department of "N. & Q."

OWEN TUDOR.

JULIUS CÆSAR AND BRITAIN: LINE IN LUCAN.

"Territa quæsitis ostendit terga Britannia."

(ii. 572.)

Would not these words, so descriptive of the connection of Julius Cæsar with our island, be suitable as a motto for any English life of that famous Roman?

LÆLIUS.

EPIGRAM: on a very tall Barrister of the name of Long, by the late T. Dunbar, Esq.: — "Longe longorum longissime, Longe, virorum, Dic mihi, te quæso, num BREVE quidquid habes?"

W.

LATIN EPIGRAM. — The following couplet was addressed to a clergyman, who used to preach Hare's Sermons: —

"Ne vendas lepores alienos, prome leporem Nativum: melior syllaba longa brevi."

J. C. J.

Queries.

"THE TRAGEDIE OF ALCESTE AND ELIZA, 1688. By Fr. Br." — Any correspondent of "N. & Q.," who happens to have access to the Registers of the Stationers' Company, would greatly oblige me by endeavouring to ascertain if there is any clew upon the face of the entry of the work above-named there to the name of the translator. The tragedy of Alceste and Eliza is a free paraphrase of portions of the Croce Raccquistata of Fr. Br., i.e., as my correspondent the Rev. Thomas Corser, M.A., and myself agree in thinking, Francesco Bracciolini, the original writer. On the title-page of the English book, these initials occur as if "Fr. Br." was the translator; but that circumstance probably arose from a misplacement of the lines. It would present a very remarkable coincidence indeed, if the initials of the author and his translator were identical. Besides, I am not acquainted with any English writer of the time to whom such initials could appertain.

At Lloyd's sale, in 1819, the volume in question produced a large figure. I believe that Mr.

Lloyd's copy was afterwards in the hands of Mr. Rice and Sir F. Freeling; at whose auction, in 1836, it passed into the possession of the Rev. T. Corser. The only other copy which seems to have occurred for sale, is one I found bound up at the end of an imperfect copy of May's Henry the Second, 1633. It is an 8vo of thirty-nine leaves: the last being blank, but necessary to complete sig. E.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

BREMEN.—1. What was the political condition of Bremen from 1731, when it was taken possession of by Denmark, to 1757, when it was taken by the French?

2. What means the letter s in the following inscription upon a Bremen coin of 1750—FRANCISC. I. D. G. ROM. IMP. S. A. A.?

E.

EARLY BRITONS.—Pearson, in Early and Mediæval Ages of England, p. 6, in speaking of our British ancestors from "the few skulls and other bones," says:—

"Modern theory would view with suspicion the prehensile thumb, equalling in length the forefinger of the hand, as if something of a lower nature had not yet been worked out in the growth of the race."

If but few bones have been found, how has it been possible to decide on the "prehensile thumb" in Britain? Has it been found in any other country?

F. C. B.

CLINT HILLS.

"The most celebrated spots of Druid worship are Stonehenge and the Clint Hills in England, Karnak in Britany."—Travels by Umbra, p. 83.

How are the Druids connected with Clint hills, which are probably Danish? Our Clint hills have no features in common with Stonehenge or Karnak.

F. C. B.

THE CRUSADERS.—A friend writing from Naples mentions a recent visit to the convent of Trinità la Cava, and says:—

"There is a magnificent collection of MSS. and illuminated books (missals) of the seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth centuries. Amongst others, a sort of map or chart of the time of the Crusades, on which are introduced the banners and coats of arms of the Crusaders, including our Richard Cœur de Lion," &c.

Is there any detailed account of this chart? If so, where is it to be found?

R. W. F.

Bath.

EPIGRAMS ADDRESSED TO THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.—G. Steinman Steinman will feel greatly obliged by being referred to the printed volume in which the three epigrams addressed to the celebrated Duchess of Marlborough by H. G., and entitled severally "The Royal Sapling Oak," "The Reasonable Caution," and "The Murmurs of the Oak," are to be found. (Vide Miss Strickland's Queens of England, 1848, xii. p. 206.)

Sturbridge, near Sevenoaks.

JOHN FITZGIBBON, FIRST EARL OF CLARE.—This eminent individual was born in the year 1749; but where did the event take place? Having a particular object in view, I have examined different biographical works, and made sundry inquiries, but as yet without success. In 1763 Lord Clare's father had a house at Donnybrook, near Dublin.

ABHBA.

"THE GOBLINS OF NEAPOLIS."—Who wrote a small 12mo volume, entitled The Goblins of Neapolis, Dublin, 1836?

ABHBA.

HISTORIOGRAPHER ROYAL.—Query, Has any one held the office since Richard Stonehewer, Esq., who held it in 1782?

The office was created soon after the Restoration, and was conferred upon, if not created for, James Howell (Biog. Dict., art. "Howell"). In France such an office was of earlier date: for Mons. De la Terre, who wrote the account of the "Entrée de la Reine Mère temp. Chas. I.," 1639, was Historiographer Royal.

It would seem, however, that some persons held a similar appointment much earlier, viz. Matthew Paris was historiographer to King Henry III. (Drake's Parl. Hist., vol. i.) Dryden was made historiographer to King James II. (Johnson's Life of Dryden, p. 96.)

J. R.

LETTERS OF ALEXANDER KNOX AND HANNAH MORE.—A few years ago three unedited letters to the Rev. Geo. Miller, D.D., of Armagh, relative to his Philosophy of Modern History—one from Alexander Knox, and two from Hannah More—appeared in an English periodical. Dr. Miller died in October, 1848, and the letters in question were published not long after his death. Will you, or some one of your correspondents, kindly refer me to the periodicals.

ABHBA.

"MAJESTAS INTEMERATA, or, the Immortality of the King: Printed in the year 1649," 12mo.—Hearne, in his Diary, Aug. 23, 1715 (Rel. Hearniana, 341), observes:—

"To enquire particularly who was the author of Majestas Intemerata, or, the Immortality of the King, which was printed in the year 1649, in 12mo."

In a note to which passage, Dr. Bliss says:—

"It is the general report that Jno. Cleveland, the poet, was the author. So Hearne, in a subsequent note . . . But neither does that author [Nichols] nor Wood appear to have seen the tract in question. . . ."

In a copy of Majestas Intemerata now before me, however, a contemporary hand has made a large number of MS. annotations and corrections; and in the title-page has written, "By Francis Whyte, of Greys Inn." Lowndes assigns to a gentleman of this name a legal treatise, printed in 1652. The only ground that exists, so far as I am aware, for attributing the piece to Cleveland, is, that there is the same extract from Lydgate to be found here which occurs before Cleveland's Idol of the Clowes, 1654.

The character of the emendations in my copy, and their correspondence with the coeval handwriting on the title, together with the legal complexion of the whole volume, leads one in the absence of any direct evidence of Cleveland's authorship to incline to Whyte's claim to the book. Can any reader of "N. & Q." speak more authoritatively on this point?

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

"ODE TO SPRING."—Can any one tell me where the remaining verses of the subjoined ode to spring are to be found?—

An Ode to Spring.

"Spring, the sweet spring is the year's pleasant king :
Then lovers meet, old wives a sunning sit ;
And through the fields, those sounds our ears do greet,
Coo coo, ju ju, pee wee, too wit-a-woo."

H. B. JOHNSTON.

Dublin.

PROCURATORS.—In the Ecclesiastical Courts prior to the Reformation, what were the qualifications required for admission as a Procurator, and how was he admitted? Could a layman be admitted as a Procurator? Could a Procurator, admitted by one official, practise before another official?

D. M.

SPUR MONEY IN BELFRIES.—One of the rules for the guidance of the ringers of Burnley Church (Lancashire) is "Any person attempting to ring with spurs on, to forfeit 6d." I believe I have seen this rule in other churches. What can have been its origin? To descend a staircase, such as usually leads to a church belfry, with spurs on one's heels, would be sufficiently unpleasant without the additional spur of the 6d. forfeit.

H. FISHWICK.

"WILLIE IS GONE," ETC.—Will one of your musical correspondents oblige me with information where the melody and the rest of the words of the old Scotch song are to be obtained, beginning—

"Willie is gone to Melville Castle
To bid the ladies there farewell ;
The first he met was Lady Bet

(and ending)

"And I'll come back and wed ye all?"

M. A. BROWNE.

Queries with Answers.

OSBORNE'S CATALOGUES OF BOOKS.—I have copies of two Catalogues of Books, which were issued by Thomas Osborne, the well-known London bookseller of the last century, for the years 1764 and 1765. Can you tell me whether he issued any more? And if so, how many, and for what years?

ABHRA.

[Osborne is best known as the publisher of the Catalogus Bibliotheca Harleiana, or a Catalogue of the printed books of the Harleian Library, in five vols. 8vo, 1743—1745. This Catalogue was edited by Dr. Johnson and William Oldys. Osborne also published a series of trade Catalogues between the years 1729 and 1768, which are now become extremely scarce. These are literary curiosities in their way, not only for the information they afford of the prices of books in his day, but for the quaint notes, and still more for the queer prefaces contained in them. They are also valuable as consisting of the purchased libraries of the most eminent men of that time, and as containing many thousand volumes of the greatest rarity and interest in English literature. Here will be found the contents of the libraries of Charles Hulton, Henry Smith, Rev. Mr. Ilive, Philip Duke of Wharton, Dr. Robert South, Tom Hearne, the antiquary, William Stuart, part of the collection of Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford, Dr. Edward Halley, Nathanael Boothe, Rev. Mr. Comarque, Rev. Mr. Johnson, Thomas Coxeter, Anthony Kecke, Governor Winthrop, W. Kynaston, Rev. Dr. Baker, Dr. Tyson, Counsellor Webbe, Lady Mary Worsley, Dr. Abraham Hall, Dr. T. Stack, Rev. John Gaudy, Bishop Chandler, Dr. Butler, Bishop of Durham, Dr. Horsman, Sir Thomas Burnet, Dr. Cromwell Mortimer, Edmund Pargiter, Dr. James Foster, Counsellor Hamilton, Henry Viscount Colerane, Hon. Baron Clarke, Dr. Samuel Dunster, Dr. Thomas Gale, Roger Gale, Henry Wotton, Bishop Conybeare, Gilbert Walsley, Chancellor of Lichfield, Rev. John Creyke, Heneage Earl of Winchelsea, Sir Luke Schaub, Edmund Sawyer, Dr. G. Hepburn, Dr. E. Hody, Dr. Philip Bearcroft, John Twisleton, Dr. T. Morison, and other eminent antiquaries. In 1851 Thomas Thorpe, the bookseller, possessed the most complete collection of Osborne's Catalogues, bound in forty-three volumes 8vo, 1729 to 1768, which he priced at 6l. 16s. 6d. Only five odd volumes of the series are to be found in our national library, namely, 1786, 1753, 1754 (2 vols.), and 1761. It is evident that Osborne must have carried on a successful trade as a book-broker, for at his death on August 27, 1767, he left behind him the comfortable assets of 40,000l.]

GAVELKIND.—What makes the difference between a "woman of Kent" and a "Kentish woman"? The women of Kent are, or were, entitled to certain privileges under the law of gavelkind. In what part or district of Kent must one reside to be a "woman of Kent"? Had it not something to do with one side or the other of Rochester bridge?

JOHN DAVIDSON.

[The provincial distinction of "men of Kent" and "Kentish men" no doubt equally applies to the fair sex of that county. The West Kent men, according to the tradition, are styled "Kentish men;" whilst those of East Kent are more emphatically denominated "men of Kent." When St. Augustine, with the assistance of King Ethelbert, founded another episcopal see at Rochester, he thus divided the Kentish kingdom into two dioceses—the eastern Canterbury, the western Rochester; the men of the former retaining their ancient name of “men of Kent;” whilst those of the latter adopted that of “Kentish men.” The Gavelkind tenure and free Kentish customs gave rise to the well-known old provincial song of “The Man of Kent,” its burden being—

“Of Briton’s race if one surpass,
‘A man of Kent’ is he.”

Consult Sandys’s Consuetudines Kancie, and an article on this local distinction from the same gentleman in “N. & Q.” 1st S. v. 615.]

HUNTINGDON STURGEON.—What is the allusion to, in the following passage in Pepys’s Diary?

“1667, May 22nd. This day, coming from Westminster with W. Batten, we met at Whitehall Stairs a fisher boat with a sturgeon that he had newly caught in this river; which I saw, but it was but a little one; but big enough to prevent my mistake of that for a colt, if ever I become Mayor of Huntingdon.”

F. A. E.

[In the later editions of Pepys’s Diary Lord Braybrooke has added the following note to this passage: “During a very high flood in the meadows between Huntingdon and Godmanchester, something was seen floating, which the Godmanchester people thought was a black pig, and the Huntingdon folk declared was a sturgeon; when rescued from the waters, it proved to be a young daisy. This mistake led to the one party being styled ‘Godmanchester black pigs,’ and the other ‘Huntingdon surgeons,’ terms not altogether forgotten at this day. Pepys’s colt must be taken to be the colt of an ass.”]

ATLAS OF HISTORY.—I think I have seen an Atlas containing maps on which under, or instead of the names of the places, historical events that took place, or the names of celebrated persons who were born or resided at them, were printed.

What is the title of the book, and who was the author? E. N.

[Probably the following is the work required: “A Cancine Historical, Biographical, and Genealogical Atlas of the principal events in the Histories of England, France, Spain, Portugal, Germany, and Italy. Also the celebrated European Treaties, Painters, &c. Designed and Compiled by Hensage Lowth, with the addition of the valuable Historical Summary and Observations of Lesage.” Lond. fol. 1861.]

Replies.

EVIDENCES OF DISTANT LIGHT AND SMOKE.
(3rd S. v. 320; vii. 206.)

I have frequently noticed the trunks and stems of larch trees to be covered with a black deposit, but have always attributed it to blight. I should be disposed to account for the “smoky deposit” which SIR THOS. WINNINGTON found on the larch plantations on Brown Clee Hill in the same manner. The “larch blight” is due to the attacks of an insect known as the coccus or eriosoma laricis, and the eggs—

“may be detected even by the naked eye, thickly crowded together around the base of the buds, and in the small depressions and crevices of the bark of the last year’s wood, in the form of small black grains. . . . The trees become clammy and black with the honey-dew or excrementitious discharge of the insects, which live upon the resinous sap of the tree.” (Selby, History of British Forest Trees, p. 516, Lond. 1842.)

Another form of larch disease is noticed in the Quart. Journ. of Agriculture, vol. v. p. 536, by Mr. Webster, who says,—

“When the trees infected shed their foliage they appear in winter all covered with blackish strands [stains?] both on the trunk and branches, and especially on the south side, as the rains are more severe from that quarter than any other.”

The italics in these quotations are mine. If SIR THOMAS WINNINGTON’S theory be correct, it must necessarily happen that the smoky deposit is more abundant on the east side, Dudley being about due east of Brown Clee Hill. There would be no difficulty whatever in ascertaining this. If I may express my opinion, I am decidedly against the theory that the sooty deposit is carried from the Dudley iron works.

The instances brought forward by MR. LEE as to the distance at which the light of a lamp is sometimes visible, are scarcely to the point. The light from the furnaces in the “Black Country,” as from large fires in general, is not seen directly, but by reflection from the clouds. On cloudless nights the light is not so intense as when the sky is slightly overcast. The beacon lights used in the Ordnance Survey were seen by direct vision. MR. LEE gives 70 miles as the distance at which they were visible; but some of the lines were much longer than this. The mean length of the sides of the principal triangles was 35·4 miles; 37 were between 80 and 90 miles; 18 between 90 and 100 miles; and 11 exceeded 100 miles in length: the longest was 111 miles. In many cases the light used was that of the sun, reflected to the distant station by means of a mirror adjusted at the proper angle. The first idea of this is, I believe, due to Professor Gauss, who, in 1820, was engaged at Lüneburg in trigonometrical observations, to combine the Hanoverian and Danish triangles. He perceived that when he directed his telescope towards the steeple of St. Michael’s church at Hamburgh, a window in the upper part reflected the sun’s image towards him, and thus impeded his operations. This gave him the idea of using the sun’s light for signals, by catching it with a mirror and reflecting it to the place where the signal was to be given. (Newton’s London Journal, 1820, iv. 198.)

RICHARD B. PROSSER.

25, Southampton Buildings, W.C.

BLADEN FAMILY OF ALDBOROUGH HATCH.

(3rd S. vii. 258.)

I can give E. W. a few particulars of this branch of the Bladen family, although unfortunately the Bladen pedigree is one of the most unsatisfactory in my Essex collections. I shall be very glad if your correspondent's query elicits further information.

Martin Bladen, of Aldborough Hatch, Lieutenant under the Duke of Marlborough, Comptroller of the Mint in 1714, Commissioner of Trade and Plantations, and M.P. in five successive Parliaments, was son of Nathaniel Bladen of Hemsworth, co. York, and of Lincoln's Inn, by Isabella, daughter of Sir William Fairfax. Nathaniel Bladen was son of the Rev. Dr. Bladen and Sarah his wife, daughter of Henry, second Lord Blayney. He had at least three children besides Martin: William, father of Colonel Thomas Bladen, M.P. for Old Sarum, ob. 1780, aged eighty-two; Frances, wife of William Hammond; and Elizabeth, first married to Col. Ruthven, and secondly to Edward Hawke, of Lincoln's Inn, by whom she became the mother of the great Lord Hawke.

Of the early life of Martin Bladen, I know little or nothing. He is stated to have first married Mary, daughter of a Col. Gibbs, and to have had two daughters: one of whom, Isabella, became the wife of George Blount, Esq., of Pembridge. However this may be, in 1728 (the marriage settlement is dated March 29) he married Frances, niece and heir of Joseph Jorye, Esq., of Bethnal Green, widow of John Foche, Esq., of Aldborough Hatch. She had inherited the mansion and estate of Aldborough Hatch from her uncle. Col. Bladen pulled down the old house—which had been the seat of two eminent Puritan families, the Kightleys and the Neales; and in which, before their day, Dr. Donne was seized with his last illness*—and built, at the expense of 14,000*l.*, a stately mansion of red brick, in which he lived for many years. He was a man of literary habits, and published a translation of Cæsar's Commentaries, which I believe is now very scarce. I have never even seen a copy. Col. Bladen died in February, 1746, aged sixty-six, and was buried in Stepney church. A monument was raised there to his memory, which I am sorry to hear is no longer in existence. The inscription is preserved in Lysons. His widow died in 1747. She devised the Aldborough Hatch property to her kinswoman Ann, daughter of Sir Francis Hodges,† wife of John Lambert Middleton, of Freeman's Court, Cornhill, afterwards of Belsay Castle, and fourth baronet of that name.

Aldborough Hatch was sold by the Middletons, in 1828, to the Crown. The mansion has long since been pulled down, and a public footpath now passes over its site. The chapel, which was evidently much older than the house—and where it may not improbably be imagined that Donne may have worshipped—was endowed with 20*l.* per annum under the will of Mrs. Bladen; and is, therefore, still standing, with a portion of the old Kightley mansion. A particular of sale of Aldborough Hatch, sixty-three years ago, in my possession, gives a very full description of the house. I have also two spirited drawings of the mansion and chapel, taken for the late Dr. Wellesley about 1792.

Only one Bladen entry appears in the Register of Barking: the burial, Sept. 30, 1737, of John Sepio Bladen. The burials of two daughters of Capt. Edward Hawke are recorded at Barking; Frances Isabella, Sept. 13, 1739, and Isabella, April 3, 1740. These entries illustrate the connection between the families of Hawke and Bladen. There are several entries of Foche and Jory. In those days Aldborough Hatch was included in the parish of Barking: now in the parish of Great Ilford.

I may conclude with a query: Is there an engraved, or other portrait known, of Col. Martin Bladen?

EDWARD J. SAGE.

Stoke Newington.

MISTLETOE.

(3rd S. vii. 76, 157, 226.)

Will you kindly allow me a small space for a little explanation of my former communication, and in reply to Dr. BELL's article of March 18.

It is important in all philological inquiries that we should adhere to the true principles of etymological analysis, and not be led away by mere guesses, however plausible. In searching for the origin of a word, the natural course seems to be that of tracing it through its various permutations of form and meaning as far back as our literature will allow; of comparing its equivalents in other languages, both cognate and alien; of ascertaining the primitive idea involved in it, and thus arriving at length at the primary root. This I endeavour to do by showing that in all the Teutonic languages the name midel or mid-el is closely connected with the word mist, stercus; that the Latin name for the plant, viscum, can be traced to a similar connexion; that the mode of its propagation has always been supposed to be from the dung of birds, and that this idea running through the whole can be traced to two Sanskrit roots having a similar meaning. I wish to give a few further illustrations in confirmation of what has been thus advanced.

* So it is commonly stated; but there is reason to believe that Samuel Harvey, Donne's son-in-law, lived in a house situated a little to the south of the great house at Aldborough Hatch.

† Query, Sir Nathaniel Hodges?

DR. BELL must have greatly misunderstood me in supposing that I ascribed the origin of the name either to Pliny or to the Druids. The former I merely cited to prove the mode of propagation of the plant. The information we have of the latter is far too apocryphal to found any serious argument upon. DR. BELL assumes that I had not consulted Pliny in the original. I gave Pliny's exact words so far as related to the subject, and they are surely no less original because they had been previously quoted by Wachter (not Wächter, as DR. BELL writes it). The fact is, the quotation was taken from the Leyden edition of Pliny, 1668-9, in which the chapters are differently arranged from the Delphin editions, but I have since verified it by collation with other copies. I have also examined all the passages in Pliny's Natural History which relate to the viscum. They are very numerous, occurring in books 13, 16, 17, 20, 22, 23, 24, 27, 28, 32. His observations throw considerable light on the views of the ancient world concerning the plant. Whatever the opinion of the Druids may have been, Pliny considers it for the most part baleful both to the tree on which it grows, and to those who eat of its berries. It must be said, however, that he attaches the name, viscum, to several different plants—to the lila of Theophrastus and Dioscorides, to the ovels and Speap of the former, as well as to the viscum proper. I dare not indulge in quotations illustrating this, but the passages are numerous.

A word or two as to DR. BELL's derivation of mistletoe. He quotes from Pliny, book xvi. chap. 95, an account of the doings of the Druids, "in which," he says, "as Britons, regardful of our ancestry, we have even a domestic interest." Surely this is very loose talk when applied to the Saxon inhabitants of England. But the Druids, according to Pliny, called the mistletoe "suo vocabulo—omnia sanantem." "This translation of the indigenous term," says DR. BELL, "is still best retained in the German mistel, contracted merely from meist heil(sam), and not very dissimilar from our English equivalent most heal(ing)." DR. BELL does not give the "indigenous term," of which omnia sanantem was the equivalent. I will supply the omission. It was "uchel-rydd, virgulam eximise virtutis." The equivalent, in Old German, is gud-hyl. The meaning of omnia sanantem is rather all-heal than meist-heil. Now all-heil does exist in German, but it has no reference to the mistletoe. It means, as in English, a sovereign remedy. We have all-heal in English applied to a plant (the herb basil), but its equivalent in German is kraft-werd.

To sum up: there is not the slightest evidence in any Teutonic language that the mistletoe was ever called meist-heil. The word mistel or mistel is found in Swedish, Danish, Anglo-Saxon, High and Low German, Dutch, and Flemish, constantly in juxtaposition with mist, stercus. It is traced in this form by Graff (Althochdeutscher Sprachschatz, vol. ii. p. 890), back to MSS. of the ninth century. I have also found it in the same form in an Anglo-Saxon vocabulary of the eleventh century. Every German philologist who mentions the word comes to the same conclusion, which can hardly be set aside by a mere conjecture, entirely unsupported by a single fact. J. A. P.

THE WORD DISCIPULUS.

(3rd S. vii. 279.)

In reply to the question, "Where did the word discipulus get its letter p?" I would suggest that the word is a substitute for disc-iculus, the presence of the two consecutive gutturals being offensive to the ear. That the Romans (and Greeks too) were influenced by such a feeling in the formation of words seems to be proved by examples such as the following:—The Latin furca meant properly "a prong," hence a plural furcæ or furculæ was at first required to denote "a fork" to which two or more prongs are essential. This meaning of furca is further proved by the compounds bifurcus, "two-pronged;" trifurcus, "three-pronged;" and by its derivation from for or fod, as seen in fora-re and fod-ere. Now from the simple furca instead of forming a diminutive furc-er, the Romans produced three varieties: forceps, or rather forcepes, forfex or forfices, and forpex.

So again from a base ak, denoting sharpness, as in akut, acidus, acetum, acus "a needle," acu-ere, was deduced a diminutive apex, rather than acer, "a point."

But a more instructive example occurs in a word selected by Prof. Max Müller, in his first series of lectures for special consideration, which he calls the root paç, "look" of the Sanskrit. This Sanskrit verb is by all etymologists identified with the spec of the Latin species spectare, and σκεν of the Greek σκεπτομαι. But with submission to the Oxford Professor, I would ask whether the base of the verb be not a syllable sec, corresponding to seh of the German sehen, and our own see, so that paç would be no root at all? A derivative sec-er being intolerable alike to Greek and Roman ears, the difficulty was avoided in different ways, the one language giving a preference to a form σκεν (for σκε-εν), the other to spec (for sep-er). Exactly in the same way our own language, which possesses the same suffix of diminution in the form ock (bull-ock, hill-ock) from a simple scale = shell, has a secondary scall-op.

I have omitted to notice the somewhat familiar fact that the Latin abounds in secondary, or perhaps tertiary, diminutives, corresponding to the supposed disc-ic-ul-us, as in homon-c-ul-us, nav-ic-ul-a, opus-c-ul-um.

T. HEWITT KEY.

Univ. Coll., London.

QUOTATION (3rd S. vii. 241.) — Christopher Love's quotation was probably from memory, and inaccurate. He seems to refer to two maxims in the Digest:—"Favorabiliores rei potius quam actores habentur" (50, 17, 125), and "In pœnalibus causis benignius interpretandum est" (F. 50, 17, 155, § 1).

R. C. L.

The maxim inquired for is thus expressed in Canon Law:—

"Leges favorabiles ampliori interpretatione sunt intelligendæ; seu in materia favorabili verba Legis accipi debent secundum amplam suam significationem." (See Ferraris, Prompta Bibliotheca Canonica, Juridica, &c., ad verb. Lex, art. v. 38.)

F. C. H.

LEGITIMATION PER SUBSEQUENS MATRIMONIUM (3rd S. vii. 213.) — The student of history and heraldry combined will not fail to notice, under this head, both the fact that an act was passed in 1397 for the legitimation of the De Beauforts, the sons of John of Gaunt and Catherine Swynford, and the alteration consequent upon this, in the coat armour of the children of those personages; the effects of which are still to be traced in the heraldic insignia of some of our highest nobility at the present day.

H. W. T.

"SECRET HISTORY OF THE CABINET OF BONA-PARTE" (3rd S. vii. 136.) — A correspondent (T.B.) quoting a note from Lieber's Manual, which contains the following sentence —

"The Bishop of Amiens says in his mandement, 'The Almighty having created Napoleon, rested from his labours,'" asks whether any authority, beyond that of Goldsmith can be given for these instances of glaring flattery and profanity.

I do not know whether the above quoted expression is to be found in the bishop's pastoral, but if I am not very much mistaken, this identical phrase will be found in a speech addressed to Napoleon I., and reported in the Moniteur. In 1808, on the occasion of the great reviews and military manœuvres executed in the neighbourhood of Arras, Napoleon visited that city. A M. La Chêze was at that time prefect, and concluded his complimentary speech to the Emperor by saying, "Dieu créa Bonaparte, puis il se repose." The zeal of the prefect was rewarded with the following quatrain, which was widely circulated at the time:—

"Il n'en resta pas là;
Il fit encore La Chêze;
Puis il se repose
Beaucoup mieux à son aise."

The same phrase has appeared during the present empire, on a transparency, I think at Lille, under the auspices of M. de Calvimont. J. V.

WHO WAS PHILALETES? (3rd S. vii. 220.) — The Rev. Thomas Stackhouse, author of the History of the Bible, and many other valuable works, used the signature "Philaletes" to most of his smaller works.

JAS. COLEMAN.

JOHN BARCROFT (3rd S. v. 11.) —

"In the year 1723, being the sixtieth of his age, and about the twenty-seventh of his ministry, died John Barcroft of Arkill, near Edenderry. He was the son of William and Margaret Barcroft, born at Shralegh, near Rosenallis, in the Queen's County, in the year 1664. He was the first friend who came to settle near Edenderry after the Wars."—Hist. of the Quakers in Ireland, by Thomas Wight, Dublin, 1751, p. 295. See also Gough's Hist. of the Quakers, vol. iv. p. 261.

"In 1708, a meeting settled, and a Meeting-house built, at Ballytore, in the county of Kildare."—Hist. of Quakers in Ireland, p. 347.

I was under the impression that the subject of the foregoing notice was the originator of the colony of Balitore, which was founded by John Barcroft and another, as we learn from the Leadbeater Papers, in the latter part of the seventeenth century. But the statement of URSAGELLUS, that the colonist had been, before his conversion to Quakerism, one of Cromwell's officers, is quite inconsistent with my previous belief. There is but one John Barcroft mentioned in the two books cited above, and had there been another of a character and career so interesting as to have distinguished him in the humble annals of Quakerism, the omission of his name from these carefully compiled works would be singular. My John Barcroft would have been old enough in the latter part of the seventeenth century to have undertaken the enterprise; and my second quotation offers some slight presumption that the colony may have been founded very near the end of the century, as the earnest reformers would probably set up a "Meeting" as soon as possible. Will URSAGELLUS favour me with the source of his information? I wish to identify the founder of Balitore.

ST. TH.

RICHARD ALLESTREE (3rd S. vii. 124.) — In the Journal of Sacred Literature for July, 1864 (vol. v. n. s. p. 435), Mr. Barham includes among other works supposed to have been written by Dr. Allestree, The Government of the Thoughts, and The Duty of Christian Resolution. As Mr. Barham has investigated the question touching the authorship of these and the other works attributed to Dr. Allestree he will probably be able to furnish a reply to the following inquiries:—

1. Has Bishop Fell stated that the MS. of The Government of the Thoughts was found among Dr. Allestree's papers after his decease?

2. In what year and by whom was The Government of the Thoughts published?

3. What is the date of the first edition of The Duty of Christian Resolution? Who was the editor of it?

LLALLAWG.

"IVANHOE" (3rd S. vii. 242.)—An adaptation of this novel to the stage, more popular than that of Terry, was made by Thomas Dibdin; and produced at the Surrey Theatre, when under his management, on January 20, 1820. It bears the title of Ivanhoe, or, the Jew's Daughter, and is printed in Cumberland's Minor Theatre. Some ten years later, an adaptation of an operatic character was brought out at Covent Garden Theatre under the name of The Maid of Judah, but I believe the songs only were printed.

W. H. HUSEK.

JACOBITES AND JACOBINS (3rd S. i. 425; ii. 282.)

"The most difficult, and at the same time amusing examples of Amphibology, are those which commonly go by the name of Jesuitical verses,—verses which receive directly opposite meanings, if read in different order. Thus the following lines, if read as they stand, must be admired for their staunch loyalty; but let them be perused according to the order of the figures prefixed to them, and nothing can more strongly savour of rank Jacobinism:—

1. I love my country—but the King
2. Above all men his praise I sing,
3. Destruction to his odious reign
4. That plague of Princes, Thomas Paine;
5. The royal banners are display'd
7. And may success the standard aid
6. Defeat and ruin seize the cause
8. Of France, her liberty, and laws.

"The above, I am sorry to say, was not sported off as a mere jeu-d'esprit, but was actually composed to lend its artful aid to the cause of anarchy. I have it from a friend, who himself picked it up with many other similar publications, as they were circulated, previous to the rebellion in 1798, amongst the United Irishmen! I do not doubt but the following translation of another such poem into monkish Latin was applied to the very same laudable purpose!—

1. Pro fide teneo sana
3. Quæ docet Anglicana
2. Affirmat quæ Romana
4. Videntur mihi vana
5. Supremus quando rex est
7. Tum plebs est fortunata
6. Seductus ille grex est
8. Cui Papa imperator.
9. Altare cum ornatur
11. Communio fit inanis
10. Populus tum beatur
12. Cum mensa, vinum, panis
13. Asini nomen meruit
15. Hunc morem qui non capit
14. Missam qui deseruit
16. Catholicus est et sapit.

"I have here ventured to supply myself a couplet that was wanting, but I will not so affront my reader's penetration as to point out to him which couplet that is."—G. A. Addison's Indian Reminiscences, pp. 209, 210, Lond. 1837.

CRUX (2.)

BOOKBINDING (3rd S. vii. 138.)—Will your correspondent add to his list a modest 12mo of 310 pages, entitled—

"A Manual of the Art of Bookbinding: containing full Instructions in the Different Branches of Forwarding, Gilding, and Finishing; also the Art of Marbling Book Edges and Paper," Philadelphia, 1856, by James B. Nicholson, a worthy Englishman settled in Philadelphia? ST. TH.

"BRADSHAW'S RAILWAY COMPANION" (3rd S. vii. 261.)—I have before me a copy two years older than the one you cite as the original edition, with the following title:—

"Bradshaw's Railway Companion, containing the Times of Departure, Fares, &c., of the Railways in England; and also Hackney Coach Fares from the principal Railway Stations, illustrated with Maps of the Country through which the Railways pass, and Plans of London, Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, and Manchester." Manchester, 1840, 16mo.

Is not this the original edition?

KAPPA.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS (3rd S. vii. 241.)—In 1810 he resided in Ivy Tower, in the parish of St. Florence, near Tenby, Pembrokeshire, where his death occurred on Nov. 13, 1813. Five letters written by him in 1810 were addressed to Theophilus Jones, the historian of Breconshire. They have been published in the Archæologia Cambrensis for 1858 and '59 (iv. 376-82, and v. 13-20). For further account of Mr. Williams and his works see Gent. Mag. for 1813, lxxxiii. 624-5.

LLALLAWG.

FREEMASON (2nd S. xii. 219.)—The passage I quoted from Cawdray's Similies ("As the freemason heweth the hard stones," &c.), I find is taken from a work of Werdmuller's, translated by Bishop Coverdale, and published in 1550, under the title of A Spiritual and most precious Perle, &c. It occurs at the close of chapter vi. It is a pity that Cawdray does not give any references. He borrows largely from Werdmuller, whose writings abound in similies. EIRIONNACH.

PAGAN CARICATURE: QUOTATION WANTED (3rd S. iii. 89, 456; vii. 243.)—In Nova Variorum Scriptorum Collectio, t. iii. 8vo, Halæ, Magdeb. 1717, the frontispiece to t. ii. is a restoration of the picture described by Tertullian, and the print mentioned at iii. 89 is probably a copy cut down by the binder, the upper part having a scroll, on which is "Ononychotus." The fifth dissertation is,—"Idoli, quod apud Tertullianum Christianis affingitur, verum nomen esse Ononychotus, demonstratur." The author is J. P. Heinius. It is short, occupying only twenty-two pages, but learned and well-written. The various readings are discussed, and the result is given at p. 85:—

"Emensi pene sumus viam, et tredecim eruditorum virorum conjecturas a scopo abluentes perlustravimus; nostram nunc proferamus sententiam, et exploremus, albore clarius, quam ceteræ absit. Substituimus pro 'Ononychite' 'Ονούχωρος, vocabulum conflatum ex ὄνος, ασίνος, ὄνυξ, ungula, ὄδς, auris. In ignominiosa tabula conspiciebatur monstrum auribus asininis, et ungulato pede. Asini ergo pars inerat, inerat etiam ungula."

See also Farrar, Bampton Lectures, 1862, p. 573.
H. B. C.

U. U. Club.

R. C. L. will find the quotation Deus Christianorum ὁνοκοίτης (not ὀνόχλων, as he writes it) in one of the early chapters of Tertullian's Apology. I regret that I have not the work at hand to refer to.

E. WALFORD, M.A.

Balliol College.

LYNCHETS, OR SHELVES IN WILTSHIRE (3rd S. vii. 241, 302.)—Having been brought up on Salisbury Plain, where those shelves are common enough to form a characteristic feature of the scenery, and to have the local name of lynchets, I can assure the querist that Cobbett's expression, "thousands and thousands of acres of [formerly] ploughed land on shelves, in Wilts alone," is perfectly correct; but their description in the latter part of the quotation seems absurd. The "rising parts" of stairs do not slope at all. Those of terraces formed in chalk must of course slope as much as chalk railway banks, or about forty-five degrees. Their commonest height is from ten to twenty feet. They are perfectly similar to the "terraces of Zion" in Seddon's picture, but confined always to the steep middle part of the slope's height, because all chalk hills are left by the diluvial scour imperceptibly rounded off both above and below. Throughout the interior of the Plain, where its utmost undulations are nearly confined to 200 feet, I remember no hillsides marked with more than four "lynchets," but the higher downs toward its outer escarpments, rising to 400 and 600 feet, may have many series of seven or eight, such as I have seen near Calne, and near Cranbourne. It is quite exceptional to see any of these terraces cultivated, and they always, since I was old enough to know they were artificial, impressed me, without having read Cobbett, with an idea of the dense population that must once have dwelt on those now lonely pastoral wilds; though perhaps a greater share in conveying this impression is due to the immense military works, the ever-present entrenched camps or cities, mostly larger than Old Sarum, and almost as deeply fortified, the twenty-mile rampart of Wansdyke (Woden's dike), and others hardly inferior, and the great sepulchral barrows, dotted by hundreds within sight of Stonehenge, and in smaller numbers about Avebury temple, and the barrow of Silbury, itself exceeding in cubical contents the third Pyramid.

E. L. GARBETT.

MR. PINKERTON is perfectly right in his definition of these so-called archæological remains. The "shelves" are the work of cattle, as can be easily seen if the hilly feeding grounds be visited when stocked with cattle. In Devonshire the shelves are very common; in the immediate vicinity of Exeter you can walk to a set of hilly fields, and verify MR. PINKERTON's statement in a few minutes. The cattle begin feeding from the bottom of the hill, and gradually work their way to the top; in so doing they tread down these terraces or shelves. In wet weather the cattle soon make these tracks, and with constant use for some time the shelves become widened and hardened with the weather. When once formed, and the pastures shut up for some time, the shelves get overgrown with grass, and any one passing by and not knowing how they were made, would be sorely puzzled to account for so singular a sight on the steep hill side.

EDWARD PURFITT.

Devon and Exeter Institution.

In Gloucestershire these shelves are called lynchets. (In Kent the word is used for a bank or boundary.) They are supposed to be formed by sheep and cattle grazing on hill sides for many centuries. Any observer may notice little ones, only a few inches wide, on the sloping sides of sheep-walks. These small beginnings getting wider and wider by constant treadings, would no doubt be further widened if the land was turned into arable, and then being levelled to a certain extent would be more easily cultivated by spade or plough, and eventually have the appearance of shelves or steps.

H. T. ELLACOMBE.

ALVOISE CONTARINI (3rd S. vii. 220.)—The name Alvoise is miswritten or misprinted for Aloysius, which follows. But Aloysius is the same name as Luigi, the last Contarini Doge mentioned by MR. DAVIDSON. This appears to be the favourite mode of the Italians for Latinizing Lewis. Thus, St. Luigi Gonzaga (the one specimen of chastity in that most licentious race), is often called St. Aloysius Gonzaga; and on the coins of the Empress Maria Louisa as Duchess of Parma, she is called Maria Aloisa. Is not Heloise another form of this feminine?

LAELIUS.

WORDS USED IN DIFFERENT SENSES (3rd S. vii. 278.)—Your correspondent E. H. A. should hardly have omitted garbled. This, Sir E. Coke, in his fourth Institute, tells us was a grocer's word; and "garbled spices," expressed the best spices, carefully selected and picked out. "Garbled extracts," in the present day, expresses just the reverse, i. e. extracts dishonestly and unfairly chosen. W.

SONG (3rd S. vii. 281.)—I send you some lines which may be those after which your correspondent SEXAGENARIUS inquires. They are printed in Kelly's Reminiscences (vol. ii. p. 289), and entitled "Ballad by Sheridan." And unless they are more known than I imagine, their tendernees and delicacy may perhaps induce you to insert them in your pages:—

"No more shall the spring my lost pleasure restore,
Uncheer'd I still wander alone;
And, sunk in dejection, for ever deplore
The sweets of the days that are gone.

"While the sun as it rises, to others shines bright,
I think how it formerly shone;
While others cull blossoms I find but a blight,
And sigh for the days that are gone.

"I stray where the dew falls, through moon-lighted groves,
And list to the nightingale's song;
His plaints still remind me of long banished joys,
And the sweets of the days that are gone.

"Each dew-drop that steals from the dark eye of night,
Is a tear for the bliss that is flown;
While others cull blossoms I find but a blight,
And sigh for the days that are gone."

X.

CAN SEXAGENARIUS be seeking for the words of a song which Miss Edgeworth's sister sang to Sir Walter Scott? It was a fragment, and related the woes of an Irish girl with a petticoat of red. The chorus was—

"Shool, shool! Ochone, ochone!
Thinking on the days that are long enough agone."

I copy the words of two verses, which Sir Walter Scott said he had recovered by accident:—

"I went to the mill, but the miller was gone—
I sat me down, and cried ochone,
To think on the days that are past and gone,
Of Dickie Macphalion that's slain.
Shool, shool, &c.

"I sold my rock, I sold my reel,
And see hae I my spinning-wheel,
And all to buy a cap of steel,
For Dickie Macphalion that's slain.
Shool, shool," &c.

These particulars I have gathered from Lockhart's Life of Scott, 7th volume, pp. 198, 199, second edition. I should be glad to see the whole of the song, and to get the music if possible.

C. W. BARKLEY.

DELVE, DOLVE, DALF (3rd S. vii. 279)—It may not be very easy to find full or fair proof. I have examined at least five probable sources of information.

The word delf is, I believe, not often heard of; I do not find dolve in two very likely places; nor even dolve where it might be expected to appear.

I am inclined to think that, though dolve may have its advocates, dolve is perhaps as legitimate as any, if not more so—e.g. "dolve of coals." For the word dolve, however, the reference in one authority is to delf—with the quotation, "The delfs would be overflown."—Ray. The heraldic delf-tan, indicative of abatement, and expressive of cowardice, may here perhaps be noted.

As to the couplet—whether the Gothic, Belgic, or Saxon, is taken into consideration—the absolute correctness may be somewhat questionable according to the estimate of Dolf (G.), Delfan (S.), or Delven (B.).

Query. Since there are such various readings, may there not be something in the channel through which they flow? It is not impossible that persons, times, and circumstances, may account for much.

Literary usage, as well as criticism, may have some variations from age to age. We may indeed have met with names, altered by the lapse of time; and it may be difficult to trace to their original exactness in some instances. B.

BISHOP LINWOOD (3rd S. vii. 134, 266.)—MR. BEDFORD will do good service to the cause of historical and heraldic accuracy if he will pursue the task now set before him, and thoroughly sift the authorities on this subject. In the meantime I beg to make a query, and to add a note or two on this head:—

1. Are the tinctures which belong to the shield described by MR. BEDFORD known? Is there any authority for this bearing (a chevron between three leaves) except the Register; and on what ground is it considered that the addition of these arms is contemporaneous, and not added by a later hand?

2. Will MR. BEDFORD oblige me by a reference to any trustworthy illustration of the brass for John de Linwood? Gough, Sep. Mon., ii. 53, mentions John, a brother of the bishop, who died 1420. Is this the person indicated by MR. BEDFORD as "John de Lyndewoode" of 1421?

3. Can your correspondent refer me to any armorial in which the arms he claims for the bishop are assigned to any form of the name Linwood? Gwillim and others to whom I have had access, uniformly blazon Lyndwood, arg. a fesse crenellée between 3 fleurs-de-lis sa.

4. As Bishop Linwood was a Fellow of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, perhaps your very able correspondents, MESSRS. C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER, may be able to bring their extensive and ready learning to bear upon our inquiries.

5. It was not my friend, to whom I am indebted for the extract from the Blazon of Episcopacy, who made the note of correction, although by a printer's error the text of "N. & Q." was made to represent the case in that light. Not having the book before me I was, of course, not aware of what preceded the extract, and simply made a "note" correcting the error in the date.

H. W. T.

MEAT AND MALT (3rd S. vii. 73.)—Many years ago we were advised to suspend a raw beef steak in a tub of home-made elder wine. I think we did so, but after the lapse of forty-five years I am more certain of the excellence of the wine than of the contribution of the beef. If it improved wine it is worth trying in ale.

F. C. B.

ROMAN TESSERÆ (3rd S. vii. 281.)—If MR. HUTCHINSON had washed off the inflorescence every morning with pure water, he would not now have to lament over his incrustated pavement. The evil of which he complains is well known to all who have had anything to do with flooring tiles. The remedy for it is a very simple one, and like that for many ailments of the body; daily washing with pure water will effectually remove the malady.

A TILER.

COPY OF ST. MATTHEW WRITTEN BY BARNABAS (3rd S. vii. 278.)—The legend that the original MS. of St. Matthew's gospel was discovered in the tomb of St. Barnabas, the apostle, was very widely spread and firmly believed in during the middle ages. The story is in a high degree improbable. A modern critic would naturally ask how the relics of St. Barnabas were identified four centuries after his death? How the manuscript was proved to be of the age attributed to it? And how, granting the authenticity of the relics and the age of the book, it was proved to be in the handwriting of the evangelist? To none of these questions do the writers who mention this discovery furnish any rational answers. See Martyrolog. Rom. 2 Sep.; Surius de probatis Sanctorum Historiis, 11 Junii; Capgrave, Chron. p. 87; Elogium Historiarum, pp. 201, 344; Beyerslinck, Mag. Theat. Vitæ Humane, t. i. 953, C.; t. ii. 1000, E.; t. iii. 398, H.; t. vi. 937, C.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

Bottesford Manor, Brigg.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

The Court of Final Appeal; or the Appellate Jurisdiction of the Crown in Ecclesiastical Cases. By the Rev. M. J. Fuller, M.A. (Parkers: Oxford and London.)

The author's attention was first directed toward his subject by the Gorham Case about fifteen years ago, since which time he has been accumulating materials on the subject. His little volume contains, among other matters, a History of the Court from the earliest times to the present, an Analysis of the Debate on Bp. Blomfield's Bill in 1850, and the Opinions of the Judges upon the Authority of Convocation in 1711; and the result at which he arrives is, that "the present Appeal Court is opposed to all scriptural, apostolic, and primitive precedents, and most unsatisfactory in every respect." The work is carefully executed, and will be a convenient manual for those who desire to see a synopsis of a large subject in a little space.

The Secrets of Angling. By A. S. Moffat, Author of "Reminiscences of Otter Hunting." (A. & C. Black.)

Of a surety, the mind of an angler is a psychological study. Professing to imitate the great master of their art, and make it a rule of life to be "quiet and go angling," he no sooner takes rod in hand than he becomes a very enthusiast. Mr. Moffat is no exception to this rule: his preface is an outburst in praise of the delights of a country life, with its piscatorial pleasures, as contrasted with that of life in cities, "the squalid haunts of vice, pestilence, and immorality." But when he comes to treat on "the gentle art," Mr. Moffat is a quiet, sober, practical teacher. He seems to have practised successfully fishing in all its branches. His instructions are clear and intelligible; and as he not only tells how to fish, but where to fish, and how to cook salmon and trout, his Secrets of Angling is a book which every Waltonian will be pleased to add to his library.

Shakespeare's Editors and Commentators. By the Rev. W. R. Arrowsmith. (J. R. Smith.)

Such of our readers as remember Mr. Arrowsmith's occasional Shakespearian papers in "N. & Q.," will not require to be told how thoroughly that gentleman has studied the writings of the great dramatist. They will remember too that his criticisms did not err on the side of mercy, and will readily anticipate the slashing style in which he here "exhibits the degeneracy of the existing breed of expositors."

Shakspeariana from 1564 to 1864. An Account of the Shakspearian Literature of England, Germany, and France during three Centuries, with Bibliographical Introductions. By Franz Thimm. (Thimm.)

This useful little manual of Shakspeariana will give English readers a good insight into the progress which France and Germany have made in the study of Shakspeare.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

WHITE'S (HENRY GOSTLING) SERMONS. 2 Vols. 8vo(?), 1817.

Wanted by X. Y. Z. care of the Librarian, City of London College, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

CATALOGUE OF THE EXHIBITION OF WORKS OF ART, &c. ON LOAN at the South Kensington Museum, June, 1862. 8vo. Part IV. and following parts, if any, of a complete copy.

MASON'S SURVEY OF IRELAND. Vol. III. (Preferred in boards.)

Wanted by Mr. Andrew Jervise, Brechin, N. B.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE CHURCH CONGREGATION AT OXFORD IN 1852. PAPERS ISSUED BY THE CAMBRIDGE CHURCH DEFENCE ASSOCIATION. (A 8ct.)

Wanted by Rev. Aiken Irvine, Kilbride, Bray.

Notices to Correspondents.

Answers to Correspondents in our next.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 4d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 22, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

CURE OF ASTHMATIC COUGH AT THE AGE OF EIGHTY-FIVE, BY DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—"Wm. Taylor, The Caps, Southwick, aged eighty-five, says he for many years suffered from a husky, asthmatic cough. To get rest at night was almost out of the question, although he tried many things; but for the last four years, since he commenced taking the Wafers, he can insure a good night's rest, &c.—Witness, R. BROWN, Chemist 53, Spring Hill, Birmingham." Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. per box, of all Druggists.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 174.

NOTES:—"The Lady of the Haystack," 333—Universal Catalogue of English Books, 334—"Lang-nebb'd Things," 335—English Actors in France, temp. Henry IV., 335—Le dernier Volume des Œuvres de Voltaire—Kar, Ker, Cor—Naval Victory of June 1865—Bardolph's Countenance—Theodolite—Three Parallel Proverbs—Parallel Passages in Shakespeare and Daniel, 335.

QUERIES:—Archdeacon, an Irish Artist—Berkeley Arms—Cusha: Caisheag—Dallas, &c.—"A Description of Love," &c.—Sir Francis Drake—"Du Pleasis's Memoirs," &c.—"Fine Roman Hand"—Fleur-de-Lys—Foxes or Sheaves?—"From Oxford to Rome"—Heraldic Query—Heraldry accessory to Eminence—The Immortality of the Brute Creation—Novella—Rev. George Rye's Sermon—Short Sermons—Toad in Stone—"Ulrich Molitor de Constantia"—Death of Wace, 337.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Valentine Browne—Bishop Hall's "Balm of Gilead," and "The Art of Patience"—The Society of Ancient Scots—Charles Theyer's MSS.—Mr. George Rogers and Mr. William Chivers, 340.

REPLIES:—General Richard Fortescue, 341—The "Simple Cobbler's" References, 343—Daniel Defoe the News-Writer, 343—The Igle Sâule, 344—Cold Harbour, Origin of the Name, 345—Gaelic Grammar, 345—Goodrich Family—Unacknowledged Republication—Old Saying about a Person wasting his Substance—The Dodralis Potio—Weston—Remarkable as to Bishops' Widows—Precedence of Bishops' Wives—The Continuance of Valentines—Duke of Marlborough: Malplaquet—Prince Francis Rhodocanakis—Quotations wanted—Judas overturning the Salt-cellar—Snail-eating—Spinning-Jenny—Viscount Chaworth—Uricontum, or Wroxeter—Toned Paper r. White Paper—Countess of Suffolk—Marriage Rings—General Hugh Mercer—Power of Franking, 346.

Notes.

"THE LADY OF THE HAYSTACK."

"Louisa: a Narrative of Facts, supposed to throw light on the Mysterious History of 'The Lady of the Haystack.' Translated from a French Work, published in the Imperial Dominions, A.D. 1785, by the Rev. G. H. Glaspe, A.M., Rector of Hanwell, Middlesex. The Second Edition. London, 1801. Fcap. 8vo, pp. [xxxii.] 111. Printed by P. Norbury, New Brentford."

In the year 1776, a poor unfortunate female was found beneath a haystack at Bourton, near Bristol. She appears to have wandered about the neighbourhood during the day, subsisting on the charity of the country people, and returning regularly to the same shelter at night. After about four years of this life, during which time no word of her former history could be extracted from her, as evident symptoms of insanity appeared, she was taken to the lunatic ward of St. Peter's Hospital, at Bristol; whence she once escaped, and returned to her former shelter—a distance of six miles. Moved by the helpless state of this unfortunate, the benevolent Hannah More removed her to Bitton, in the county of Gloucester, and provided a person to attend her.

The little volume quoted has the above story, under the title of a "Tale of Real Woe," written by Mrs. Hannah More, by way of introduction. It was first published in the St. James's Chronicle in 1785. The translation is from an anonymous work, L'Inconnue, Histoire Véroitable; being some particulars of the life of an adventuress, La Freülen, who, under pretence of being a daughter of Francis I. of Austria, victimised many persons in Bourdeaux, Hamburg, and Stockholm, about the year 1708. In 1769, in consequence of a letter, apparently written by Joseph II., then on his travels in Italy, to the King of Spain, and by him forwarded to the Empress of Austria, La Freülen was, on the requisition of the Austrian Court, arrested and sent under a strong guard to Brussels, where she was to be examined by M. de Cobenzel and the first President M. de Nancy. She was conducted to Fort Montereau under the guard of Major Camerlang, who, as she could neither read nor write, taught her to sign her name. The examination, after twenty-four sittings, being entirely finished—

"Messrs. De Cobenzel and De Nancy being desired to give their opinion, the Court agreed that the most prudent measure would be to place the poor girl in some distant convent, and there to keep her, till time should throw some light on this mysterious affair."

The elder De Nancy, Secretary to the Empress, thus wrote:—

"Though it appears to me that the prisoner is not the daughter of the Emperor, there are, however, circumstances in her story which throw a mysterious perplexity over her birth."

The day before the death of M. de Cobenzel, which occurred shortly afterwards (speaking of a letter he had received from M. de Kaunitz), he said: "I have just received despatches from Vienna, charging me to acquaint the Court with the prisoner's whole history, by no means to dismiss her, and to take no step without further order."

"Four days after his death, the stranger was taken out of prison—a sub-lieutenant of the Maréchaussée of Brabant conducted her to Quivraing, a small town between Mons and Valenciennes—fifty louis-d'ors were put into her hands—and she was abandoned to her wretched destiny."

If La Freülen (or Mademoiselle de Schonau, as she is sometimes styled) is to be believed, she was visited at Bourdeaux by the Duke of York, who presented her with 700 louis-d'ors, and promised to furnish her with money sufficient to pay her debts. The Duke does appear to have written to her from Monaco an unfinished letter, referring to the Princess d'Aversberg; and after his death, which shortly followed, La Freülen sent to the persons appointed to examine his papers, by whom her own portrait and another picture were returned to her.

In the appendix (p. 77) a letter by the translator of the narrative, which was published in the Gent. Mag. (1785, vol. lv. p. 791), points to many circumstances tending to prove the identity of La Freülen and Louisa. Five letters by Hannah

More (unsigned), with various particulars follow. One passage tells the sequel:—

"Finding the recovery of her limbs as hopeless as that of her understanding, and fearing that she might eventually be left in a situation wholly unprotected, I obtained for her an asylum in the Hospital; allowing a certain sum annually to clothe her, and to furnish her with such comforts as she had been accustomed to enjoy. I visited her more than once in this her last retreat, till she had so far lost all sensibility or knowledge of me as to make it no longer necessary."

Every effort appears to have been made to trace the history of this poor woman without success, and she died at Guy's Hospital Lunatic House on the 19th December, 1800. A certificate to that effect, dated Feb. 18, 1801, signed by Thomas Callaway, Steward, Alfred Wm. Roberts, Chaplain, is printed at p. xxxi. The date of her removal from Bitton to Guy's Hospital is not recorded.

It is possible that the sympathy excited by this mysterious lunatic may have had some share in originating the marvellous imposition of the Princess Caraboo ("N. & Q.," 3rd S. vii. 196).

The little volume is a literary curiosity.

HUGH OWEN.

Westminster Club.

UNIVERSAL CATALOGUE OF ENGLISH BOOKS.

No one, I think, would deny that a complete Catalogue of all books, printed in the English language since the invention of printing, would be a work of the highest utility and interest. At the same time too many, I fear, are disposed to think with Mr. Bohn (Preface to his edition of Lowndes, vol. i. part II.), that "such a consummation is rather to be sighed for than expected," and with this feeling make no effort to remedy the deficiency. My object in writing this letter is to draw attention to the subject, with the hope that the discussion of it in the pages of "N. & Q." may educe some practical suggestions on the matter.

I would now add a few remarks on one or two points:—

1. As to contents. The catalogue I propose would comprise all books ever printed in English, specifying the various editions, with their date, size, and place of publication; and, in the case of very rare books, noting in what libraries they exist. It might also, unless it were found to swell the size of the work to too great an extent, contain brief bibliographical notes on the more important books; or, at all events, references to notices, reviews, &c., in other works.

2. As to arrangement. All who have considered the point will I believe agree with me, that the catalogue should be arranged in alphabetical order according to the names of authors, or the titles of the books. A classified catalogue might possibly be afterwards prepared; but the first thing to be done is, to form a simple alphabetical register of every book.

3. As to the means by which the work might be effected. It has occurred to me that a Society, somewhat similar in its constitution to the Philological Society, might undertake the compilation of the catalogue; the work being divided amongst a certain number of its members, and the necessary expenses before publication being defrayed by an annual subscription.

Some may perhaps doubt whether a catalogue, such as that I now propose, would obtain a sale sufficient to repay the expenses of its publication; but I believe that, if the work is well executed, it may safely be assumed that the volumes would be purchased by all the larger public and collegiate libraries in the United Kingdom, by many American and continental ones, besides by a certain number of private individuals.

I am aware that on almost every point it is easy to suggest difficulties and objections. One stock objection to such a work as that I propose, is, that it must soon get out of date; but this is almost equally an objection to all bibliographical catalogues. They can only, any of them, be complete up to the date of their publication. Other catalogues, or supplementary volumes, must be consulted for books published at a subsequent date; but this surely should not be a bar to so desirable a work as a complete Catalogue of the whole of English Literature.

G. W. J.

"LANG-NEBBED THINGS."

The prayer for protection against "witches and warlocks, and lang-nebbed things," is familiar amongst the peasantry of Scotland, by whom it has also been implanted in the folk-lore of Ulster. Sir Walter Scott introduces it in the second chapter of the Black Dwarf:—

"Well, Hobbie," said the Laird, "for one who believes so deeply as you do in supernatural appearances, I must own you take heaven in your own hand rather audaciously, considering where we are walking."—"What need I care for the Mucklestane Moor, ony mair than ye do yourself, Earnscliff," said Hobbie, somewhat offended; "to be sure, they do say there is a sort of warriours and lang-nebbit things about the land, but what care I for them!"

This superstition has obviously some reference to birds; and so far as regards Scotland and Ireland, one circumstance is curious, that the word whaap, which is the popular name of the Curlew (Numenius arquata of Linn.), a bird notorious for the length of its bill—is also the term used to signify a "hobgoblin"; which, as Jamieson says in his Scottish Dictionary, is believed to have a long beak, and to haunt the eaves of houses after nightfall.

Thompson, in his Natural History of Ireland, vol. ii. p. 194, says the word whaap is a near approach in sound to the alarm-cry of the curlew when disturbed; and if this has anything to do with the popular belief, the instance is not without a parallel, inasmuch as the night-scream of the owl has given rise to a similar superstition, which has had an unusually extended prevalence. Ovid and Tibullus commemorate it, and Statius alludes to the same circumstance:—

"Nocturnæque gemunt striges; et feralia bubo Damna canens," &c. (Thebaid. lib. iii. l. 511.)

In India, the unearthly yell of one variety of the owl—the Sirium indramæ of Sykes—has obtained for it the mysterious dread of the people, and associated its voice with unutterable horrors.

But in the case of the owl, the length of the beak has nothing to do with the dread inspired by its cry; and the epithet "lang-nebbed" certainly cannot apply to it. Why, then, in the instance of the curlew has the accident of the prolonged bill inspired a kindred dread, there being nothing in the tone of its voice to give rise to terror? Jamieson, in allusion to the feeling in Scotland, speaks only of the bill, and makes no mention of any cry in connexion with the goblin whaap.

Nor is there wanting at least secondary evidence to imply that in Italy and elsewhere in Europe, there is some association of the long beak with the imagery of witchcraft, vampyrism and diablerie. Salvator Rosa, in his well-known picture of the "Persecution of St. Anthony," invests his principal tormentor, a creature something between a reptile and a human skeleton, which bestrides the saint as he lies prostrate, with an enormously prolonged beak, whose dimensions approach those of a crane rather than a curlew. And Mr. Wright, in his charming History of Caricature and Grotesque, has given numerous examples from the sixteenth to the eighteenth century, in which the artists have always combined a prolonged beak with the other attributes of demons and incubi. Breughel in Flanders, and Callot in Lorraine, were each prolific in these "long-nebbed" monsters—thus demonstrating the prevalence of the superstition extensively in Europe. Callot, as an artist, belongs to Italy rather than to France. Is there any theory or conjecture to elucidate this legendary belief, or to account for the connexion of the long bill of the grallatorial birds with this midnight superstition?

• J. EMERSON TENNENT.

ENGLISH ACTORS IN FRANCE, temp. HENRY IV.

In the Intermédiaire, a valuable French imitation of "N. & Q." there is a notice in the number for June 1, 1864, of some English actors who performed before the king and the court at Fontainebleau. The whole notice had best be quoted in the writer's own words:—

"Dans le Journal Manuscrit du Médecin Héroard, qui se trouvait autrefois dans le Cabinet de M. de Genas (N° 21,448 de la Bibl. Hist. du P. Lelong) il est dit que le samedi 18 Septembre, 1604, le Roi et la cour étant à Fontainebleau, le Dauphin (Louis XIII, qui entra alors dans sa quatrième année) est mené dans la grande salle neuve, ouïr une tragédie représentée par des Anglais. Il les écoute avec froideur, gravité et patience 'jusques à ce qu'il fallut couper la tête à un des personnages.' Le mardi 28, le Dauphin se fait habiller en masque et imite 'les Comédiens Anglois qui étoient à la Cour et qu'il avoit vus jouer.' Enfin, le Dimanche 3 Octobre de la même année, l'enfant se fait encore habiller en comédien, et, marchant à grands pas, imite les Comédiens Anglais, en disant, Tiph! toph! milord! Voilà donc, à l'époque de Shakespeare, des Comédiens Anglais jouant à Paris en 1598, et à la Cour de Fontainebleau, devant Henri IV en 1604. Serait-il possible de connaître le personnel de ces troupes et les pièces de leur répertoire?"

The passage relating to the actors of 1598 is as follows:—

"Dans l'inventaire des titres et papiers de l'Hôtel de Bourgogne se trouvent mentionnés: 1° un bail de la grande salle et théâtre du dit Hôtel, passé le 25 mai 1598, devant Huart et Claude Nourel, Notaires à Paris, par Jehan Sehais, Comédien Anglais; 2° une Sentence du Châtelet, rendue le 4 juin 1598, à l'encontre desdits Comédiens Anglais, tant pour raison du susdit bail que pour le droit d'un écu par jour, jouant par lesdits Anglais ailleurs qu'au dit Hôtel."

In answer to the query respecting the names of the actors, and the pieces performed, a reply was inserted in the No. for Février 25, with the signature "Henry Ch. Coote" (Londres) chiefly to the following effect. Mr. Coote is inclined to think that the English words, incorrectly quoted by the Dauphin, are from Shakespeare, and are as follows: "Tap for tap, my Lord," which words occur in Henry IV. Act II. Sc. 2, and are part of an apostrophe addressed by Sir John Falstaff to the Lord Chief Justice of England in the following language:—

"This is the right fencing grace, my lord, tap for tap, and so part fair."

Mr. Coote leaves it to his readers to judge as to the correctness of his conjecture respecting one of the plays acted before the court of the gallant monarch. If they think he is in the right, then he says the fact is proved, that English actors—of whose names he is ignorant—performed some of Shakespeare's plays in France in 1604, and perhaps earlier; for if they acted one play, Mr. Coote is of opinion that more than one were performed; but this at present seems to be matter of conjecture.

J. MACRAY.

Oxford.

LE DERNIER VOLUME DES ŒUVRES DE VOLTAIRE.—Un livre est tombé sous ma main, il est intitulé Le dernier Volume des Œuvres de Voltaire (Paris, 1862, Henri Plon, éditeur). Je tiens à redresser cette erreur; le dernier volume de Voltaire reste à publier; ce sera, je crois, bien le dernier et le plus intéressant des deux.

Le Sottisier, suivant le titre écrit par Voltaire lui-même, est tout entier de sa main, qui a rempli les 133 feuillets dont il se compose.

Vers et prose citations, réflexions, notes, bons-mots, toute espèce de fragments recueillis à droite et à gauche, tout s'y trouve rassemblé de la manière la plus bizarre, sans suite aucune et sans choix; espèce de poche où cet esprit prodigieux jetait pêle mêle tout ce que la fantaisie du moment, le caprice, le besoin d'annoter et de se rappeler, lui faisait trouver à mesure que sa fiévreuse activité s'exerçait autour de lui.

Il y a enregistré jusqu'aux injures lancées contre lui (celles de Dom Calmet par exemple).

A côté de "Apulée rapporte," etc., il y a "Louis XIV se levait à 8 heures et quart." De petites rubriques — "Bons Mots," "Absurdités," "Jugements Salomoniques" (d'après lui, Voltaire), "Contradictions," etc.—sont entrelacés de "Confucius et ses sentences," "Les Anglais c'est une grande baleine: et latum sub pectore possidet æquor," "Réflexions sur la Liberté" (pour la nier), "Notes sur Descartes," "Le Roi de Prusse a écrit," etc., "Mémoires de Sully," "Anecdotes de Berlin," "Anecdotes sur la Comédie," "Chiffres statistiques," etc.

Ce repertoire, formé des éléments les plus disparates, est comme une espèce de mosaïque littéraire semée de pointes quelquefois plus que lestes, toujours aiguës, que l'on est étonné de trouver au milieu des pensées les plus sérieuses.

Après tout c'est un certain miroir offrant ou réfléchissant les mille facettes de cet esprit universel.

Ce volume unique dans son genre a été peut-être pendant un demi-siècle sous la main de Voltaire, et il se trouve maintenant avec la bibliothèque du grand philosophe à St. Pétersbourg à l'Ermitage impérial de Cathérine II, où je l'ai vu il y a trois ans.

STÉFAN POLKS.

[No one interested in the literary history of Voltaire would desire to see this communication translated into English. We trust, therefore, that our correspondent will excuse our inserting it in his own language.—ED.]

KAR, KER, COR. — In The Dolomite Mountains, by Gilbert and Churchill (p. 84), occurs this remark: "It is singular how frequently the element Kar appears in the nomenclature of this valley" (the Eisach Thal). And after giving some instances, the author asks: "Is Kar a German element; and if so, what becomes of the asserted Celtic or Etruscan origin of Kardaun, the ancient Cardunum?" A note to this refers the Car, in Carinthia, to a Slovenic source; and says that Gora-tan, "mountain land," became in time Carinthia. Also, that the Carni would mean "the mountaineers." But Cor has also a particular meaning, relating to sheep and shepherds, and hence applicable to a mountainous district; and we find tribes, whose names include Cor or Car, stretching from the banks of the Volga across Europe even to our own island. The Coraxi, adjoining the Colchi on the eastern coast of the Euxine, were famed for the production and manufacture of wool. Of this tribe, Mr. Yates, in his Textrina Antiquorum (p. 31), gives some information partly quoted from Klaproth. Of course we do not forget that Corydon was the classical name for a shepherd. Tracing this syllable westward, we find it bearing, in Brittany, rather a different meaning—a point, end, height: and strange to say, the Breton fairies, called Korigans, are dwarfs. Dr. Latham says k—r means, a boundary: hence we can well account for its entering into so many Breton appellations; and our own Cornwall probably received its name from the same source as the Breton Cornouaille. Was this Celtic? I think not; though we find Kar, Cor, side by side with Cen, Hen, Ven,—the former passed north of the Euxine, the latter south of it. I do not suppose either was the earliest race in Western Europe.

F. C. B.

NAVAL VICTORY OF JUNE, 1665. — This newspaper may be read with interest, and confirm the narrative in Pepys's Diary in connexion with the first report of the victory of that date June, 1665:—

"Mr White,

"By Mr Whittingham's desire, in his Lettre from London now before me, I write you the news (viz.), That y^e Duke of Yorke is expected in London to-morrow wth Joy and triumph, for it's credibly reported y^e all the Dutch Admiralls (except Evertsz.) [Evertsen?] are suncke and burnt, and 17 shippes taken, 34 escaped at most, and y^e rest [perished?]. Wee lost y^e Lord Fitzharding, Lord Portland, Lord Musgrove [Muskerry?], and Mr Boyle, 2^d sonne to y^e Earle of Corke, soe neare his Highnesse that theire Blood flew on his Robes. And y^e Earle of Marlborough was slayne in ye old James. The Duke of Munmouth, Earle of Sandwich, Sir John Pawson, and 1150 Soldiers wounded; we lost 500 Soldiers, and noe more. And there were 20 of y^e old Captains did intend to revolt. The Duke of Yorke, when he drew his sword in engaging, threw his scabbard in y^e Sea. Brave Holmes suncke vappri'g Trumpe. Wee lost one shipp cald y^e Charity, and noe more. Vera copia. from, Sr,

"Y^r assured friend to "serve you,

"10 Junii, '65.

WM. HEWER."

Mr. Hewer was an apprentice to White's brother, a London cloth dealer. Certainly not the Wm. Hewer of that date, officially connected with Pepys.

E. W.

BARDOLPH'S COUNTENANCE.—I have lately come across an amusing literary blunder in the Life of Alexander Wilson, the ornithologist, by his American biographer Mr. Jared Sparks. He says (Library of American Biography, ii. 122):—

"While at New York, Wilson had the curiosity to call on Paine, the author of the Rights of Man. . . . Wilson seems to have been struck with the brilliance of his countenance—which answered to his imagination of Bardolph—even more than with the glow of his conversation. Paine examined his book with great attention," &c.

This I find, on reference, is simply a paraphrase of a passage in one of Wilson's letters as follows:—

"While in New York, I had the curiosity to call on the celebrated author of the Rights of Man. . . Paine's face would have excellently suited the character of Bardolph; but the penetration and intelligence of his eye bespeak the man of genius and the world. . . He examined my book, leaf by leaf, with great attention," &c.

It is evident that Mr. Sparks is not a Shakspearian reader; and that he has made his first acquaintance with Bardolph, and his immortal face, in this passage, which he so innocently construes into a compliment to the countenance of the author of The Rights of Man.

W. MOY THOMAS.

THEODOLYTE. — Has not an accident discovered the true derivation of this word? I have before me a copy of Exegeses Physico-Mathematicæ, de momentis gravium, de vecte, &c., dedicated to D. Carolus Theodolus, Marchionem S. Viti. Romæ, 1685.

He is described as belonging to a family renowned for their interest in mathematical studies. Is it not very probable that the instrument was named after him or one of his ancestors? I have less doubt in offering this suggestion, as all others hitherto given seem so manifestly impossible.

J. C. J.

THREE PARALLEL PROVERBS. — The Paris Correspondent of The Times, April 15, quotes an old French proverb of caution against too early adopting a summer dress:—

"Au mois d' Auriil, Ne quitte pas fil."

I have learned from an Italian gentleman, that there is a similar though amplified proverb in the Piedmontese dialect:—

"Avril, pé un fil,
Maggio, addagio,
Giung, sarga l'pagn."

That is to say: In April don't put off a thread; in May gently begin; in June slack your fist, or change freely.

There is also a Scotch proverb (I know not if it is used in England to the same effect), but I think it the best of all, being both comprehensive and laconic:—

"Ne'er cast a clout,
Till May be out."

K.

PARALLEL PASSAGES IN SHAKESPEARE AND DANIEL. — Vegetating at the Antipodes, I know not whether the following parallelism has been noticed. There appears to me to be more than a mere coincidence of thought and expression:—

"Nay, mother,
you were used
To say extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear;
That when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Showed mastership in floating. Fortune's blows
When most struck home [. . .] being gentle wounded craves
A [No] noble cunning."

Coriolanus, Act IV. Sc. 1.

"It is not but the tempest that doth show
The seaman's cunning;—but the field that tries
The captain's courage;—and we come to know
Best what men are in their worst jeopardies."

Daniel to H. F. Wriothesley, E. of Southampton.

It may be worth adding, that the unexpressed continuance of the negative in this last passage illustrates a similar form in Cymbeline; but the naturalness so to speak, and propriety of the omission, is with Shakspeare. "Mine eyes," says the King, meditating on what he has heard:—

"Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for she was beautiful;—
Mine ears that heard her flattery; nor my heart
That thought her like her seeming."

So where, according to the editions to which I have access, Marina says:—

"I never did her hurt in all my life;
I never spake bad word nor did ill turn
To any living creature: believe me, la,
I never killed a mouse nor hurt a fly;—
I trod upon a worm against my will,
But I wept for it."—Pericles, Act IV. Sc. 1.

"I trod" should be "Aye trod."

B. NICHOLSON.

Queries.

ARCHDEACON, AN IRISH ARTIST. — Can you or any of your Irish correspondents, furnish me with a few particulars of this artist, who, if I mistake not, resided for some years in or near Dublin? When did he die, and what is known of his drawings? I have two very neatly done; one of old Monkstown church, co. Dublin (taken about the year 1795), and one of Delgany church, co. Wicklow.

ABHBA.

BERKELEY ARMS. — Can any correspondent of "N. & Q." oblige me with instances in which the Berkeley arms appear as gu. a chev. arg., without the crosses patées (as at present borne) or any other charge? I am aware of the instance supplied by the Roll of Henry III. Over the door which leads from the south aisle into the vestibule of the Berkeley Chapel (now the minor canons' vestry), in Bristol cathedral, are four shields, two charged with the chevron and crosses patées, two charged with a chevron only. And in one of the windows on the south side of the chancel is the figure of a knight bearing a shield, gu. a chev. or. Mr. T. W. King, York Herald, once suggested to me, that this shield was originally gu. a chev. arg., but that the tincture had been changed at its restoration.

J. WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

CUSHA: CUISHEAG.—In the Transactions of the Kilkenny Archaeological Society, vol. i. 376, first series, I find it stated that the Hindús of the present day regard the cusha grass as sacred, and use it in their lustrations; and that an Irish native grass called cuisheag was once used for similar purposes. What are the botanical names of the plants referred to.

AIKEN IRVINE.

Kilbride, Bray.

DALLAS, ETC.—In the Decrees of a Provincial Synod, held at Ardpatrick, near Louth, in 1678, I find the following entry:—

"7. Decernimus, ut nullus Sacerdos adoptet, aut acceptet alumnos, vulgo Dallas, directe vel indirecte, per se vel per alium, et qui hoc decretum transgressus fuerit, careat beneficio et officio ad arbitrium ordinarii."

In a letter of Dr. O. Plunket to the Internunzio at Brussels, which followed the transmission of the Decrees of this Synod, the word Dallas is thus explained:—

"Some wicked priests becoming nutritors [fosterers], took to their care the children of Protestants, that thus they themselves might be defended against their ecclesiastical superiors; these children were called Dallas."—Moran's Life of Plunket, p. 136.

Where can I get any further information respecting these pupils. What is the origin of the word?

Before closing this query, may I express my thanks to EIRIONNACH for calling attention to a former query of mine as to the words Arrha, Vrrhusc, and Esane, which still remain a puzzle to me; as none of the solutions, either forwarded me directly or through "N. & Q.," are satisfactory. (See 3rd S. vi. 205, 275, 482.)

AIKEN IRVINE.

Kilbride, Bray.

"A DESCRIPTION OF LOVE," ETC.—Can any of your correspondents favour me with the dates of the first, third, fourth, and seventh editions of this once popular and interesting little volume? The second edition was printed in 1620. A very fine copy of the sixth, unnoticed by Lowndes, is in my possession: "Printed by M[iles] F[lesher] for Francis Coules, at the vpper end of the Old Bailey, neere Newgate, 1619," 8vo, thirty leaves, unnumbered, not including title. It came into my hands accidentally, bound up with two works of no value. The ninth edition, presumed to be the latest, appeared in 1638, and sold at Heber's sale for 3*l*. 1*s*.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

[* May not Dallas be a misprint for Daltas? According to O'Reilly (Irish-English Dictionary) a "Dalta is a foster child, a pet, a disciple, a ward."—ED.]

SIR FRANCIS DRAKE.—A year or two ago, either in a modern book of biographies or in a recent review, I saw a statement that Admiral Sir Francis Drake, though at the time of the Armada a resident in the west country, was of a Yorkshire family, who had migrated thence to take part in the cloth manufactures, of which the western counties had then a monopoly.

Can any reader of "N. & Q." refer me to this biography or review.

T. S. B. E.

"DU PLESSIS'S MEMOIRS," ETC.—Who was the author of two small volumes, entitled Du Plessis's Memoirs; or, Variety of Adventures, &c., Dublin, 1757? The preface begins with these words:—

"The following Memoirs were originally wrote at the Request, and for the private amusement of a Gentleman of the Kingdom of Ireland, an intimate Friend of the Author's, but never intended for Publication."

ABHBA.

"FINE ROMAN HAND."—What is the origin and precise meaning of this phrase? It is thus used in a review of certain causes célèbres in The Saturday Review, vol. xviii. p. 765:—

"But whether the idea of the . . . episode was a real inspiration of —'s, or an ex post facto thought due to the fine Roman hand of —, can never be clearly decided till — determines on explaining to the public what as yet he has chosen to leave unexplained."

Y. X.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.—The old arms of France were, Azure sémé de lys, and were changed by Charles VI. (what year?) to azure, three fleur-de-lys, or, two and one.

Edward III. first quartered the French arms with the English, giving the precedence to the former.

I want to know if the first and fourth quarter of the English shield was changed at the same time, and if not, when?

JOHN DAVIDSON.

FOXES OR SHEAVES?—Who first suggested the substitution of sheaves for foxes in Judges xv. 4? Mr. Dawson, in his Illustrations of some remarkable Events recorded in the Old Testament, p. 210, London, 1861, 8vo, refers to a scarce treatise, intitled, Dissertation sur l'Anesse de Balaam, les Renards de Samson, &c., and states that "if we admit that instead of shealim we ought to read shealim—שְׂעָלִים, instead of שְׂעָלִים, the י in the latter word having been inserted through the inadvertency of the transcriber—the narrative becomes perfectly natural and credible."

He evidently considers that the omission of the י converts the Hebrew equivalent for foxes into that for sheaves (p. 209). Our translators have not made that distinction. If there be an error of the kind supposed in the original text, it would, I presume, be in the insertion of שְׂעָלִים or שְׂעָלִים for some form of the root DN. Has any such form been proposed, and if so on what authority?

JOSEPH RIX, M.D.

St. Neot's.

"FROM OXFORD TO ROME."—Can any of your correspondents inform me who is the author of a work, whose third edition appeared in '47, entitled From Oxford to Rome?* Also who were the originals of the characters, particularly (1) Eustace A.; (2) His Friend, the distinguished Fellow; (3) Dr. L. and Mr. Mac N.; (4) Mr. F.?

F. W.

HERALDIC QUERY.—On some of the thalers of Rudolph II. of Germany, the third quarter of the shield contains three leopards' heads caboshed, two and one. Are these the arms of Dalmatia? The coin bears the date 1578, and the legend says "Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, Margrave of Moravia." Dalmatia, quartered with Croatia, Rascieu, and Albania, makes the fourth inescutcheon in the arms of Venice.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

HERALDRY ACCESSORY TO EMINENCE.—In Taylor's Modern British Plutarch, the following extraordinary incident is related of John Scott, afterwards Lord Eldon:—

"While a barrister on the Northern Circuit, I was counsel in a cause, the fate of which depended on our being able to make out who was the founder of an ancient chapel in the neighbourhood. I went to view it. There was nothing to be observed which gave any indication of its date or history; however, I observed that the Ten Commandments were written on some old plaster, which, from its position, I conjectured might cover an arch. Acting on this, I bribed the clerk with five shillings to allow me to chip away a part of the plaster, and after two or three attempts I found the keystone of an arch, on which were engraved the arms of an ancestor of one of the parties in the law case. This evidence decided the cause, and I ever afterwards had reason to remember with some satisfaction my having on that occasion broken the Ten Commandments."

It would be interesting to know the chapel in question and the family concerned.

GEORGE VICKERS.

Shimpling, Bury St. Edmunds.

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE BRUTE CREATION.—To what extent has this opinion been held amongst naturalists and really scientific men? A few not very distinguished divines of the last century asserted that animals had souls, and were immortal.

JOSEPHUS.

NOSELLS.—In looking over some churchwardens' accounts for the eighteenth century, I made note of the following entries:—

"1786. To mending nosells for Hirst, 6d.

"1788. To 2 nosells for Hearst, 6d."

[* By Miss Harris of Windsor. In the Gent. Mag. for August, 1852, p. 218, it is stated that she died on June 24, 1852.—Ed.]

Can any one inform me what part of a hearse is meant by the term nosells or nosles?

H. FISHWICK.

REV. GEORGE RYE'S SERMON.—

"The snake, unless soothed by soft words, shall deceive the leathern eagle.

"The sea god's dog shall tear the lion, who, burnt alive with unkindled fire, shall revive, losing nothing but his mane.

"If there be rain enough, and not too many weeds; not so much frost or hail as to hurt the young ears; and the birds of the air and the beasts of the field do thee no hurt, thou wilt have nothing to fear but the locusts."—A Sermon preached at St. Martin's Church, Oxford, by George Rye, B.D., Fellow of Oriel College, on the 8th day of January, 1713.

The sermon is on prophecy. The first two are given as examples of what heathen priests did to puzzle the learned; the third to show how they imposed upon the simple.

Can any reader of "N. & Q." tell me whence they are taken. The third looks as if invented for the occasion, as even a farmer of the last century would hardly have been imposed upon by it, unless put into ornate language.

E. F.

SHORT SERMONS.—Can you decide a question as to the paternity of this anecdote:—

"Mr. Canning was once asked by an English clergyman how he liked the sermon he had preached before him. 'Why, it was a short sermon,' quoth Canning. 'Oh, yes,' said the preacher; 'you know I avoid being tedious.' 'Ah! but,' replied Canning, 'you were tedious.'"

It has been attributed to Mr. Hookham Frere, the friend of Mr. Canning; but claimed for Cole-ridge and Rogers.

ALIQUIS.

TOAD IN STONE.—I have cut the enclosed paragraph from the Leeds Mercury of April 8. Statements of this kind are common enough; they seldom, however, are made in such a circumstantial manner. Will not some north-country correspondent of "N. & Q." investigate the matter, and send you the results of his inquiries for publication:—

"AN EXTRAORDINARY TOAD.—During the excavations which are being carried out under the superintendence of Mr. James Yeal, of Dyke House Quay, in connection with the Hartlepool Water Works, the workmen yesterday morning found a toad, embedded in a block of magnesian limestone, at a depth of twenty-five feet from the surface of the earth, and eight feet from any spring-water vein. The block of stone had been cut by a wedge, and was being reduced by workmen, when a pick split open the cavity in which the toad had been incarcerated. The cavity was no larger than its body, and presented the appearance of being a cast of it. The toad's eyes shone with unusual brilliancy, and it was full of vivacity on its liberation. It appeared when first discovered desirous to perform the process of respiration, but evidently experienced some difficulty; and the only sign of success consisted of a 'barking' noise, which it continues invariably to make and present on being touched. The toad is in the possession of Mr. S. Horner, the President of the Natural History Society, and continues in as lively a state as when found. On a minute examination, its mouth is found to be completely closed, and the barking noise it makes proceeds from its nostrils. The claws of its fore feet are turned inwards, and its hind ones are of extraordinary length, and unlike the present English toad. The Rev. R. Taylor, incumbent of St. Hilda's Church, Hartlepool, who is an eminent local geologist, gives it as his opinion that the animal must be at least 6,000 years old. The wonderful toad is to be placed in its primary habitation, and will be added to the collection in the Hartlepool Museum. The toad when first released was of a pale colour, and not readily distinguished from the stone; but shortly after its colour grew darker, until it became a fine olive brown."—Correspondent.

K. P. D. E.

"ULRICH MOLITOR DE CONSTANTIA."—Should any of your readers possess early copies of the De Lamiis et Pythonicis Mulieribus Dialogus, they would confer a great favour on the writer either by affording him an opportunity of examining them, or by forwarding minute descriptions of them to the care of the editor of "N. & Q."

A. C.

DEATH OF WACE.—It is generally believed that Wace, the Anglo-Norman poet, of the twelfth century, born in the Isle of Jersey, died in England in the year 1184. Could any of your numerous readers give me positive information on the fact? It would be rendering a service to history, and to his admirers. The time of his birth is not positively known. Information on that point would be considered a favour.

OMEGA.

Queries with Answers.

VALENTINE BROWNE.—Where can I obtain any information respecting Sir Valentine Browne, of Croft in Lincolnshire, of whom mention is made in Collins's Peerage (1812, vol. vii. p. 232) as having married Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Sir John Monson, who died in 1593?

What relation was this Sir Valentine to Master Valuntyne Browne, who, as we read in Machyn's Diary, p. 280, married a niece of Lord Keeper Bacon's in 1562?

Had this Master Valuntyne Browne ever been married before?

Who was the Valentine Brown, Esq., that is spoken of in Collins (vol. iv. p. 304) as being one of the Commissioners for the Management of the Crown Lands in Ireland in the year 1554?

MELETES.

[Valentine Browne, Esq., noticed in Collins (iv. 394) as one of Queen Mary's commissioners in Ireland died on Feb. 8, 1567. He was the father of "Master Valuntyne Browne" alluded to in Machyn's Diary, p. 280, who was a privy counsellor to Queen Elizabeth. The latter married first Alice, daughter of Robert Alexander of London; and secondly, Thomasine, daughter of — Bacon of Northall, co. Middlesex (Harl. MS. 1550, 131b.) By his first wife he had Valentine Browne, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Monson of Carlton, co. Lincoln. (Cf. Harl. MS. 1550, 131b, and the inscription on his monument in Croft church in Saunders's History of Lincolnshire, ii. 141.) The best account of the Browne family of Croft will be found in Lodge's Peerage by Archdall, edit. 1789, vii. 51-58; but the writer does not appear to have consulted the short pedigree of the family in the Harl. MSS.

The following Order of Council, describing the costume of a page to Sir Valentine Browne, the privy counsellor to Queen Elizabeth, may probably amuse many of our readers. It is said to have been copied from a manuscript in the library of Thomas Astle, Esq. :—

"THESE are to praye and requier you to make p'sent serch within your ward & charges p'sently to make hew & cry for a yong stripling of the age of xxii yerres, the color of his aparell as foloweth: One doblet of yelow million fustion th'one half therof buttoned with peche color buttons, & th'other halfe laced downwards one payer of peche color hose laced with smale tawnye lace a graye hat with a copper edge rounde aboute it with a bande peell of the same hatt a payer of watched [blue] stockings. Likewise he hath twoe clokes th'one of vessey collar garded with twoe gards of black clothe & twisted lace of carnation colour & lyned with crymson bayes & th'other is a red shipp russet colour striped about the cape & downe the fore face twisted with twoe rows of twisted lace russet & gold buttons afore and uppon the sholdier being of the clothe itselfe set with the said twisted lace & the buttons of russet silke & gold. This youthe's name is Gilbert Edwodd & page to Sir Valentine Browne Knight who is run awaye this fowerthe day of January with theis parcells following, viz. A chaine of wyer worke golde with a button of the same & a smalle ringe of golde at it twoe flagging chaines of golde th'one being marked with theis letters v. & h. uppon the locke, & th'other with a little broken jewell at it, one carkanet of pearle and jasnitts thereto hangeing, a jewell like a marimade of gold enameled the tayle therof being set with diamonds the bellye of the made with a ruby & the shilde a diamond the chaine of golde whereon it hangeth is set with smale diamonds & rubyes & certeyne money in golde and white money.

To all Constable, Bayliffe, & Hedboroughs, & to all other the Quene's Officers whatsoever to whome the same belongeth & apperteyneth.

Valentine Browne."

BISHOP HALL'S "BALM OF GILRAD," AND "THE ART OF PATIENCE."—On comparing a modern copy of Bishop Hall's Balm of Gilead with an old volume in my possession, entitled The Art of Patience, I find that they are substantially one and the same treatise under different titles. The volume appears from its typography to be of King Charles II.'s time; but as the title-page is wanting, the precise date and professed author cannot be ascertained. In one of its sections—that on "Public Calamities"—reference is made to the Great Plague and Fire of London, events which I believe did not occur before the death of Bishop Hall.

Can any of your readers, who are conversant with the old divines, inform me whether the good bishop gave his consolatory treatise to the world as the Balm of Gilead, or as The Art of Patience? G.

[The Art of Patience is a reproduction of Bishop Hall's Balm of Gilead, with additions and alterations. The title-page of the former reads as follows: "The Art of Patience and the Balm of Gilead under all Afflictions: an Appendix to the Art of Contentment, by the Author of the Whole Duty of Man. London, 8vo, 1693; second edition, 1694." In the Preface the editor informs the reader, that "the original part of this Discourse was extracted from a foundation laid by a learned and reverend prelate [Bishop Hall's Balm of Gilead] upon whose basis this superstructure is erected. He, like a wise master-builder, laid the corner-stone, as a pattern for others to imitate; and they which attain to his height of perfection shall enjoy what Christ said to his disciples: 'In their patience they shall possess their own souls.'"]

THE SOCIETY OF ANCIENT SCOTS.—Is the above society still in existence? It was stated to have been established time out of mind, and about the year 1820 published, in half-a-crown parts, several volumes of most excellent biographies of eminent Scotchmen. SCOTUS.

[The Lives of the Scottish Poets, published by T. Boys of Ludgate Hill in 1821-22, and said to be "by the Society of Ancient Scots re-established A.D. 1770," made Six Parts, or three volumes. The Society was probably located in the city of London.]

CHARLES THEYER'S MSS.—What is the present place of deposit of the MSS. which belonged in the latter end of the seventeenth century to Charles Theyer, gent., of the county of Gloucester? They are described in Catalogi Librorum Manuscriptorum Angliæ et Hiberniæ, Oxoniæ, 1697, tom. ii. pt. i. pp. 198-203. A. O. V. P.

[Charles Theyer's manuscripts are now in the King's Library in the British Museum. See David Casley's Catalogue of this Library, 1734, 4to.]

MR. GEORGE ROGERS AND MR. WILLIAM CHIVERS.—Mr. Rogers I believe was a commissioner of the navy, and living in 1798. I shall be glad to know the date of his death. His widow married Mr. Chivers. This gentleman, I am told, having a quarrel with a labourer in his employ, struck him, upon which the man, in a fit of passion, knocked him down with his spade, and killed him, and was in consequence tried for murder and executed. I shall feel much obliged to any of your correspondents who will inform me of the date of this trial, and where I can find an account of it. CRL.

[William Chivers, Esq., of Battersea Rise, was murdered by William Duncan his gardener, on Jan. 24, 1807. The prisoner was tried at Kingston on March 20, 1807, and found guilty of murder, but we do not find that he was executed. Consult the Gent. Mag. for 1807, pt. i. pp. 185, 270, Annual Register, xlix. 410. A monument in memory of William Chivers, Esq., was put up in the churchyard of Lee.]

Replies.

GENERAL RICHARD FORTESCUE.

(3rd S. vii. 258.)

General Richard Fortescue, was undoubtedly Col. Fortescue; for whose prowess in the West of England, in 1646, consult Joshua Sprigge's Anglia Rediviva (England's Recovery, 4to, 1647). He was distinguished as a great Parliamentary officer; took Pendennis Castle in Falmouth Bay, in Cornwall; which was the last fortress which held out for the king in the west after the capture of Exeter, and the defeat of Lord Hopton at Torrington; named also in Clarendon. His regiment is probably enumerated in the list at the end of Sprigge's work—which gives an elaborate summary of the forces of the Roundheads, subsequent to the capitulation of Truro and the fall of Oxford.

Sprigge was an Independent preacher: appears to have been attached to Sir T. Fairfax's army. His book is dedicated to Lenthall, the Speaker of the House of Commons, and is now rare. It gives all the operations of the Parliamentarians, subsequent to the Self-denying Ordinance; Naseby fight (with plate); and all the events of note (after the capture of Basing-house), which took place in Devon and Cornwall. He was a native of Banbury, Oxon. A portrait of Fairfax on horseback sometimes adorns the work.

Gen. Fortescue, who was probably an ancestor of a branch of the Devon family, now seated at Castle Hill, near South Molton, must have been the first Governor of Jamaica, as that island fell into Cromwell's hands in 1656: after the check experienced by Penn and Venables at Hispaniola (for which vide Ludlow's Memoirs), where Major-Gen. Haines, his forlorn hope, and a great portion of his forces perished. The well-known motto of the family—"Forte scutum, salus ducum"—is very appropriate to the lofty name.

The estate at Halskott must have been purchased from the trustees of that unfortunate papist lord and royalist of the first water, the Marquis of Winchester, when, after the storm of Basing-house and its dismantlement, the estates were forfeited; and, like the Marquis of Worcester at Ragland Castle, the family reduced to indigence.*

The Devon Fortescues seem to have sided with

* He was the fifth Marquis. The house was leaguered, and then stormed and burnt, by Cromwell and that "godly and pious man," the butcher Harrison, a Major at the time.

the Parliament. At Edghill, 1642, a Sir Faithful Fortescue went over to the king, with all his troopers, after discharging their pistols into the ground—so says Clarendon, however.

In that rare work, Politicus sine Exemplo, translated into German and published at Nuremberg in 1663 (12mo), there occurs the following notice of Pendennis Castle, p. 32:—

“Nichts war mehr übrig in den Westen als das Castell Bendennis, welches vom Col. Fortescue belägert, sich bald ergeben.”

This publication, which was a memoir of the Protector—with a bust, supporters to it, and his armorials above—contains a great number of interesting particulars of the time; with a list of his Privy Council, the members of his House of Lords, Justices of the Peace, and other officials of rank; also the general officers who were appointed to the various districts into which the kingdom was divided. It is entitled:—

“Kurtzer Begriff der Kriegs und Staats-Handlungen seiner Hoheit Olivier Cromwels, Lord Protectors in Engel-Schott- und Ireland.”

In the Englischer Geschichts Calender (p. 24, ed. 1698, Leipsig, J. L. Gleditsch), Aug. 16, 1646, occurs:—

“Gienge Pendennys, des Königs letzte festung in Cornwallia, verlohren.”*

It was held by a Killigrew (one of the Cornish lineages, whose name implies the “Valley of Eagles”), for the king, and whose pistol burst and harmed him.

Pendennis was, till of late years, a sinecure retreat or appanage for retired military officers of rank. The last was Lieut.-Col. Fenwick of my old regiment (the 34th, Cumberland), who lost a leg at the battle of Albuera, in Spain, I believe, or on the Pyrenees; and enjoyed the pleasures of retirement, and a comfortable pension, as Governor of the Castle. Major Hovenden, who was then lieutenant in the Light Infantry Company, I well recollect as stating that he assisted to bind up his wounds.

Major Hovenden afterwards perished in the wilds of Australia, years later. After being swindled out of his property by a scoundrel attorney, he died of starvation, and was devoured by the wild dogs of the desert!

BREVIS.

THE “SIMPLE COBBLER’S” REFERENCES.

(3rd S. vii. 299.)

MASSACHUSETTS asks if it be a fact, that the Irish, according to the Cobbler—

“Have a Tradition among them, That when the Devil shewed our Saviour all the kingdoms of the Earth and their glory, that he would not shew him Ireland.”

* Possibly also recorded in the German “Judas Macabæus, or, Eulogium of Sir T. Fairfax,” 12mo.

I reply, No! The Cobbler is mistaken, the Irish have no such tradition. The story arose in this wise:—In 1602, after the battle of Kinsale, when Don John de Aguila had surrendered to the Lord Deputy, the Spaniard in a conference with Sir William Godolphin said that the Irish were—

“Not only weak and barbarous, but perfidious friends. Presuming,” he continued, “in their promise that they would join me, I in vain sustained the brunt of the Viceroy’s Armes. I then saw these Counts (the rebels O’Donnell and O’Neill) take their stand within two miles of Kinsale, reinforced with some Companies of Spaniards, and every hour repeating their promise to join us in forcing your camp. After all this we saw them, at last, broken with a handful of men, blown asunder to divers parts of the world—O’Donnell into Spaine, O’Neill to the furthest part of the North; so that now I find no such Counts in rerum natura.”

Subsequently, in allusion to the barbarous state of the country, the want of roads, the scarcity of provisions, the perpetual moisture, and the then great unhealthiness of the climate, Aguila said:—

“Surely, when Satan tried to tempt our Saviour by displaying before Him all the Kingdoms of the Earth, the wily Enemy of Mankind did not exhibit this wretched and most untempting country of Ireland.”

This is the sense; though, as I quote from memory, probably not the exact words used by Aguila. They will, however, be found in the Record Office among the Irish Papers: so ably arranged, and partly calendared, by Hans Hamilton, Esq. The profanity of the saying might almost be palliated, if we take into consideration how truly fatal Ireland had been to the Spaniards. On their previous invasion at Smerwick, the garrison, after their surrender at discretion, were according to the usage of the period cruelly butchered in cold blood. Of the Invincible Armada, intended to sweep the English heretics off the earth, and burst the bonds of the Irish Roman Catholics, no less than seventeen tempest-tost ships were cast away on the coast of Ireland. All their crews, upwards of 5,000 men, were either drowned or slaughtered by the barbarous Irish. One Gallagher, more merciless than the ocean waves, killed sixty Spaniards with his axe, as the unfortunate wretches gained the shore by swimming. The rich dresses and gold buttons of the Spaniards proved irresistible temptations to the wild Irish; only a very few officers were preserved for ransom. Bacon tells the story of De Aguila in a slightly different manner, in his treatise Of a War with Spain, thus:—

“Aguila said, in open treaty, ‘That when the Devil upon the Mount did show Christ all the Kingdoms of the Earth and the glory of them, he did not doubt that the Devil left out Ireland, and kept it for himself.’”

The discomfited Spaniard may almost be excused for saying so; but at a later period, when William III. saw the fair fields of Ulster, as he rode onwards to try the ultima ratio regum at the Boyne, he exclaimed: "This, truly, is a country well worth fighting for!"

WILLIAM PINKERTON.

DANIEL DEFOE THE NEWS-WRITER.

(3rd S. vii. 58, 244.)

Pursuing my investigations as to the hitherto unknown writings of Defoe, I have disinterred the following. It may be taken as supplemental to what has already appeared in "N. & Q." under his name. I must however premise a few words.

Defoe was left in the management of Mist's Journal, but Mr. Mist had so great a tendency to gravitate towards Jacobitism, that, about the middle of the year 1720, a separation again took place (except as to the articles on "Foreign Affairs"), and Defoe connected himself with Appleebee's Original Weekly Journal.

As on a previous occasion, poor Mist was no sooner left to himself than he fell into trouble, but this time it ended in ruin. Omitting, for brevity, all that intervened, I quote the following from The Post Boy of February 14th to 16th, 1721:—

"Last Monday Mr. Mist appeared on his Recognizance at the King's Bench Bar, Westminster, to receive Judgment for some Reflections on his Majesty's Interposition on behalf of the Protestants in the Palatinate, of which he had been convicted the last Term; and the Court pronounced Judgment, as follows, viz. That he stand in the Pillory, at Charing Cross and the Royal Exchange; pay a Fine of 50*l*.; suffer three months' Imprisonment in the King's Bench, and give Security for his good Behaviour for seven years."

Editorial leading articles in the public journals of the early part of last century appeared in the humble forms of Letters Introductory, with continual changes of the subscribed initials, or fictitious signatures. On February 18th appeared the following Introductory Letter by Defoe in Appleebee's Original Weekly Journal:—

"Sir,—It is a Rule in our Accidence, and which in Latin begins with Felix quem faciunt, that they are happy who take warning by other Men's Disasters: I think this is a Time of Day when this Rule stands in Need of much Application; and there are many Occasions which tell us who, and who, and who ought to take Notice of it.

"You publish, it seems, Dying Speeches, and from thence 'tis natural to preach to the Gentlemen of the PAD, that they BEWARE, or else that they provide their last Speech and Confession, and send them to your House to be ready for the Press.

"The South Sea Company have chosen new Directors; and the Conduct of their Predecessors, or rather the Consequences of that Conduct, stands as so many Warning Pieces, or Mementos, to bid them beware how they go on; and, as a Beacon upon a Sand, to bid them stand off, and live,—draw near, and dye; to call to them to take Care, lest they run a Ground, and are stranded, as others did before them.

"A Brother Journal Man has fallen into the Pit lately;

Humanity directs you not to insult him in his Disaster, but the contrary to an extream; but Prudence gives a Hint; Gardez Vous, Monsieur, take care of yourself, lest unwarily you fall into the like Snare.

"Another bold Journal Scribe writes strongly for Freedom of Speech, by which may be understood, he would have a Freedom for the Press to speak what it would; the Truth is, by the Liberty he takes, one would hardly think there was any Freedom deny'd, or which he could not venture upon: But I counsel you, wonderful Sir, to remember that the Press and the Pit are alike open, and stand very near together: the Press is open, that is true; and the Prison is open, that is as true; Gardez Vous, Mr. App: write warily, write cautiously.

"But you will say, What must a poor Printer do? Must he turn his Tale as the Weather-cock of State turns? And when the Wind blows a Whig Gale from Court, turn Whig; when it blows a High Church Gale, face about to the High Church; and in Times of the unsteady Gales, trim and look every Way, and no Way, all at once? What must he do?

"No, no, Mr. App, be honest and be wise; be steady to yourself; but knock your Head against no Stone Walls, lest the few Brains you may have go to wreck in the Storm, and the little Money you have follow after them.

"It is the Wisdom of a Publick Writer to give no Offence to the Powers to which his Allegiance is due, or such whose Authority he is subject to; and yet no Man seems to be under the Necessity, either of Flattery or Falsehood, in any Reign, or under any Times whatever. If we look back upon all the Prosecutions and Tryals which have been against Printers, or Authors, in our Age, not in this Reign only, but also in the Reigns precedent, they have not been for the plainness of their Writing so much as the Passions, that is to say, the Follies of the Writers.

"Plainness is a Virtue in Writing, and no Author that is honest ought to go from it: But Passion, in the very same Cause, may be the height of Folly; even a Satyr may be so couch'd in its Terms, as to give no legal Offence, and yet no Part of the Edge, or Point, be abated.

"Let him that writes Satyr, then, take care to have it sharp, but not sour; mettled, but not raging; full, but not foul: How many a gallant Prince has borne the Edge of the Satyr, for the Wit of it? But remember, that all the Wit of a Satyr perishes when the Manners decay.

"But, after all, what have you Men of Scribble to do with the Times? Or why must you dip into the Passions and Parties which agitate the People? Leave off the Comment, and keep to the Text (Facts); when a Wretch, in contempt of God and Government, hangs himself, and robs the King of a Subject, however worthless and useless, it is a Crime no doubt; But what have you to do with that? Your Business is to tell us the Story, and leave the World to the relish of it their own Way; and the like, of all other cases: Suppose 'tis of Rebellion, Treason, South Sea Thievery, or of any other sort of R——y, be the Story your Province; leave the Reflection to the Readers; lay your Finger on your Mouth, and when you talk of State Affairs, ware Pillory, ware Printer; be wise and be wary; you may have room enough to please your Friends, without displeasing those who have Power to resent and to punish.

"What Business have Printers to espouse Parties at their own Expense? Make the Passions of private Men speak in Publick, and take a Liberty of Speech not supportable in itself, and which Men in Power, let them be of which Side they will, cannot bear?

"If you are prepar'd for Martyrdom indeed, 'tis another Case; then you may come with Vox Populi, and Vox Dei, and Vox any Body; you know the Way that has been trod before you: But, if you will act the prudent Part, cut no Throats but with a Feather,—shoot no poison'd Arrows: Let Wit and Waryness joyn in your Work; and so I end my Advice to you where I began it: Felix quem faciunt aliena Pericula cautum.

"Your Friend,
"SOLOMON WARYMAN."

Vox Populi Vox Dei was the title of a treasonable publication, for printing which a young man named Matthews had been hanged at Tyburn during the preceding year. W. LEE.

THE IGELÉ SÄULE.

(3rd S. vii. 220.)

In vol. ii. part II. of Pococke's Travels (1745) a fine plate of the sepulchral monument at Igel is given at page 221. He says:—

"I could see no entrance to this monument, but the people say there is one, which, I suppose is underground, and that it is lined with copper adorned with figures."

In a note, he gives the following description of the sculptures:—

"It is raised on a pedestal or basement, which is on two plinths; the corner one being two feet deep, and the upper three, both setting in six inches: the die of the pedestal consists of two tier of stone and is about five feet deep; it was adorned with reliefs, those to the east and north are defaced; on the west side there is a loaded car drawn by two horses with a man on the further side of each horse; they seem to have a thyrsus in their hands. To the north a person sits with a book in his hand, there being another behind him; and on one side of him, two sit at a table, and two stand to the east of it; this also is much defaced. In the die of the pedestal to the east and west, the reliefs are almost entirely defaced, and much ruined to the south; but I could discern a person sitting, with one standing on each side, that to the east holding the person who sits by the hand. In the frieze to the west are eight persons in procession; to the east is a person sitting and a boy standing at a round table, another likewise at a table, and two persons standing. The frieze to the south is divided into two parts by three pilasters; in the middle compartment one sits at a table, and two at each end; to the west there is a table and other utensils, and two persons standing; to the east one as at a stove and two as walking off towards the middle. To the east a woman sits near a bed, on which there is a man, a person standing at the feet of the bed; to the west there is a man in a car drawn by beasts, which seem to have horns; to the south are two persons, and there was a third in the middle probably sitting. In the pediments the reliefs are all defaced, except to the south, in which there are three figures; the middle one, which is naked, seemed to resemble Hercules."

JOHN DAVIDSON.

Mr. WOODWARD will find in Ersch und Gruber's Allgemeine Encyclopädie der Wissenschaften und Künste, art. "Igel," a long list of works containing accounts, in some cases accompanied by plates, of the Igeler Säule. The most accessible is perhaps the Mém. de l'Inst. Nat. des Sciences et Arts; Litt. et Beaux Arts, vol. ii. p. 540. (Paris, Fructidor

An. vii.) Besides this I would refer him to Neuhöhr's Abbild. des röm. Monuments zu Igel (Trier, 1820), and also to Osterwald's Das röm. Denkmal in Igel und seine Bilderwerke (Coblenz, 1829.)

RICHARD B. PROSSER.

25, Southampton Buildings, W.C.

COLD HARBOUR, ORIGIN OF THE NAME.

(1st and 2nd S. passim; 3rd S. vii. 253, 302. Various in England, 2nd S. vii. 143, 200, 317, 357.)

The bibliography of this quæstio verata is as follows:—

"Hartshorne's Salopia Antiqua; or, An Enquiry from Personal Survey into the Druidical, Military, and other early Remains in Shropshire and the North Welsh Borders; with Observations upon the names of Places, and a Glossary of Words used in the County of Salop, 1841. pp. 253—258.—Archæologia, vol. xxxiii. on the Designation of "Cold Harbour." By Capt. W. H. Smyth, R.N., F.R.S.

I shall quote a paragraph from the Archæologia, in illustration of the derivation referred to in "N. & Q." (3rd S. vii. 303) by LORD LYTTLETON:

"Now it is not a little remarkable that, though these places are found recurring along the line of the Chilterns, the Cotswolds, and other ridges, yet they predominate on or near the old Roman road; sometimes where there is a rise in the ground, and often in the very angle where a turn in the direction becomes necessary, not only in the occasional deviations from the main viaria, but also in those which were made for forming diverticula, or cross communications. May not these ascents and winding turns therefore have been named after the significant tortuosities of the coluber?" &c., p. 126.

An enumeration of Cold Harbours on or near Roman roads is given in Salopia Antiqua, pp. 255—258. BIBLIOTHECAR. CHERHAM.

In 1860, in communicating to "N. & Q." (2nd S. ix. 130, 441) a proposed derivation of this word, I noticed the greater frequency of its occurrence in the south-eastern counties of England, where the iron manufacture was formerly carried on to a very large extent, in which charcoal was the fuel employed.

Other names of places there also have reference to the same industry, such as "Hammer Posts" and "Hammer Ponds." "Collier Farm" is of frequent occurrence. There is a "Charcoal Lane" and "Colmonger Farm," all evidently connected with the same manufacture.

Cold Harbour, or as sometimes written, Cold Harborough, is a corruption from Coaled-arberye, that is, charcoal.

"Arbery" is an old English word for wood-fuel, which is preserved in the following passage from Maundeville's Travels, cited by Mr. Halliwell in his Dictionary of Archaic Words:

"In that contree is but lytille arbery, as trees that beren fruite, ne others. Thai lyin in tents, and thai berennen the dong of bestes for defaute of wood."

The word therefore means wood-fuel turned into coal; in modern phrase, charcoal. It was applied to places where charcoal was made, or where it was sold, or to the road leading thereto.

Formerly the word coal or cole simply meant charred wood, and not the mineral now known by that name.

Thus Chaucer, in the Prologue of the "Channon Yeman's Tale," when he speaks of—

"Dyvers fuyres maad of woode and cole," meant charcoal, as is evident from a few lines further down, where he says the Channon—

"Out of his bosom took a bechen cole."

And again—

"And whan that the channones bechen cole
Was brent."

This derivation satisfactorily explains how "Coldharbour" can be found in the middle of a wood," and "Kalterherberg," near Aix-la-Chapelle is "situated in the middle of the forest of the Eifel."

In England, the places so named lie chiefly in a warm situation.

The Coldharbour mentioned in Upper Thames Street, in Dowgate Ward, was probably built upon the site of a charcoal maker's yard, and the satirical allusions to it probably arose from the warmth of the charcoal fires attracting those houseless vagrants who had no settled lodgings.

C. T.

GAELIC GRAMMAR.

(3rd S. vii. 75, 144, 308.)

W. EASSIE's information on Gaelic Grammars (p. 308) is instructive, and must be interesting to students and proficients in the Celtic language. Some of his statements, however, challenge comment, and though his list of printed Grammars is copious, it is not exhaustive, and therefore I am led to hope that space may be afforded to the explanatory and the supplementary matter which I now supply.

In reply to HIGHLANDER's queries (p. 75), I confined myself to giving the information he had sought, mentioning (p. 144) that "the ablest work in Gaelic Grammar, written by a native of North Britain, is unquestionably that by Alexander Stewart," and I added—

"As the Highland Gaelic is essentially the same as the Irish, though it branched off as early as the sixth century, it may please HIGHLANDER to be informed that the best grammar of the Irish—the best preserved, most cultivated and most polished dialect of the Gael—is A Grammar of the Irish Language by the late eminent Irish scholar, Dr. John O'Donovan."

W. EASSIE suggests, that HIGHLANDER might perhaps also consult with profit Shaw's Analysis of the Gaelic Language. Of this work, thus recommended, Stewart entertained no favourable opinion. In his introduction to the second edition of his Grammar (1811, p. xiii), he refers to it in these not complimentary terms: "I know but one publication professedly of Gaelic Grammar written by a Scotsman (Shaw). I have consulted it also, but in this quarter I have no obligations to acknowledge." And of it O'Donovan, in the introduction to his Grammar (p. lvii.), says, "This Grammar is confined to the Erse or Gaelic of Scotland, and its merits are very questionable." Irrespective of my own convictions, these authorities are my justification for not recommending Shaw's work. It is evident that some of the books classified by W. EASSIE as grammars have not been examined by him. He names as the first grammar Kearney's Alphabetum Hibernicum, 1571. This work is not a grammar. It is a small volume of 54 pages, all Irish, containing as the title-page announces, an Irish Alphabet and Catechism:—

"I. An Exposition of the Christian Doctrine, and Articles of Faith, &c., translated by John O'Kearnaigh, printed in Irish in Dublin, at the expense of Mr. John Usher (Usher), Alderman, at the head of the bridge on the 20 June, 1571."

The Irish Alphabet and remarks on the powers and modifications of the letters occupy five pages. Dr. O'Donovan, or rather the author from whom without acknowledgment he borrowed the title, is responsible for the erroneous description. In his Grammar (p. lv.), O'Donovan says, "The only known copy of this rare book is preserved in the Bodleian Library, Oxford." This is also a mistake; there is a second copy in excellent preservation, in the British Museum, press mark C. 33, A. 1. I know of no grammar called Donlevy's Irish Language, 1742, but am aware of Donlevy's Irish-English Catechism published at Paris in that year, to which is appended brief instructions for reading the Irish Language, entitled "The Elements of the Irish Language." This treats of Orthography only, as O'Donovan correctly remarks (p. lvii.) M'Eligott, though he compiled an Irish Grammar, still extant in manuscript, never had it published. And his Observations on the Gaelic Language is merely a contribution to the Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Dublin in 1808. O'Daly's valuable little tract has no pretensions to be classed as a grammar. The following grammars and instructions for reading Irish, if known to MR. EASSIE, have been unaccountably omitted: Theobald Stapleton's Catechism, to which is subjoined in Irish and Latin, Modus perutilis legendi linguam Hibernicam, 4to, Louvain, 1639. There is a copy in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, and in the British Museum, of Godfrey Daniel's Church Catechism with the Elements of the Irish Language, 1680. John O'Connell's True Wisdom, by Paul Segnary, to which is prefixed Short Instructions for reading Irish, Cork, 1813. James Scurry's Introduction to the Irish Language, Waterford, 1820; Barron's Irish Primer, 1833; H. J. M. Mason's Irish Grammar, 1834, and a second edition has since appeared; Owen Connellan's Irish Grammar, 1842. The Rev. Mr. Nangle, of Achill, has brought out a second edition of Neilson's Irish Grammar, with some judicious additions and corrections. Bourke's College Irish Grammar has also reached a second edition; and I may worthily close the list with the Irish Grammar of the very learned linguist and accomplished Irish Scholar, Martin A. O'Brennan, LL.D. To none, however, of these native writers is the language and literature of the Gael more deeply indebted than to J. C. Zeuss, whose Grammatica Celtica is a profound, unique, and invaluable scholastic tribute to the structure and old extant treasures of the Celtic. His materials he has drawn from the ancient records of the Irish, dating from the seventh century, still preserved in Continental libraries and of the dialects of Britain, Wales, Cornwall, Armorica, and the literary remains of Ancient Gaul. His Celtic Grammar, written in Latin, was printed in two large octavo volumes, comprising 1229 pages, Lipsiæ, 1853.

Though my notes of Irish printed books are the accumulations of the gleanings of many years, I think some, if not many, elementary treatises on the Irish language may have escaped my notice, but—and I hope I am not out of Court in saying so—I am glad to know that there is a gentleman in the field, Mr. John Power, whose zeal, intelligence, and persevering research promise a Bibliotheca Hibernica which, supplementing Harrison and Nicholson, will index those literary treasures which Irishmen have produced, or their country or their deeds have suggested, at home and abroad, "from the introduction of printing to 1800."

JOHN EUGENE O'CAVANAGH.

GOODRICH FAMILY (3rd S. vii. 134, 203.)—With reference to a paragraph taken from the Stamford Mercury of February 24th, asking for information respecting the family of Goodrich, of Lincolnshire, anterior to 1700, including that of Thomas Goodrich, Bishop of Ely, who died in 1574, and who was a native of East Kirkby, near Spilsby, a parishioner of mine, Francis Goodrich, has asked me to write to you.

His family have been resident at Wrangle since the early part of the sixteenth century, where they still have a small property, though this unfortunately (for tracing descent) only came into their possession about thirty years ago. They were tenant farmers for a very long period on a different estate in that parish.

None of them now reside at Kirkby, but several of the name live in the neighbouring places; our Francis Goodrich is considered apparently the head of the family. He is seventy-eight years old, and has always heard it as a tradition that the Bishop of Ely, at the time of the Reformation, belonged to it.

He has asked me to find out anything I could about his ancestor at various times. I have no doubt that a careful examination of the tombstones of Wrangle churchyard, and the parish register, would materially assist any one desirous of searching into the family records.

W. S. THOMASON.

An account of an American family of this name will be found in Goodwin's Genealogical Notes, or Contributions to the Family History of some of the First Settlers of Connecticut and Massachusetts, Hartford, 1856. See also the eighteen volumes of the New England Historical and Genealogical Register, published in Boston, Mass. S. W. P.

UNACKNOWLEDGED REPUBLICATION (3rd S. vi. 284.)—My attention having just been called to a paragraph in the page above-named, headed "Unacknowledged Republication," I find that the writer, after mentioning a work of mine published more than twenty years ago, under the title of Aphorisms and Reflections, &c., says, in reference to the one entitled Sunshine and Shadows, or Sketches of Thought, Philosophic and Religious:—

"I had scarcely opened this volume, when I discovered that it was nothing more than a republication of the Aphorisms and Reflections, slightly re-arranged and very much abridged."

On which I have thus much to say:—That a very considerable proportion of the work so impeached, including the pieces which I consider the most elaborate, is entirely new; that the portions of the Aphorisms incorporated into it are either more or less modified, or introduced in connexions that give them a new significance; and lastly, that the work was intended to be but a companion volume to another, since published, entitled Essays of a Recluse; or Traces of Thought, Literature, and Fancy; in which, if your correspondent should ever honour it with an inspection, he will find a prefatory note, informing him that "both together include all that the author cares to retain of whatever he has hitherto published."

I leave you and your readers to judge whether the "laws of literary," or other "ethics," have been most infringed; by me or by a person who could pronounce, so categorically, on the contents of a book which he had scarcely opened.

W. B. CLULOW.

OLD SAYING ABOUT A PERSON WASTING HIS SUBSTANCE (3rd S. vii. 219, 290.)—I have heard another saying with a similar import to that named by your correspondent. A person going back in the world is said to "Make his pack into fardel, and the fardel into nout" [nothing]. Fardel, it scarcely need be added, is a small pack.

WM. DOBSON.

Preston.

THE DODRALIS POTIO (3rd S. vii. 148, 208, 286.) I was not aware that the Latin distich was required to be translated by a distich in English. The lines of K. have the defect of changing the order of the ingredients: it is preserved in the following attempt:—

"Dodra I'm called, of nine things made, without a fault, Broth, water, honey, wine, bread, pepper, herbs, oil, salt."

F. C. H.

WESTON (3rd S. vii. 224.)—Sir John Rogers of Bryanstone, in the county of Dorset, who died in 1565, married Katrine the daughter of Sir Richard Weston. (See Symonds's Diary, published by the Camden Society, p. 125.)

Who was this Sir Richard Weston? His arms, as given by Symonds, were ermine, on a chief [vert] five bezants. These arms are altogether different from those of Sir Richard Weston, brother of the Lord Prior, as described by W. I presume, therefore, that he did not belong to the same family.

P. S. C.

REMARKABLE AS TO BISHOPS' WIDOWS (3rd S. vii. 273.)—The Canon Law calls a bishop "Maritus Ecclesie;" and we read elsewhere "as if they were knit in nuptial bands of love and care for their diocese." Yet it is of note, that a bishop's widow "has a right to exhibit the arms of the see;" and that "she has a right to emblazon all that will honour her deceased husband." Hence, the bishop appears (quasi) alienated from his wife for church purposes; and it seems as if, during life, in this case, the "one flesh" was regarded as superseded, and that, contra, after death of the bishop, there was a reflex honour upon his widow, and a right of exhibiting and emblazoning. Some explanation may perhaps be considered to lie in the episcopal and baronial properties being peculiar to a bishop as such.

It is said, as a principle, "fulget radiis mariti," but this (as to bishops) must be a particular exception if an apparently appropriate place according to position is not assigned. Importance being attached in consequence of marriage, precedence would be otherwise imagined as consecutive.

We are informed that bishops, "by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, always had place in the Lords' House of Parliament, as Barons by succession." (Segar, On Honour, lib. iv. cap. 18.)

The baron, "imprimis," has been deemed "quasi rober bellii." Of the episcopal one we read "ex solâ liberalitate Regum," and "a Regibus in feudum tenetur."

A possibility of being "aliened or entailed," and of honour passing is, I believe, held in point of baronial circumstance; which may not apply to the "tenure of barons by succession." B.

PRECEDENCE OF BISHOPS' WIVES (3rd S. vii. 294.)—There is a considerable similarity to the position of Bishop's wives in that of the wives of the judges in the Scottish Court of Session. I extract the following paragraph from Sir Walter Scott's note to chap. ii. of Redgauntlet:—

"The Scottish judges are distinguished by the title of 'lord' prefixed to their own temporal designation. As the ladies of these official dignitaries do not bear any share in their husbands' honours, they are distinguished only by their lords' family name. They were not always contented with this species of Salique law, which certainly is somewhat inconsistent; but their pretensions to title are said to have been long since repelled by James V., the sovereign who founded the College of Justice. 'I,' said he, 'made the carles lords, but who the devil made the carlins ladies?'"

The title of "lord" thus assumed is sometimes taken from the name of the judge's property, and sometimes is prefixed to his ordinary surname. Of the present thirteen judges nine are designated from properties, and the rest from surnames. As the ladies in all cases retain the surname of their husbands, some inconvenience, it is understood, has occasionally been felt when their lordships travel with their wives on the continent, and the husband has found it prudent to drop the titular appellation pro tempore, the announcement of "Lord A. and Mrs. B." giving occasion to uncomplimentary conjectures. It was at one time proposed that the title of "lord" should be dropt and "judge," or "Mr. Justice," adopted in lieu of it; but, independently of the objection to the change of a national distinction, the proposal was made at the period of the French Revolution, and was of course characterised in the stereotyped cant of the day as part of a conspiracy against social order.

J. R. B.

THE CONTINUANCE OF VALENTINES (3rd S. vii. 290.)—The drawing of names from a box would seem to savour more of heathenism than Christianity. If we are to associate the name of Valentine with Feb. 14, it should be for some recognition of a saint and martyr (cir. 270 A.D.) in the reign of Claudius—"He was eminently distinguished for his love and charity." It appears that "the pastors of the early Christian Church" were anxious to substitute saints for women in order to commemoration.

As "the earliest known poetical Valentines were written by Charles, Duke of Orleans, taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, October 25, 1415," which are "in the library of the British Museum," we have a trace of 450 years.

In our own day, the style and character have been rather altered; clearly there has been a great amount of abuse, likewise a change of fashion—

"Some Valentines should alter'd be Or change their names to flippancy."

B.

DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH: MALPLAQUET (3rd S. vii. 261.)—It is not generally known, that John Churchill, the great Duke of Marlborough, and husband of the celebrated Sarah Jennings, paid a visit to Heidelberg, April 20, 1705, after visiting the Landgrave of Hesse at Schlangenbad the day before. He only passed the afternoon there, going next day to visit the Prince Lewis of Baden, his ally, at Rastadt. Tradition says he put up at the old Hôtel Ritta, built in 1572 by a French Huguenot, and named after the old Pretender, Chevalier St. George: others think at the Hirsch, in the Markt-Platz (north-east corner, now Schützendorf, the Tapezierer), while at Heidelberg. After a conference with the Prince of Baden, about reinforcements and other military matters, on the 22nd, after visiting the lines of Biehl and Stollhoffen, he went to Mannheim; and thence to Triers, where the English and Dutch forces were encamped near Igel, on the Moselle—where the famous Roman obelisk is still to be seen.

With respect to Malplaquet battle (Aug. 13, 1709), and the frivolous chanson or réfrain about his grace's imaginary death there, I will only remark, that the French endeavoured to conceal their check, and affected not to have been beaten; although, in spite of P. Daniel's garbled statement, their loss in officers alone was about 540 killed, 1068 wounded, and 310 made prisoners; and yet they made out their casualties of private soldiers, very modestly, as not exceeding 1500!

The victorious Duke of Marlborough had, nevertheless, two horses killed under him, but escaped unhurt. Prince Eugene was slightly touched on the head, and the Duke of Argyle had shots through his clothes and periwig. How was it that no chansonnier badin, among the allies did not substitute an oraison funèbre for Villars, with his shot in the knee, and his ten general officers and three brigadiers, who perished at the wood of Taisnières that bloody day?—or, as the Malplaquet medal, "Gallis ad Taisnière devictis," has it.

BREVIS.

PRINCE FRANCIS RHODOCANAKIS (3rd S. vii. 267.)—Qu. Who was Constantine Rhodocanacides, who collected the "Breves Sententiæ Græcæ, Latinè explicatæ," in which all the Greek primitives are in a particular manner comprehended under twenty heads or chapters; and which was published at the end of Schrevelius's Greek Lexicon, and also at the end of the Clavis Græcæ Lin- quæ of Eilardus Lubinus, published at Leyden by F. Heger, with Elzevir type, in 1644? Was he also of the "Isle de Chio"?

BREVIS.

(QUOTATIONS WANTED (3rd S. vii. 280.)—

"The sun slept on his clouds, forgetful of the voice of the morning."

This is an incorrect quotation from Ossian's address to the sun, which occurs in the poem of Carthon. The exact words in Macpherson's Ossian are these:—

"Thou shalt sleep in thy clouds, careless of the voice of the morning."

I possess an imperfect copy of an old work in small 4to size, printed by Geo. Smart at Wolverhampton in 1760, entitled Poems on several Occasions. They are published anonymously, but the author was the Rev. Thomas Moss. The opening poem is the "Beggar," so well known afterwards as the "Beggar's Petition." In this work occurs the "Address of Ossian to the Sun," attempted in blank verse, and, as I have always considered, very happily accomplished. I extract that portion which includes the above quotation:—

"But thou perchance like me art for a season,
And time shall put a period to thy years:
Thou in thy clouds perhaps shalt one day sleep
Careless for ever of the morn's sweet voice;
Exult then, O thou sun! in youthful strength.
Age is unlovely, desolate and dark;
'Tis like the feeble splendour of the moon
That shines through broken clouds, when rising mist
Enwraps the hills, and blots them from the sight,
When the North blast is howling on the plain,
When in his journey shrinks the traveller,
Weary and half-way distant from his home."

And being upon Ossian, I may append a note relative to his poems. The late Dr. Macdonald, Bishop of Kingston in Upper Canada, told a friend of mine, that Mrs. Fraser of Culbokie possessed MS. copies of several of Ossian's poems long before Macpherson's work appeared. Moreover, that this lady lent the MSS. to Macpherson, but never had them returned.

F. C. H.

"Sometimes

The young forgot the lessons they had learnt,
And loved where they should hate—like thee, Imelda!"
From Italy, a poem by Samuel Rogers.

The story of Imelda is beautifully told by Mrs. Hemans in her Records of Woman. Also vide Sismondi's Histoire des Républiques Italiennes, vol. iii. p. 443.

JOHN PAVIN PHILLIPS.

Haverfordwest.

JUDAS OVERTURNING THE SALT-CELLAR (3rd S. vii. 283.)—In the celebrated picture of the Last Supper by Leonardo da Vinci, Judas is represented as overturning the salt-cellar; but not "as he stretches out his hand to receive the sop." The time chosen for the scene represented is when our Blessed Saviour startled his Apostles with the alarming declaration that one of them would betray him. Surprise, grief, and consternation are marvellously depicted on the countenances, and in the attitudes of the Apostles. Judas wishing to appear as innocent as the rest, lifts up his left hand as in astonishment; while, as he clutches the money-bag with his right, he upsets the salt, which falls away from him. At the same moment he is supposed to be saying what St. Matthew records (xxvi. 25),—"Is it I, Rabbi?" To which our Saviour answers: "Thou hast said it." The incident of our Lord reaching to him the bread dipped (St. John xiii. 26), occurred just after, in answer to the enquiry which St. John made at the suggestion of St. Peter: "Lord, who is it?" (v. 25.) But in the picture before us, our Blessed Saviour is neither dipping the morsel, nor giving it to Judas; but has both his hands upon the table, and his face cast down, expressive of acute sorrow.

F. C. H.

SNAIL-EATING (3rd S. vi. 268, 269.)—A correspondent has been pleased to demolish the story of the poor widow of the Irish gravel-digger at Blackheath, who fed her stout and ruddy brood on a diet of which snails formed the only animal portion, by asserting that snails would melt away on the application of salt "like ice before a fire." Now fearing, Mr. Editor, lest this very confident assertion should deter any of your readers, who were so minded, from endeavouring to procure a wholesome and probably palatable article of food, a matter of prime importance in these days when butchers' meat is so dear, and South American beef so stinking, I have made a little experiment; the result you have now before you in the shape of a salted snail, prepared according to the widow's recipe, which has lost but little of its bulk and less of its weight. You are at perfect liberty, Sir, to munch this "dainty bit,"* an it so please you. To encourage you in the venture I may add that the daintiest dish of which I have ever had the good fortune to partake, was a caterpillar stew,† which followed a boiled monkey, or baked porcupine (on this point my memory fails me), on the banks of a certain tropical river, where of old Sir Walter hunted for his El Dorado. A. CHALLSTETH.

Gray's Inn.

SPINNING-JENNY (3rd S. vii. 281.)—It is stoutly maintained by many that Thomas Highs, a reed-maker of Leigh, co. Lancaster, was the real inventor of "the Jenny," and that he called it after his favourite daughter, Jane; and that it was for an improvement of this machine that Hargreaves obtained a patent, but which was afterwards annulled. I believe it is certain that neither wife nor daughter of Hargreaves bore the name of Jane.

II. FISHWICK.

VISCOUNT CHAWORTH (3rd S. vii. 279.)—All ordinary accounts agree in assigning 1640 as the year in which this title became extinct by the death of the last viscount, s. p. m. His only daughter and heiress, Juliana, m. Chambre (Brabazon) fifth earl of Meath, by which alliance the baptismal name, and more recently the title, of Chaworth has been introduced into that family. On Feb. 7, 1831, an English barony was conferred on the tenth Earl of Meath, who was created Lord Chaworth of the U. K., under which title the present earl sits as a member of the Upper House. Guillim states that Patrick Chaworth, Esq., created "Viscount Chaworth of Ardmagh, in the kingdom of Ireland," was of the old baronial family of Chaworth, or de Cadurcis, and bore the same arms, viz., Azure, two chevrons, or. Sir George Chaworth, Knight (an ancestor of the Viscounts Chaworth), m. Alice, dau. and sole heiress of John Annesley (who d. 15 Henry VI.), and with her the manor and estate of Annesley passed to the family of Chaworth, represented in 1833 by John Chaworth-Musters, Esq., of Colwick Hall, Notts. (Vide Burke's Commoners.)

HENRY W. S. TAYLOR.

Halifax.

URICONIUM, OR WROXETER (3rd S. vii. 183.)—Will you permit me, through your columns, to refer your correspondent for the information that he desires to a paper written by me, which appeared in Cassell's Family Paper of Oct. 31, 1863, I believe under the signature of "Decanus."

EDWARD N. HOARE, Dean of Waterford.

"Cole's Tourist's Guide Book, a Visit to the Wonderful City of Uriconium, &c. By W. F. Peacock. Manchester, Coles; London, Simpkin & Co., 4th or 5th edition. 6d."

GLWYNIG.

TONED PAPER v. WHITE PAPER (3rd S. vi. 454; vii. 64.)—I sincerely hope that we may never see toned paper in general use; I must raise my voice against such a proposition. Short-sighted men like me must have clear print, white paper, and good light, or else lay by their books. I never, if I can avoid it, read a book, the paper of which is coloured; it is painful and distressing to my eyes, and strains my sight when I am obliged to do so. It may suit EIRIONNACH and J. F. S., but I trust that "N. & Q." will continue to retain its clear print and white paper, to the great comfort and ease of one who, short-sighted as he is, has contrived to read through glasses for more than half his life.

F. S. M.

COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK (3rd S. vii. 94, 100, 269.) In reply to the kind answer of MELETES, the lady represented in the portrait referred to has a rather small face, broad forehead, eyes so placed as to

* Remembering how a certain illustrious personage was laughed at by Theodore Hook for "munching" the last golden pippin, we respectfully beg leave to decline.—Ed.]

† Gr-gra worms, the larval state of a beetle.

remind one of the Chinese type, nez retroussé, thin clever mouth, the whole countenance possessing great intelligence and piquancy. The hair is combed tightly back from the face, and surmounted by a lace cap or coif, a fearfully starched ruff environs her neck, and her gown is fronted by a strip of brodered work as stiff and gorgeous as the door of an old India cabinet. From her ladyship's hair a jewel in true cinque-cento taste, hangs on her forehead, little pearls are in her ears, strings of seed-pearls are round her neck, and altogether she looks as fresh and sprightly a lady of some eight and thirty years as one could expect to have seen about the year of grace fifteen hundred and eighty, at which time, as I take it, she was put on panel.

X.

MARRIAGE RINGS (3rd S. vii. 12, 307.)—In the remarks upon this subject made by R. C. L. in your last number, he says a clergyman (not far from Windsor) refused to proceed with the marriage service, unless the man, at its appointed stage, laid the ring, with the accustomed duty, "upon the book." This reminds me of what happened to a clerical friend of mine, a bishop's son, and a very strict ritualist. The late Archbishop Howley, hearing that he was about to be married, kindly offered to perform the marriage ceremony at Lambeth; accordingly on the appointed day the bride and bridegroom, with their friends, attended at the private chapel at Lambeth. The service having proceeded to the point where the ring with the accustomed duty should be laid on the book, the bridegroom, in compliance with the rubric, placed the ring, with a little paper envelope containing a twenty-pound note, upon the service book. The archbishop, thinking that the little packet was only the folded paper which had contained the ring, proceeded to the end of the service, when he quietly shut the book and placed it on the communion table. Nobody seems to have remarked the circumstance, and it was not till some weeks afterwards that the archbishop's chaplain accidentally discovered the envelope, folded within the leaves of the book, which held the bank note, with a memorandum inside the cover that it might be given to the fund of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Of course my friend could not offer the archbishop a fee, and therefore in acknowledgment of the compliment, made this offering of twenty pounds to the society of which the archbishop was the president. Let "would-be bridegrooms," therefore, take a hint, and whether the ring be jewelled or plain, let there be no mistake about "the accustomed duty" being in the hard coin of the realm.

BENJN. FERREY.

GENERAL HUGH MERCER (3rd S. vi. 537; vii. 40.)—General Mercer was not a member of the family of Mercer of Knockbally Style, co. Carlow.

No such Christian name as "Hugh" occurs in their pedigree. Capt. Thomas Vigors m. 2ndly in 1737, Elizabeth, eldest dau. of Edward Mercer, Esq., of Knockbally Style (who d. Feb. 3, 1762). Mr. Mercer was second son of Richard Mercer of Dublin, who died in 1694, leaving three sons, Richard, Edward, and William. I have examined an extensive pedigree of Mercer of the co. Down, but likewise failed to find a "Hugh" in it. The co. Carlow family bore for their arms "Or, a fess gu. charged with 3 bezants in chief 3 crosses patée of the 2nd and in base a mullet azure." Crest, a stork's head couped, holding in its bill a snake embowed. Motto, "The Grit Doult."

H. LOFTUS TOTTENHAM.

POWER OF FRANKING (3rd S. vii. 27.)—The late Duke of Kent sometimes franked as "Edward;" at other times as "Kent and Strathearn."

JOSEPH RIX, M.D.

Miscellaneous.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentleman by whom they are required, and whose name and address are given for that purpose:—

COMMON PRAYERS, 1669. Black-letter, 4to.

VINCENT ORRERA. 4 Vols. Frontispiece engraved by Pissarro.

Wanted by Rev. J. C. Jackson, 5, Chatham Place East, Hackney, N.E.

Notices to Correspondents.

We are compelled to omit our usual Notes on Books. PAMPHLET IN "PENICILS."—We have received from Dr. Bell a long letter in reply to R. A. Had the letter contained the evidence which R. A. called for, that the name lamps was ever used for lampreys, or lampreys R. A.'s assertion that Nine eyes, is a common name for lampreys in this country, we should of course have at once given it insertion. But beyond some strong language directed against R. A., and a challenge to him to produce from any English dictionary ancient or modern (with the exception of Halliwell), the mention of Nine eyes at all, and an assertion that on the continent "the animal is known by no other name," Dr. Bell's letter does not touch upon the real points at issue between him and R. A. We must, therefore, decline to insert the communication in question.

THOMAS T. DYER. The lines—

"Only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust," are from Shirley's Contention of Ajax and Ulysses. F. (New York) is thanked for his hints, which shall not be lost sight of. The term has been used here in the same way that John Bull is applied to all Englishmen.

COLD HARBOR. We are so overwhelmed with communications on this subject, which was very fully discussed in our former series, that we must crave the forbearance of many of our contributors. An esteemed lady correspondent will, we think, admit on reconsideration that her communication breaks the very rule which she herself would lay down.

LYVL. Prospectuses of the Early English Text Society may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Henry B. Wheatley, Esq., 55, Berners Street, London, W.

HYPOKIMONOS (Cape Town.) "X. Y. Z. Juvr., Esq.
SAMUEL SHAW. The Tablette Bookes of Ladye Mary Kye, Lond. 1861, is a fictitious historical production. Vide The Athenæum of July 23, 1861, p. 50.

P. P. We have received a letter for this correspondent; where shall it be forwarded?

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STRAIPED COVERS for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly Issues) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMYTH, 25, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 175.

NOTES:—Capital Punishments in Russia, 351—Adam Smith and Mandeville, 352—Thomas Fuller's unpublished Epigrams, ib.—Recipes in old MSS., 353—Lord Derby, Goethe, and Manzoni, ib.—Palestine Exploration Fund, 354—The Caister Whip—Gabriel Harvey and Spenser—Gabriel Harvey's "Commonplace-Book"—Allan Ramsay—Earl Spenser's "Boccaccio"—Chained Libraries in Parish Vestries—Bishops' Oaths of Office, 354.

QUERIES:—Mr. John Botrie—"Christian Breadbasket"—The Court, 1730—Benjamin Franklin—"God is the Sea of Love"—Gervase Holles—Laystone Abbey—Principal Lee's MSS.—Manetho—The New Version of the Psalms—Early Metrical Version of the Psalms—Ode to Shakespeare—Shooter's Hill—The Styng Family—Sultana—Torchlight Funeral at Westminster Abbey—Old Wall Painting—Wart Stone, 356.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Fenian—Ansareys—Carlo Botta—Garriek's Book-plate—Roan—Très, the French Comparative, 358.

REPLIES:—New Shakspeare Emendation, 360—Origin of the Word Superstition, ib.—Hercules: Dante, 362—Lynchets, or Shelves, in Wiltshire, ib.—Mistletoe—Adverbs improperly used—Sobriquets of Regiments—The O'Connors of Kerry—Thomas May, Dramatist and Historian—Hog Feast—Dissolution of Religious Houses—"No Man is a Hero to his Valet-de-Chambre"—Yew Trees called Palms—Dalyell's "Scottish Poems"—Thomas Bilbie—Clint Hills—The Third Plague of Egypt—Phillips Family—Bookbinding—Barley—The Bell of St. Ceneu, or St. Keyna—"One Step from the Sublime to the Ridiculous," &c., 363.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENTS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. Basil Montagu, in his valuable work, Opinions of Different Authors on the Punishment of Death, published in 1813 (in vol. iii. p. 195), gives an extract from the Code of Laws adopted by the great Catherine; by which it appears that, following the example of her predecessor Elizabeth, she abolished the punishment of death for all crimes but those grave offences against the state which have always been marked out for great severity by despotic rulers. I need not give the passage at length, as it has been so often quoted both by writers and speakers on the subject of capital punishment. It is said that during the whole reign of Elizabeth—that is, for twenty years—the punishment of death was never once inflicted. And Schnitzler, in his Secret History of the Court and Government of Russia (vol. ii. p. 339) says (writing in relation to the execution of Pestel and his confederates for their leadership in the revolt of 1825, and which execution took place in the first year of the reign of the autocrat Nicholas, 1826,) that "For the last eighty years St. Petersburg had not witnessed a capital punishment."

Having had occasion of late to make many inquiries as to the operation of the criminal law in the several European states, I have found the greatest difference of statement in relation to capital punishment in Russia; and great difficulty in procuring accurate information, as the same facilities are not afforded through official sources as in other states in Europe. By some persons who have had opportunities of observation by residence in Russia, it is asserted that the capital penalty is often inflicted; while others assert that it is substituted by a punishment of greater severity, inasmuch as many criminals die under the knout, or almost immediately after it; and that others perish on the way to Siberia, or shortly after their arrival there. I find nothing more satisfactory than the general statement I have given. The abolition of the punishment of death is therefore nothing, if it is succeeded by a system of torture which brings only a more lingering and more horrible death. Schnitzler says (vol. ii. p. 317):—

"Though the law does not mention death, it is nevertheless frequently given by the knout: we must, therefore, not laud too highly the pretended sensibility of Elizabeth Pétrovna, who, in abolishing capital punishments in ordinary criminal cases, allowed this other punishment, which is much more barbarous and often followed by the same effect, to subsist. In what relates to political crimes, the pain of death is expressly maintained. People may still be torn in quarters in Russia, even as they may be impaled at Constantinople and broken alive on the wheel in Prussia—an enlightened country, where the most solid civilisation has penetrated into every class. . . . It is for none but the most obscure criminals that the atrocious punishments of the old Muscovite legislation are reserved: for instance, that of running the gauntlet; where honest soldiers are transformed into ignoble executioners, and blood runs no less plentifully than beneath the iron thongs of the knout."*

I am very desirous of obtaining further information, if any of your readers can help me to it. I cannot procure any statistical information as to the number of criminals condemned to the punishment of the knout, nor of those sent to Siberia. I believe that such returns are not obtainable.

While consulting the work of Schnitzler, I find the account of a horrible circumstance connected with the particular execution to which I have referred; and which strikes the mind with greater force, after the recent accident to the wretched man Atkinson at Durham. In the case under notice, Pestel, and four of his comrades, were doomed to death by the hangman. The remainder must be told by Schnitzler himself, who it appears was a spectator of what he describes:—

"They ascended the platform and the benches placed in front of the gibbet one by one, in the order allotted to them by their sentence. Pestel first occupying the right side, and Kakhofski the left. The fatal noose was then passed round their necks; and no sooner had the executioner stood aside, than the platform fell from under their feet. Pestel and Kakhofski were strangled immediately; but death refused, as it were, to reach the three others

* "The sufferer has to walk five or ten times through the open ranks of a thousand soldiers."

placed between them. The spectators then beheld a terrible scene. The rope being badly adjusted, slid over the heads of these unfortunate men, who fell altogether into the hole under the scaffold pell mell with the trap-door and the benches. Horrible contusions must have been the consequence; but as this lamentable accident caused no alteration in their fate, for the Emperor was absent at Tsarsko-Sélo, and nobody ventured to grant a respite, they had to suffer the agony of death a second time. As soon as the platform was replaced, they were again brought under the gibbet. Although stunned at first by his fall, Ryleieff walked with a firm step, but could not help uttering this painful exclamation: 'Must it be said that nothing succeeds with me—not even death!' According to some witnesses he exclaimed also: 'Accursed country, where they know neither how to plot, to judge, nor to hang!' But others attribute these words to Sergius Mouravieff-Apostol, who, like Ryleieff, courageously ascended the scaffold. Bestoujeff Rumine, doubtless more injured than the others, had not strength enough to support himself. It was necessary to carry him under the gibbet. A second time the fatal noose was placed round their necks, and this time without slipping."

I quote this account without being able to give any opinion as to its accuracy. It differs from the contemporaneous accounts of the execution in all matters but the fact of the three criminals being precipitated to the earth from the slipping of the noose.

T. B.

ADAM SMITH AND MANDEVILLE.

None of your readers, who are acquainted with Dr. Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, can fail to recollect the description in his first chapter of what is required for the accommodation of a common artificer. The passage is too long to be copied, and is so well known as not to require it. I refer to it at present because, in reading "A Search into the Nature of Society," by Mandeville, annexed to his Fable of the Bees, I have been struck with the following passage, which, in point of general character and expression, so much resembles Dr. Smith's description that I cannot help supposing that it must have suggested the passage in his work; if, indeed, the latter has not been in a great measure borrowed from it, and afterwards altered and extended. The passage is as follows:—

"What a bustle is there to be made in several parts of the world before a fine scarlet or crimson cloth can be produced! What multiplicity of trades and artificers must be employed! Not only such as are obvious—as woolcombers, spinners, the weaver, the clothworker, the scowrer, the dyer, the setter, the drawer, and the packer—but others that are more remote and might seem foreign to it—as the millwright, the pewterer, and the chymist: which yet are all necessary, as well as a great number of other handicrafts, to have the tools, utensils, and other implements, belonging to the trades already named. But all these things are done at home, and may be performed without extraordinary fatigue or danger. The most frightful prospect is left behind, when we reflect on the toil and hazard that are to be undergone abroad, the vast seas we are to go over, the different climates we are to endure, and the several nations we must be obliged to for their assistance. Spain alone, it is true, might furnish us with wool to make the finest cloth; but what skill and pains, what experience and ingenuity are required, to dye it of those beautiful colours! How widely are the drugs and other ingredients dispersed thro' the universe that are to meet in one kettle. Allow, indeed, we have of our own; argol we might have from the Rhine, and vitriol from Hungary—all this in Europe; but then for saltpetre, in quantity, we are forced to go as far as the East Indies. Cochenille, unknown to the ancients, is not much nearer to us, tho' in a quite different part of the earth. We buy it, 'tis true, from the Spaniards; but not being their product, they are forced to fetch it for us from the remotest corner of the New World in the East Indies. Whilst so many sailors are broiling in the sun, and sweltered with heat in the East and West of us, another set of them are freezing in the North to fetch potashes from Russia."

J. R. B.

Edinburgh.

THOMAS FULLER'S UNPUBLISHED EPIGRAMS.

In a copy of Crashaw's Steps to the Temple, with the Delights of the Muses, second edition, 1648, 8vo, which fell in my way about three years ago, I discovered, written upon the blank leaves, as a portion of the copy was printed on one side only, a large quantity of curious manuscript matter, consisting partly of excerpta from printed works, but partly of original and inedited compositions. Among these are upwards of fifty epigrams, chiefly upon religious subjects, by "Mr. Thomas Fuller," and I forward herewith some account of the collection, which, as I have little or no doubt that "Mr. Thomas Fuller" is identical with the church historian, cannot fail to be of interest to some of your readers:—

"EPIGRAMS BY M^r THO: FULLER.

1. On Adam.
2. On Noah, a Riddle.
3. On Leah.
4. On Joseph and his M^{rs}.
5. On Zipporah circum. her sons.
6. On Moses Strikinge y^e Rocks.
7. On the Batle with Amelecke.
8. On Joshuaah [sic].
9. On an Altar Ed. [?]
10. Sampson's Jawe Bone.
11. On Elijah takeu vp into Heaven.
12. On Zacheus.
13. On y^e Powder Plot.
14. On vaine Excuses.
15. On Gallants' Cloakes.
16. On Popish Interpretation of Scripture.
17. On Sin.
18. Whether Scripture or Tradition y^e Mother of Faith.
19. On Pope Innocent.
20. On Corn hoorders.
21. On Joseph's M^{rs}. [Different from No. 4.]
22. On Jacob.
23. On Paul's Journey to Damascus.
24. On y^e Philistines.
25. On Bugbears.
26. On Sampson.
27. On Jacob.
28. On Noah's Doue.
29. A Prayer.

30. On Pride in Cloaths.
31. On Musculus.
32. On the Men of Sodom.
33. On Ehud.
34. On Naboth accused.
35. On Jacob.
36. A Prayer.
37. On y^e Israelites in y^e Wildernes.
38. On Sampson's Weapons.
39. On Jephthas Daughter.
40. On Ely y^e Priest.
41. On Sampson and John Baptist.
42. On Christ lookinge on Peter. [With about a dozen more.]

In a different hand from the above are other epigrams, among which are several of an amatory cast. At the close of the volume occurs, with considerable appearance of having been written by the same person, who has composed or transcribed other pieces, the autograph of Dudley Lovelace, who has written his name a second time with an eye to a little jeu de mots, thus: Dudley Lovelasse, and this gentleman has apparently (for they are in the same hand, or a very similar one) copied out portions of his brother's Lucasta upon some of the spare leaves, with here and there a variation from the printed edition. On the recto of p. 96 there are four verses from Lucasta with the signature of Richarde Lovelace.

The true history of the little book before me might be curious and interesting, if it could be ascertained. There is surely ground for presuming that it has once been possessed by Dudley Posthumus Lovelace, the younger brother of the ill-fatal Cavalier Poet, Richard Lovelace, if not by the latter himself. I referred to the curiosity of the present copy of Crashaw in a note at p. 42 of my edition of the Poems of Richard Lovelace, 1864.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

RECIPES IN OLD MSS.

An old parchment oak-bound MS. copy of the Statutes, from Magna Charta to the Articuli Exon, has descended in my family, containing some singular and characteristic entries that may interest your readers.

It appears originally to have belonged —

“Ricus Utring, a brother of the Order of Eremitic Friars of St. Augustin, in the Convent of Waryngton, near Westchester (?)”

In process of time it descended to “Thomas Ernele,” probably an ancestor of my own, whose name appears, in a blank page in the middle of the book, in rather ominous connexion with that of “Susan Calley”; suggesting a contemplated union, at least, between those members of two very well-known old Wiltshire families.

In the blank pages at the end are the following curious recipes, written in a very good hand. Of some of the ingredients, however, in the first I am not quite sure: — “Colycompotus	iid.

Venykrecki	iiid.
Long pep	id.
Gr. Aynys	id.
Z. Bayes	iiid.
Lycorys	iid.
Agnès sede (?)	iid.
Z. Butt	id.

A gallon and a halffe off good Ale

“A drench ffor horsys; thys wul suffice iii horsys well.”

Then follows: —

“Thom's Rollys off Kynswode.”

“An erbe callyd ffymytory put yn a bundell, and sodyn w^t a coney or chekyns, and use hytt; and hyt ys good to Avoide a consumpcion.”

“A drenche ffor a horsse that hathe the glandres, or the Coffe.

“ffirst take Mystyldew that growythe on a Appull tree, ffor that is best; and take ii handfulls theroff, off the branche and levys to gether; ii handfulls of garlake clovys, and brose them yn a vessell ovyr the ffyer yn a pottell off stale ale, and sethe hyt to a quart. And then take and strayne hyt, and putt there in ii sponnefulls off powder off brymstone, ii sponnefulls off powder off lycoryse, and one sponnefull off powder off comyn, and then geve hyt yower horse to drynke warme. And aftur he hathe drynkyd, lett hym be softly laboryd ii or iii myles, and then sett hym uppe yn a warme stabull, and don hym w^t a good warme clothe, and sett a pan off colys as nere hym as ye can, to cast hym yn a swete. And then take good ale, oyle, and venygar, and meddyll them to gyther, and rubbe hym well there w^t all ovyer a gaynst the heyre, that yt may soke in to the skyn; and thus serve hym, and geve hym thys drynke iii tymes, one a day, and so therbe a whole dave and a nyght betweene evry drynkyng tyme. And then he schal voyde moche ffleme at hys moth and nose by great quantyte; wyche ffleme ys cause off hys desease, and thys schall heyle hym off hys Wynde.”

“Mem^d, hyt nede not to anoynte hym w^t oyle and vynegre, onles hys skyn stycke ffast to hys fflesh, and that wyll lose hytt.

“Mem^d, also, to geve yower horse aftur hys drynke sooden barley ffor hys gyvendur.”

The only other name I can find among a few more scribblings, is that of “Dorothe Smyth.”

C. W. BINGHAM.

LORD DERBY, GOETHE, AND MANZONI.

Reverting to a subject touched upon in your pages some years ago (1855), viz. Lord Derby's and Goethe's translation of Manzoni's Ode on Napoleon Bonaparte (“Cinque Maggio”), I wish to call the attention of Italian scholars to the rendering, in both cases, of two lines in the seventh stanza: —

“E ripensò le mobili
Tende, e i percossi valli.”

I have not Lord Derby's since printed (though not published) volume of translations to refer to; but I have seen it, and observed in it the same interpretation of the passage in question as your correspondent B. (1.) (“N. & Q.” 1st S. ix. 109.) quoted from memory: —

"He saw the quick struck tents again,
The hot assault—the battle plain," &c.

Goethe has —

"Da schaut er die beweglichen Zelten, durchwimmelte Thäler," &c.

About this last interpretation there can be no doubt whatever. Goethe has taken valli for the plural of valle, a valley or plain; and what I submit is, is he not wrong? Poetical licenses are scattered rather freely in Italian poetry, but I do not see the loophole by which percossi could make its plural feminine in i. And if not, the word valli is from vallo, a rampart, instead of valle, a vale; a solution which makes the expression percossi intelligible as well as grammatical.

I approach Lord Derby's translation with more hesitation, for he has given two descriptions to Manzoni's one. He has both a "hot assault" and a "battle-plain"; and perhaps no one but himself can say which of the two he intended to represent percossi valli, and which to fill up space or afford a rhyme. Some idea of something assaulted seems to have passed through his mind; at the same time that the battle-plain stands there most suspiciously, as the equivalent for valli.

If two such great men have really by some accident misinterpreted the valli in this case, it is a curious coincidence, and worth noticing.

As to commendation of Lord Derby's noble version of the Ode, it would be absurd to express it to any one who has had the good fortune of judging for themselves. Perhaps, however, only those who have made the same experiment and failed, in consequence of what seemed the almost insuperable difficulties surrounding the task, can fully estimate the beautiful as well as masterly touches which abound in this wonderfully successful effort. Among the unsuccessful labourers, I once ranked myself; but the labour was not lost which brought almost every word of the Ode under careful consideration. Of this, however, I shall be more satisfied if I find I am right in insisting on valli as the plural of vallo, and percossi valli as better translated by "stormed ramparts" than "durchwimmelte Thäler."

MARGARET GATTY.

Ecclesfield.

PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND.

The gratifying intelligence that such a fund is about to be raised suggests an inquiry, which does not appear to have hitherto received the attention of travellers in Palestine. We read, in 2 Kings xx. 20, that Hezekiah "made a pool and a conduit, and brought water into the city." Now, on a due consideration of the localities, it seems difficult to understand how that water could be brought into the city, unless it were by an aqueduct or by a pipe: the pipe first descending and then ascending, on the principle that water will rise to its own level. There seems no reason for concluding that Hezekiah erected an aqueduct. Was it then known to him, or was it known to those whom he employed to carry out his design, that the water, if conveyed in a channel properly secured, would rise to the elevation of the site from which it came, and so come up to where it was wanted? This idea is in a measure countenanced by the fact that the "conduit," by which Hezekiah is said to have brought the water into the city, is in Hebrew—מַעְיָן, from מַעַן, "to go up;" and it would be curious if it should appear on investigation, that the "conduit" was in fact a pipe, or channel, through which the water, first descending, ultimately ascended to the level at which it was required for use or distribution. This idea will not be found, on examination, to clash with 2 Chron. xxxii. 30.

It has been supposed that the Romans built aqueducts through ignorance of the hydrostatic principle—that a fluid will rise to a level at the opposite ends of properly adjusted pipes. Some, however, have imagined that the Romans were well acquainted with this principle, but were unable to give effect to it because unable to fabricate pipes of adequate strength and magnitude. It would appear that Hezekiah surmounted this difficulty by excavating the rock. SCHIN.

THE CAISTOR WHIP.—The following note, which is worth preserving, occurs in a Catalogue of Books now on sale by Puttick & Simpson. The Whip will be sold on Monday the 8th:—

"1416 THE CAISTOR GAD (or Whip).—An estate at Broughton, near Brigg (co. Lincoln?) is held by the following old and singular custom. On the morning of Palm Sunday, the gamekeeper, or some servant on the estate, brings with him a large gad, or whip, with a long thong; the stock is made of the mountain ash, or wicken tree, and tied to the end of it is a leather purse, containing thirty pence (said to have in it formerly thirty pieces of silver); while the clergyman is reading the first Lesson (Exodus ix.), the man having the whip cracks it three times in the church porch; and then wraps the thong round the stock, and brings it on his shoulder through the church, to a seat in the chancel, where he continues till the second Lesson is read (Matthew xxvi.); he then brings the gad, and kneeling upon a mat before the pulpit, he waves it three times over the clergyman's head (the thong is fastened as before observed), and continues to hold it till the whole of the Lesson is read, when he again returns to his seat, and remains till the Service is over. He then delivers the gad to the occupier of a farm called Hundon, half a mile from Caistor."

Perhaps you or some of your correspondents could throw light on the origin of this curious custom.

SPENCER HALL.

GABRIEL HARVEY AND SPENCER.—I forward to you, just as it was obligingly communicated to me by a literary friend, the accompanying memorandum of a MS. note by Gabriel Harvey discovered in the Bodleian. It came too late to find a place in the notes to Old English Jest Books. Gabriel Harvey says, that "Mr. Spensar gave him Howleglas, Skoggin, Skelton, and . . . , on 20 Dec., 1578, on condition he should read them over by a stated time." These are not the words of the note, but are its substance, and all that can be made out, as the writing is partly illegible.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

GABRIEL HARVEY'S "COMMONPLACE-BOOK."—I have before me what I judge to be the only remaining fragment of the commonplace-book of Gabriel Harvey. It consists, in its present state, of ten pages only. There are quotations from various authors, in English, &c.; but what renders it of peculiar value is that it preserves to us, by a lucky accident, the whole of an unknown and curious English poem, copied by Harvey in 1584 from an original, which must be presumed to have perished. The production in question is entitled—

"A View or Spectacle of Vanity: A Sober and Serious Moral Lesson, composed in an Hundred excellent Verses, as well for matter as stile very notable."

At the close, Harvey has written: "Incerti Auctoris, anno 1584." I conceive that it is one among the objects of "N. & Q." to place on record short notices of any inedited and uncatalogued English MSS. W. CAREW HAZLITT.

ALLAN RAMSAY.—On the fly-leaf of a copy of Allan Ramsay's Poems (2 vols., Edinburgh, 1727, 70), there is the following inscription:—

To Dr. Robinson, when at Edinburgh, July 30th, 1734.

"Now troth, dear Doctor, it is kind,
And shaws a cowthie creifauld mind
In you, who live sae far away,
On Brittain's sunny side of the Brae,
To dawt and clap a northren pow,
Owning his roundels easy row.
I own I like the scawpy height,
Where men maist sib to God's delight,
Yet pay my debts, and school my weans:
By canny conduct of my gains:
And fowk think that ane unko ferly,
'Cause poets play that part sae rarely!
Thanks to Queensberry and the rest,
Wha gave what biggit up my nest;
When Quarto volume chanc'd to get in Five hundreds frae the best in Brittain,
For which I'll chant, and shaw I'm gratefull, Till canker'd Eild make singing hatefull."

the original there is no pointing. Queens was Gay's Duke. By "Quarto volume," he means the subscription edition of his Poems, in W. CAREW HAZLITT.

L. SPENCER'S "BOCCACCIO."—This book, untable for the price given for it, was once owned by Mr. Payne, of Pall Mall. Anecdote regarding the sale is given in J., 3rd S. vii. 301. I have heard that the call of "Hats off!" was uttered when the book was brought forward, out of respect to the volume; and that, on Lord Blandford's apologising to Lord Spencer for his successful competition against him the latter observed, that it was quite unnecessary, as it had saved him from doing a very foolish thing.

FRANCIS TRENCH.

Islip Rectory.

CHAINED LIBRARIES IN PARISH VESTRIES.—How many church vestries are there in this kingdom known to be in possession, by bequest or otherwise, of libraries chained or fastened to the shelves? By the inclosed extract you will perceive that we have one such collection in our city:—

"THE CHAINED LIBRARY OF ALL SAINTS.—Many of our citizens are not aware that the vestry of the church of All Saints possesses an almost unique evidence of 'the dark ages,' when books were chained to the shelves, and a money pledge given before the sacred volume could be obtained for perusal. We refer to Dr. Brewster's Library, given to the parish in the last century. The books have been only once removed from their holding. This method of diffusing knowledge was only short-lived, it occurring in the time of a thrifty and generous churchwarden, who sold the books to a London bibliopoliſt at what was deemed a long figure, and the profit was intended to be carried to the year's receipt. The Hereford Journal, however, took up the matter in correspondence, and the books were saved from the impending confiscation. They have since remained on the shelves of the vestry. There are some interesting works in the collection, and a catalogue of them was published in the Journal at the time of their sudden removal to London. Luther's "Common-place Book" is one, as we heard the vicar remark, affording an interesting memento of the eminent man, who took so large a share in the bringing about of the Reformation. A very fine specimen of early printing (1541) in rubric and black-letter, came under our observation on Thursday; but the books are too thickly bedizened with dust to invite any but a book-worm to dive into their mysteries. The collection would form an excellent nucleus to a Free Library."

C. N.

Hereford.

BISHOPS' OATHS OF OFFICE.—Oath taken by the Bishop of Exeter in the early part of Queen Elizabeth's reign:—

"I, Wylliam Alley, Busshop of Exeter, do most humbly acknowledge and confesse your most excellent majestie to be my most true and undoubted Sovereigne Lady, and I utterlie renounce and refuse all obedience for anye thinge I possesse or enjoy, or hereafter shall possesse within anie your majesties realmes and domynions, to any foreyn power or potentate; and humbly confesse your majestie to be the supreme governor in all thinges as well ecclesiasticall as temporall within this realme, and with all obedience do make my homage for the temporalities and possessions of the Busshopricke of Exeter which I hold and enjoy; and I protest, by this my presente Othe, that I shall remayne your true, faythfull, and obedyent subjecte during my naturall lief, as God shall helpe me and the contentes of the booke touched by me. At Richemonde, the seconde day of August, 1560, and the seconde yere of your majesties most prosperous reigne.

"WILLIAM EXON."

The original of the above is on parchment, and is preserved among the Lansdowne MSS. in the British Museum.

G. A.
Barnsbury.

Queries.

MR. JOHN BOTRIE. — In Manning and Bray's Surrey, vol. iii. p. 681, is a list of those appointed "Triers" of the conduct of the clergy of the co. of Surrey, Feb. 16, 1647, one of whom was Captain Buttery of Dorking. Was he identical with John Botrie of Lincoln's Inn, and Marston St. Lawrence, co. Northampton? His will was proved April 14, 1654, by Eliz. Bootrye, his widow; and letters of administration were granted to John Buttrey of Lincoln's Inn, armiger of the estate of his brother Aug. 3, 1639. Eliz. Buttery, spin., by her will dated Dec. 8, 1642, leaves a legacy to her brother John Buttery of Lincoln's Inn; also—

"Unto the godly and religious ministers that have heretofore been plundered and pillaged by the cavilleers 20*l.*, and unto such souldiers as shall be maymed and wounded for and on the right and behalf of the parliament, 20*l.*; to be paid unto my brother-in-law, John Sedgwick the elder, B.D., and minister of St. Alphage, Cripplegate, for their use."

Can I ascertain if John Botrie was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn. ALBERT BUTTERY.
173, Piccadilly.

"CHRISTIAN BREADBASKET." — After the paper duty ceased to exist some years since, did a religious periodical, whose title remind us of the puritan era, ever appear under the designation of The Christian Breadbasket? which reminds us of those of Cromwell's time, such as A Shore for Heavy "Sterned" Christians; or Hooks and Eyes for Believers' Breeches, as appears in D'Israeli.

BREVIS.

THE COURT, 1730. — I am at present engaged in investigating a case of propinquity, which turns on the evidence of the birth of a child in London, 1728-30. The birth of this child does not appear to have been registered in London, though the mother was a lady moving in the court circles. Our only chance left of finding a clue seems to be that the birth may be noticed in some of the memoirs, letters, &c., in print or MS., which particularly refer to the gossip, tattle, and scandal in and about the court at that date.

I have tried a great many such in vain, but am unwilling to throw up the cards yet. Walpole and Lord Hervey are a little too late; the same applies to Bubb Dodington. Lady M.

Wortley Montague's letters are unfortunately deficient at the date in question. Are there any unpublished MSS. of hers anywhere? The Suffolk papers, both the printed and the MS. in the British Museum, have been ransacked to no purpose. Can the editor or any of his correspondents kindly suggest a source of information, such as I have indicated, either in print or MS.? P.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. — According to Parton's Life of Benjamin Franklin, the latter, while residing (1724-1726) in London as journeyman printer, lodged "in the street called Little Britain," and afterwards in Duke Street. Are the houses still standing, and where? S. W. P.

"GOD IS THE SEA OF LOVE." —

"God is the sea of love,
Where all my pleasures roll;
The circles where my passions move,
And centre of my soul."

This verse is found in Watts's Hymns in the hymn commencing "My God, my life, my love." It is attributed to Sir Thomas Browne, who lived before Watts. Can any reader inform me which of the two is the author? If my memory serves me, the verse is found in Religio Medici, but I am not sure. J. F.

GERVASE HOLLES. — I wish to be informed whether any part of this gentleman's collections for Lincolnshire and Notts has ever been printed. Of his MSS., forming several volumes, now among the Lansdowne MSS. in the British Museum, I am aware. But I am constantly meeting with quotations from Gervase Holles without its being stated whether it is the original MS. or some publication from which the quotations are made. More particularly I desire to know whether any of your readers can refer me to any full and finished printed account (taken from Gervase's manuscripts) of the families of Holles Earl of Clare, Densel, Musard, Clifton of Clifton, Freshville, and Kingston. J. E. J.

LAYSTONE ABBEY. — Did Turner, or any artist, at the beginning of this century, execute a drawing of Laystone Abbey, Suffolk? If so, has it been engraved? J. C. J.

PRINCIPAL LEE'S MSS. — At the sale of the MSS. of Principal Lee of Edinburgh University a few years ago, the following MS. was sold for a small sum —

"325. Scroll index to the Particular Register of Sasines, Inverness, Cromarty, and Sutherland, 1627-1690."

The purchaser will confer a great favour by communicating with me. F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

MANETHO. — This writer is generally believed to have lived about 280 B.C. in the reigns of Ptolemy Lagi and Philadelphus. It is also said that he was a priest of Heliopolis. Many of your readers are, however, probably aware that Hengstenberg, in his work entitled Die Bücher Moses und Aegypten (pp. 237-245, &c.), maintains, with great learning and good arguments, that Manetho never resided in Egypt; and also that he did not live earlier than about the commencement of the vulgar era. Can any one throw any additional light on his history? And what authority is due to those extracts from his writings which are given by Eusebius, Josephus, Plutarch, Julius Africanus, &c.?

J. DALTON.
Norwich.

THE NEW VERSION OF THE PSALMS was introduced into general use in consequence of the Order in Council of William III., December 3, 1696. At the end of the New Version there are several hymns, but the selection is not the same in all copies. By what authority have the changes in these hymns been made, and when did the hymns "My God, and is thy table spread," by Philip Doddridge, and "Hark! the herald angels sing," by Charles Wesley, first appear at the end of the New Version?
W. L. D.

EARLY METRICAL VERSION OF THE PSALMS.—Can you, or any of your readers, tell me whether the sixteenth century metrical version of the Psalms in the Inner Temple Library has ever been printed, or whether anything is known of its author? I enclose a transcript of the first psalm, on the chance of some of your readers recognising it:—

"Argumentum.

This psalme in sence } of men both good and bad:
Shew'th difference }
Yt shew'th their frutis }
Their hartis parutis } thir endis both glad and sad.

Psalm I. Beatus vir.

- " 1. Man blest is he: whose lyffe doth fle
To walke men's wyked featys:
And stondeth no daye [tyme]: in synners' waye
Nor syttith in skorners' seatys.
- " 2. But lovyth in wyl: in hart and skyl
The lordis good lawe and lore,
Yea daye and nyght: his lawe wil right
Revolve to kepe the store.
- " 3. And lyke is he: the plantyd tre
Nye ryvers set forsoth,
Who frutith in tyde: whose leavys abide,
Al prupper what he doth.
- " 4. Not so, not so: the wicked do [be]
Thel be lyke dust in wynd:
Both voyde and vayne: as chaffe is playn
From earth cast forth by wynde.
- " 5. Therfor these men: so wiked then
In Jgement shal not stond,
Nor synners be [rest]: in companye
With rightwise men of hond.
- " 6. For God doth knowe [see]: and wyl avowe
The waye of men vpright
Wher shal deraye: the croked waye [ways]
Of wiked men ful quyte.

"Oratio.

"O blisseed father: make vs to be as fruteful tree fore thi presence: so watryd bi the dewe of thi grace, we maye glorifie the bi the plentiousnes of swete fru our dayly conversation, through Christ."

F. J. FURNIVAL

ODE TO SHAKESPEARE.—In an old magazin read, when a boy, an ode to Shakespeare. It was a somewhat lengthy production, and full of the heroes of the mythology; indeed some one of the took Shakespeare to heaven, where every heathen deity made him some gift. The first two lines, I remember rightly, were—

"When Nature to Athens and Rome bid adieu, To Britain the goddess with ecstasy flew;"

and the last line of all was—

"One Shakespeare on earth, and one Jove in the sky."

Wanted, for a particular purpose, a reference where the entire ode may be found by M. C.

SHOOTER'S HILL.—Is there any good reason for supposing that Shooter's Hill, near Woolwich, is so called from its having once been much used for archery? In an act of Richard II. it is called Shetere's Held; and in Henry VIII.'s reign it is called Shutter's Hill? See Richardson's Greenwich.
F. A. E.

THE STYRING FAMILY.—Could you or any of your correspondents kindly give me any information as to the origin or history of this family? Misson, or Misterton, in Notts, seems to be their first settlement.
C. W. SINGLETON.
Leeds.

SULTANA.—Webster and Worcester agree in saying that this word means the wife of a sultan. But Hooper in Anastasia (i. 116) states that it is used to designate only the sultan's sisters and daughters, whom of course he cannot marry. Which definition shall we accept?
S. W. P.
New York.

TORCHLIGHT FUNERAL AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY.—There is said to have been a funeral by torchlight at Westminster some forty years since. Who was so buried, and is that the last instance of a funeral by night at Westminster Abbey?
T. L.

OLD WALL PAINTING.—The figure, of which I enclose a sketch, was found over the door of the south wall of a church now in course of restoration. It consists of a large circle with two diameters, each about five feet crossed at right angles, and in the upper right hand quarter a small circle filled by a star of eight points, each about three inches long. The whole is coloured red except the star, which is black. I shall feel greatly obliged to any of your readers who will suggest an explanation.
CPL.

WART STONE.—At Whitechurch, near Dublin, there is a large flat stone of irregular outline which a small (evidently artificial) excavation retains rainwater. The stone is known as the "wart stone," and it is locally believed that by immersing a wart-troubled finger in the water, the growth will be removed. Can any of your readers give me information about this superstition, or mention other localities in which a like belief obtains?

ACHENDE.

Dublin.

Queries with Answers.

FENIAN.—What is the origin of the name Fenian, applied to a section of the revolutionary party in Ireland?

ACHENDE.

Dublin.

[For the following explanation of this word we are indebted to our valued correspondent J. E. O'CAVANAGH, Esq. :—

This question was asked in the columns of the Times, October 20, 1863. It provoked three replies, from Hibernicus, Monkbarns, and George Ballentine. The note which Hibernicus then quoted from Moore's Irish Melodies, and which is affixed to the song commencing—

"The wine-cup is cffeling in Almhin's hall," gives the correct derivation, in my opinion, of the name by which those Irishmen, both in America, Ireland, and elsewhere are called, who aim at the overthrow of English dominion in Ireland, namely—

"The Finians, or Fenii, were the celebrated National Militia of Ireland, and derived their name from Fin, the son of Cumhal—pronounced Coosal."

Some of the readers of "N. & Q." may desire further information of this force and its leader. This celebrated warrior was of the royal line of Heremon, and son-in-law of King Cormac, A.D. 213—253, and hereditary general of the standing army of that monarch. Pinkerton, in his Inquiry into the History of Scotland, ii. 77, thus speaks of him :—

"He seems to have been a man of great talents for the age, and of celebrity in arms."

"It has been the fate of this popular hero," says Moore, in his History of Ireland, "after a long course of traditional renown in his country, where his name still lives, not only in legends and songs, but yet in the most indelible of scenery connected with his memory, to have been all at once transferred, by adoption, to another country (Scotland), and start under a new but false shape, in a fresh career of fame." The army, or rather the military order, of which Finn was the chieftain, was called the "Fiann of Erin." The word is used by Irish writers, as well as the peasantry, in a collective sense, and understood as the order of men called the "Fiann." Its plural, "Fianna," means bands or bodies of the Fiann. An individual member was styled "Feinnidhe." Should our modern Finians take the field, and remain true to the injunctions imposed on their ancient prototypes, though formidable to their male adversaries, the fair sex will have little to apprehend. There were four injunctions, Keating tells us, laid upon every person admitted into the order of the Fiann: the first, never to receive a portion with a wife, but to choose her for her good manners and virtues; the second was, never to offer violence to any woman; the third was, never to give a refusal to any mortal for anything of which one was possessed; the fourth was, that no single warrior of them should ever flee before nine champions. Though my own convictions have been thus submitted, it may be well to add that some archaeologists think the word Fiann comes from "Phenician." "It possibly may," says O'Mahony, who adds, "It is, however, just as likely to come from the same origin with Feadhach (pronounced Feeagh), i. e. a hunt, and to mean an order of hunters. Thus the name of a member of that modern German light cavalry corps, 'Jäger,' means hunter. The 'Fianna' seem to have done nothing but hunt and fight." From some of the Finian tales and poems now in course of publication—to the elucidation and vindication of ancient Irish history—one would imagine that they monopolised all the game, as well as all the fighting of Ireland in their day. A Finian warrior may thus be synonymous with the Latin "Venator" or the German "Jäger," and have no relationship at all with the word Phenician. The bands of Kerns and Galloglasses, supported by the Irish chieftains of later times, it is conjectured, have been affiliations of these more primitive Fianns, who are still, after the lapse of many centuries, so vividly and popularly remembered; while, singularly enough, the Kearns and Galloglasses of comparatively recent existence, have secured no perpetuity of fame in the poetry, prose, romances, or traditions of their country; and by the uneducated peasantry are now nearly forgotten.]

ANSAREYS.—Can any of your readers give me any information respecting the "Ansareys" and "Gindarics" mentioned in the third volume of Tancred, by B. D'Israeli, M.P.? I wish to know whether such a sect really exists, or did exist up to a short time; or are they only a creation of the novelist's brain?

W. A. M.

[The Ansareys, also called Ansarians, Ensarians (properly Nassaris and Ansayri), are a people of Syria. The territory occupied by them is that chain of mountains which extends from Antakia to the rivulet called Nahr-el-Kabir, or the Great River. The history of the origin of this people, though little known, is instructive. The following account is given in the words of a writer (Assemanni, Biblioth. Orientale), who has drawn his materials from the best authorities. "In the year of the Greeks, 1202 (A.D. 891), there lived, at the village of Nasar, in the environs of Koufa, an old man, who, from his fastings, his continual prayers, and his poverty, passed for a saint: several of the common people declaring themselves his partisans, he selected from among them twelve disciples to propagate his doctrine. But the magistrate of the place, alarmed at his proceedings, seized the old man, and confined him in prison. In this reverse of fortune, his situation excited the pity of a girl who was slave to the gaoler, and she determined to give him his liberty. An opportunity soon offered to effect her design. One day, when the gaoler was gone to bed intoxicated, and in a profound sleep, she gently took the keys from under his pillow, and after opening the door to the old man, returned them to their place unperceived by her master. The next day, when the gaoler went to visit his prisoner, he was extremely astonished at finding he had made his escape; and the more so since he could perceive no marks of violence. He therefore judiciously concluded he had been delivered by an angel, and eagerly spread the report, to avoid the reprehension he merited. The old man, on the other hand, asserted the same thing to his disciples, and preached his doctrines with more earnestness than ever." — Volney's Travels through Syria and Egypt, ii. 1—8, ed. 1787.

The Anasians are divided into several tribes or sects, among which are distinguished the Shamsia, or adorers of the sun; the Kelbia, or worshippers of the dog; and the Kadmonsia, who are said to pay a particular homage to that part in women which corresponds to the priapus; and who hold nocturnal assemblies, in which, it is said, after certain discourses, they extinguished the light, and indulge promiscuous lust. For other particulars of these people consult Burckhardt's Travels in Syria and the Holy Land, 155—158, 4to, 1822; Chesney's Survey of the Rivers Euphrates and Tigris, i. 542, ed. 1850; The Modern Syrians, ed. 1844, pp. 276—282, and "N. & Q." 1st S. ix. 169.]

CARLO BOTTA. — Where shall I find the best biography of this author? He was, I believe, a surgeon in Buonaparte's army of Italy, and was an Italian by birth. He was distinguished by several works of great merit in his native language, but of all, his Storia della Guerra dell'Indipendenza degli Stati Uniti d'America, 4 vols. 8vo, Milano, 1819, stands pre-eminent, and in this the conflict with the "Serapis" and the pirate Paul Jones's two ships, equal in size with the English frigate, on 23rd September, 1779, is described as graphically as any such combat we have on record. Sir Richard Pearson, who commanded our "Serapis," was afterwards promoted to be Lieut.-Governor of Greenwich Hospital.

INQUIRER.

[Carlo Giuseppe Botta was born at San Giorgio in Piedmont in 1766, studied medicine in the University of Turin, and took a doctor's degree in 1786. In 1796, after the first success of Bonaparte, he followed the French through their campaigns in Lombardy, and in the following year was present at Venice at the fall of that ancient republic. In June 1800 he was appointed member of the Consulta, or council of administration for Piedmont. When Napoleon resolved, in 1803, to unite, definitively, Piedmont to France, Botta was one of the deputations sent to Paris on the occasion. In 1804 he was elected deputy to the French legislative body. After the fall of Napoleon, he availed himself of his ample leisure in preparing for the press his History of the North American Revolution and War of Independence. In 1815, Napoleon's restored government appointed him Rector of the University of Nancy. He resigned his rectorship at the second Bourbon restoration, and was appointed Rector of the University of Rouen, an office he did not retain long, for in 1816 he was living at Paris without employment or pension. He now applied himself to write his great work, a contemporary History of Italy, during the French occupation, which he published at Paris in 1824, entitled Storia d'Italia dal 1789 al 1814, 4 vols. 8vo. Botta died in reduced circumstances at Paris in August, 1837. The longest biographical notice of this celebrated writer, with a list of his works, will be found in the Biographie Universelle, Nouvelle édition, v. 149, Paris, 1843.]

GARRICK'S BOOK-PLATE. — I was lately induced to buy a copy of Shakspeare, 10 vols. Tonson, 1728, by the book-plate. On a scroll is "David Garrick," above it an esquire's helmet; and for crest a panther's head holding a caduceus in its jaws. The whole is embedded in foliage, flowers, and shells. In the righthand corner is "S. W. inv. et sc."

Is this the book-plate of the great actor? What were his arms? F. R. C.

Rue Angoulême.

[The arms of David Garrick given in Burke's Armory, are "Per pale, or and az. on the dexter compartment a tower gu., and on the sinister, on a mount vert, a sea-horse ar. mane, fins, and tail, of the first; on a chief, gold, three mullets of the second. Crest—a mullet or." The following notice of his book-plate appeared in our 1st S. vii. 221: "The name, David Garrick, in capital letters, is surrounded by some fancy scroll-work, above which is a small bust of Shakspeare; below, and on the sides a mask, and various musical instruments; and beneath the whole, the following sentence from Menage: 'La première chose qu'on doit faire quand on a emprunté un livre, c'est de la lire, afin de pouvoir le rendre plutôt.'—Menagiana, vol. iv."]

ROAN. — What is the etymology of roan, the leather used in binding in imitation of morocco, and prepared from sheep-skin?

A FAITHFUL READER.

[In common parlance, when a book is spoken of as being bound in roan, we think the reference is primarily to the colour, just as when we say "a roan horse." In this latter sense the French have the word rouan, formerly roun, which seems to be the immediate source of our English roan.]

TRÈS, THE FRENCH COMPARATIVE. — Does this literally mean three times, as, for instance, très bon, thrice good — that is, excellent, superlatively good? Très hardi, very bold, exceedingly audacious. GALLUS.

[This is a question which French scholars do not appear to have yet settled among themselves. Some of them seem to be quite satisfied that très, used to express the superlative, does literally signify thrice, so as to be the true equivalent of ter, or trís. In support of this view they cite such Greek words as τρισάβιος, τρισυδαμνών, and τρισμέγιστος. Others, however, maintain that the true root of trís is trans, citing the example of transpassare, which in Fr. becomes trépasser; in Old Fr. trespasser.]

Replies.

NEW SHAKSPEARE EMENDATION.

(3rd S. vii. 315.)

It is fortunate, in regard to the question which MR. SAWYER has raised to my emendation of the line in Brutus's soliloquy (Julius Cæsar, Act II. Sc. 1.), that there is no doubt as to the meaning of the speech itself. The question merely relates to the single line, and the removal of an evident corruption. Of that line we have now (including my own and MR. SAWYER's) four readings, namely,

"For if thou path, thy native semblance on."—Folio.

"For if thou put thy native semblance on,"

Coleridge.

"For if thou pall thy native semblance o'er,"

Heraud.

"For if thou walk, thy native semblance on,"

Sawyer.

MR. SAWYER has himself disposed of Mr. Coleridge's reading; but his own is equally untenable. "Walk" by itself is certainly an incomplete phrase; the sense requires "walk forth," or "walk abroad." He likewise mistakes my meaning. I have nowhere said, "If thou hide thy monstrous visage in smiles and affability," that "not Erebus itself were dim enough to hide thee;" but precisely the contrary. My words are, "That the true mode of concealment is to let their naked faces (their 'native semblance') be seen, and only to hide 'the monstrous visage' of conspiracy in smiles and affability."

MR. SAWYER mistakes the meaning of the phrase "native semblance." I have explained that it simply means "naked faces," as the context proves. Lucius enters to Brutus, announcing the arrival of Cassius and his companions:—

"Bru. Do you know them?

"Luc. No, sir; their hats are plucked about their ears,
And half their faces buried in their cloaks,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favour."

Whereupon Brutus exclaims:—

"They are the faction. O Conspiracy!
Shamest thou to shew thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most free? O! then, by day
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage?"

Now here the term "monstrous visage" means the naked faces which they had "buried in their cloaks," the "dangerous brow" which they were ashamed to show. But thus to cover the face is to excite suspicion. Brutus rules that it is better to wear an open brow, a smiling and affable countenance. To attempt to hide their purpose in any other way is worse than vain, it is full of peril. No cavern—not even Erebus would avail to ensure the success of the attempt, should they persist in mantling up their naked features,—in other words, "pall their native semblance o'er." It is true that what belongs to the concrete conspirators is in the text transferred to the abstract personification, thou and thy being used for they and their; but it is a license frequently employed by Shakspeare, the prosopopeia being simply in such cases indicated as a slight elevation of the style, and not intended for a perfect figure.

The number of synonyms for the countenance in this speech and that of Lucius is remarkable. Take them in order: "faces"—"favour"—"dangerous brow"—"monstrous visage"—"native semblance." In like manner, we have "a cavern dark enough"—leading ultimately to "Erebus dim enough." This is the wonted genetic process of Shakspeare's style, by reason of which, as Coleridge has shown, each speech or even sentence in the dramatist's works frequently becomes "a living organism,"—that is, a product naturally generated and not mechanically constructed. It is quite probable, therefore, when Brutus recurs to Lucius' statement of the conspirators coming with "their faces buried in their cloaks," that he should so far idealise it as to express the same fact, by the line—

"For if thou pall thy native semblance o'er."

We thus see how the line was generated. I may mention that it was not by guess, but by intuition, that the line as amended occurred to me.

Coleridge evidently mistook the meaning of "native semblance." He had in his mind the likeness with which Conspiracy was born, and associated this with a mantled countenance, as if, like Minerva from the head of Jove, this malign deity had sprung to birth already equipped in appropriate costume. And, truly, a sculptor might well represent Conspiracy as a goddess with a muffled face: but Shakspeare had no such idea, for there is nothing in the context to generate it. An artificial poet might, indeed, have dragged in such an image by the head and shoulders, but this is not Shakspeare's "creative way," whose works in whole and in part are "living organisms," not mechanical structures. JOHN A. HERAUD.

ORIGIN OF THE WORD SUPERSTITION.

(2nd S. v. 125, 242; vi. 301; 3rd S. i. 243, 335, 391, 475; ii. 17, 234, 516.)

Although the impression is very prevalent that superstitio means quid nimis, that is, that super is the principal element, something excessive or above the standard of right (cf. Riddle's Bampton Lectures, p. 434, sq.), and its being used as the equivalent of θεοσιμωρία appears favourable to this view, I cannot agree with your excellent correspondent EIRIONNACH, when he writes:—

"It might be said that when the doctrine of the Soul's immortality was first introduced amongst the ancient Romans, they who first embraced it and believed that they should survive death were called Superstites and Superstitiosi, or Survivors; this is far more probable than most of the derivations assigned for Superstitio, and yet it has not an historical leg to stand on." (2nd S. vi. 301.)

So far from the definition of Superstition being groundless and wanting in historical foundation, I believe that in his reflections on the consecration of the image of his lamented daughter, Tullia, Cicero did himself acknowledge this cultus to be both nominally and really vana superstition.

"M. Tullius," remarks Lactantius, "who not only was a perfect orator, but philosopher, and indeed the sole imitator of Plato, in that book in which he sought consolation for himself after the death of his daughter, hesitated not to declare that the deities who received public worship had been men. . . . Within a few lines he has imparted to us two facts. For whilst he professed he would consecrate the image of his daughter in the same way their statues and images were of old consecrated, he both inculcated that they were deceased men, and exhibited the origin of this vain superstition."—De Falsa Religione, cap. xv. p. 67, edit. Paris, 1748.

Again, the Christian Cicero observes:—

"Wherefore Cicero admitted it was without limitation evident, that we may infer the same thing respecting Jupiter and the senior gods; that if our forefathers consecrated their memory, for the same reason he designed to consecrate his daughter's image and name; the mourners should be pardoned, but the believers (in this superstition) can not. For who so senseless as to think that through the consentient placitum of innumerable dotards the heaven can be opened to the dead? or that any one can confer on another what he does not himself possess?"—Ibid. p. 69.

The piety of Æneas he shows to have been superstition only:—

"An potest aliquis dubitare quomodo religiones [sive superstitiones] deorum sint institutæ, cum apud Maronem legat Æneæ verba socii imperantis:—

"Nunc pateras libate Jovi, precibusque vocate Anciæm genitorem?"

"Cui non tantum immortalitatem, verum etiam ventorum tribuit potestatem," p. 66.

It is satisfactory to find my etymological suggestion (2nd S. v. 242) confirmed by Bp. J. Taylor in his Sermon On Godly Fear, quoted by EIRIONNACH (3rd S. i. 391), though the latter supposes the term refers to the survivors and their intense feeling for the departed as shown in the old θεοσιμωρία, or deification, in prayers for the dead, and the oriental honour performed to spirits of their ancestors. "Hence came the etymology of Superstition: it was a worshipping or fearing the Spirits of their dead heroes, quos Superstites credebant," &c.—Bp. Taylor, ut supra. Cf. Cicero, Pro Murena,—

"Utrisque Superstitibus presentibus. Id est, sanis et incolumibus, ideoque presentibus. Qua in re id verbum a veteribus usurpatum fuisse Nonius Marcellus scribit. Superstitibus igitur est sanis et incolumibus, ideoque presentibus." Sylv. edit. Amstelodami, 1696, p. 41.

That the words superstitio and superstitiosus were employed as terms of ridicule by materialists is, I think, supported by the authorities above cited, Cicero and Lactantius. I beg further to remark that, from the peroration of Cicero's magnificent Oration for Archias, he appears to have substantiated what he apprehends to be the Utopia of immortality by the ambitious expectation of posthumous fame.

"He cared not for his life resumed in heaven, He'd lived to ev'ry end for which 'twas given."

Even granting that Cato and Cicero were convinced of the important doctrine of the soul's separate existence in a future state, we are not justified in attributing the same belief to the generality of his contemporaries. In the celebrated words of Tacitus: "If in another world there is a pious mansion for the blessed; if as the wisest men have thought, the soul is not extinguished with the body," we may observe he says, ut sapientibus placet, not plerisque.

A Christian only could confidently maintain—

"Nec dissolvetur anima dissoluto corpore, nec eo pereunte peritura est. Sed vitam sibi propriam possidens, manet superstes et immortalis, futura capax miserie aut felicitatis."—Burnetius, De Statu Mortuorum et Resurgentium, p. 41, 1733.

"The ancient Hindus believed in immortality and in personal immortality, and we find them in the Veda praying to their gods that they might see their fathers and mothers again in the bright world to come. We can hardly imagine such a prayer from the lips of a Greek or a Roman, though it would not surprise us in the sacred groves of ancient Germany. What a deeply interesting work might be written on this one subject—on the different forms which a belief in immortality has assumed among the different races of mankind!"—"On Manners and Customs," a review of Researches into the Early History of Mankind, and the Development of Civilization, by Edw. Burnet Tylor, in The Times of April 21, 1865.

It will perhaps be objected that Lactantius used the word referred to in its common acceptation as opposed to impietas; but it must be acknowledged that he probably designed to include this original or etymological signification here proposed; inasmuch as the lesson which he says ought to be derived from the bereaved father's cultus was this—not that the worshippers were θεοσιμωρες, but that the honours paid to these consecrated individuals implied an affectation of belief that the mortui were superstites, incolomes, presentes.

BIBLIOTHECAR. CHETHAM.

HERCULES: DANTE.

(3rd S. vii. 254, 305.)

I have read with attention the reply of W. F. P. to my query on this subject; on which he will believe, I hope, that I did not write without due consideration of Christ's descent into Hell, to which Dante refers so pointedly at the end of canto viii. But the invader of Hell, in canto ix. asks the fiends—

“Perchè ricalcitate a quella voglia
A cui non potete il fin mai esser mozzo,
E che più volte vi ha cresciuto doglia?”

substantially meaning, “Why do you infernal powers resist that will whose consummation can never be imperfect, and which has more than once increased your punishment?” This implies, I venture to believe, that there had been, under divine sanction, several invasions of Hell (besides our Lord's), which the fiends had vainly opposed in such a way that they had suffered for their temerity. In fact Virgil himself had been to the lowest circle (ver. 25 to 31 of the canto discussed, the 9th), and had encountered some resistance from the demons in Malebolge (c. xxi. v. 63). Hence we need not imagine (on Dante's authority) that the omnipotent Visitor of Hell added to His work the (for Him) paltry exploit of chaining Cerberus, on which performance we may more becomingly leave Hercules alone to plume himself. Furthermore, the object of our Lord's Descent was to lead away the spirits of Adam, Abel, and the others who had fulfilled the conditions of salvation under the dispensations previous to the Christian; hence it does not appear that He went further into Hell than the First Circle, or that He was resisted anywhere else than at the Upper Gate, described in canto iii., and subsequently mentioned in canto viii., sub finem. We can hardly be called on to imagine that the conflict was carried into the third circle (to which Cerberus was attached), or that Cerberus was allowed to quit his bounds and ascend to the scene of action. I do not know what notions the author of Piers Ploughman may have entertained respecting the history or mystery to which I have had to refer; but I never heard that Dante, or any of Dante's commentators, had consulted him.

I have been told that the words “del Ciel Messo,” in v. 85, refer distinctly to an angel. But the “Messo di Dio” of Purgatory, c. xxxiii. v. 44, is always understood to be a man acting under the Divine sanction.

Will you now permit me a digression? In a recent review of Mr. W. Rossetti's Dante's Comedy, it is remarked obiter that the phrase, c. i., v. 20—“Che nel lago del cuor m'era durata.

becomes nonsense in Cayley's rendering,—

“Which in the lake, even my heart, had stay'd,” while Mr. Rossetti's—

“The which within my heart's lake had endured,” preserves the substance, though not the spirit, of the original. I have vainly endeavoured to imagine, or to get the irresponsible reviewer to explain to me what substantial difference there can be between “my heart's lake,” and “the lake, even my heart.” Will any of your correspondents on the Italian poet, or on the English language, help me to solve this difficulty?

C. B. C.

LYNCHETS, OR SHELVES, IN WILTSHIRE.

(3rd S. vii. 241, 301, 330.)

I had yesterday the pleasure of inspecting the most curious artificial terraces in this vicinity, and also comparing them with the almost exhausting notices of such earthworks in Chambers's History of Peebleshire, p. 39, et seq., wherein reference is made to a remarkable instance recorded by Gordon in his Itinerarium Septentrionale, p. 114.

To those who are accustomed, like myself, to traverse the hills of the Lowland Highlands of Scotland, the idea that shelves like these were formed by the passages of sheep or cattle only excites a smile. We have thousands, I might almost say millions, of the tracks made by those animals, the ovines being quite distinct in character from the bovines, and both from the shelves and terraces in question, of the artificial nature of which Chambers gives us the uncontradictable proof, that in the instance of one on Arthur's Seat, near Edinburgh, it is like those on the Rhine, faced with rude masonry.

Every hill in this district, however, gives us evidence of the extension of cultivation to a height we would not dream of attempting now. And why? Labour was cheap in those days, and artificial manures unknown. The manure that they had was applied to some small patch of ground round the homestead; while year after year virgin soil, whenever it could be conveniently found on the holding, was broken up, and then again let run to grass. Where then the inclination was such that the plough could be used that implement was employed. Where, however, the slope was too steep, and the soil at the same time rich, the exposure being also favourable, terraces were gradually formed by the spade, very much in the way that what are called “lazy beds” in this district are to the present hour.

(GEORGE VERR IRVING.

Culter Mains, April 26, 1865.)

It is evident that these terms are applied to two very different features of the land, and that the “shelves” of Devon and Gloucestershire are not of the same character as those of Wilts, to which Cobbett alludes. Lynchets are paths along the hill sides, trodden by sheep and cattle in the way to their pasture grounds; shelves are broad terraces following the contour of the hills of the chalk formation, and which are occasionally, where the ground permits, brought under cultivation, but from their inaccessible situation remain more frequently uncultivated. They are well-known features of the landscape to such as, like Mr. GARBETT and myself, are familiar with the scenery of Wilts and Dorset, and no doubt we have speculated at times in common on the causes of their formation, and with various conclusions; but as for myself I do not hold with the opinion that the lynchets have an archaeological significance. In some localities they certainly assume very much the appearance of artificial ramparts, and may possibly have been used in primitive ages for purposes of defence, but closer observation leads me to conclude that the idea of artificial construction must be abandoned, and that they are, in fact, the work of nature, not of man. The most plausible explanation of their origin that occurs to me is, that they may be of the nature of raised beaches, indicating successive stages of that great geological process which effected the gradual elevation of the chalk above the then surrounding ocean. This hypothesis, however, requires confirmation. W. W. S.

MISTLETOE (3rd S. vii. 76, 157, 226, 326.)—A rejoinder to J. A. P. will, I trust, be allowed me, as my last on the subject, as other more important occupations preclude their further interruption.

The discussion arose upon the query of A. A. as to the meaning and derivation of the word mistletoe, and J. A. P., entirely ignoring Pliny's account of its meaning at his time in Gaul, gave only that writer's account of its propagation from a previous chapter, thus travelling out of the record; to which I endeavoured to call his attention.

In his rejoinder, however, Pliny's knowledge is seemingly disavowed, contrary to what I think has been the invariable opinion, not only of contemporaries (he refused for his MSS. cccc millibus summum, equal to 32427.); and I need not repeat the encomiums of posterity, down to the opinion I have given of the late Sir Francis Palgrave, who first taught me his knowledge of German. It cannot therefore be denied that Pliny did not know the form and meaning of the indigenous word. Whatever Pliny's private opinion of the injurious effect of the parasite might be is here nothing to the purpose. In the passage I cited, the Druids are said to have held a directly different view—to have considered it of the most potent efficacy, which J. A. P.'s exposition of his own favourite word virgulam criminis virtutis ex-actis expresses, and which great repute, if we could not gather from our own Christmas festive observance, may be found in one of the most celebrated recitals of the Edda, where the Mistletoe is the only herb potent enough for the arm of Loke to slay the best-beloved son of Odin, the mild Baldur. As for the indigenous form of the word, it is, I believe, an etymological axiom that when the consonants—the bones and sinews of a word, disregarding the vowels, which are merely the filling in and covering of the frame—have a significance in a tradition, those consonants are the true root. Omnia sanantem would certainly be more literally expressed in German by all-heil, but, as J. A. P. admits, there is no significance in these words to the plant in question; there is this requisite, however, in mistel, which, as a contracted form of meist-heil(sam), is a true exponent of Pliny's version, and consequently the indigenous term. WILLIAM BELL, Phil. Dr.

6, Crescent Place, W.C.

ADVERBS IMPROPERLY USED (3rd S. vii. 152, 225.)—"Oh, she is very poorly;" "Thank you, she is very nicely."

What are we to say of these two expressions, one of which has been admitted into use, the other is knocking at the door? P. S. C.

SOBRIQUETS OF REGIMENTS (3rd S. vii. 4, 251.)—With reference to G.'s question, I have referred to the official Army Lists from 1754, the earliest date from which they exist, and find no trace of the 25th Regiment having ever borne the name of "Edinburgh." Until the year 1782 it had no other designation than its number. In that year I find "The Sussex" interlined in MS., and in the following years printed. It continued to be called by this name until 1805, when Lord George Lennox, the colonel, died. The Hon. Charles Fitzroy was appointed colonel, and the designation of "The Sussex" was transferred to the 35th Regiment in lieu of "The Dorsetshire," which that regiment had borne for twenty-five years. On 14th May, 1805, a letter was addressed to the colonel, acquainting him, "That His Majesty has been pleased to order that the Regiment of Infantry under your command shall in future be styled the 25th Regiment, or the King's Own Borderers."

I have not been able to find the authority for the designation "The Sussex" as applied to the 25th Regiment. JOHN MACLEAN.

Hammersmith.

The 97th, "the Celestials," from the light blue facings.

2nd Dragoon Guards, "Queen's Bays."

"The Eniskillins" and the "Carbineers" seem to be omitted from the list. The 33rd are certainly "The Havercake Lads." Are not the 2nd Life Guards the "Nulli Secundus?"

ANON.

THE O'CONNORS OF KERRY (3rd S. vii. 280).—X. Y. X. will find a genealogy of the O'Connors of Kerry in the first part of Mr. R. F. Cronnelly's Irish Family History, now in course of publication by Messrs. Goodwin, Son, and Nethercott, Dublin. A work valuable to Irish historical students, lately noticed in "N. & Q."

JOHN MACLEAN.

Hammersmith.

THOMAS MAY, DRAMATIST AND HISTORIAN (3rd S. vi. 286).—The arms borne by him were, Gu. a fesse betw. 8 billets or. The crest was out of a ducal coronet or., a lion's head gu. The family first came into Sussex from Kennington, Kent, on the marriage of John May with Alice Shoywell of Etchingham.

W. D. C.

HOG FEAST (3rd S. vii. 295).—This custom, now nearly obsolete, prevailed in parts of the West Riding of York under the name of Bedlam Feast. It may have had its origin from the same cause as the hog feast, but at one I was invited to, the host dispensed with our assistance in salting the flitches and hams. Our servant (a native of Barnsley) tells me that her mother has a "spit" called a "Bedlam-spit," consisting of a number of hooks, one above the other, tied to a rod of iron, with wire, upon which the "offal" parts were hung to roast. What may be the derivation of the word "Bedlam" in connection with this feast I do not know.

A. GOLDTHORP.

Wakefield.

A very pretty illustration on this subject will be found in the fourth part (Herbst) of Ludwig Richter's Für's Haus, published at Leipzig in 1861 or 1862.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

DISSOLUTION OF RELIGIOUS HOUSES (3rd S. vii. 94).—Dugdale in his Mon. Angl., vol. vi. of Cayley and Ellis's edition, gives a full account of the possessions of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. The outlying societies of the Hospitallers were called Commanderies, those of the Templars being distinguished as Preceptories.

CPL.

"NO MAN IS A HERO TO HIS VALET DE CHAMBRE" (3rd S. vii. 150, 309).—J. M. K. inquires about the Antigonus, whose saying I forwarded to "N. & Q." I found it in the following passage of William Penn's No Cross, No Crown (p. 305, ed. 1806), which I copy out in full:—

"Antigonus being taken sick, he said, 'It was a warning from God to instruct him of his mortality.' A poet flattering him with the title of the Son of God, he answered, 'My servant knows the contrary.' Another sycophant telling him, that the will of kings is the rule of justice. 'No,' saith he, 'rather justice is the rule of the will of kings;' and being pressed by his minions to put a garrison into Athens to hold the Greeks in subjection, he answered, he had not a stronger garrison than the affections of his people."

I believe that this special Antigonus was the King of Macedonia, who was the cotemporary and correspondent of Zeno; and if we may judge from a letter preserved by Stobæus, and also to be found in the work above quoted, the sayings here given seem very much to suit his character.

FRANCIS TRENCH.

Islip Rectory.

YEW TREES CALLED PALMS (3rd S. vii. 306).—Looking over the accounts of the churchwardens of Woodbury, I find the following:—

"Memorandum, 1775.—That a Yew or Palm Tree was planted in the church yard, y^e south side of the church, in the same place where one was blown down by the wind a few days ago, this 25th of November."

Signed by the churchwardens and eight parishioners.

H. T. E.

DALYELL'S "SCOTTISH POEMS" (3rd S. vii. 254.)

Haly hag matins.—"Halyoch (gutt.)," according to Jamieson, is "a term used to express that strange gabbling noise people make who are talking in a language we do not understand.—Gall." The Celtic word Goilemach signifies prating, tattling.

Foster.—Celtic Foisteachair, a hireling. I think, but cannot be sure, that I have heard the word foster applied to a steward or overseer of workers in the south of Scotland, where wood-foster was a common term for a forester—one who had the charge of woods. In this case foster may be merely a corruption of forester; but why wood-foster?

Half mark steikis.—May not this be the same as hamart steiks, home-made clothes? See Jamieson, Hamart and Steiks.

Tottis russet.—Tots or taitis, that is, locks of wool or hair; russet or rushit, from rush—diarrhoea. These rushit, or rushid, locks are cleared away from the clean parts of a sheep's fleece; and are, or rather were, often scoured and manufactured into cloth, blankets, or stockings for home use.

A cott of kelt.—Sibbald (Chronicles of Scottish Poetry) explains the word kelt to mean "cloth with a frieze, commonly made of native black wool."

Cashmaries, according to Jamieson, "fish carriers, or people who drive fish from the sea through the villages."

Bryde.—Bred, brod: a board, a shelf (P).

Bedene.—Unless this is bidding, command, I know not what it means.

Duschet, Dussic (Dulset?).—A musical instrument. See Jamieson, Scot. Dict.:—

"He toned his dussie for a spring."—P. 815.

"Vpon his duschet vpe he played."—P. 817.

ANON.

THOMAS BILBIE (3rd S. vii. 240).—The Bilbies were a firm of bellfounders at Chewstoke, Somerset, and at Collumpton, Devon, in which counties, as also in Dorset, Gloucester, and Wilts, their bells are found. Their name was Thomas, 1794.

1766; Abraham, 1760; William, 1780-1783; and Thomas, 1791-1805. The earliest date occurs in an inscription on a bell at St. Peter's, Dorchester:—

"Mr Renaldo Knapton saw me cast the 21st Sept^r 1734. Mr Daniel Arden, Mr. Joseph Gigger, Ch^{wardens}. Tho. Bilbie cast all these six bells. Ring to the praise of God."

A curious inscription occurs at Kenton, Devon:—

"T. Bilbie cast all we, 1747."

See the Rev. W. C. Lukis's Account of Church Bells. Parkers, 1857. A most interesting work on the subject. CPL.

CLINT HILLS (3rd S. vii. 323.)—This should be spelt Clent. I am not sure if Umbra (Mr. Charles Clifford) and F. C. B. mean the same place. Umbra, no doubt, refers to Clent Hill in this neighbourhood, on the top of which are four stones of immemorial antiquity, placed in a slight artificial cavity. It is, I believe, generally supposed that they are Druidical, and of the same character as those on Stonehenge; but there is no record about them, and only a foolish legend, probably not very ancient, calling them Ossian's tomb.

LYTTELTON.

Hagley.

THE THIRD PLAGUE OF EGYPT (3rd S. vii. 297.) Your respected correspondent, J. DALTON, in an interesting note on this subject, seems inclined to adopt the theory of Dr. Kalisch and others, who have argued that gnats and not lice were the "little animals" that visited the Egyptians in the third plague. It will be borne in mind, however, that the plagues of Egypt were of a remarkably distinctive character, directed with a punitive virulence and force against local peculiarities and superstitions, and to shock local faith. The flies of the fourth plague we know were especially calculated to wound the idolatrous sensibilities of the people: if such an effectual instrument in fulfilling this special purpose, is it probable that a torment would have been prepared so similar in character to its immediate predecessor? Moreover, the expression is remarkable; it is said that "the dust of the land became lice in man and in beast;" gnats, it is true, especially those of the mosquito kind, would be a terrible scourge, but lice would be a still sorer visitation, afflicting the flesh, and at the same time holding up to the Egyptians a shocking and loathsome picture of their uncleanness.

F. PHILLOTT.

To the authority of Dr. Kalisch may be added that of Dr. Davidson (Introduction to the Old Testament, vol. I. (1862) p. 220), who takes the word commonly rendered lice as meaning marsh gnats. The same writer is of opinion that the fourth plague consisted -- "is of the beetle, i. e. Blatta orientalis, however, that "many of the dog-fly." Q.

PHILLIPS FAMILY (3rd S. iv. 230.)—The subject of your correspondent's query was the son of Christopher Phillips. See Savage's Genealogical Dictionary of the First Settlers of New England, iii. 410. It is to be regretted that nothing more is known of one whose descendants are so respectable and numerous in America. S. W. P. New York.

BOOKBINDING (3rd S. vii. 138.)—Some valuable remarks on this subject are contained in the preface to the Catalogue of the Choicer Portion of the Magnificent Library formed by M. Guglielmo Libri, London, 1859. See also the splendid work, Monuments Inédits ou peu connus, faisant Partie du Cabinet de Guillaume Libri, London, 1862. S. W. P.

New York.

BARLEY (3rd S. v. 358; vi. 481; vii. 84, 162, 285.)—Considerable information as to this word will be found in Jamieson's Scotch Dictionary, sub voc. "Barla-breikis, Barla-fummil, and Barley." Barla-fumill, in his secondary sense of a fall, occurs in a letter from Sir Robert Moray to the Earl of Lauderdale, in August 1663. Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 23,118, f. 52. GEORGE VERR IRVING.

May not this be a corruption of Byrlady or Barlady as it used to be written? e. g. Byrlady, I claim this! Byrlady, I shall have half! Byrlady, I do this! or as a small boy ought to say, Barley me this! Barley ha'avs! Barley! (suiting the action to the word). J. WETHERELL.

THE BELL OF ST. CENEU, OR ST. KEYNA (3rd S. vii. 297.)—Some years ago I bought a bell of this description from a shepherd on the borders of Salisbury Plain. It had been used as a sheep bell. It is not so large as the indicated size of that of St. Keyna. I have, however, seen one as large in the private museum of a friend in Northamptonshire, which had been used as a cattle bell. I forget whether he got it in Northamptonshire or Scotland. My bell is made of sheet iron, hammered into the rude form described, and rivetted, with clapper, and a loop for the handle. It is also imperfectly coated with brass. Such bells, though fashioned after the most ancient type, have still been made in modern times. I understand they were coated with brass in the following manner:—When the iron part was completed, the workman bound the bell round and round in various directions with thin brass wire. This done, he submitted it to the heat of the furnace, when the brass melted, and ran over the surface of the iron. Such bells, though getting scarce, are met with in the great sheep grazing districts. They are being superseded by the common house bells. As a concluding paragraph, I would ask, whether the bell of St. Keyna has been preserved, and if so, where? P. HUTCHINSON.

"ONE STEP FROM THE SUBLIME TO THE RIDICULOUS" (3rd S. vii. 280.)—This saying, generally attributed to Napoleon I., occurs in the writings of a too-noted Englishman, Thomas Paine: of a date prior to any supposable appropriation of it by the great emperor. Paine says:—

"The sublime and the ridiculous are often so nearly related, that it is difficult to class them separately. One step above the sublime makes the ridiculous; and one step above the ridiculous makes the sublime again."

Possibly this is but a re-echo of the idea of Fontenelle. B.

LETTERS OF ALEXANDER KNOX AND HANNAH MORE (3rd S. vii. 323.)—ABBEA will find the three letters to the late Dr. Miller in the Church of England Magazine (1849), vol. xxvi. pp. 200, 266. B. E. S.

CURIOUS NOMENCLATURE (3rd S. vii. 322.)—Should you be disposed to adopt the suggestion of your correspondent OWEN TUDOR of a list of curious names, I beg to inform you that a few years ago this town could boast of four surgeons in active practice, who bore the appropriate names of Sharp, Keen, Steel, and Hardy. The first and two last are still living, but the second fell a victim to his efforts in the relief of the poor during an irruption of Asiatic cholera. M. D.
Warrington.

SPUR MONEY IN BELFRIES (3rd S. vii. 324.)—Quoting from the two General Indexes of "N & Q." MR. FISHWICK will easily find an answer to his Query if he will refer to 1st S. i. 373-374, 462, 494; 2nd S. xi. 508; xii. 37, 97, 140, 176, 220, 259, 276, and to other vols. of 3rd S.

Will MR. FISHWICK favour me with a copy per post of the rules he saw in Burnley Belfry? He will much oblige H. T. ELLACOMBE.
Rectory, Clyst St. George, Devon.

VOLTAIRE (3rd S. vii. 211, 284.)—The considerations urged by F. C. H. will undoubtedly claim our utmost attention whenever we have before us the authority on which Mr. Danzy Sheen founded his statement. In the meanwhile I feel assured that F. C. H. will agree with me that such considerations are not of themselves sufficient to establish an historical fact. MELETES.

LOCAL GHOSTS (3rd S. vi. 268.)—When "making up" your last volume for the binder, a fortnight ago, I noticed two queries, on p. 268, on which I may be permitted a word or two.

ANON asks, "What was the black dog of Winchester?" The same probably, I would answer, as the black dog of Colchester; and what he was is declared, without doubt or misgiving, by Mr. Thomas Woodcock in a letter to Richard Baxter, printed in The Certainty of the Worlds of Spirits, London, 1691, 8vo:—

"I remember," writes Mr. Woodcock, "a story of one at Colchester, who, in a bravado and defiance of the Devil, would walk in the night to the churchyard, where it was reported he appeared and walked; and he met him in the shape of a Black Dog with terrible eyes, which brought him by terrors into such a mind, that he was never quiet in his mind till he got into good Society" [!].

It must be added, however, that a black dog often serves to mask a supernatural visitor; and Mrs. Crowe, in her Night Side of Nature, mentions two families (one located in Cornwall) who are warned of approaching deaths by apparitions in this shape.

The "Barguard of York" refers, no doubt, to the "Barguest" of the northern counties: a spirit which is sometimes seen "sitting on a rail" of a gate or stile at high noon, in this respect resembling the classical "Empusa" (of his legs we have no report), and in disposition showing his kinship with the "Bogle," "Hobgoblin," and "Robin Goodfellow."

The only apparition connected with Rochester that I can recall, is that of a dying mother to her children there (vide Beaumont, and others), and this does not fall into the category of "local ghosts." A. CHALLSTETH.

1, Verulam Buildings, Gray's Inn.

"WATTE VOCAT," ETC. (3rd S. vii. 285.)—It may possibly interest your correspondent H. W. T. to know that, in addition to the version by Andrews of Gower's lines, "Watte vocat," &c., there is a characteristically quaint and amusing translation "bestowed" by Fuller in his Church History, 1655, book iv. p. 139. The original verses (which, it may be added, are from the first book of the Vox Clamantis,) differ, as quoted by Fuller, in one or two trifling particulars from the copy given in a recent number of "N. & Q." (vide supra), e. g. Betteque for Batteque; Lorkin for Larkin; Tebbe for Tibbe; vovet for volat; quos for quem; and, in the third line, Gibbe (a misprint?) for Bobbe.

The translation runs (? limps) as follows:—

"Tom comes thereat, when call'd by Wat, and Sime as forwarde we finde;
Bett calls as quick, to Gibb and to Hykk, that neither would tarry behinde.
Bobb [Gibb?], a good whelp of that litter, doth help mad Coll more mischief to do;
And Will he doth vow, the time is come now, he'l joyn with their company too.
Davie complains, while Grigg gets the gaines, and Hobb
with them doth partake;
Lorkin aloud, in the midst of the crowd, conceiveth as deep is his stake.
Hudde doth spoil, whom Judde doth foile, and Tobb lends his helping hand;
But Jack, the mad patch, men and houses doth snatch, and kills all at his command."

"Oh, the methodical description of a confusion!" continues our author. "How doth Wat lead the front, and Jack bring up the rear! . . . All men without air-names (Tiler was but the addition of his trade, and Straw a mock-name, assumed by himself; though Jack Straw would have been John of Gold had this treason took effect), so obscure they were and inconsiderable. And, as they had no surnames, they deserved no Christian names for their heathenish cruelties."

JOHN B. SHAW, M.A.

Old Trafford, Manchester.

WORDS USED IN DIFFERENT SENSES (3rd S. vii. 278.)—In addition to the instances quoted by E. H. A. from Archbishop Trench, let me add the following use of the word prostitute. It occurs in—

"The Original of Idolatries; or the Birth of Heresies. First faithfully gathered out of Sundry Greeke and Latine Authors, &c., by that famous and learned Isaac Casaubon, and by him published in French for the Good of God's Church; and now translated into English for the Benefit of this Monarchy. By Abraham Darcie. London, 1624."

In the Epistle Dedicatory to Prince Charles, Darcie subscribes himself—

"Your Highnes most Humble and devoted prostitute,
AB. DARCIE."

The word is evidently used in the sense of "your humble servant." The word as now used is so thoroughly different, that it would be interesting to trace the change of it. G. W. N.

Other than phonetically, it cannot be taken as the same word; but the oddity of its application may render it worth "making a note of." When an Irish peasant has a point to gain, or a grievance to complain of, he sets off to his landlord, or to some other gentleman at a reasonable distance, with: "Your honour's so good, I'd always sooner trouble your honour nor any jontleman in the county; so, if you plaze, I'll insense ye wid' the whole matter." Not meaning to incense his auditor, but to put sense into him of Paddy's particular purpose: after his own fashion, of course.

E. L. S.

SPILLING SALT (3rd S. vii. 282.)—In Dacier's Life of Pythagoras there is the following passage, alluding to this subject (I quote from the English translation, p. 60):—

"He said that 'Salt was the emblem of justice: for as salt preserves all things and prevents corruption, so justice preserves whatever it animates, and, without it, all is corrupted.' He therefore ordered that a saltcellar should always be served on the table, to put men in mind of this virtue. And doubtless this was the reason the heathens sanctified the table by the saltcellar, which custom was perhaps taken from the law that God gave to his people: 'You shall offer salt in all your offerings' (Lev. iii. 18). And who knows but the superstition that was so ancient, and that reigns to this day, concerning the spilling of salt, came from the opinion of the Pythagoreans, who regarded it as a presage of some injustice?"

G. E.

"OCULUM SACERDOTIS" (3rd S. vii. 208.)—This treatise is generally considered to have been the work of William de Pagula, who was Vicar of Winkfield, in Berkshire; and died about 1350. It does not appear to have been ever printed.

Several copies of it are to be found in MS. The Cambridge University Library possesses two copies: one in folio, and one in octavo, both written in hands of the fifteenth century. Trinity College, Oxford, has a copy, which in Mr. Coxe's Catalogue has this title:—

"Liber qui dicitur Oculus Sacerdotis, in tres partes distinctus, auctore forsitan Gulielmo de Pagulo [sive Gualtero Parker, sive cujuscumque sit]."

There is also a copy in the library of Balliol College, in which the title runs:—

"Johannis de Burgo, sive cujuscumque sit, Oculus Sacerdotis," etc.—Coxe's Cat. Cod. MSS.

Joh. de Burgo was the author of Popilla Oculi. In the same library is a continuation of the work, with the title Cilium Oculi Sacerdotis.

A copy of the Oculus Sacerdotis is also in the Lambeth Library, but is there said to be in two parts; so probably the third part is wanting. See Todd's Catalogue.

The Cambridge octavo copy consists of nearly 400 closely written pages, and is entitled Oculus Sacerdotum. The first part is called "Pars prima Oculi Sacerdotum;" the second, "Dextera pars Oculi Sacerdotum;" and the third, "Sinistra pars Oculi Sacerdotum."

Some notice of the work will be found in Tanner's Bibliotheca, p. 570. E. V.

Cambridge.

SUNDIALS (3rd S. vii. 200, 291.)—A great deal of useful and valuable information on the construction of sundials may be found in Emerson's Dialling, or the Art of Drawing Dials, on all sorts of Planes whatsoever, London, J. Nourse, 1770. Very little mathematical knowledge is required in order to understand this excellent treatise, and be able to construct many useful kinds of dials.

T. T. W.

Heather, On the Use of Mathematical Instruments, Weale, London, will give S. W. P. some information on this head. WILLIAM BLOOD.

"CLEANLINESS IS NEXT TO GODLINESS" (3rd S. vi. 259, 337.)—Amongst the instances in which this proverb was quoted some time ago in "N. & Q.," I did not see the sense in which my old nurse employed it many years ago. In my childhood, she urged it as a reason why the Saturday night's tub-washing should precede the Sunday morning's appearance at church. M. D.

WASHINGTON ARMS (3rd S. vii. 11.)—Seeing in "N. & Q." an article headed "Washington Arms," and implying a curiosity respecting the relatives of Washington in England, I note that in the churchyard of Sedberg, in Yorkshire, there are, or were in the year 1800, several tombstones of families of that name in the neighbourhood, and there was a local tradition that the American leader, or his progenitors in America, were relations of these. The tombstones were of the upright kind, four or five feet high, with more than one name on each, such as are common among substantial yeomen. T.

RAGUSA (3rd S. vii. 180, 265, 310.)—I have no doubt that Ragusa was at one time independent of Venice. The blazon of its arms, which I gave from Triers at p. 265, occurs among the "Wapen der kleinen Frey-Staaten," the others so given being those of Lucca, Geneva, and San-Marino. I have never seen a shield of the arms of Venice in which the arms of Ragusa appeared among the quarterings.

I think it possible that at one time or other Ragusa may have borne for arms Barry of eight arg. and gu., as MR. DAVIDSON says, that a shield so charged appears upon the coinage of the state. For, on referring to Rietstap, L'Armorial Général (Gouda, 1861), I find that Marshal Viesse de Mar-mont, who was created Duke of Ragusa by the Emperor Napoleon I., bore those arms in the first and fourth quarters of his shield.

But, again, in L'Armorial Général de l'Empire Français (folio, Paris, 1812), published by Henry Simon, "Graveur du Cabinet de sa Majesté l'Empereur et Roi, et du Conseil du Sceau des Titres," a work, therefore, in which we may expect accuracy; both the engraving (tome i. planche 13) and the description make the first and fourth quarters of the arms of the Duke of Ragusa to be arg. three bendlets gu.

After all, I suppose the best authority we can have is "L'Ecu Complet" of the Emperor of Austria, the present possessor of Ragusa, in which it appears as I blazoned it at p. 265 (arg. three bendlets az.), but with the significant omission of the golden word—LIBERTAS. JOHN WOODWARD.
New Shoreham.

THE SCOTCH WORD "ESK" (3rd S. vii. 206.)—Permit me to correct your correspondent S., who says that this word means an asp. It means, and is still commonly used for, an eft or newt. S. spells it esk, but that he and I mean the same word is plain from his reference to the ballad of "Young Tamlane," who was transformed certainly not into a poisonous asp, but into a harmless, though not lovable, newt. That this word cannot have given its name to the river Esk is also certain, since the ask or newt does not frequent rivers but pools or ditches. Even if it had meant asp, the derivation could not be supposed, since the asp has never existed in the British islands, whose sole noxious reptile is the viper or adder.

K.

DIOGENES' LANTERN (3rd S. vii. 208.)—"honest man" is as old as Charles Dibbly older:—

"Diogenes, who was a wag in his way,
Took a lantern and candle one sunshiny day,
For a man that was honest to search all about,
But before he could find one the candle went out."

Diogenes Laertius says:—Λύχνον μετ' ἡμέραν ἔψας, "Ἄνθρωπον φησὶ ζητῶ (De Vita Philos., l. vi. c. 41), which looks as if he had prepared the answer, and lighted the candle to be asked. Phædrus avoids this, and gives the air of an impromptu by saying that Æsop's master sent him for a light.

"Tum circumeunti fuerat quod iter longius
Effecit brevius: namque recta per forum
Cœpit redire, et quidam e turba garrulus,
'Æsop, medio sole quid cum lumine?'
'Hominem,' inquit, 'quæro,' et abiit festinans domum."

What word would Diogenes have used for honest? Καλοκάγαθος? χρηστός?

Another saying (c. 40) illustrates the use of ἄνθρωπος alone. 'Ἐκ τοῦ θαλασίου ἐξιών, τῷ μὲν πυθόμενῳ εἰ πολλοὶ ἄνθρωποι λούνται, ἡρώσαστο τῷ δέ, εἰ πολλὸς ὄχλος, ὡμολόγησε. The small wit of this answer is scarcely conveyed in Mr. Yonge's translation:—

"Once, when he was leaving the bath, and a man asked him whether many men were bathing, he said, 'No;' but when a number of people came out, he confessed that there were a great many."—P. 231.

Some questions have been asked about kindling fire by rubbing two pieces of wood together. The difficulties of the ancients must have been great, when Phædrus, who always regards probability, represents the master of a house, with such a slave as Æsop, obliged to send beyond the market-place for a light. H. B. C.

U. U. Club.

FAG, A REMNANT (3rd S. vii. 110, 208.)—The term fag, in the sense here applied, is in common use in many parts of Scotland. Not long ago I saw the death of a child certified by a skilful, though a somewhat waggish, medical practitioner, as having been caused by "the fag-end of nirla," i. e. sequela of measles. And, but very recently, I happened to be in a draper's shop in the city of Aberdeen, when a person from the country came in, and, on presenting a piece of cloth to the merchant, and asking if he had any of the web on hand from which the piece had been previously cut off, the latter replied, "I ha'e only the fag o't left;" at the same time he exhibited the remnant, or fragment of the web to the enquirer. The words fag and lag are often applied synonymously to the person who is the last to enter appearance at an assembly or meeting. Both words are also used in the different senses given in Jamieson's Dictionary of the Scottish Language, q. v. "He's a fag o' a chiel," (Angl. fellow), is often applied to a or indolent worl in the north-east of and i ourium of "lazy faggot" A. J.

VISCOUNT CHAWORTH (3rd S. vii. 279.)—Burke's Extinct Peerage, edit. 1850, states the last Viscount died Feb. 15, 1690. D. D. H.

"FROM OXFORD TO ROME" (3rd S. vii. 339.)—The writer of this work was a Miss Harris. Its opening advertisement is dated "Windsor, Christmas Day, 1848." The authoress subsequently became a Catholic; and in a letter in the Tablet she thus wrote:—

"I am anxious to express my deep regret for having given publicity to unauthorised statements, or false impressions, concerning the Church of Rome and its members, in this and in other instances. I lament the publication of my work; I would gladly recal it, if it were under my controul."

As to the characters introduced in the book, I never heard that they referred to any individuals. I believe them to have been purely imaginary.

F. C. H.

The "distinguished Fellow" was Dr. Newman. LYTELTON.

Hagley, Stourbridge.

THREE PARALLEL PROVERBS (3rd S. vii. 337.)—The contributor of the note, under the above heading, expresses a doubt whether the one which he thinks the best of all—

"Ne'er cast a clout
Till May be out,"—

is used in England, as well as in Scotland. I can inform him that it is well known in Norfolk. It was quoted to me very lately; but with an apology for its being vulgar, which I think it as fully deserves to be called as to be styled "comprehensive and laconic." It was cited in consequence of my having just repeated the French proverb; but as the person to whom I spoke did not understand French, I extemporised it in English thus for the occasion:—

"In April dread,
To throw off a thread."

F. C. H.

NOSELS (3rd S. vii. 339.)—This word I take to be identical with Nosles; and as applicable to a hearse, to mean the projections on the top on which the plumes were fitted; or wooden pegs, more or less ornamental, in default of plumes.

F. C. H.

WOODWARD OF UPTON (3rd S. vii. 299.)—I hoped to have been able to supply MR. ADLARD with some of the information he requires, but find I have not here the papers which might enable me to do so. In the course of a few weeks I shall be able to make a search for them elsewhere. At present I have only a pedigree from John Woodward of Upton (father of the George Woodward first mentioned as being Clerk of the Castle of Windsor), for six generations down to the year 1634. It appears to be extracted from Harl. MSS. 1193, 1201, 1531, &c. These references may help

MR. ADLARD, if the reading room at the British Museum is accessible to him.

JOHN WOODWARD.

DOCKING HORSES (3rd S. vii. 185.)—I have heard or read, I cannot say where, a translation of the French lines, which, perhaps, is worth preserving:—

"Capricious, proud, the self-same axe avails
To chop off monarchs' heads and horses' tails.
O, barbarous English! decency you shock;
Tails you curtail, and sentence block to block."

FITZHOPKINS.

Garrick Club.

PATRICK ANDERSON (3rd S. vii. 202.)—In your note on the query of F. M. S. regarding Patrick Anderson, you observe, "that although Anderson is a common name in Scotland, and more than one advocate bearing it have held good positions at the bar, none have ever been raised to the judicial bench." There is, however, one instance to the contrary, and that at no distant period, in Adam Anderson, a son of the late Samuel Anderson, Esq., of Moredun, who was raised to the bench in 1852 (after having previously held the office of Lord Advocate) by the title of Lord Anderson. But he did not long enjoy the dignity, having died in London on September 28, 1853, aged fifty-six. W. E.

"DIE SPITZE" IN GERMAN BLAZON (3rd S. vii. 310.)—There is, I think, no exact equivalent in English heraldry for the German "Spitze." I should make use of the French equivalent "enté en point," or "la pointe entée."

Thus I should blazon the royal arms of Spain—"Quarterly, 1 and 4, Castille; 2 and 3, Leon; enté en point de Grenada," &c.

The English word grafted might perhaps be used, but I doubt its being generally intelligible.

J. WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Ten Years in Sweden; being a Description of the Landscape, Climate, Domestic Life, Forests, Mines, Agriculture, Field Sports, and Fauna of Scandinavia. By An Old Bushman. (Groombridge & Son.)

The "Old Bushman" has here undertaken a task for which he has shown himself fully qualified by previous publications. He has lived among the Swedes till he has learned to appreciate their good qualities, while he does not hesitate to point out in a kindly spirit some of their defects. His views of the social and material condition of the country deserve attention, because they are based upon a ten years' residence in it; and what he has, during those ten years, observed carefully, he tells us very pleasantly. His notices of the Swedish fauna will interest students of natural history.

Biographies of Eminent Soldiers of the last Four Centuries. By Major-General John Mitchell. Edited, with a Memoir of the Author, by Leonhart Schmitz, LL.D. (Blackwood.)

The reputation of the author of The Life of Wallenstein and The Fall of Napoleon, as a military critic and biographer, is too firmly established and too widely recognised to render further allusion to it necessary; and we shall most fitly commend the present series of sketches to the notice of our readers by pointing out of what they consist. The eminent soldiers, whose lives are here described by General Mitchell, are Zisca, the Hussite, Scanderberg, the Chevalier Bayard, the Constable of Bourbon, the Duke of Alba, Field Marshal Suwaroff; Marshal Massena, Field Marshal Schulenburg, Max Emanuel, and Charles XII., Prince Eugene, the Duke of Marlborough, Marshall Saxe, and Frederick II. Two Essays "On the French Army," and "The British Army" in the World of 1850," complete a volume which is sure to find a place in every military library.

El Consultor Universal (Notes and Queries Español), &c. Nos. I. to IV. (Barcelona, London, Molini.)

Bradshaw's Illustrated Hand Book to Spain and Portugal. By Dr. Charnock, F.S.A. (Adams.)

We doubt if any better proof could be given of the rapid strides which Spain is making to regain her place among the nations of Europe, than is evinced by the publication of the two works whose titles we have just transcribed. A Spanish Bradshaw says much for her advance; but to our thinking, a Spanish Notes and Queries says far more. We heartily welcome our fellow labourer, who has adopted for his model our French cousin, L'Intermédiaire; and Spanish scholars in England will, we are sure, join us in such welcome.

Epis et Bluets. Par Le Chevalier de Chatelain. (Rolandi.)

Fleurs des Bords du Rhin. Par Le Chevalier de Chatelain. (Rolandi.)

The first of these handsomely printed little volumes contains a number of original poems by the Chevalier de Chatelain, among which our Shakspearian friends will find some dozen graceful sonnets on Shakspeare. The second, on the contrary, contains a series of translations from the poets of Germany, executed with that facility for which the author has now established a peculiar reputation.

Brand's Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art. Part II. (Longman.)

The new Part of this useful encyclopædia-in-little, which extends from "Baptistery" to "Cofferdam," fully justifies the favourable opinion which the first Part called forth from us.

THE SHILLING MAGAZINE.—This new monthly candidate for public favour is under the management of Mr. Samuel Lucas, who will be assisted by a large circle of literary friends. The first number exhibits plenty of variety; Fiction, Science, Archaeology, Poetry, by some of the ablest writers of the day, make up an excellent opening number.

CAMDEN SOCIETY.—At the General Meeting of the Camden Society on Tuesday last, the Council, in announcing the early completion of the Promptorium, added that, with the view to the requirements of English philologists, they had made arrangements for the sale of a limited number of copies of the complete work. It was announced, too, that the Camden Society, in concurring with the Society of Antiquaries in an application to the Chief Judge of the Probate Court for facilities for taking photographs of wills of distinguished persons, had recalled Sir James Wille's attention to their former joint application on the subject of the extension of the privileges now enjoyed by literary men at Doctors' Commons, to the Registries of all Local Courts where early wills are deposited.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.—The proposed Handel Festival, at the Crystal Palace, progresses in the most satisfactory manner. The alterations made in the corner galleries were completed and tested on Good Friday with great success. Many hundreds of excellent additional seats have by this means been provided on the floor of the Centre Transept. It has been decided by the Directors that the Shakspeare House shall be removed, and it is intended to raise the seats near the garden front of the Great Transept, which will doubtless command for them a ready sale. The tickets for the Great Rehearsal have also been issued, and they are being sold very rapidly.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, and whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

ETCHINGS BY RADENMAKER about 1620.

Wanted by Rev. J. C. Jackson, 5, Chatham Place East, Hackney, N.E.

LITERARY GAZETTE for July 6, 1861.

BANKROPT'S SERMON AT PAUL'S CROSS FEB. 9, 1688: A brief Discoverie of the Untruths and Slanders against the true Government of the Church of Christ.

A CATHOLIC LETTER OF CERTAIN ENGLISH PROTESTANTS, UNBORN FAVOURERS of the present state of Religion authorized and published in England: unto that Reverend and learned Man, Mr. R. Hooker, requiring resolution in certain matters of Doctrine, &c. &c., expressly contained in his Five Books of Ecclesiastical Policie. Small quarto, 1639.

Wanted by G. W. Napier, Esq., Alderley Edge, near Manchester.

VOLTAIRE'S WORKS IN ENGLISH. Vol. I.

FOX'S LECTURES TO WORKING MEN. Vol. I.

GIBSON'S BIBLE. Vol. I., 8vo edition, in 12 vols.

KAPPAH'S ASTROLOGY. Or any Works on Astrology.

DE CANDOLLE'S CACTI.

Wanted by Mr. Thomas Millard, 38, Ludgate Hill, City.

BOOK OF BRITISH BALLADS. Edited by S. C. Hall. 12th (and last) Number. 1842.

Wanted by H. E. Dobbin, Esq., 2, Lower Belgrave Place, S.W.

Notices to Correspondents.

F. C. will doubtless find the Greek Epigram on Chantrey's Woodcocks, and many others on the same subject, in the Collection of the Verses written on the occasion, and published by Murray in 1847, under the title of Winged Words on Chantrey's Woodcocks.

CRUEL. For the authorship of Captain Carleton's Memoirs, see "N. & Q." 2nd S. vi. 392; vii. 11, 74, 93, 150; 3rd S. vi. 378, 445; and for that of Robinson Crusoe, 1st S. x. 315, 448. The query on a pretended resuscitation appeared in our last volume, p. 185.

CHARLES WYLLIE. The Twelve Golden Rules attributed to Charles I. are printed in "N. & Q." 3rd S. iii. 167, 215. After all, we are inclined to think that these Rules were agreed to by Ben Jonson and his fellow poets, and called by them "Table Observations."

ERRATA.—3rd S. vii. p. 320, col. 1, line 23, for "created" read "corrected;" last line but one, for "his next heir" read "her next heir;" p. 334, col. 1, 9th line from bottom, for "1619" read "1699;" p. 344, col. 1, line 38, for "Harrison" read "Harris;" and in the following line, for "Nicholson" read "Nicolson."

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly Index) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 22, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

RAPID CURE OF SEVERE COLD BY DR. LOCOCK'S POLMONIC WAFERS. "To Mr. Winnall, Bookseller, 104, High Street, Birmingham.—I had been troubled with a severe cold, which grew worse, and a difficulty of breathing, with tightness at the chest. Your assistant procured me Dr. Locock's Wafers, and in a few minutes the tightness of my chest had entirely left, leaving only a slight cough, which left me next day." Sold by all Medicine Vendors at 1s. 11d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. per box.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1865.

CONTENTS.—N^o 176.

NOTES:—Goldsmith's Pamphlet on the Cock Lane Ghost, 371—A General Literary Index, &c., 373—A May-day Song, 374—Origin of Names, 374—Note on two Mistaken Etymologies, 375—The Charters of Holyrood, &c., 375—Kirby Hooks—Epigram—A Hint to Atlas Publishers—Irish Parliamentary Representation—Taylor, the Water Poet—Tabourot and Le Sieur Gaulard—Episcopal Blazon—Briggle—Milton, Shakspeare, Raleigh, &c., 375.

QUERIES:—Change of Surname—Chartulary of Whalley Abbey—Robert Dudley's Marriage—Was Eugene a Deist?—Flying Butteresses—Hool-cheese—Lawrence—Le Poer Queries—Coots Molesworth, M.D.—A Pair of Iron Organs—Philips, Earls of Pembroke—Descendant of Sarsfield—Tavern Sign—Robert Wallace of Kelly—"Wodrow's Private Letters," 376.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Bp. Taylor's Second Marriage—"Sermons upon the Quadregesimal Gospels"—Thomas a Kempis—Great Tom of Oxford—Chap, 378.

REPLIES:—Waits at York, 380—Assumption of Arms, 380—"The Vicar and Moses," 383—Locality of Zion, in early Writers, 384—"Piscis Flotans"—The Fleurs-de-Lys of France—Kingdom of Dalmatia—Song—Short Sermons—The Immortality of the Brute Creation—Hubert de Burgh—Power of Franking—Judas overturning the Salt—Modern Belief in the Brownie—Caraboo—Valentine Brown—Fleurs-de-Lys—Arms of Fretwell—Percira Family—Writers on Game Cocks—Bishops' Baronies, &c.—Marriage Rings—Burgh—General Richard Fortescue: Lieut.-Col. Fenwick: Fortescues of Fallait—Pews—Words used in different Senses—Toad in Stone—The Caistor Whip—Berkeley Arms—Bremen Coin—Countess of Suffolk, &c., 384.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

GOLDSMITH'S PAMPHLET ON THE COCK-LANE GHOST.

Describing Smithfield and its locality, old Stow says, "Over against the said Pie-corner lieth Cock-lane, which runneth down to Oldborne-conduit." This narrow lane was the scene, in the months of January and February, 1702, of that celebrated imposition, the Cock Lane ghost.

Almost every one of us, young and old, have heard how cunning "Fanny," with her mysterious knockings, contrived to hoax the wonder-loving Londoners, until at length the cheat was discovered and its chief contriver brought to condign punishment. Dr. Johnson, at the head of a band of savans, solemnly investigated the affair; and Goldsmith wrote a pamphlet on the subject, for which Newbery paid him three guineas. Mr. Forster, in his Life of Oliver Goldsmith (1848, p. 240), says:—

"But whether with Johnson, he thought the impudent imposture worth grave enquiry; or with Hogarth, turned it to wise purposes of satire; or only laughed at it as Churchill did; the pamphlet has not survived to inform us."

Mr. Forster was mistaken here: the pamphlet has survived, an account of its existence was communicated to me in an early volume of "N. & Q."

In the fourth edition of his entertaining biography of the poet (1863, p. 160), Mr. Forster modifies his former statement by saying:—

"It is not quite certain that the pamphlet has survived to inform us. But if, as appears probable, a tract on the Mystery Revealed, published by Newbery's neighbour Bristow, be Goldsmith's three-guinea contribution, the last is the most correct surmise. It is, however, a poor production."

This tract now lies before me. I was fortunate enough to pick it up the other day for a few shillings, from a dealer in "odds and ends," who exposes his wares to the curious at most "reasonable rates." I was going to mention his locale; but, upon second thoughts, would rather not. Perhaps a brief description of this interesting brochure, with a few extracts, may not be unacceptable to the readers of "N. & Q."

To begin. It is an octavo of thirty-four pages, exclusive of title-page and bastard-title. The latter informs us that it was published at "one shilling." The former reads as follows:—

"THE MYSTERY REVEALED: containing a SERIES of TRANSACTIONS and AUTHENTIC TESTIMONIALS, respecting the supposed COCK-LANE GHOST; which have hitherto been concealed from the PUBLIC."

"Since none the Living [sic] dare implead, Arraign him in the Person of the Dead."

Dryden.

London: Printed for W. Bristow, in St. Paul's Church-yard; and C. Ethrington, York. MDCCXLII. [The date is a mistake for MDCCXLII.]

The writer commences by saying:—

"It is somewhat remarkable that the Reformation, which in other countries banished superstition, in England seemed to increase the credulity of the vulgar. At a time when Bacon was employed in restoring true philosophy, King James was endeavouring to strengthen our prejudices, both by his authority and writings. Scot, Glanville, and Coleman, wrote and preached with the same design; and our judges, particularly Sir Matthew Hale, gave some horrid proofs of their credulity."

After remarking that, "since that time, arguments of this kind have been pretty much rejected by all but the lowest class," he goes on to relate, at a considerable length, the cause of the manifestations of the Cock Lane ghost. The summary of this is, that the whole was a plot devised by one Parsons, the parish clerk of St. Sepulchre's, and carried out by his daughter, a girl of twelve years; the object being to malign a gentleman of Norfolk, who had sued him for a debt. This gentleman was a widower, who had taken his wife's sister as his mistress (the marriage being forbidden by law), and had brought her to lodge with Parsons; from whom he had removed her to other lodgings, where she had died suddenly of small-pox. Parsons' object was to obtain the ghost's declaration that she had been poisoned by his (Parsons') creditor.

"When, therefore (says the writer), the spirit & the assistants, or rather the assistants had taken spirit (for that could not speak), that Mr. K—— was the murderer, the road lay then open; and every night the farce was carried on, to the amusement of several who attended with all the good humour which the spending one night with novelty inspires. They jested with the ghost, soothed it, flattered it, while none was truly unhappy but him whose character was thus repeatedly rendered odious, and trifled with, merely to amuse idle curiosity.

"To have a proper idea of this scene, as it is now carried on, the reader is to conceive a very small room with a bed in the middle; the girl at the usual hour of going to bed, is undressed and put in with proper solemnity; the spectators are next introduced, who sit looking at each other, suppressing laughter, and wait in silent expectation for the opening of the scene. As the ghost is a good deal offended at incredulity, the persons present are to conceal theirs, if they have any; as by this concealment, they can only hope to gratify their curiosity. For, if they show either before, or when the knocking is begun, a too prying, inquisitive, or ludicrous turn of thinking, the ghost continues usually silent; or, to use the expression of the house, Miss Fanny is angry. The spectators, therefore, have nothing for it but to sit quiet and credulous; otherwise they must hear no ghost, which is no small disappointment to persons who have come for no other purpose.

"The girl who knows by some secret, when the ghost is to appear, sometimes apprizes the assistants of its intended visitation. It first begins to scratch, and then to answer questions, giving two knocks for a negative, and one for an affirmative. By this means it tells whether a watch, when held up, be white, blue, yellow, or black; how many clergymen are in the room, though in this sometimes mistaken; it evidently distinguishes white men from negroes, with several other marks of sagacity; however, it is sometimes mistaken in questions of a private nature, when it deigns to answer them: for instance, the ghost was ignorant where she dined upon Mr. K——'s marriage; how many of her relations were at church upon the same occasion; but particularly she called her father John instead of Thomas, a mistake indeed a little extraordinary in a ghost; but perhaps she was willing to verify the old proverb, that it is a wise child that knows its own father. However, though sometimes right, and sometimes wrong, she pretty invariably persists in one story, namely that she was poisoned, in a cup of purl, by red arsenic, a poison unheard of before, by Mr. K—— in her last illness, and that she heartily wishes him hanged."

The ghost, it appears, was a particular enemy to the light of a candle, and "always silent before those from whose position and understanding she could most reasonably expect redress." A memorable meeting, by the ghost's desire, "of gentlemen of eminence for their rank, learning, and good sense," took place in the vault of St. John's church, Clerkenwell, upon the night of Feb. 1, 1762; and Dr. Johnson, who was present, printed at the time an account of what they saw and heard. After quoting the whole of Dr. Johnson's statement, which is distinguished by inverted commas, the writer adds:—

"Such an account will convince those who are under the influence of reason; but nothing can gain over some, who from their infancy have been taught to believe, but not to think. To convince such it were to be wished that the Committee had continued their scrutiny a night or two longer, by which means the impostor would in all probability be caught in the fact, or at least most thoroughly detected. For if the ghost persisted in such company to continue silent, it would then be obvious that it was afraid of the discovery it pretended to aim at; or if it continued to knock or scratch, the noises, by explaining themselves, could not long frustrate a judicious enquiry."

"But as it is, the ghost still continues to practise as before, and in some measure remains undetected; and it is probable that she will thus continue for a much longer time, to exhibit among friends who desire no detection, or among the curious, whose pleasure is in proportion to the deception."

After a number of interesting details connected with the story, the writer says:—

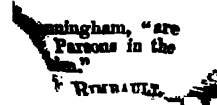

"I have now as briefly, and indeed as tenderly as I could, stated the whole of this most surprising transaction, and the reader by this time sees how far Mr. K—— is culpable. He sees him living affectionately with a woman as his wife, whom the laws of nature allowed him to love, but the strictness of the canon law forbade him to marry. He sees every possible method to preserve this woman's reputation and life, and the most reputable persons produced as witnesses of her end. He sees men of the highest rank, both for birth, character, and learning joined to acknowledge the whole [story] of the pretended ghost as an imposition upon the public; and, lastly, he sees those who pretend to bear witness to the accusation, persons of a mixed reputation, of gross ignorance, great cruelty, and what is more armed with resentment against him. I would not wish, however, to turn the popular resentment upon any particular person, but I think it my duty to divert it somewhere from the guiltless."

We have then the story of the "famous impostor" Richard Hathaway, and a remarkable one of Zachary of Poland, who was personated, after death, by a false spirit, who took his likeness and wooed the object of his love. The writer concludes with these sensible words:—

"One would think that a story of this nature could hardly gain credit, and yet it deceived a whole nation for five years successively: what is still more surprising, it deceived a Protestant divine, otherwise of sense and of learning. I cannot avoid thinking that there are several similar circumstances between this Polish ghost and the ghost of Cock-lane. The ghost at Cock-lane answered questions, so did Zachary; the Cock-lane ghost is visited by the nobility, so was Zachary; the Cock-lane ghost plays tricks, so did Zachary; the Cock-lane ghost follows a girl, so did Zachary. There is one circumstance, however, in which the parallel will not hold good; Zachary was believed to be a real ghost by a Protestant divine; but I fancy no Protestant divine can be found among us, so much the old woman, as to lend even a moment's assent to the ghost in Cock-lane."

The fear of the contrivers, and their consequent inability to carry on the imposition before the committee of gentlemen who had undertaken to investigate the matter, coupled with Dr. Johnson's printed statement, gave the death-blow to the Cock Lane ghost. Parsons stood three several times in the pillory, and was imprisoned for one year in the King's Bench.

"London mobs," remarkably composed; in the pillory, they collected a

A GENERAL LITERARY INDEX: INDEX OF AUTHORS.*

EUTHYMIUS ZIGABENUS AND THE MANICHEANS.

"Though Euthymius Zigabenus is a writer well known to scholars, his Panoplia Dogmatica, in many respects the most valuable of his works is, I believe, an exceedingly rare book. The only printed edition of the original text appeared at Tergovist, in Wallachia, in the year 1710 . . . and very few copies seem to have found their way to the west of Europe. The copy which was used by Fabricius (Bibl. Græca, vol. vii. p. 461) had been given to his friend Mich. Kneman in the East by the Patriarch of Jerusalem. It is not in the Bodleian, nor in the British Museum; and the only copy I ever saw was in the King's Library at Paris, till a few months ago I purchased one from a bookseller in London. . . . The fly-leaf of the book in question exhibits the following inscription written by the same hand in Greek and Latin A present of books from the Patriarchs to the 'Catholics' of Britain indicates the existence of a kind of intercourse with which I was not at all acquainted. It is the Roman Catholics who are plainly intended."—British Magazine, vol. xiv. p. 286.

Euthymius Zigabenus (or Zygadenus), a Greek monk of the Order of St. Basil, flourished in the beginning of the twelfth century under the Emperor Alexis Comnenus, by whom he was highly esteemed, and by whose command he compiled the Panoplia. (See Anna Comnena's Alexias, p. 490.) "The Greek text of this work," says Du Pin, "never as yet came to our hands, only a Latin version made by [Petrus Franciscus] Zinus, printed at Lyons, A.D. 1530, at Paris in 1506, at Venice in 1576, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum" [Lugdun. 1677, vol. xix. in which are all his published works in Latin.] MS. copies of the Panoplia are described by Lambecius in the Bibliotheca Vindobonensis [or Viennensis], lib. v. pp. 51, 52; MSS. are also in the Vatican, see Possevinus, Appar. Sacr. pp. 74, 79, 80; in the Bibliotheca Regia Gallica, Codd. 1900, 2309, 2930, &c.; in the Bodleian, see Oudin, vol. ii. 979; in Trinity College, Dublin, see MSS. Librorum Angliæ et Hiberniæ Catalogus, Oxonii, 1607, vol. ii. One of the MSS. in the Bibliotheca Vindobonensis contains nine large excerpts from the Panoplia, a description of which is given by Oudin as well as Lambecius, with an enumeration of the Fathers, from whose writings it is compiled.

They here follow in succession, as I find them in the Latin Version: Gregorius Theologus, i. e. Nazianzenus, Gregorius Nyssenus, Jo. Damascenus, Dionysius Areopagita, Athanasius, Basilii Magnus, St. Maximus, Leontius Cypri pontifex, St. Chrysostomus, St. Cyrillus, Leontius Byzantinus, Anastasius Sinaita, Germanus Patriarcha, Nicephorus Patriarcha Constantinopolis, Theodorus, Photius.

The heretics refuted by this "Malleus Hæreticorum" are enumerated in the third book of Lambecius, p. 168. In the edition of 1714, the Patriarch Chrysanthus omitted the chapter against the Saracens and what relates to the Trinity, being apprehensive of the same cruelty from the Turks which they had exercised against Cyril Lucaris. Cf. T. Smith's Account of the Greek Church, &c. 1680; Mosheim's Inst., Cent. xvi. sect. 3, ch. 2; and Cent. xvii. sect. 2, ch. 2. Neither is the Latin Version by Zinus complete; e. g. the extract from Photius concerning the procession of the Holy Spirit is omitted; viz. tit. xiii. in the Greek MSS. On this subject there is a separate treatise by him, but according to Simon (Critique de la Bibliothèque des Auteurs Ecclésiastiques, &c., par M. Elies Du Pin, p. 318) it differs but little from this portion of the Panoplia. For authorities on this celebrated controversy, see Mosheim's Inst., Cent. viii. pt. ii. ch. 3, and Cent. ix. ch. 3; Gieseler, Third Period, Div. 1. ch. 3.

With reference to Du Pin's account of Euthymius's works, Simon remarks, quot verba, tot errata. The rarity of the Greek edition will account for the misstatement in Smith's Dictionary, that the Greek original of the Panoplia has not yet been published except the last title, which is contained in Sylburg's Saracenicæ. Adam Clarke makes the same error, although he contradicts himself; and the continuator of his Succession of Sacred Literature, vol. ii. p. 606, states that "only part of the original has been published, but the whole is extant in the Ambrosian Library at Milan."

BIBLIOTHECAR. CETHAM.

(To be continued.)

A MAY-DAY SONG.

In the issue of this journal for July 20, 1854, (1st S. x. 91), I described the May-day customs as then existing in Huntingdonshire; and, in the Illustrated London News for May 2, 1857, I gave a sketch of "The May Queen and her Garland, at Glatton, Huntingdonshire." The May-day customs at Glatton and the adjacent village have been observed up to the present year; but, as they present no novelties, it is needless for me to encumber your space by a repetition of what I wrote eleven years ago. The description under the above reference in your first series would stand for an account of the May-day customs in 1865, at Glatton, Stilton, Denton, Caldecote, Folksworth, and other Huntingdonshire villages. The immediate object of my note is to record in "N. & Q." the words of a May-day song, sung by "the Mayers" on May-day, 1865, in the village of Denton and Caldecote, when they went round with their "garland." The song, I may observe, was taught to the children by the mother of one of the singers; and the woman had learnt it as a child from her mother, who had been taught it, in turn, by her mother. Like the songs of the Christmas Mummers, it would appear to have been compiled by an uneducated person from odds and ends of verse. I give it precisely as it was sung:—

* Continued from 3rd S. iv. 458.

"Here comes us poor Mayers all,
And thus we do begin
To lead our lives in righteousness,
For fear we should die in sin.
"To die in sin is a dreadful thing,
To die in sin for nought;
It would have been better for our poor souls
If we had never been born.
"Good morning, lords and ladies,
It is the first of May;
I hope you'll view the garland,
For it looks so very gay.
"The cuckoo sings in April,
The cuckoo sings in May,
The cuckoo sings in June,
In July she flies away.
"Now take a Bible in your hand,
And read a chapter through;
And when the day of Judgment comes,
The Lord will think of you."

The sudden variations of this song between theology and ornithology, and its very slight relation to May-day, certainly invest its composition with a daring originality. It was sung to a tune that was "most melancholy," but not "most musical."

CUTHBERT BEDE.

ORIGIN OF NAMES.

The amusing example given by H. T. E. (3rd S. v. 71) of the mode in which names are coined in Kaffirland, reminds me of the following parallel instance.

When stationed on the Burmese frontier, my brother officers and myself were known to the natives with whom we were brought in contact by nick-names indicative of some marked peculiarity, and which soon completely superseded with them our own proper appellatives.

Our Colonel was too mighty and exalted a being to be known save by his dignity, as "The Great Chief," but irreverent subalterns had long rendered any additional sobriquets superfluous; smaller stars, however, were recognised each by his light. The varied colour of the hair of the European is very striking to the Oriental, and it is not surprising, therefore, that individual peculiarities in this respect determined the names of many. A red hirsute Highlander was y'cleped Shue-Mong, "The Golden-haired." A fair Saxon-blooded ensign was known as Sani, "The White-haired"; whilst San-Cron, "The tangled thicket," was very properly given to a bushy-haired brave little fellow, who has since done the state some service. At first they called me Bo-gleai, or "The young Chief," but when subsequently I went into mourning, new acquaintances, from the crape on my arm, distinguished me as Meam-Meam-Keala, "The one wearing a black band." A fat, flabby, round-faced youngster was much exasperated at being styled La-Bye, "The full moon," whilst a lieutenant of elongated visage, saintly port, and unspotted morality, deemed, as we asserted, the name of Phoonghee, or "The Priest," a mild heathen tribute to his superior sanctity.

I remember but one other, Bobrong, "The Creator of Disturbances"; richly deserved by a turbulent, roistering, rack-loving Irishman, one of the most noisy and most kind-hearted of mortals, but now, alas! no more. W.

NOTE ON TWO MISTAKEN ETYMOLOGIES.

1. Tattoo.—The derivation, tapotex vous, was certainly never invented by a Frenchman; nor is the term tattoo known in French, nor in any other Latin tongue, but is peculiar to the Germanic dialects. Sir James Turner, in his Pallas Armata (a treatise on military affairs, circa 1627), gives it as taptoo, and explains it as the signal for closing the sutlers' canteens. The original appears to have been the Dutch taptoe, tap signifying as with us either a spigot or public; and taptoe being equivalent to the spigot or tap closing. In accordance with this, there is no verb to taptoo, taptoen, &c., as might have been expected had the word ought to do with the tap or beat of the drum; but the phrase in Dutch, English, or Swedish, is, to beat the tattoo—die taptoe slaan, &c. The true origin is further proved by the German form zapfenstreichen (verb, zapfenstreichen), the striking of the zapfen or spigot into the cask.

2. To run the Gatloope.—The derivation of this, from Gand, is an example of the manufacture of historical facts for etymological purposes; and that of gant, all (for ganz, I presume), is on the lucus a non lucendo principle, since all except the delinquent stand still. Sir James Turner uses the form gatloope, and rightly derives it from the Dutch or Low German loopen, to run; and gat (our gate), a passage or strait—as for example, in keel-gat, the throat: a term metaphorically applied by Dutch sailors to a dangerous and rapid narrow near New York, and transformed by the English sailor into "Hell-gate." The present Dutch phrase for gatloope is different; but, as above, the derivation is proved by the German form gassen-laufen, to run through the street or lane of men: gasse being the German military term for the interval between tents, ranks, regiments, brigades, and the like.

Since writing the above, I find that Webster adopts a similar derivation. He says, probably from gang, a passage; but as gangloope and gang-loopen are as yet conjectural, I am still inclined to think the na euphonic addition. Possibly, however, gangloopen may have been the form used in some one of the German dialects with which our Low Country soldiers became familiar.

B. NICHOLSON.

THE CHARTERS OF HOLYROOD.

"HERBERGH," "HERBERGARE," "HARBARGARIE."

Upon an examination of the Liber Cartarum Sancti Crucis: Munimenta Ecclesie Sancti Crucis de Edinnesburg, published by the Bannatyne Club in 1840, I find it mentioned that the convent was placed at first within the fortress of Edinburgh Castle; but that the canons must have soon found the castle, however desirable as a place of security, a narrow and inconvenient residence. The foundation charter is of no earlier date than between 1143 and 1147, although there is no reason to doubt that the year 1128 was the date of the building of the Abbey of Holyrood on its present site. Whether the convent had been moved to its final situation in the year now assigned or not, it would appear that it must have been settled there previous to the great charter of the founder; which, in permitting the canons to found a burgh between their church and the King's Burgh, points distinctly to what was afterwards, in consequence of that permission, united to the city of Edinburgh by "the Abbots Burgh of regality of Canongait": "Concedo etiam eis herbergare quoddam burgum inter eandem ecclesiam et meum burgum." These words have been the fruitful source of much curious blundering; which, taking its origin in the mistake of some monkish lawyer, has been perpetuated by scholars and lawyers down to the present day. It might be permitted to the abbot of the sixteenth century to allege, that—

"we could not find in Latine sic ane word as harbergary to be ane verb, and thairfor apperandlie the saidis boundis now callit the Cannogait wes a befoir callit Harbergary."

In the Appendix to the Preface of the Charters of Holyrood, there is given a series of Law or Session Papers (curious specimens of old Scotch pleadings) regarding the privileges of the burgh of Regality of Canongait, and illustrating the curious interpretations put upon the word "herbergare." The grammatical disputations—

"quhiddir Harbergary be ane verb or ane nowne substantive, quhilk we reckon to be ane nowne substantive and samtyne to be ane propir name in auld dayes of the boundis now callit the Cannogait," concludes, "and thairfor quhiddir Harbergary be ane propir name of burgh than ane verb significand power to big ane burgh, yet insafar as the samyn wes to be biggit within the boundis libellat now callit the Cannogait, and erectioun of the said burgh maid within the boundis libellat, the still procedit is sufficient."

T. G. S.

Edinburgh.

KIRBY HOOKS.—The lovers of the sport of angling will not forget Izaak Walton's praise of the Kirby hook; whether it has since gone out of fashion, or been succeeded by some more approved hook, I know not; but the anglers who read "N. & Q." will not be displeased to read the following advertisement, published in the London Journal of March 24, 1721:—

"To all Gentlemen and others.

"I, Charles Kirby, son of Timothy Kirby, grandson to old Charles Kirby, have left off dealing with William Browne, of Black Horse Alley, near Fleet Bridge, for two years past, and now have contracted and agreed with Mr. Robert Hopkins, of Bell Yard, near Temple Bar, at the sign of the Salmon, and with him only: and whereas the said William Browne has pretended to sell fish-hooks under the name of Kirby, these are to advertise that they are not my hook, but an imposition upon the world."

H. E.

EPIGRAM.—I find, in one of my note-books (but unluckily without a reference), an epitaph, which we may venture to call an epigram, on some not very creditable person whose English name was Nunn; and, in humble imitation of Ulysses' paronomasia, was latinized into Nullus:—

"Hic situs est Nullus: nunc Nullo Nullior iste; Et quia Nullus erat, de Nullo Nil tibi, Christie!"

E. L. S.

A HINT TO ATLAS PUBLISHERS.—Why do not our atlas publishers adopt some system of marginal reference, such as is used in ledgers? It is exceedingly inconvenient to be obliged to hunt through a bulky volume of maps before finding the one we are in search of. I speak as one who has experienced much vexatious delay from the want of some such contrivance.

S. W. P.

IRISH PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION.—The following is a copy of a curious document which was lately lent to me:—

"I shall bring Mr. Flood into Parliament for the Borough of Baltinglass next General Election for Eighteen hundred pounds, with re-election in case of the King's death; and Mr. Flood will, as I have really refused two thousand down for a seat, endeavour to let me have eight hundred [now or] as soon as he can.

"May 21st, 1789.

ALDBOROUGH."

"Henry Flood, Esq., is the person to be brought in."

The words "now or" are erased in the original. The Earl of Aldborough, it is almost needless to say, was "patron" of the borough of Baltinglass; and his family received compensation for the loss of its members at the Union with Great Britain.

H. LOFTUS TOTTENHAM.

TAYLOR THE WATER-POET.—On a spare leaf before a copy of Taylor's Works, 1630, folio, I find this written:—

"Geven me by my well-wishinge frende, John Taylor, 1633: 'Valeant qui me volunt.'

"Had I dipt my pen in the . . . of Parnassus, like r of your friends, my raptures had not proved so ren, but yet take this:—

'Full many things within this Universe,
 This speciall booke doth wittely rehearse,
 In thundering prose and able verse.
 Who censures not so, I will . . . non,
 He is like to that which Balaam rid on.

"W. C."

On the title-page, in a different and very clear hand, is the autograph of "Robert Crammer."
 Was this person of the archbishop's family? Izaak Walton was connected by marriage with the Cran-mers, having married Rachel Crammer. The two words indicated by dots are, to me, illegible.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

TABOUROT AND LE SIEUR GAULARD.—The Bi-garrures et Touches du Seigneur des Accords, avec les Apothegmes du Sieur Gaulard et les Escraignes Dijonnoises, form a volume, which enjoyed at one time considerable popularity. The book is a tissue of silliness and indecency. In the department of silliness, there are stories resembling some narrated of English royal Dukes in bygone days. In its original shape, it has passed through numerous editions, as may be supposed from the character of the contents; but I have before me an unnoticed English version of M. Gaulard's Apothegms and the Escraignes, of which it is my object to forward you a brief account. The volume is a small 8vo, of thirty-five leaves, and is thus entitled:—

"Bigarrures; or the Pleasant, and Witlesse, and Simple Speeches of the Lord Gaulard of Burgundy. Translated by J. B. of Charterhouse."

The work is written in a very minute, but clear and legible hand, of the period of the Restoration, and is evidently the MS. prepared by the author for the press. There are signatures throughout. Here is one of the Bigarrures:—

"Being advertised by one with him, that the Deane of Besançon was dead, he said to him, 'Beleeue it not, for if it were so, he would write to me; for he writes to me of all things.'"

The "Escraignes" are not indicated on the title; but they occur in the present volume on the nineteenth leaf, and run to the end. I have had the misfortune to peruse many books of equivocal morality—The Decameron, the Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles, many of our jest-books, and so on; but it has never been my lot to meet with a volume so abounding in gross sentiments and expressions, or rather so full of nothing else, as this. It is worse than Durfey's Pills!

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

EPISCOPAL BLAZON.—It is a generally received rule in heraldry that bishops do not either assume or retain a crest upon their elevation to the bench.
 Examples to the contrary are I believe rare, but I have one before me now. It is the seal of the Right Rev. Stephen C. Sandes, D.D., successively Bishop of Killaloe and Killaloe. In this example the episcopal mitre

 a griffin segreant.

BRIGGLE.—In describing the quick, pert, and half impudent gait of a little bird which frequently hops close to the open doorway of a cottage, the mistress of the house a few days ago employed the unusual word to "briggie," apparently in the sense of bridling up in a bold and rather intrusive manner. I had never heard this word before, but its meaning was obvious enough.

H. W. T.

MILTON, SHAKESPEARE, RALEIGH, ETC.—

"The 20th day of December, 1608, was baptized John, the sonne of John Mylton, scrivener.' Twelve days old! Thus little Johnny Milton 'played' about the parish of Richard Stock—ran past the 'Mermaid' all unconscious of one Shakespeare, one Ben Jonson, one Sir Walter Raleigh, and other immortals, within."

These words are from the preface of Mr. Grosart's edition of Stock and Torshell On Malachi.
 The said preface contains a memoir of Richard Stock, the clergyman from whose hands John Milton received baptism. The register of this event, with the observation following it, I give above. Is not this observation more than unfounded? Do the histories of Shakespeare and Raleigh allow us to regard Mr. Grosart's supposition as even a possibility, so far as they are concerned? Milton was not seven years and a half old when Shakespeare died.

B. H. C.

Queries.

CHANGE OF SURNAME.—Since the celebrated Jones Herbert case, the change of surname by mere publication of an intention to do so, seems common. Can any of your readers inform me whether this act does or does not legally change the name of children living at the time when their father indulged his innocent fancy by giving himself a new name? It strikes me they retain the one to which they were born.

CAMBRIAN.

CHARTULARY OF WHALLEY ABBEY.—In the Coucher Book, or Chartulary of Whalley Abbey,
 vol. i. p. 95 (Chetham Society) occurs the following clause in a charter:—

"Pretereā ad supradieta uberius vallanda renunciavi pro me et posteris meis omni iuris auxilio canonico et civilis privilegii clericatus et fori et statuto, actionibus de dolo et in factum et omnibus aliis exceptionibus per-sonalibus et realibus que possint obiti contra instrumentum vel factum."

Can any of your readers who are versed in the terms of canon and civil law tell me what is the proper reading instead of in factum, which is a misreading on the part of the editor? I have seen several charters in which a similar clause occurs, but in none of them has this word been extended.
 It is plainly a noun in the dative case, such as informationi or infractiōni, but I cannot hit upon the right word.

In passing, I may remark that this Chartulary is full of editor's blunders; in the same clause the word obiti is put for what is clearly obici (objici); and on page 186 a sheet of facsimile enables one to test the editorship of this chartulary still further. In the first line of the print is "carta, duplex, Edwardi." Now the fac-simile gives not the slightest authority for the introduction of such a word as duplex, which is a matter of imagination entirely, and the next line gives post conquestu, which the fac-simile (and also the simple rules of grammar) show to be utterly incorrect.

Again, on the same page, viris religionis should be viris religiosus—a phrase familiar and well-known to all readers of monastic charters.

On p. 27, l. 10, preservet should be perseveret, and this mistake occurs throughout the book. An active verb like preservo makes simple nonsense.

However, without going further into this part of the subject, I will return to the first point, and beg leave to ask for an elucidation of the doubtful word represented by in factum. MONASTICUS.

ROBERT DUDLEY'S MARRIAGE.—Has any one a clue to the Papal Dispensation for Robert Dudley's marriage with Elizabeth Southwell, sometime between 1605 and 1607? or the Ceremoniale di Roma of the year 1630, wherein is inserted the Pope's patent to Robert Dudley, making him a Roman Patrizio, &c., and giving him power to create nobles? or to the reports or decisions in the Papal courts (la Rota?) in favour of R. Dudley's claims for compensation from the crown of England (the date of such decisions may be about 1618 or 1628 or 1638)? M. P.

WAS EUGENE A DEIST?—The following was the passage which led me to think so—

"Reflecting that Marlborough was a heretic, and Eugene a Deist."—Brougham's Lives of Men of Letters, vol. i. p. 15, ed. 1845.

CYRIL.

FLYING BUTTRESSES.—Are there many cases known of flying-buttresses being hollow and containing a flight of steps, such as in those at the end of the north transept of Westminster Abbey? Where do others occur? JOHN DAVIDSON.

HOOL-CHEESE.—

"She scarce knew the meaning of the orders she received. She set the kettle on the table, and placed the tea-board at the fire . . . and said, 'Yaw may think . . . as haw ai've yeaten hool-cheese but it y'an't soa, I've think I'm bewitched.'"—Sir Launcelot Greaves, ii. ch. 3.

What is hool-cheese?

CYRIL.

LAWRENCE.—Henry Lawrence, President of Cromwell's Council, died in the year 1664. In 1690 was recorded in Jamaica the will of John Lawrence.

The late James Lawrence (Knight of Malta) published an account of the various families of Lawrence in the Gentleman's Magazine (1815-20), and asserted that John Lawrence, who died in 1690, was a younger son of the President of Cromwell's council, and that he emigrated first to Barbados and then to Jamaica, with James Bradshaw, a nephew of the regicide Judge.

This assertion has been generally adopted and repeated. It was reiterated with some singular anachronisms in the obituary notice of Sir William Stephenson, late Governor of Mauritius, in a popular paper.* It is to be found in Burke's Peerage and Baronetage, voce "Abinger," &c.

It would be desirable to know on what foundation so general a belief rests. Facts indisputable in one generation are supposed to be so patent as not to require any great attention to the preservation of proofs. In the next generation, however, the fact is questioned, and it is then perhaps extremely difficult to produce the legal proof requisite to substantiate the descent. I am now desirous of eliciting any information that may exist on the present subject, based upon positive documentary evidence, for the will of John Lawrence, proved in 1690, contains no allusion whatever to his relations in England or elsewhere; and Henry Lawrence, President of Cromwell's Council, left no will. Is this John Lawrence of 1690, then mentioned in the will of Sir — Lawrence, Bart., of St. Ives, and his brother, or in the wills of the Dowager Lady Lawrence or Lady Baltimore? SPAL.

N.B. In seeking for the proof of this link in the pedigree of Lawrences, I by no means deny its truth. It is only the legal proof that I question.

LE POER QUERIES.—I am anxious to know—

1. What were the arms, crest, and motto of Robert le Poer, who was marshal to Henry II. in 1172, when he went over to Ireland, and who afterwards settled in co. Waterford?

2. Did the Le Poers (or Powers) bear the same about 1600? if not, what were their arms, crest, and motto at that time? and does the Marquis of Waterford quarter the same now as the representative of the family?

It is said that a branch of the Power family settled in England about the year 1600, and about 1680 assumed other arms, which they have retained ever since. A friend of mine who is descended from the above branch, has in his possession some ancient relics, with armorial bearings upon them, and if any of your correspondents can answer the above questions so as to supply the missing links, it is believed that he will be able to prove some curious facts respecting the family.

E. WALFORD.

Hampstead, N.W.

* Illustrated London News.

COOTE MOLESWORTH, M.D., a younger son of the first Viscount Molesworth, is stated in the modern Peerages to have died in 1782, æt. 85, unmarried. Surely this is an error. In the contemporary accounts of the great fire which occurred at Lady Molesworth's house in London in May, 1763, where several members of the family perished, it is stated that Dr. Coote Molesworth, with his wife and two children, were on a visit to Lady Molesworth at the time, and describes the manner of their escape; and a pedigree now before me mentions that "Margaret," only child and heir of Jervas Wright, M.D. of Sheffield, married "Bourchier Molesworth," son of Coote Molesworth, a younger son of Lord Molesworth. Mrs. B. Molesworth married, secondly, Rev. — Sealey, and, thirdly, — Holmes, and died in Ireland in 1811 or 1812, without issue. Any information as to the marriage and issue of the foregoing Coote Molesworth would be esteemed.
G. B.

A PAIR OF IRON ORGANS.—I shall feel obliged if some one of your many ecclesiastical correspondents would explain the following extract from Hutchins' Notice of the Church of Buckland Abbas, Dorset:—

"In 1550 here were a pair of iron organs, weighing about 200l., which were probably then taken down and sold."

Both the rectory and vicarage of this parish formerly belonged to the abbots of Glastonbury, and hence the ecclesiastical adjunct to the Buckland, a name given to several other parishes in the Vale of White Hart, down to King Stag Inn, in the Royal Forest, where the beautiful white hart of King Henry III. was killed by Thomas de la Lind, a great hunter of the time, for which a fine was laid on all the lands of himself and of the other squires in at the death; and this amerçiamment is still annually paid into the Exchequer as "White Hart Silver." QUEEN'S GARDENS.

PHILIPS, EARLS OF PEMBROKE.—Where did the two Philips, Earls of Pembroke in the seventeenth century, die, and where were they buried?
M. P.

DESCENDANT OF SARSFIELD.—I am acquainted with a gentleman, who claims to be the only living representative of the celebrated General, through a female line. To my mind he establishes his claim; but I wish to know if there is any other claimant, or if it is known whether the general left any one to transmit his line. Some correspondent, versed in such matters, will no doubt enlighten me on this point.
S. REDMOND.
Liverpool.

TAVERN SIGN.—Dr. Adam Clarke says, on the first clause of Prov. xii. 10, "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast," that, "Once in my travels I met with the Hebrew of this clause on the signboard of a public inn." The doctor does not mention where it was, but perhaps some of the readers of "N. & Q." can tell, and if it is still extant.

GEORGE LLOYD.

Thurstonland.

ROBERT WALLACE OF KELLY.—It is well known that this gentleman, late M.P. for Greenock, was the pioneer of those measures which resulted in the Post Office reforms effected by the uniform Penny Postage of Sir Rowland Hill's bill. It is stated in the Gentleman's Magazine for Oct. 1855, p. 397 (in a paragraph copied from the Caledonian Mercury), that Mr. Wallace had bequeathed his papers relating to the Post Office, &c., to the Watt Institution at Greenock. In an obliging letter received from the Secretary of that Institution, now before me, he states that "no manuscripts belonging to the late Mr. Wallace are in the Greenock Library, nor can any information be given where such are to be found." Can any one kindly inform me where Mr. Wallace's manuscripts are now repositied?
J. YEOWELL.

4, Minerva Terrace, Barnsbury, N.

"WODROW'S PRIVATE LETTERS," edited by Mr. Maidment in 1829, were reviewed in Fraser's Magazine, where, I understand, the whole work is treated as a fabrication. I shall be obliged by a reference to the year and month of the review.

F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

Queries with Answers.

BP. TAYLOR'S SECOND MARRIAGE.—In Bishop Heber's Life of Jeremy Taylor (Taylor's Works, 10 vols., London, 1854, vol. i. p. xxxv.), there is the following passage:—

"This second wife was a Mrs. Joanna Bridges, who was possessed of a competent estate at Mandinam, in the parish of Llangudor and county of Carmarthen. Her mother's family is unknown; but she was generally believed to be a natural daughter of Charles the First, when Prince of Wales, and under the guidance of the dissipated and licentious Buckingham. That the martyr's habits of life at that time were extremely different from those which enabled him, after a twenty years' marriage, to exult while approaching the scaffold that, during all that time, he had never even in thought swerved from the fidelity which he owed to his beloved Henrietta Maria, there is abundant reason to believe; nor are the facts by any means incompatible. The former indeed rests chiefly on the authority of Mr. Jones's papers."

And in Wilmott's Jeremy Taylor (edit. 1847, p. 118), in speaking of Bishop Jeremy Taylor's second wife, and her supposed parentage, Mr. Wilmott says: "This relationship is claimed on the single authority of the Jones MSS."

Can any more light be thrown on this subject? I suppose "the Jones MSS." are the same as "Mr.

Jones's papers." What and where are Mr. Jones's papers? I should be much obliged if you could find space for this. X. Y. Z.

[William Todd Jones, of Homra, co. Down, was Bishop Taylor's lineal descendant in the fifth degree, and was employed at one period of his life in collecting and arranging materials for the biography of his distinguished ancestor. Mr. Jones possessed, among many other interesting documents, a series of autograph letters to and from the Bishop; and a family-book also in his own handwriting, giving an account of his parentage and the principal events of his life. At his death, in the year 1818, the greater part of his family papers had been deposited at Montalto, under the care of the late John, Earl of Moira. Their subsequent fate has unfortunately not been ascertained. At Donnington, whither all the papers found at Montalto are said to have been transferred, no traces of them remain; and there appears but too much reason to apprehend that they were consumed, together with some other packages belonging to the Marquess of Hastings, in the fire which destroyed the London Custom-house. All which the family yet retain consists of some extracts made by Mr. Jones from these documents with a view to his intended work, and which were liberally communicated to Bishop Heber. Consult his Life of Bishop Taylor, as reprinted by the Rev. C. P. Eden in Taylor's Works, edit. 1854, vol. i. pp. x., cxxii. and ccc.]

"SERMONS UPON THE QUADRAGESIMAL GOSPELS."—Can any of your readers acquaint me with the title of a book, containing forty-two sermons on the Quadragesimal Gospels? evidently published toward the end of the sixteenth or in the beginning of the seventeenth century. My copy has, I conjecture, been royal property. On the binding are embossed the letters "C. R.," surmounted by a crown; which I cannot otherwise interpret, than by "Carolus Rex." These marks I only recently discovered, but there are six on each side. The title is gone, but the dedication runs:—

"To the two noble knights, Sir John Strangways and Sir Lewis Dive; and their vertuous ladies, the Lady Grace Strangways and Lady Howard Dive, in acknowledgement of his own true love and respect, Don Diego Puede-Ser dedicateth these his indeavours."

J. H. H.

Louth.

[The title-page is an engraving of scriptural subjects in nine compartments. The work is entitled "Devout Contemplations expressed in Two-and-Fortie Sermons upon all the Quadragesimall Gospells, written in Spanish by Fr. Ch. de Fonseca. Englished by I. M. of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford. London, Printed by Adam Islip, Anno Domini 1629." Don Diego Puede-Ser is the pseudonym for James Mabbe, of whom an excellent account was furnished to "N. & Q." (2nd S. xi. 3) by Mr. BOLTON CUMERY. Consult also Wood's Athena (Bliss), iii. 58. There is an unpublished work of James Mabbe in Harl. MS. 5677, entitled "Observations touching some of the more Solemne Tymes and Festivall Dayes of the Yeare." The Advertisement is addressed "To my worthy Friend, Mr. Jhon Browne," and is signed "James Mab, from my Chamber at St. Mary Magdalen Colege, December 27, 1626." In this Advertisement Mabbe mentions another of his works published during the preceding year, and which we have not been able to trace. He says, "This is but an Appendix, or little piece of building annexed to that great work wherewith I presented you the last year. The other was the mansion-house; this the out-offices, without which latter, the former could not conveniently consist. This Part had been finished with the other, had not sickness (an inevitable stop) been an hindrance to that business. Now to those Practicks of Meditations I have added certain Observations upon your more solemn Festival Days. You were pleased to take the first in good part; and I am so confident of your love, that I rest most assured you will afford this other the like kind of entertainment."]

THOMAS À KEMPIS.—In what work of Thomas à Kempis does any equivalent for the following distich occur, and what are the original words?—

"I never find, whichever way I look,
True joy, but in some corner with a book."

(Quoted in The Catholic Choralist, by W. Young, Dublin, 1842, p. 166.)

H. W. T.

["I have sought for rest every where," Thomas à Kempis often said towards the close of life, "but I found it no where, except in a little corner with a little book." (Charles Butler's Life of Thomas à Kempis, prefixed to The Following of Christ, ed. 1852, p. xix.) Dr. Dibdin says that "Mr. Butler notices this memorable aphorism as occurring in the 21st chapter of The Imitation, where I find it not." Dibdin has also the following note on this passage: "Dr. Hickes says, that Thomas of Kempis was much delighted with this motto: 'In Hoeckens und Boeckens;' that is, 'In Little Corners and Little Books;' meaning, that his only sure rest was found in such situations and with such companions; or, adds the biographer [C. Butler] it was sometimes 'In een Hoecken met een Boecken;' that is, 'In one little Corner, with one little Book.' There was, accordingly," continues he, "a rough portrait or picture of this venerable man, done either by himself or by one of his contemporaries, with the foregoing inscription; which an hundred years after his decease was still kept in the same house where he had lived, though very much then defaced; and which I find (Tolans Vit. Kemp.) was shewed as a devout curiosity to such as visited the place." From such an anecdote, to have represented our author without a Book, would have been scarcely a venial heresy."]

GREAT TOM OF OXFORD.—Can any one inform me why the principal gate and quadrangle of Christ Church, Oxford, is called by the extraordinary name of "Tom"? I am not certain whether the bell takes its name from the quadrangle, or the quadrangle from the bell. I am aware that Wolsey's name was Thomas; but I am afraid this common solution of the difficulty cannot be received, as Anthony Wood mentions the bell as having been taken away from the cathedral, and after having been recast, as having been put in the tower, since called "Tom Tower;" and this in Cardinal Wolsey's time, and mentions it as being already called "Tom." Not having the book by me, I cannot quote the exact passage, but it will be found in his description of Christ Church. H. W. Z.

[The great bell Tom in the campanile of the tower of Christ Church belonged formerly to the right tower of Osney Abbey, and was recast in 1680, when Dr. Fell, Bishop of Oxford, was Dean. The old inscription on this bell was, "In Thomæ laude resono Bim Bom sine fraude." The present inscription is, "Magnus . Thomas . Clusius . Oxoniensis . renatus . Aprilis . viii . Anno . MDCLXXX . Regnante . Caroli . II . Decano . Joanne . Oxon . Episcopo . Subdecano . Gul . Jane . ss . TH . P . et arte Christ . Hodson." It has been conjectured with some probability that Great Tom was named after Thomas à Becket. The great gate, commonly known as Tom Gate, is so named from the cupola containing the great bell.]

CHAP.—Is there any instance of the use of this favourite slang word so early as the following?—

"The purchaser will look upon himself as a provident chap that has secured . . . heaven by that wise bargain." Capt. Carleton, p. 275, ed. 1743.

CYRIL.

[Webster quotes an earlier use of this word from one of Steele's works: "If you want to sell, here is your chap."]

Replies.

WAITS AT YORK.

(3rd S. vii. 275.)

Of the custom described I had never before heard. But in the collection of Proclamations, Broad-sides, and Ballads, presented by Mr. J. O. Halliwell to Chetham's Library, Manchester, and bound in thirty-two folio volumes, No 1524, is an old song engraved with music, entitled "York Waits,"—too long and too "free" to print entire; from which I extract the lines exhibiting the "Waits" themselves. It begins:—

"In a winter's morning
Long before the dawning,
Ere the cock did crow,
Or stars their light withdraw,
Waked by a hornpipe pretty,
Play'd along York city,—

In a winter's night
By moon or lantern light,
Through hail, rain, frost, or snow,
Their rounds the Music go,
And each in frize or blanket
(For either Heaven be thanked)

Lined with wine a quart,
Or ale a double tankard,

Burglars send away,
And bar-guests dare not stay.

Candles, four in the pound,
Lead up the jolly round;
Whilst Cornet shrill i'th' middle,
Marches, and merry Fiddle:
Curtel (?) with deep hum, hum,
Cries 'We come, we come, we come';
And Theorbe loudly answers
Thrum, thrum, thrum, thrum.
But, their fingers frost-nipt,
So many notes are o'er-slipt,
As that you'd take sometimes
The Waits for the Minster chimes.
Then, Sirs, to hear their music
Would make him sick, or you sick;
And much more to hear a ropy fiddler call
With voice like her that cries,
'Who shrimps or cockles buys?'
'Past three! fair, frosty morn;
Good morrow, my masters all!'"

These lines show that the York Waits were the musical watchmen of the old city. Their instruments seem to have been the cornet, the fiddle, the curtel (? citole), and the theorbo, which may indicate the period depicted. "We come," &c., is probably a line from Henry Purcell's chorus, "Come if you dare." The "bar-guests" classed with burglars, may mean late topers at public-house bars, or the old Yorkshire hobgoblin bar-gheists (i. e. gate-ghosts) or boggarts. CRUX.

ASSUMPTION OF ARMS.

(3rd S. vii. 317.)

There may be no law on the statute-book which shall forbid a man from wearing coat armour. Neither is there any law which shall forbid him to walk about out of doors with his coat covered over with gold lace or turned inside out, or with one red leg and one blue leg to his trowsers, or with a cap and bells on his head. But if he thinks that the wearing of the gold-lace coat or any of the other things named will confer an honour, or raise him in the estimation of his neighbours, he is mistaken. The honour must come first; the badge by which it is revealed should follow. In past times heraldic bearings have always been understood as a distinction conferred by the king, as a mark of favour for some good service done. A man, therefore, who displayed a device on his shield, was known to have done something to have earned it, and hence he was honourable in the eyes of his fellow men. This is evidenced in history, where a young esquire would appear in the lists bearing a white shield, a virgin shield, or virge escue, showing that he had not performed any feat of arms, or other deed, which he could record before the eyes of the world: hence the term, an heraldic achievement. It is a mistake to suppose that any man could assume what he liked according to his mere whim, or that such a whim would be acknowledged by his fellow men.

[* These lines on the York Waits, with a few variations, appeared in our last volume, p. 510.—ED.]

The devices in heraldry were not fanciful; or if they were fanciful, they were not arbitrary. Throughout the best ages of this practice they were typical and significant, like hieroglyphics on an Egyptian monument. They had their meanings, though many of those meanings have been lost in the lapse of time. The cross was a favourite device with the Crusaders, who loved to display it in their conflicts with the Infidels, to distinguish them from their opponents, and to show for what they were fighting. Scallop shells were adopted by those who went on pilgrimage, especially to Compostella: spears, swords, and other weapons of war are sufficiently significant amongst those who lived in a rude age, and whose business was arms; the chevron, representing the roof beams, or principals in the roof of a house, is said to have been generally given to the younger son, to show that he must be the architect of his own house or fortunes, as he did not inherit the family patrimony. The same principle in modern times guided the granting of a new coat, or augmentations on a former one. Witness the ship and other things on the shield of Nelson, typical of his great naval fame. One of Nelson's admirals had two or three typical augmentations granted by the hereditary Earl Marshal, on the part of the king, for services performed: a chief azure wavy to represent the sea, on which was placed a naval crown or. An anchor was also added. The crest had previously been a stag standing on the ground. It is now a stag standing on a naval crown, azure. Grants were made for single acts of bravery or incidents in life. Thus the Hamiltons have the oak tree for a crest half cut through with the saw, according to the legend, too long to give here. The Dalsells bear a dead man in pale, the founder of that family having received large grants of land and this bearing from the king, for having rescued the dead body of a friend from the enemy by whom he had been taken and hanged. Some devices are plays upon the bearer's names. Thus, Whitlock bears three padlocks; Cotton, three hanks of cotton; Ducke, three ducks, and so on. All this shows, and scores of other examples might be adduced, that the devices in heraldry were not meaningless.

People may try and twist their arguments as they choose, but no sophistry can explain away the general impression of society, that heraldic bearings are the badges of a gentleman—of some one elevated above the common herd. It was so in ancient time, and the impression has naturally descended to our own day. No successful tradesman thinks his gentility complete until he sports his emblazoned shield. To sport his carriage is not enough. This, of course, is a weakness. It is one way in which the vanity of human nature betrays itself. People who do this flatter themselves that no one will ask questions, and that no one will know anything about it; or they console themselves by thinking that people will conclude that they and their ancestors always had a coat of arms, but that they had never displayed it until now.

No one who invents a coat of arms and has it put either upon his plate or his carriage, would like to confess to the proceeding, because he knows that he would meet with derision instead of respect. Those, therefore, who do the thing surreptitiously try to keep the secret, and hope no one will find it out. They fail, however, to give to their coat of arms the very value which would alone make it really worth having; namely, the having got it in the regular way. To speak of a brougham or any other carriage, or a butler, as luxuries, and a coat of arms as a luxury to a rich man, is a mistake. A coat of arms, if honourably obtained, is not so much a luxury as an honour. Besides, in a well-appointed establishment, a carriage cannot be looked upon as a luxury; it is necessary. Its owner makes use of it for himself where a poorer man would call a cab, or hail a bus; and it is moreover available for the use of his friends or visitors. In a wealthy house, where there is much dinner company, a butler is a necessary also.

No man can shed honour on himself. He may perform some good or great deed worthy of honour, and when the world has seen it, he will be honoured in consequence. The monarch, as supreme head of the nation, has been designated "the Fountain of Honour," because all honourable distinctions emanate from the crown. The person who assumes armorial bearings surreptitiously does it in the very way to render them of no value even in his own eyes, to say nothing of the eyes of his neighbours. But, as I said before, he will hope that nobody will know anything about it. He will bear them as if he had a right to them, and he will hope that people will suppose he really has the right, and that they will not ask questions. Every sensible man would think that honours borne in this way were not worth having. Some successful tradesmen put their initials in cypher on the panels of their carriages. No one can find fault with this. It is amusing to observe that, whilst the weak vanity of some people urges them to covet honours, which would turn out to be no honours unless regularly obtained, they seem to be fully aware that they will not escaping fixing upon themselves, the dreaded term "snob." Myself, I should like to have a good definition of that word. However, such a term is never applied to those who obtain their honours honourably. This ought to be quite enough to satisfy every sensible man.

P. HUTCHINSON.

NEUMANN WEISSENSCHILD seems to me to be right in both his positions; but he loses sight of the fact that hereditary arms have become identified with families as honorary social distinctions, and have in many instances for generations been used as such on public monuments and in other ways. Armorial bearings have thus been rendered indirect evidences of the consanguinity and long established respectability and dignity of certain families. They have therefore served a purpose not recognised in NEUMANN WEISSENSCHILD'S letter, and one which deserves due consideration and respect; and on this ground the claims of the Heralds' College to authority may be consistently advocated. But it is quite a fair question, I think, to propose that that venerable body should adapt its regulations and requirements to the altered times in which we live. At present many people send up "name and county" to some unauthorised herald in the metropolis, who furnishes a coat to order (like a tailor) for a sum that is moderate in comparison with the demand of the functionaries of the college. Now, if they were to be content with say 10*l.* for a grant, and 5*l.* for a confirmation, and be empowered to require a guinea a-year regularly for their authority to the grantee to use the coats conceded or confirmed—the Chancellor of the Exchequer to go shares with the Heralds by the levying of a stamp on the grants and confirmations, and of fifty per cent. on the yearly permits, the duty on armorial bearings being abolished, the kings-at-arms, pursuivants, and so forth, would increase their labours largely and profitably, and the unauthorised pretenders to arms might be rendered amenable to fines and penalties, which would scarcely be risked under the circumstances, as they would be enforced by government in the usual manner.

It is probable that by regulations framed on the principle above imperfectly explained, the unauthorised use of arms would be prevented; for no one would be entitled to "sport" armorial bearings unless he had a college grant or confirmation to show in justification of his so doing. If any person exhibited arms publicly, as on a carriage or a house, or privately by sealing letters with an armorial signet, and causing such insignia to be engraved on silverspoons, and so forth, he would be liable to be called on to produce his grant or certificate by the excise officers. If he could not do so, his evasion of the government stamp would be detected, and his further pretensions to armorial bearings without authority would be stopped. The punishment for such attempted evasion, on proof before a county court judge, might be a fine equal in amount to the charge for a grant. It might be advisable to call even on all authorised bearers of armorial insignia, without exception, to pay a fee of 5*l.* for a confirmation or registration grant; so that the Heralds' College would thus be provided with a complete register of all the families in the country using arms.

If the readers of "N. & Q.," interested in this question, would discuss it, perhaps an improvement might be effected in the present system.

MEDIUS.

"Let it be granted that armorial bearings existed long before Heralds as now technically understood, and that in the first ages of their use, they were assumed, in most if not all cases, according to taste or fancy. In any case they were assumed for distinction's sake. To preserve this distinctiveness and avoid confusion should more than one person or family claim the same arms, registration became necessary, and this led to the appointment of Heralds. The possession of this, an authorised registry by the Heralds, placed them in the position of referees, and the Earl Marshal, whose officers they were, became the final arbiter and judge in all disputed points. To those persons or families, who having assumed certain coats, had used them without dispute, these same arms were confirmed by being entered in the registry; while to those who, not having previously borne arms, were by their position entitled to that distinction, coats of arms were assigned by the College of Heralds. In either case these arms were acknowledged and legitimate bearings; they told their own story, were capable of being verified, they were borne by right, and their title ascertainable."

In early times arms were assumed because there was no authority to grant arms; but, with the establishment of the Court of Heralds, assumption ceased. The intervention of that body, as agents of the crown, henceforth became imperative. To grant the power of assuming arms to whosoever chooses is to confuse and render useless the most exact and scientific as well as the most picturesque of historic records. "Assumed" arms are fictitious arms; to say that they are the coat of arms of him who assumes them, is to speak an untruth.

That every man has the power of making this assumption is beyond denial. A man may assume a title and call himself a duke, no one can prevent him; but he is no duke for all that. The ambitious citizen of Baltimore, who insisted on having the arms of the English ambassador painted on his carriage, acquired no coat by his vulgar impertinence.

In these days, when changes in social position are so frequent, there are many who desire to find themselves "at home" in the rank to which their exertions have raised them. Many, no doubt of high descent, are rising from the obscurity into which they had fallen; and if these can prove their descent, arms are theirs by inheritance. But to assume them without proof, simply from similarity of name, is to proclaim as a truth that which is only conjecture or a hope. There are others like your correspondent, NEUMANN WEISSENSCHILD, whose forefathers have confessedly never borne arms, and who can therefore have no right to arms. To both these the Heralds' College is the only legitimate resource. By that body a coat can still be granted, and the true state of the case will be registered for reference by future generations—that at such a time, to such a person, for such a reason, such a coat was granted, to be borne by him and his descendants, and by none else. The coat becomes distinctive and his own. Whereas to the assumed coat everyone has an equal right; it belongs to no one in particular.

It is a common weakness of the day—a weakness of the fastidious parvenu—to feel ashamed to acknowledge or to have it registered, that he cannot prove his descent from a certain ancient namesake, or that his ancestors have never borne “arms.” If it be true why should a man be ashamed of it? It is no disgrace, but an honour to have raised oneself. Let it only be borne in mind that there can be no gentility apart from truth. The infraction of this principle is involved in the unauthorised “assumption” of arms, or of another man’s name, and is the essence of what your correspondent calls “snobbism” or “snobbishness.”

What is a “snob?” Not a man of humble birth or mean extraction, or low social position or rustic manners. The “snob” is the man who assumes to be what in truth he is not, and tries to conceal what he really is.

“Quod non est simulat, dissimulatque quod est”— are applicable descriptions of a snob. He sails in society under false colours, he affects to be other than he is; all such affectation is vulgarity or “snobbism.”

Your correspondent deludes himself in supposing that his coat of arms will be only an elegant badge to adorn his carriage. This it may be, but its effect, whatever its intention, will be to deceive those who do not know better—all not in the secret. It will be a palming himself off in the crowd of non-heraldic admirers as a gentleman—a Weissenschild too! entitled to bear arms without having any such right. If this be not “snobbish,” because false, it is difficult to apprehend where the peculiar idiosyncrasy begins.

But my knowledge of human nature tells me that the real stumbling-block is the money to be paid for a grant; the struggle is between vanity on one side, and parsimony on the other. If a coat of arms could be had for a guinea, no more would be said, the money would be paid. Well, no doubt in fees and stamps the outlay is considerable for a poor man; let such a one wait till he is richer, and has made good his position; but for a man who has already raised himself “by his brains,” who is “by education and membership of a learned profession,” and by other claims, a gentleman—nay, an esquire!—who has “set up his brougham, butler, library, pianoforte, and other articles of luxury,” surely the sum asked is after all no very great thing. It would only purchase a fifth-rate picture. As there is no necessity to spend money on such an objet de luxe as a coat of arms, I do not see that any one can of right complain. The legislature considers that they who aspire to these distinctive emblems of gentility should pay for them as for other needless luxuries, and there should be no objection to pay. Why should the whole thing be looked on as a “wretched matter of £. s. d.” more than paying the legal fees on being made a peer, or a knight, or bishop, or a serjeant-at-law? The charge is but for fees to those who have the trouble, and for stamps to the government; and the assuming without payment, and by a side wind, proprio motu, that for which the law provides an authorised channel in order to save one’s purse, appears to my view to partake no little of the nature of fraud,—as much so as evading a stamp or legal fee in any business transaction.

A Nemesis has pursued your correspondent in the selection of the coat he so elaborately blazons. “To ape” is a function of “to assume,” and one of the peculiarities of the genus snob; and the whole bearing of Weissenschild late Schweinsfleisch will be complete by adhering strictly to the Darwinian theory, and assuming as a motto “Simius sum.” The space I have occupied forbids my entering on the subject “Change of Name.”

CROWDOWN OF THAT ILK.

“THE VICAR AND MOSES.”

(3rd S. vii. 125, 189.)

Constant engagement must be my excuse for the delay of the present letter, and for the carelessness of my former one. In reply to your correspondents allow me to say, that by the hasty expression “of my own name,” I meant surname only. My great-grandfather’s name was, I believe, John Allbutt. The date of his death I really do not know, without inquiries as yet unmade. I have, however, often heard my father speak of his grandfather as a very fine old man, whom he just can remember as remarkable for a blue coat, powdered wig, large shoe-buckles, and most imposing-headed cane. I should suppose, therefore, that my great-grandfather, who wrote “The Vicar and Moses,” died somewhere about 1808, at an advanced age. His character and doings have often been talked of among us, as he seems to have been a man of considerable originality, and of no mean attainments. In his earlier years he was a good deal attracted by the teaching of the Encyclopædic Schools in France, and hence the readiness of his satire upon the local parson. Like the Roman magistrates, however, he considered forms of religion very useful for the “commoner sort,” and on the appearance of the Methodist revival he ordered down a preacher for the “squire’s” servants and his own. This ended in the conversion of some members of his own family, much to his annoyance. We have an excellent portrait of him as a young man, and the face is one showing much character and humour. I am sorry that I cannot refer your correspondent to the pieces in the first numbers of the Gentleman's Magazine, which were written by my progenitor; it is quite possible that some records of them exist, but being as I am far from my relations I cannot make any search. When at my father's house in Suffolk, a short time ago, I put the question to him, and he replied that he really had never thought of making any minutes of the matter, and had no records at hand, but that the Gentleman's Magazine always laid, number after number, upon his grandfather's table, and that he used to correct proofs for it, and would occasionally refer to his effusions. It seems, indeed to have been so well known as to excite no question or inquiry. All I can add is, that if your correspondent will turn, as I have lately done, to the first few numbers of the Gentleman's Magazine, he will light upon several pieces bearing a great resemblance to "The Vicar and Moses." Finally, let me say that I make no claim on behalf of my ancestor for the authorship of a piece which has no great literary merit, as it appears to me, but seems to have hit the public fancy. The authorship of it has always been looked upon in our family as a matter of certain knowledge, and my letter was only drawn forth by the interest taken in the question by a leading antiquary, my personal friend.

T. CLIFFORD ALLEBUTT.

LOCALITY OF ZION IN EARLY WRITERS.

(3rd S. vii. 215, 306.)

The words of Epiphanius, on which I rest as showing what hill he regarded as Zion, are νῦν δὲ τμηθεῖσα; this he affirms of ἡ ἀκρα ἡ ποτὶ ἑνδρῶν ἐν Σιών; so that although, as DR. BONAR states, another akra is mentioned in Josephus (and I may add in the Maccabees), and though the word may be used of any fortress, yet here we have distinctly the akra that was formerly in Zion, but which is now cut down. This identifies it with the akra on the same hill as the temple to the north, marking the eastern hill as Zion. That the temple hill was ploughed we know as an historical fact:—

"The Jewish writers relate, and their account is adopted by Jerome, who has unfortunately confounded the events of the times of Titus and Hadrian, that the plough was drawn over the site of the temple, as a mark of perpetual interdiction There is in this instance the less reason to doubt the substantial truth of the statement, since the Jews specify the name of the Roman, Turranius Rufus, by whom the ceremony was performed."—Antient Jerusalem, by the Rev. J. F. Thrupp, p. 201.

I ought perhaps to have mentioned that the passage from Epiphanius has been used by Mr. Fergusson for another purpose; he, like DR. BONAR, seems not to have noticed the identification shown by the mention of the akra in Zion, now cut down.

Apart from evidence I cannot believe that there is any Jewish identification of Zion with the south-western hill. We know that the name of Zion for that mount gradually grew up amongst Christians; but it could not have been a settled point when Eusebius in the fourth century, and before him Origen, in the third, knew well that Zion was the temple hill. I do not believe that any one, from scripture alone, and except on the ground of comparatively modern traditions, has ever thought, or could think, that Zion was other than the temple hill:—

"For the Lord hath chosen Zion: He hath desired it for His habitation: this is my rest for ever. Here will I dwell, for I have desired it."—Psalms cxxxii. 13, 14; (see too Psalms lxxiv. 2, 3.)

I am perfectly willing to receive DR. BONAR's correction as to the distance of Neby-Semwil from Jerusalem, although in Van de Velde's Survey the road marked is not quite five miles. There is no temerity, however, in conjecturing a wrong numeral in Epiphanius; such mistakes of copyists are habitual, and in the case of Epiphanius, MS. authority is not very abundant. Prof. W. Dindorf, in his late edition of Epiphanius, has done much for the criticism of the text; and to his clear statements I must refer those who wish to know what MSS. exist of that writer, and how far they have been available for the emendation of the text; a thing which Dindorf has well performed.

Any reference to what might be the Gabaon of Epiphanius is wholly irrespective of the subject of the present inquiry, as to which I maintain that the evidence of Epiphanius, Eusebius, and Origen is free from a shadow of ambiguity.

S. P. TREGELLES.

Plymouth.

"PISCIS FLOTANS" (3rd S. vii. 55, 124, 288.)—I know not whether it may be worth while to add that the fletta, flet, might probably be, not the dab, or flounder, as P. S. C. seems to conclude, but the holibut, which is called by Lacépède Pleuronecte fletan, and Hippoglossus by most of our best modern naturalists. See Couch's Fishes, art. "Holibut," vol. iii. p. 149. C. W. BINGHAM.

THE FLEURS-DE-LYS OF FRANCE (3rd S. vii. 338.)—The change in the royal arms of France was made by Charles V. about the year 1365. On the Great Seal of Henry IV. of England the banners appear charged with France Modern. (See Boutell's Heraldry, Historical and Popular, 1865, pp. 296-7.) J. WOODWARD.

KINGDOM OF DALMATIA (3rd S. vii. 339.)—The leopards' heads on the thalers of Rudolph II. would be the arms of the kingdom of Dalmatia, viz.: az. three leopards' heads caboshed, crowned or. It was united to Hungary about the year 1087, at the death of King Zolomerus.

J. WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

SONG (3rd S. vii. 281, 330.)—Will the following prove an illuminator in reference to the song sought after? It is not as full as I could wish, but it is all I possess on the subject. Any one who may remember, and who had the entrée to certain literary society in Dublin from 1835 to about 1842, must have clear recollection of the following. There was a lady who had a remarkable voice—indeed I have often heard judges pronounce her to have been superior to Jenny Lind—who, however, had not appeared at the time.* The lady was the guest of all parties, particularly literary. She used to sing a song which was translated from the Irish, but I regret I have not a copy of the translation; but, from some passages which I quote from memory, I am of opinion it must be the song sought after. The fate of the gifted creature, who charmed and almost entranced thousands by her magic voice, was a sad one indeed; but I am precluded from alluding to it further here. The only portion of the song that clings to my memory are these—

"I'll sell my rock, I'll sell my reel,
When my flax is gone I'll sell my wheel
To buy my love a sword and shield.
Ma Veeth a Vourneen slawn.

"Shool, Shool, Shool arhoo,
There's none but he can ease my woe
Since the lad of my heart from me did go.
Ma Veeth a Vourneen slawn."

I only give the last line as it struck on the ear. I know it is Irish, but regret I cannot translate it. If it be true that this is a translation from an Irish original, and that it is identical with that sung by Miss Edgeworth's sister for Sir Walter Scott, either the learned baronet or Mr. Lockhart must have taken strange liberties with it. The air I know is peculiarly Irish, and, to a judge, of a deliciously plaintive character. The song was no doubt of Jacobite origin. S. REDMOND.

SHORT SERMONS (3rd S. vii. 339.)—The speech attributed to Canning is such as Lord Brougham once described as "an epigram with the knob on." Canning is said to have made the speech thus:—On coming from a church in Dorsetshire, the clergyman who had preached said unwisely, "I knew you would like a short sermon." "But it seemed long," was the ready rebuke of Mr. Canning. T. F.

It was Mr. Canning who made a young clergyman aware that in accuracy of language his ser-

* I have heard Jenny Lind, Catherine Hayes, Piccolini, and all the celebrated singers since 1840, and I am sure the lady alluded to was superior to any of them, but I could not be induced to appear publicly.

mons might be tedious, though they were not long. They were walking from church after one of the clergyman's first sermons, when this dialogue took place:—"Well, Legge, you were not long." "I was afraid of being tedious." "Oh! you were tedious." Mr. Legge became a bishop. He was then walking home from his church at Lewisham. S. D.

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE BRUTE CREATION (3rd S. vii. 339.)—JOSEPHUS probably knows that the opinion of the immortality of animals is advanced by the Rev. S. R. Maitland, in Eruvin.

CHARLES F. S. WARREN.

HUBERT DE BURGH (3rd S. vi. 415.)—It is not easy to trace the proceedings taken against Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent. In the Addenda to Matthew Paris, HERMENTRUDE will find the earl's defence, drawn up by Master Laurence of St. Alban's, in answer to the articles pressed against him in 1230. In this defence the articles are set out at length, and I presume set out correctly. I suppose these articles to be, if not in form, at least in substance, identical with the charges brought against the Earl by Henry III. in 1231. Such, at all events, the Earl represents them to be, when he says, in his defence:—

"All the foregoing charges were let pass, and legally remitted to him, when he made peace again with the King."

One of the articles contains some very strange allegations with respect to the Earl's marriage with the daughter of the King of Scots. But before entering upon this field of inquiry, it would be satisfactory to be assured of the precise form in which the charge was made in 1231. MELETES.

POWER OF FRANKING (3rd S. vii. 279, 350.)—The evidence on which I relied will not, I find, sustain my statement that the duke was accustomed to frank as "Edward." I beg leave to apologise for my error. JOSEPH RIX, M.D.
St. Neot's.

JUDAS OVERTURNING THE SALT (3rd S. vii. 282, 348.)—Amongst every class in Ireland, it is accounted what is designated "unlucky" to upset a salt-stand at a dinner table; and hundreds of times I have been told that the reason was, Judas upset the salt before he betrayed our blessed Redeemer. May I ask, why in Leonardo da Vinci's celebrated picture of the "Last Supper" Judas is painted very nearly black—black, at least, when compared to the faces of the other Apostles. I speak of a fine copy of the picture, not having seen the original. S. REDMOND.
Liverpool.

MODERN BELIEF IN THE BROWNIE (3rd S. vii. 511; vii. 46.)—Sir Walter Scott stated that last place in the south of Scotland supposed to have been honoured or benefited by the of a Brownie was Bodsbeck in Moffatshire. In The White Wife, I showed that belief in the Brownie existed in the Western Highlands in 1863; and, in these pages, at the above references, it was shown by F. A. M. and myself that the Carskey Brownie (Beag-bheul, or "Little-mouth") was supposed to exist so late as the Christmas of 1864. A correspondent of the Argyllshire Herald carries us down to a date still more recent; for, in the issue of that paper for April 22, 1865, the writer, in describing the island of Cara (one of the south Hebridean group, to the west of Cantire) speaks of the rock called "the Brownie's Chair," and of the Brownie who was supposed to have his habitation there. He then says,—

"Many are still alive who are able accurately to rehearse the doings and misdoings of this mysterious personage, and it is unquestionably true that some are to be met with who do not hesitate to declare their belief in his existence still, and who would much prefer his favour to his frown."

CUTHBERT BEDE.

CARABOO (3rd S. vii. 196, 269, 310.)—Reference on this subject may be made to a brief article entitled "Notice of the pretended Princess Caraboo, by Archbishop Whately," published in The Rose, the Shamrock, and the Thistle Magazine for April, 1863. The Archbishop gives her name as Mary Baker—thus confirming the statement of your correspondent, MR. GEORGE PRYCE; and he further tells, how he exhibited specimens of her writing "to my friend Hawkins (now Provost of Oriel College), to Dr. Copleston, who was then Provost, and to Dr. Macbride, the Principal of Magdalen Hall; all of whom, concurred in my judgment that the scrawls were specimens of the Humbug language." On this circumstance, however, becoming known to a certain person, he stated in the Times, that a specimen of Caraboo's handwriting "had been sent to the University of Oxford, which had pronounced it to be the writing of no known language!" The Archbishop considered Caraboo "a professed and notorious liar;" and, in speaking of the credence given to her later statements, says,—“Some persons appear to consider mendacity as a disease analogous to the measles, from which a person who has once had it is thenceforth secure.”

CUTHBERT BEDE.

VALENTINE BROWN (3rd S. vii. 340.)—The following extract has been recently forwarded to me from the British Museum, but I do not know from what source. It is very possible it may be of service to your correspondent:—

"Sir Robert Browne (?) married — Dabenev, and quartered his wife's arms, which are those of the D'Albeneyes of Wymondham, Earls of Arundel."

Different branches of this lady's family were settled in the fifteenth century at Melton Parva, and in the sixteenth century at Barnham Broom, Costessy, and Colton, all in the vicinity of Wymondham, and an elder branch at Snetterton near Thetford.

H. DAVENEY.

Blotfield.

FLEURS-DE-LYS (3rd S. vii. 338.)—MR. DAVIDSON will find an answer to his query in Sandford's Genealogical History, pp. 270, 239. He says:—

"This Henry (V.), being Prince of Wales, as appeareth by his seal annexed to two several indentures, the one dated the 6th day of March, An. 6th, and the other on the 7th of May, An. the 8th of Henry the 4th, his father . . . did bear azure, 3 flowers de lys or, for the kingdom of France (reducing them from semée to the number 3, as did Charles VI. the present French King, quartered with 3 Lyons of England: which makes me of opinion that King Henry IV., this prince's father (although he made use of no other seal than that in which the flowers-de-lys are semée) was the first king of England that, in imitation of his said contemporary Charles VI., reduced that number to 3 flowers-de-luce, for I find them so in his escoccheon, impaling the arms of Joanne of of Navarre his second wife, at the head of his tomb at Canterbury.

"By this seal of Prince Henry it most certainly appears that he, so early as the 6th year of Henry IV. his said father, bore in his achievement only 3 flowers-de-lys." (Cf. Willement's Regal Heraldry, pp. 32, 33.)

LEWIS EVANS.

ARMS OF FRETWELL (3rd S. vii. 221.)—In No. 1067 of the Harl. MSS., at fol. 46, there is a pedigree of the family of Spencer, of Bramley Grange, co. York, in the handwriting of Geo. Owen, York Herald; and in it is sketched the coat, "Argent, three fleurs-de-lis gules" as belonging to Ralph Fretwell of Hellaby.

W. D. HOYLE.

PEREIRA FAMILY (3rd S. vii. 221.)—Perhaps the following notes may be of service to H. W. T.:—

From The Universal Pocket Companion, 1741:—

"David Lopez Pereira, merchant, St. Mary Axe.

Francis Pereira, ibid.

Isaac Alvarez Pereira, merchant, Bury Street.

Pereira and Liina, Jeffery's Square."

From Boyle's City Companion, 1798:—

"B. M. Pereira, Esq., 5, Finsbury Square. [In another place, Finsbury Terrace.]

Mrs. Pereira, 6, Church Row, Fenchurch Street.

Isaac Lopez Pereira Esq., Artillery Street."

R. I. F.

WRITERS ON GAME COCKS (2nd S. xii. 210.)—Εἰς μὲν γὰρ μάχην ὁρμώμενός τε καλῶς ἔχει κρόμενον ἐποτρύνειν, ὥσπερ ἐνιοὶ τοὺς ἀλεκτρυόνας σκόροδα ἐκτρέφουσιν συμβάλλουσιν.—Xenophon's Convicium, c. 4, § 7, p. 17, ed. Bornemann, Lipsiæ, 1824.

Chor. "Ἐχε νῦν, ἐπέγαγον λαβὼν ταδέ. Bot. τί θαί; Chor. "Ἰν' ἔμεινον ὥτ' ἀν' ἐσκοροδισμένους μάχη.

Equites, γ. 491.

The scholiast says: Μετήνεγκεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλεκτρυόνων, ὅτ' ἀν' γὰρ εἰς μάχην συμβάλλουσιν αὐτοὺς, σκόροδα δίδουσιν αὐτοῖς ἵνα δρμήτεροι ᾖσιν ἐν τῇ μάχῃ.—Sch. ad locum.

FITZHOPEKINE.

Garrick Club.

BISHOPS' BARONIES, ETC. (3rd S. vii. 273.)—In the interesting article on the Precedency of Bishops' Wives, it is said that bishops sit in the House of Lords in right of the temporal baronies attached to their bishoprics, and that this is proved "by their title of baron, viscount, or earl, according to the title attached to each see." I suppose the bishopric of Durham to be that to which the title of earl is, or was, attached, in right of the county palatine of Durham and the earldom of Sedburgh, but to which bishopric was the title of viscount attached? Was it to any?

J. WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

MARRIAGE RINGS (3rd S. vii. 12, 307, 350.)—I know there is a general impression amongst the peasantry in Ireland, that a marriage without a gold ring is not legal either by canon or civil law; and at one time I knew a parish town in the south-east of Ireland, where a person kept a few gold wedding-rings for hire. When the parties being married were too poor to purchase a ring of the precious metal, the person alluded to lent a ring, for which he received a small fee, the ring being returned after the performance of the ceremony.

S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

The shrewd remark of Swinburne, "the oracle of canon law," that—

"it skilleth not at this day, what metal the ring be of; the form of it being round, and without end, doth import that their love may circulate and flow continually," ought perhaps to have been satisfactory and decisive to R. C. L. and all impatient bachelors. The example, however, of the ancient Hebrew is in this respect worthy of imitation:—

"They acknowledged also the planet Jupiter (which they called מזל יוב, Mazal Yob) to be a very favourable star. For which reason it was that the new married man was wont to give his bride a ring, whereon was engraved the forenamed words, מזל יוב; that is to say, in the natural signification of the words, a good star, or good fortune, desiring by this ceremony that she might be delivered of all her children, under this favourable starre; as it hath been observed, both by Munster, Aben-Ezra, and Chomer."—Unheard of Curiosities, by James Gaffarel, chap. xi.

J. WETHERELL.

BURGH (3rd S. vii. 200.)—"We cannot discover the family name of Frances the wife of Thomas Lord Burgh, who died 1597." Since the above appeared in "N. & Q." I have seen the will of Mrs. Blanche Parry, dated 1580 [1590], in which she gives "to the Right Honourable the Lady Frances Burghe, my niece, one hundred pounds." This niece was the daughter of her (Mrs. Blanche's) sister, Elizabeth Parry, and wife of Thomas, Lord Burgh, who died in Ireland, 1597. Mrs. Blanche Parry also gives in her will "to Mrs. Frances Burgh, my god-daughter, 20*l*., and to Mrs. Elizabeth Burghe 20*l*." These two last-named girls were daughters of Thomas Lord Burghe, who married Frances, the niece of Mrs. Blanche Parry. F. C.

[We shall feel obliged by the copy of the will so kindly offered by our correspondent.]

GENERAL RICHARD FORTESCUE: LIEUT.-COL. FENWICK: FORTESCUES OF FALLAPIT (3rd S. vii. 341.)—As in future ages "N. & Q." may be quoted as an authority for any statement found in it remaining uncorrected, I may inform BREVIS that Lieut.-Col. Fenwick did not lose his leg "at Albuera, in Spain, or on the Pyrenees," but at Busaco. I knew Lieut.-Col. Fenwick forty years ago; I last saw him at the landing at Falmouth, in Sept. 1828, of Queen Maria da Gloria of Portugal; he was then grandly decorated with Portuguese orders. I have always been interested in Pendennis Castle; an ancestor of mine is (traditionally) known as one of its defenders. Not all "the Devon Fortescues sided with the Parliament;" witness Sir Edmund Fortescue, of Fallapit, the loyal defender of Fort Charles in 1646. For the siege of Fort Charles, list of the garrison, &c., see Kingsbridge and Salcombe, with the intermediate Estuary described, [by Abraham Hawkins, of Alston, Esq.], 1819, pp. 87-93. A photograph of the ruins of Fort Charles is given in Kingsbridge Estuary, compiled by S. P. Fox, 1864. There is also one of Fallapit, the abode of its brave defender. LÆLIUS.

PEWS (3rd S. vii. 267.)—For the information of SIR THOMAS E. WINNINGTON, and other of your readers interested in the matter, I beg to state that two pews, formerly the seats of the Earls of Oxford (De Vere), and the family of the Springs, are still standing in the interesting church of Lavenham, Suffolk. They are highly finished specimens of the style of Henry VII.'s Chapel at Westminster, most elaborately wrought; if possible that of the latter family more so than that of the former. They are both however somewhat decayed, and the Oxford bearings have in every instance been removed from the shields in the decorations. This may probably be accounted for by the fact that in the former case they were affixed to the shields, while in the latter they were carved upon them.

GEORGE VICKERS.

Shimpling, Bury St. Edmunds.

WORDS USED IN DIFFERENT SENSES (3rd S. vii. 278.)—The word nervous is either used to imply energy or feebleness. It is an old joke against magistrates that they administer indifferent justice. The riddle tells us the soul is immaterial. We use the verb to incense in the north of England not as meaning to make one angry, but to make one understand; but as this is a provincialism it may be that insense is the properer way to spell it.

P. P.

TOAD IN STONE (3rd S. vii. 339).—I inclose extracts of a letter recently addressed to me by the Rev. Robert Taylor, the eminent local geologist mentioned by your correspondent:—

"The toad continues in good health, is still an object of great interest, and daily has many visitors. I have little more to add than what I have before stated to you, except that I have carefully examined the rock from which the block was hewn. I have also carefully examined the man who found the toad, and those whom he immediately called to witness the discovery of the stranger. I may add that the quarry, or that part of it where the toad was found, was a few years ago abandoned on account of water; but since then, in an adjoining old-worked quarry the water-works which supply the Hartlepoons have lowered the surface of the water in this quarry about five feet, and in there the toad was found. The rock might be damp, but I am perfectly convinced there was neither vein nor chink, and am still ready to maintain that the animal must have been alive in a dormant state since the deposition of the material of the rock; and, according to my theory of geology, this, the magnesian limestone, was formed before the foundations of the Yorkshire hills were laid; so that it may be affirmed that it is older than these hills, and that it is fully six thousand times six thousand years old. Of course the uninitiated will think this wild kind of language, but I am ready to maintain my opinion."

J. WETHERELL.

THE CAISTOR WHIP (3rd S. vii. 354).—MR. SPENCER HALL, and all who feel interest in the Caistor Whip, will find in The Archaeological Journal, vol. vi. p. 239, an admirable article on "The Gad Whip Service," by Mr. W. S. Walford, F.S.A.

THOS. PURNELL.

BERKELEY ARMS (3rd S. vii. 337).—In an old pamphlet which I have (bound with some more Guides), The Gloucester Guide, among the arms said to have been in the east window of that cathedral, are these: Gules, a chevron, ermine, between ten crosses, patée, argent, for Berkeley.

R. H. RUEGG.

H. M. Customs, W. I. Docks.

BREMEN COIN (3rd S. vii. 323).—The letter stands for semper. The full inscription is—FRANCISCUS I. DEI GRATIA ROMANORUM IMPERATOR SEMPER AUGUSTUS.

T. W. W.

COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK (3rd S. vii. 94, 169, 269, 349).—From the description given by X., I think there can be little doubt as to the identification of the portrait. The second wife of Thomas Howard was clearly the only Countess of Suffolk that it could represent. But I conceive that it could not have been painted till many years later than the date that X. would assign to it. I do not know the date of the lady's birth; but Thomas Howard, her husband, was born in 1561, and it is hardly to be supposed that when he was not more than nineteen his wife should be verging upon fat, fair, and forty. I think it more probable that this likeness of the countess should have been taken at the same time as that of her husband (also attributed to Zuccaro), an engraving from which is to be found in Lodge's Portraits. He is there represented with the collar and badge of the Garter; and, as his installation did not take place till May, 1597, the picture could not have been painted till after that date.

I may here mention that there are several portraits attributed to Zuccaro that could not have been painted by him till long after his visit to England in 1574. Without going beyond Lodge's Collection, I may particularise the portraits of Edward Somerset, Earl of Worcester; George Carew, Earl of Totnes; Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury; and Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton.

MELETES.

D'ABRICH COURT AND WINGHAM CHURCH (3rd S. vii. 229).—The most curious part of the penance upon this nun for breaking her vows and remarrying will be found (p. 269) in Dunkin's Report of the Proceedings at the Congress of the British Archaeological Association, held in Canterbury, 1844. It will not well bear admission into the columns of "N. & Q." Not having access to a copy of Murray's Kent Hand-Book, I am unable to say whether the penance is given there in full.

Mr. Dunkin thus writes:—

[After the death of John, a brief time after his marriage,] "his disconsolate widow, shortly after—in the bloom of youth and beauty—vowed chastity, and was solemnly veiled a nun by the Bishop of Winchester, at the convent of Waverley; but afterwards repenting of having so precipitantly quitted the world, she secretly withdrew from the monastery, and about eight years after, 'before the sun rising upon Michaelmas day, A.D. 1820, was clandestinely married to Sir Eustace Dabrieschescourt in a chapel of the mansion house of Robert de Brome, a canon of the College of Wingham, by Sir John Ireland, a priest. Such a striking violation of ecclesiastical discipline necessarily called forth condign punishment upon the culprits. The Archbishop of Canterbury summoned them both before him at the mansion-house, Maghfield, upon the seventh ides of April, and had not their high rank and riches intervened, would have instantly pronounced the marriage null and void. As it was, he enjoined for their penance," * &c. • For which, see p. 269.

ALPHEUS.

VOLTAIRE (3rd S. vi. 533; vii. 211, 284).—Le Roi Voltaire is the eccentric title of an 8vo volume by M. Arsène Houssaye (Paris, 1858), which seems, from a short account of it by Edward de Barthélemy in his Essais Critiques, to be not so much a biography of Voltaire as a disjointed and somewhat paradoxical éloge, full of humour, verve, and esprit. A very brief and imperfect account of Voltaire's last hours is contained in the following extract from M. Barthélemy's Essais:—

"M. Houssaye retrace sa mort, couverte d'un nuage, mais qui eût été peut-être Chrétienne sans un emproisement maladroit, par lequel échouèrent les sages dispositions d'un ecclésiastique qui, bien qu'essentiellement

* In despite of the indelicacy of this astonishing penance, the lady endured it fifty one years.

dévoûé à la foi, plaisait à Voltaire et s'était déjà fait entendre."

J. MACRAY.

FOXES OR SHEAVES (3rd S. vii. 338.)—In reply to the question, who first suggested the substitution of sheaves for foxes in Judges xv. 4, I may state that this subject is discussed in Harris's Natural History of the Bible, from which it appears that the notion of sheaves is first found in the Republ. des Lettres, Oct. 1707; and Dr. Kennicott refers to the Memoirs of Literature, 1712, p. 15, for a like translation. Sewall, Hollis Professor of Hebrew in Harvard College, Cambridge, U. S., replied. Some think the jackal and not the fox is intended, but Gesenius has shown that the proper Hebrew name for jackal is 'שׁוּאִל, ee (= a howler), whilst שׁוּאִל, shual, is by the best modern scholars rendered fox, as in our version.

T. J. BUCKTON.

MANETHO (3rd S. vii. 356.)—To counteract the attempt to disparage the authority of Manetho by Hengstenberg, who has probably confounded some other of that name, it may be useful to state that in Heeren's Manual of Ancient History (pp. 51-54, Oxf. 1833), the Greek authority for the first period of Egyptian history, after Herodotus and Diodorus, is Manetho, described as the "high priest at Heliopolis, who flourished under the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, about B.C. 260. He wrote the Aegyptiaca, of which, besides several fragments in Josephus, the enumeration of the kings has been preserved in the Chronicles of Eusebius and Syncellus. The authenticity of Manetho is now completely established, since the names of the Pharaohs mentioned by him have been deciphered on the Egyptian monuments. It is worthy of observation, that in Herodotus we have the documents of the priests of Memphis; in Diodorus those of the priests of Thebes; in Manetho those of the priests of Heliopolis—the three principal seats of sacerdotal learning: perfect consistency cannot, therefore, be expected in the accounts of those historians."

Bunsen, Lepsius, and Osburn concur in this eulogy of Manetho. T. J. BUCKTON.
Lichfield.

CLINT OR CLENT: OSSIAN'S GRAVE (3rd S. vii. 323, 366.)—LORD LYTTLETON's note, at the last-quoted page, puts me in mind of a curious monument (?) situate on the apex of a wild and desolate mountain pass, not far from the small town of Borris, county of Carlow, on the road leading from Kiltally to Borris. There are nine stones set up in a peculiar perpendicular manner, and the place is called the "Nine Stones." The stones are about from four to six feet above the ground, and set very irregular as to form. There is a world of local tradition and mystery about these pillars, which are of rough granite, and appear in their natural form; the stone is plentiful in the locality. One of the traditions, credited by the people in the neighbourhood, is, that these stones mark the grave of Ossian.* A quantity of fairy and folk lore (enough to fill a volume) is in existence about these "Nine Stones." This may elicit something more about them. S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

HENRY MARTEN (3rd S. vii. 114.)—Your correspondent P. wishes to know the arms of Marten the Regicide. I do not know if it is worth mentioning, but in the chancel of Ewelme church, Oxon, is a monument to Colonel Francis Martyn, who is believed to have been a relation of Henry Marten. The arms are uncoloured: A chevron, between three lions passant gardant, impaled with a fess ermine between three anchors. As though the monument is mentioned in Skelton's History of Oxfordshire, the inscription is not given, I copy it from my father's notes, as possibly interesting to the readers of "N. & Q.":—

"Hic juxta situs est FRANCISCUS MARTYN de Ewelme, in Comitatu Oxon. Armiger, qui obiit nono die Junii Anno Domini 1682, Etatis 74. Hoc monumentum Johis Martyn unus Executorum posuit."

Francis Martyn built a large house in Ewelme, which was pulled down between forty and fifty years ago. He was an officer in Cromwell's army, and it is supposed his influence was used for the preservation of the monuments in Ewelme church during those troublous times. L. C. R.

"CHRISTIAN BREADBASKET" (3rd S. vii. 356.) A periodical under this title was issued some three or four years ago, price 2d., monthly, published by Houlstone & Wright, but it lived, I think, only seven months. Each number was brought out, near the end, with The Basket of Crumbs, being short pieces, under such titles as the following: "How to make a Fast a Feast," "He is a Babe," "Temptation," &c. I trust this will give BREVIS all he requires on this head.

W. WILLEY.

Birmingham.

GERVASE HOLLES (3rd S. vii. 356.)—Gervase Holles' "Church Notes" have never been printed in a complete form. The quotations occasionally seen in small topographical works relating to Lincolnshire have been obtained by the compilers from the MSS. in the British Museum. Edward Peacock, Esq., F.S.A., of Bottesford Manor, near Brigg, has had in contemplation of publishing these remarkably interesting records with notes. The late Lord Monson incurred the expense of obtaining a copy of Colonel Holles' Notes, and this, we believe, is the only complete one in the county to which they chiefly relate. The Dean and Chapter of Lincoln's Library does not possess a copy! STAMFORDIENSIS.

* Ossian is said to have been the son of the great giant warrior, Finn M'Cool (?).

SOBRIQUETS OF REGIMENTS (3rd S. vii. passim.) I have just met with the inclosed, and have copied it, not knowing, however, whether it has been already inserted among your articles on the sobriquets of regiments or no.

46th. The Lacedemonians.—Enoch Markham, a younger brother of the Archbishop of York, was Lieut.-Colonel of the 46th Regiment, which was employed in America during the War of Independence. The following anecdote is related of him:—

“Having halted his men under a heavy fire, whilst he was for a few moments considering the best mode of attack, he heard talking in the ranks, upon which he coolly turned round, and, commanding silence, harangued the men upon the discipline of the Lacedemonians, and their mode of marching to an attack in perfect silence. This circumstance gained the regiment the sobriquet of The Lacedemonians.”—History of the Markham Family, 8vo, 1854, p. 57.

J. G. NICHOLS.

WHITE LADIES AT WORCESTER (3rd S. vii. 238.) In the Report of the Congress of the British Archaeological Association, held in 1847 in Worcester, by Alfred John Dunkin (p. 298), is an account of the excavations made with the consent of the proprietors of the White Ladies, in search of a subterranean passage said to exist between that nunnery and Hindlip House. There is also an engraving of the ruins of the chapel as it existed in 1847.

Alfred J.

ANNE LADY PARRY AND THE MANOR OF CHARLTON (3rd S. vii. 211.)—I find in Hasted's Kent (folio edit. i. 35), that Queen Elizabeth in her fifth year granted the manor to Lady Anne Parre. I find, however, no mention therein that she was the widow of Sir Adrian Fortescue; nor do I find that she bequeathed the manor to Thomas Fortescue, but that King James I. granted the manor to Sir Adam Newton, knight and baronet.

ALFRED JOHN DUNKIN.

Dartford.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

The Holy Sepulchre and the Temple at Jerusalem. Being the Substance of Two Lectures delivered in the Royal Institution, Albemarle Street, on the 21st February, 1862, and the 3rd March, 1865. By James Ferguson, F.R.S., &c. (Murray.)

These two lectures contain a resumé of all the main points of the argument, with a sufficient amount of illustration and references to make it intelligible, by which Mr. Ferguson believes he establishes the fact that the building popularly known as the Mosque of Omar is, in reality, the sepulchral building which Constantine erected over what he believed to be the tomb of Christ. The subject is one of great interest; and the volume is, for many reasons, well timed. The appendix contains some interesting extracts from a small volume entitled Theodoricus de Locis Sanctis, lately published by Dr. Titus Tobler, of St. Gall.

The Wedgwoods: being a Life of Josiah Wedgwood, with Notices of his Works and their Productions, Memoirs of the Wedgwood and other Families, and a History of the Early Potteries of Staffordshire. By Llewellyn Jewitt, F.S.A. With a Portrait, and other Illustrations. (Virtue Brothers.)

The complaint made by Mr. Gladstone in his admirable eulogium on Wedgwood, that it was strange that the life of such a man should, in this nation of shopkeepers, yet at this time remain unwritten, is no longer called for. The groundwork of the present volume, which has been one of serious labour to the editor, is to be found in the chapters of Wedgwood and Etruria which form a part of the series of histories of the porcelain and earthenware manufactories of this kingdom, which Mr. Jewitt is giving in the pages of the Art Journal. These have been remodelled and re-written, and the additional matter has swelled the narrative to more than double its original size. It now contains a very interesting history of the “great Josiah and his family,” and his works: and the latter being profusely illustrated (the book contains 145 woodcuts), the editor is justified in regarding it as a pleasing and lasting Wedgwood memorial.

The Annual Register; a Review of Public Events at Home and Abroad, for the Year 1864. New Series. (Rivingtons.)

There is obviously a new and long career of usefulness opening to the New Series of this valuable Compendium of Home and Foreign History. Our newspapers get too large for private individuals to file, but the more prominent features of them are here condensed and indexed ready for immediate reference.

The Romance of the Scarlet Leaf, and other Poems, with Adaptations from the Provençal Troubadours. By Hamilton Aidé. (Moxon & Co.)

The opening poems of this little volume remind us strongly of Rogers's Italy; not so much as being imitations of it, as being the emanations from a kindred mind. Is Mr. Aidé right in supposing he is the first to give in English any poetical adaptations from the Provençal Troubadours?

The Early English Organ Builders and their Works from the Fifteenth Century to the Period of the Great Rebellion. An unwritten Chapter in the History of the Organ. By Edward F. Rimbault, LL.D. (A. Whittingham.)

All admirers of the King of Instruments will receive with thanks from Dr. Rimbault this interesting contribution to the early history of Organ-building in England. Dr. Rimbault's industry in research, and judgment in selection, give ample security for the value of his information.

Notices to Correspondents.

We have lately received so many Queries accompanied by requests for private letters in reply, that we think it right to announce that we cannot undertake to furnish private Replies to any inquirers. Our Correspondent, who writes to us on the subject of a recently published tract on “Genealogies,” will, on consideration, see that his remarks are of too personal a character.

ERRATA.—3rd S. vii. p. 364, col. ii. line 21, for “Gollasmach” read “Gollasmachi;” line 34, for “rushed” read “rushed.”

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of “N. & Q.” is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d., or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

 Cases for binding the volumes of “N. & Q.” may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

“NOTES AND QUERIES” is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPED COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Eight yearly Issues) is 11s. 4d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. BAKER, 25, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all Communications for the Editor should be addressed.

“NOTES & QUERIES” is registered for transmission abroad.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1865.

CONTENTS.—N^o 177.

NOTES:—What is a Cosherer? 391—Ballad: Battle of Harlaw, 393—Antony and Cleopatra, 395—Scotch Peers, 1713–14, ib.—The Roman Hypocaust at Slack—The Metropolitan Roads in 1692—De Gustibus, &c.—Fly-leaves—Toasts—Batler—The Epistle to the Laodiceans—“That’s the Cheese”—Couplets, 396.

QUERIES:—“Nan Hartlib” and “Clodius,” 398—Bishop Bedell—Carfax—Annual Sermon on Censoriousness—The Dublin “Comet” Newspaper—Edward Dyer of Brent, co. Somerset—Foreign Dramatic Bibliography—King’s Lynn—Lady Birds—Mercer’s Hospital, Dublin—Peter Pelham the Engraver—Petrus de Alva et Astorga—William Rankins’s “Conceite of Hell”—Gustavus Schwab—The Seven Bishops—Sheriffs of Dublin excommunicated—Tip me the Traveller—Tyler’s “Life of Henry of Monmouth,” 398.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Edward VI.—Melanthe—“Albania”—“The Western Prospect of Bear’s-Den Hall in co. Surrey”—St. Agnes and her Lamb—Bull against Mendicant Friars, 401.

REPLIES:—Capital Punishments, 402—H. H. Prince Francis Rhodocanakis, 403—“Lang-Nebbed Things,” ib.—Portrait of Milton—Hackney Horses: Affri—Martial’s Epigram—Posterity of King Harold—Adverbs improperly used—Meaning of Arbery—The Phillips, Earls of Pembroke—Dalyell’s “Scottish Poems”—The Lincolnshire Church-Notes of Gervase Holles—Royal Franking—Pagan Caricature—The third Plague of Egypt—Caraboo—Cuishe: Cuisheag—Benjamin Franklin—Descendant of Sarazfeld—The O’Connors of Kerry—“Woodrow’s Private Letters,” &c., 405.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

WHAT IS A COSHERER?

Public attention was excited to some extent by the singularity of the presentment case, which in March last was brought before Mr. Baron Hughes, at the Kilkenny Assizes, when Patrick Doyle was impeached, under the statutes of Queen Anne and Geo. III., inter alia, for “coshering” from house to house; and the jury found that “he was an Irish gentleman, and would not work,” and he was sentenced to find two securities in 10*l.* each for his good behaviour for seven years, or to be imprisoned during that period.

The objects of this contribution are to correct what appear to me to be errors of the several scribes, who have attempted to define what a “cosherer” was, and whence the word is derived.

The Times, in an editorial article, March 11 last, says, “the derivation of the term ‘cosherer’ is more than doubtful;” and conjectures that “he is one who pretends to be an Irish gentleman, and will not work.” And again adds:—

“A cosherer is described by some etymologists as a man who goes about from house to house claiming food and lodging, sometimes as a feudal superior, sometimes as a kinsman; coshering himself upon the inmates, and cozening them out of their substance.”

On the 13th of the same month a correspondent, “Priscilla,” writes, “cosherer is obviously derived from the French word coucher (to lie down, to sleep),” and thinks there is no doubt about the derivation.

In the columns of the Daily Telegraph of the 24th March, an oriental etymological origin is sought for the word; and on the 27th following, “Philologist,” in an erudite and interesting contribution to it, exhibiting an acquaintance both with the oriental languages and the Irish or Keltic, says very truly:—

“Their correspondence of form proves their unity of origin. But for the etymological meaning of ‘cosher,’ or ‘cosherer,’ an oriental origin need not be sought. Its import in Hiberno-Celtic excludes the possibility of doubt. Cosher is another name for the class called in Hiberno-Celtic ‘Tories,’ or ‘plunderers,’ ‘searchers,’ ‘seekers,’ &c. But the same parties were also called ‘cosherers,’ which literally means footmen—etymology: cos, a foot; and ear, a man.”

One of our own respected correspondents, H. C. C., acutely, though equally at fault with the others, suggests cios, rent.

Learning and ingenious philological conjecture have been thus expended on the roots and meaning of the word “cosherer;” and now I respectfully, though confidently, submit my conviction that all these conjectures and disquisitions are at variance with the derivation, accurate definition, and the historical and legal significance of the word.

In a Treatise of Ireland, by John Dymmok, supposed to be in attendance upon Essex when he was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, written about 1600, published by the Irish Archæological Society, we are told that—“Irish taxes or services are of two sortes, either made unto the queene by the gentlemen towards their defence and mayntenance of her forces in the countrie, as Rysingout, Bonaght, and Soren, or els by the Lord upon his tennant, as Coynye, Livery, Cashery,” &c.

The writer proceeds then to explain the meaning of these terms, and the word “cashery” (coshery), he thus defines:—

“Cashery is certeine feastes which the Lord useth to take of his tennants after Easter, Christmas, Whitsontyde, Michaelmas, and all other tymes at his pleasure; he goeth to their howses with all his trayne and idlemen of his cuntrye, &c., and holdeth on this course till he have visited all his tenants one after another.”—Pp. 8, 9.

Sir James Ware’s Antiquitates Hibernica confirms the statement of Dymmok:—

“Coshery exactio erat Dynastæ Hibernici, quando ab incolis sub ejus potestate, et clientela, victum et hospitium capiebat pro seipso suaque clientela.”—Sec. 12.

“Coshering” was a custom not peculiarly Irish; it was an ordinary custom, though not so named, also of feudal rule.

“The Lords,” says Sir Henry Spelman, “might take not only of their tenants, but of all the country thereabout, victuals and all other necessaries for furnishing their castles, &c. And by signorial authority as to lye and feast themselves and followers (called ‘coshering’) at their tenants’ houses; and when any matter of extraordinary charge fell upon them, then to extort the same amongst the tenants, which the Irish about forty years since (circa 1550) of my own knowledge, still continued, calling it cuttings, according to our word tallagium. But amongst us it was taken away by the Magna Charta of King John."—Spelman, Of Parliament, London, 1723.

Abolished as the custom had been by Magna Charta, it was not taken away, as Spelman asserts; for we find that during the "visitations" or "progresses" of Queen Elizabeth, she obtruded her royal presence, "eating the landlord out of house and home."

In that patriarchal phasis of society which Ireland shared with other nations, where all members of a sept were "of the one blood," and had the same social status, those primitive and inartificial customs, which prevailed, worked well and harmoniously, and were seldom or never impeded or disturbed by those irregularities, which the Anglo-Norman officials so conveniently for themselves detected, and so indignantly denounced in later years. On the contrary, we have it upon the best authorities, that the colonists adopted them, and exposed themselves to the odium subsequently involving them. Sir John Davies says:—

"But when the English had learned it (coshering), they used it with more insolence, and made it more intolerable, for this oppression was not temporary or limited either to place or time, &c., and this crying sin did drawe downe greater plagues upon Ireland than the oppression of the Israelites did drawe upon the land of Egypt. For the plagues of Egypt, though they were grievous, were but of short duration; but the plagues of Ireland lasted four hundred years together, that is, from the invasion of the English."—Discoverie of the True Causes why Ireland was never entirely subdued, &c. London, 1612, p. 174.

The author of the Faerye Queene, the poet Spenser, in his View of the State of Ireland, 1596, a few years before Dymmok wrote, describing "cosherie" and "kindred" customs, gives the following apologetic explanation, and singularly, though I am convinced inaccurately, attributes its introduction into Ireland to the English colonists:

"The which is a common use amongst the landlords of the Irish, to have a common spending amongst their tenants at will, they use to take of what victuals they will, for of victuals they were wont to make small reckoning; neither in this was the tenant wronged, for it was an ordinary and knowne custome, and his LORD USE TO SO COVENANT WITH HIM, which if at any time the tenant disliked, he might freely depart at his pleasure, &c., the which (I thinke) were customs at first brought in by the English upon the Irish."

By the Irish custom of Tanistry, the chieftain of every country and the head of every clan had only a life interest in their "chieferies." Sir John Davies, Attorney-General for Ireland in the reign of James I., states that their cuttings and "cosheries," &c. constituted their revenues. When the chieftain died, their sons and next of kin did not succeed to him. The "Tanist" succeeded, and had been elected during the lifetime of his predecessor. Personal qualifications and consanguinity were the only requisite recommendations. Every hale male of the sept was eligible. On the death of a clan's man, his portion was not divided amongst his sons, but the chief made a partition of all the lands belonging to his sept, and gave every one his part according to his "antiquity;" and however small their allotments, or indigent their circumstances, "yet did the military men scorn to descend to husbandry or merchandise." They were the ruling class. With the sword they won the "Green Isle;" with the sword they were always ready to stand up for their inheritance; their claims for support on their territory, "never receiving other pay," was equal if not superior to those of the cultivators of the soil and other producers of wealth. To a free maintenance the warrior and the chief had at least as strong a hereditary claim as had or has a feudal lord to his inheritance.

In the ceaseless strifes with alternating advantages, between the English settlers and the natives, for centuries, the men who bore arms were the most troublesome, most dreaded, most detested, most abused by their adversaries; thus the harshest measures, the most virulent abuse, the most opprobrious epithets were applied to the Kearns, Galloglasses, and Dalteens, and found a resting-place even in the statutes.

The total destruction of the "Men of Warres," the retainers of the chieftains of the "Irish enemies," and of the "English rebel Lords," became at an early period the chief aim of the English Government; and to ensure this politic resolve, recourse was had, not only to arms, but to legislation, and many Acts of Parliament were made in consequence.

William Burke, Earl of Ulster, and Lord of Connaught, was slain in Ulster by his English attendants. He left an only daughter to inherit his vast possessions. She was afterwards married to Lionel, Duke of Clarence, second son of Edward III., but that prince never came into possession, for the next male heir of the deceased earl seized upon his extensive territories, according to the Brehon laws, and afterwards retained them in despite of the English government. Duke Lionel came twice to Ireland, in the capacity of Lord Lieutenant, to gain possession, but in vain. By this prince was summoned at Kilkenny, A.D. 1367, the most famous parliament that till then had been held in Ireland, in which the statute of Kilkenny was passed. By its provisions, the most stringent measures were applied for the extinction of Coyne and Livery, &c., Idlemen, &c., and the reformation of the colonists, who had adopted the laws, language, and manners of the "Irish enemies," and had conciliated the natives by intermarriages and other alliances. "If any did submit himself to the Brehon law, he should be adjudged a traitor." De Lolme thus speaks of this enactment:—

"The fact is, that it was no more than a peevish and revengeful expression of the resentment Duke Lionel felt from the opposition he had met with, and the loss of those lands he had come over to claim."—Strictures on the State of Ireland, 4to, p. 31.

In the Irish State Papers, vol. xv. there is an interesting document bearing date December 2, 1565, No. 55, p. 281, &c., thus described:—

"From a book to be exhibited unto the Rt. Hon. the L^d Lieut. (Sir Henry Sydney) agayst Coyn and Livery wth thearle of Kildare taketh by exforce of thenhabitants of the Countie Kildare wth other the sayd earles enormities and abuses."

Amongst several items it contains the following:—

"And it was enacted in the time of King Ric. the Second, at his personall being here in this realme of Ireland, that Coyn and Livery should be abolished the Englishe pale as Methe (Meath), the countie of Dublin, the countie of Kildare, and the countie of Catherlaghe, wth acte was newly confirmed by Kynge Edward IIIth, as doth appear by record, &c.

"Item, in the rayne of Kinge Henry VIIth, there paste an acte within this realme of Ireland wth is called thacts of Marches and Maghery, that such as take coyn in the Maghery or Englishe pale should be esteemed felons.

"Item, Sir Anthony Fitz Harbard Knighte, and other commissioners, sent hither by the late prince of famous memory, Kinge Henry VIIIth, took order that thactes aforesayd should stand in pour.

"Item, in the tyme of Sir William Sheryngton, beinge deputie of this realme, ther paste an acte for the extinguishment of the sayd coyn and livery as playnly may appere by the same acte in print, conferminge likewise thactes aforesayd," &c.

In the same volume of this Series of State Papers, Eliz., an. 14 (1565), October 5, are "Instructions to Sir Henry Sydney, Lord Deputie and Council." In which it is stated that her "Ma^{ty} is informed," &c., that—

"there are sufficient provisions already made against the greatest abuses found in that Realme as against coinyng Livery and 'Coshery,' against wearing of Irish apparel, against succouring of felons, against Ryots and unlawful assemblies, against Retayners, against taking of Tributes, against marrying or fostering wth Irishmen: And special lawes also, according to the Statute of Winchester," &c.

Her Majesty then concludes by charging and commanding her Lieutenant—

"to cause searche to be made as well for the said Lawes, as for any other lyke to the same, and therof to make advertissement what shall be thought meete, with the publishing of the same."

On the termination of Tyrone's war with James I., the spirits of the people were broken; and Sir John Davies, in the work already quoted, says that—

"Sir George Cary did, in the first year of his Majesty's reyne (1603), make the first sheriffes that ever were made in Tyrone and Tirconnell; and shortly after, sent Sir Edmund Pelham, Chief Baron, and myselfe, thither—the first Justices that ever sat in those countries. The common people were taught, &c., that the Cuttings, Cosheries, Seatings, and other extortions of their Lords, were unlawful; and that they should not any more submit thereunto. Thereupon the power of those Irish Lords over the people sodainly fell and vanished."—Pp. 264—268.

The fact is by what, in legal phrase, is called the forfeitures to the crown, the septs were deprived of their lands, till then their common property, reduced to a state of indigence and helpless dependence; subjected as tenants to fixed rents, and other obligations, arbitrarily imposed and rigidly exacted, outraging their sense of justice. This is the fount and source of many of the evils which afflict Ireland.

To the acts of Anne and George, which suggested and sustained the presentment against Patrick Doyle, it is needless to refer. There now remains merely to explain the derivation of the word Cosherer.

Cosherer, a free feast-er, a free guest; compounded of cosair, a feast, a banquet; and feair, a man. The initial being aspirated, feair is pronounced ar or er, and is the agglutinated affix in "Cosherer." This affix, I would suggest, is to be found elsewhere than in the Irish, and probably in those nouns in the English language ending in er, and in their signification including an agent. Coshair, a feast, a banquet—in the Irish co-sair, for the Irish s is invariably sh—is also a compound word, the components being primitives; thus abnegating the oriental descent in its integrate form. Cot, meat, victuals—the final t being aspirated, cot is pronounced co; and saor, free, voluntary. See Reilly's, Begley's, O'Connell's, and O'Brien's Irish Dictionaries, and Shaw's and Armstrong's Gaelic Dictionaries, under these words.

"Cosherer" is found in our Law Dictionaries—Blount, Jacob, Cowell, and Tomlins; but it is acknowledged that they obtained it from Spelman, who recognises it as used by the Irish.

JOHN EUGENE O'CAVANAGH.

Lime Cottage, Walworth Common, London.

BALLAD: BATTLE OF HARLAW.

ORIGINAL VERSION.

In order that the original words of this old ballad may not be lost, they are sent to "N. & Q." in the hope that they may find a place there.

I.

"As I cam in by Dunidier, and down by Wetherha',
There was fifty thousan' Hielan' men a' marchin' to Harlaw,
(Chorus) In a dree, dree, drady drumtie dree.

II.

"As I cam on, and farther on, and doun an' by Balquhain, Oh, there I met Sir James the Rose, wi' him Sir John the Gryme.

NOTES

III.
brae the Hielans, man, and cam ye a' the Donell an' his men come marchin' frae the

IV.
an frae the Hielans, man, and she cam a' the aw M'Donell an' his men, come marchin' frae kye.

V.
ye near an' near enuch, did ye their nunsee?
bell to me, John Hielanman, what micht their mmers be?

VI.
she was near, an' near enuch, an' she their numners saw,
e was fifty thousan' Hielan men, a' marchin' for Harlaw.

VII.
in that be true, quo' James the Rose, 'we'll no come muckle speed;
we'd best cry in our merry men, and turn our horses' heads.

VIII.
'Oh no! Oh no!' quo' John the Gryme, 'that thing maun never be,
The "Gallant Grymes" were never beat, we'll try what we can dee.'
[N.B.—The battle has now commenced and is raging.]

IX.
'As I cam on, an' farther on, and down an' by Harlaw,
They fell fu' close on ilka side, sic fun ye never saw.

X.
'They fell fu' close on ilka side, sic fun ye never saw,
For Hielan swords gaed clash for clash, at the battle o' Harlaw.

XI.
'The Hielan men, wi' their lang swords, they laid on us fu' sair,
And they drav back our merry men, three acres breadth or mair.

XII.
'Brave Forbes did to his brither say, 'Now, brither, dinna ye see,
They beat us back on ilka side, and we'll be forced to flee.'

XIII.
'Oh no! Oh no! my brither dear, that thing maun never be,
Tak ye your guid sword, ie y' han', and come your wyes wi' me.'

XIV.
'Oh no! Oh no! my brither dear, the clans they are ower strong,
An' they drive back our merry men wi' swords baith sharp and lang.'

XV.
'Forbes to his men did say, 'Noo tak your rest and, to fetch my coat of mail.'

"Then back to back the brithers
thrang,
And they bewed down the Hielan men wi' swords
sharp and lang.

XVIII.
'M'Donell he was young an' stout, had on his coat o'
mail,
And he has gane oot through them a', to try his han' himself.

XIX.
'The first ae stroke that Forbes struck, made the great M'Donell reel,
The second stroke that Forbes struck, the great M'Donell fell.

XX.
'An siccan a 'pilleurichie' the like ye never saw
As there was among the Hielanmen, when they saw M'Donell fa'.

XXI.
'An when they saw that he was dead, they turned an'
ran awa,
An they buried him in 'Seggatt's lan' * some twa three miles awa.

XXII.
'They rode, they ran, and some did gang, but they were of sma' record,
For Forbes and his merry men slew maist a' by th road [sword?].

XXIII.
'On Mununday at morning the battle it began,
On Saturday at glo'min', ye'd scarce tell wha had w

XXIV.
'An sic a weary burying, the like ye never saw,
As there was the Sunday after that on the muirs by Harlaw.

XXV.
'An gin Hielan lasses speer at yu, for them th awa'
Ye may tell them plain an' plain enuch they'r at Harlaw."

N.B. This, the original version of this one of the oldest in Scotland, has, it is never been printed; various editions have, this. It is sung to a quaint lively air, ago might have been heard not unfre
the farmhouses in Aberdeenshire.
must be pronounced in the broadest shire dialect. M'Donald is here spell out M'Donell, simply for the sake of "d." It might have been better to "M'Donal," but it is given literi manuscript.

* Qy. Where is "Seggatt's lan'?"
Seggat in Auchterless. The manuscript it would read equally well "Leggal" again, is that, or is there such a place terless, would be some fifteen or six from Harlaw? Can any of your cor

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

"Cleopatra. It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackles accident, and bolts up change;
Which sleeps and never palates more the dung,
The beggar's nurse and Caesar's."—Act V. Sc. 2.

Before examining the italicised phrase let me say a word or two on the interpretation of the verbs in this fourth line. In the third and fifth, Death, the "thing" of the second line, is personified, and the words "never more" forbid us to take sleeps and palates as attributives of such a being. Neither as a second supposition can it be believed that Shakspeare clumsily or sleepily forgot that he had thus personified death and so spoke of it in the intermediate line as a state into which the living being falls. It is more natural to consider the personification of death as one acting on us, to be carried on throughout, and to interpret sleeps and palates as casual verbs. Death which shackles, which bolts up, which causes sleep, which never causes or allows of palating, the nurse of Caesar and the beggar. Linger and fall are familiar examples of this causal usage.

Now if the reader adopt the first or second of the above interpretations, then he must at once reject Warburton's change of "never palates more the dug," for this makes Shakspeare represent death first as an infant, and then as a nurse. On the other hand, if he reads the verbs as causals, though this objection does not hold, yet the phrase, on close examination, will be seen to be neither suggested by any word used by Cleopatra, nor by any thought which can be supposed to have entered her mind. Life to her was the time since she had become a woman and a queen. That life she thoroughly enjoyed; but her infantile life and its pleasures would be the last thing she would think of, and that life was to her as great a blank as death itself. In fact Warburton formed his thought on Cleopatra's after-thought, and this gives it its apparent suitableness.

The original reading again—"to palate the dung," gives, I conceive, somewhat of the sense intended; but the word is objectionable on three grounds. Shakspeare was a great chooser of words, and generally very happy in his choice, but though the produce of the earth may, in any one's estimation, be as dung, it can in no other way be or be likened to dung, and therefore I do not think it would be used in this sense, when it is no way pre-shadowed or led up to, without some defining word, such as—of the earth, or vile, &c. Secondly, the luxurious Cleopatra did not so estimate the good things of this world. Her "better life," that she speaks of, is clearly nothing more than the doing, after the old Roman fashion, of something more noble than the consenting to live as a captive. Her pride and all the habits of her life revolted against being shown in triumph, and being then banished into desolation. It is in sense of this change that makes her think of a "which shackles accident and bolts up change." It is because she can no longer live the only she cares for, and because of Antony's death, she thinks the world not worth leave taking. her last commands are—"Give me my robe, on my crown;" and among her last thoughts are

"Now no more
The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip."

Thirdly, Cleopatra was a thorough woman her mobility, and power of identifying herself with the spirit of the hour. When enraged with her messenger, she might have called him dung on the earth (though even then Shakspeare avoided putting into her mouth worse epithets than horrible villain, or cuckold), but it is certain that when moralising, her delicacy or unconscious raising herself to the height of that great argument; or if you will, her sense of fitness would revolt against the utterance of so gross a word.

But when we sleep two acts are unperformed, one essential to life itself, the other essential to social life, and both of the very essence of life to Cleopatra. We neither taste food nor talk; and, as exemplified in the words taste, talk, dicere, gouster, λαλεῖν, "gluck," and others; the palating the tongue, or touching the tongue with the palate, is essential to, and will therefore express, both these acts. As to taste, if the reader will place any savoury scentless matter on his tongue, he can test the truth of this for himself. I would therefore read—"And never palates more the tongue," or as it was often spelled, "tong."

B. NICHOLSON.

SCOTCH PEERS, 1713-14.

The following notanda, from the collections of a Scotch genealogical writer, are worthy of preservation. The notes are by the writer:—

23rd January, 1713, N. S. The Earl of Melfort died at Paris.—Political State of Great Britain, p. 78.

24th January, 1713. The Earl of Selkirk set out by Dover and Calais for France, to renew his solicitations about his pretensions to the Dutchy of Chastel Herault.—Ibid. p. 77.

14 June, 1713. The Earle of Blantyre, one of the sixteen Scotch Peers, died in Westminster of a fever, much lamented. He is succeeded in his honours and estate by his brother, then a Captain in Port Mahon.—Ibid. p. 459. [The Earldom is in the creation of the author. His Lordship was only a Scotch baron.]

4th January, 1714. The Earl of Crawford, a North British Peer, Colonel of the second troop of her Majesty's Horse Grenadier Guards, died of a phthisick.—Ibid. p. 71. [This nobleman was the Lord Whiggridden of Pitcairn's witty comedy of The Assembly.]

18th May, 1714. Lord Irwin dies of small-pox.—Ibid. p. 449. [He was the fourth Viscount, and died at the early age of twenty-eight, unmarried. The founder of the family was an Alderman of London: he died in 1612.]

On Friday, 17th of August, 1714. The Earl of Cromarty died in the North of Scotland, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. He was made a Baronet by King Charles. He was a person of universal learning, the oldest officer perhaps in the world. In his time a very able statesman, and a great honour to his native county.—Ibid. p. 246. [A tolerably correct enumeration of his Lordship's works will be found in Wood's edition of Douglas's Scottish Peerage.]

18th November, 1714. The Earl of Dunbar, a Scotch Roman Catholic Peer, dyed in London, and was succeeded in his honours and estate by his brother, William Constable, Esq. [This nobleman was only a Viscount. His only daughter Anne became eventually heiress of line. She married Simon Scrope of Danby. The patent, being to heirs male bearing the name and arms of Constable, has been in abeyance since the death of William Constable, who did not long survive his brother.]

24th November. The Lord Aston, another Roman Catholic, who was succeeded by his son [Walter].—Ibid. p. 469. [This Peerage was created by Charles I., Nov. 28, 1627, with a remainder to heirs male for ever. In consequence of this, after the failure of heirs male of the body, the title went to a cook and a watchmaker—for to this humble position the male representatives of this noble family had been reduced. The last Lord was the 9th Baron. He was in holy orders; though married, he had no issue, and, since his death, no claimant to the honours has appeared.]

J. M.

THE ROMAN HYPOCAUST AT SLACK.—When this hypocaust was discovered about forty years ago, a sketch of it was made by the late Mr. Tayler, of Halifax, architect. This sketch was subsequently deposited in the Museum of the Leeds Philosophical Society, but now—non est inventus.

Mr. Tayler had also a rough outline of the hypocaust in one of his sketch books, but it was sold with some other of his plans and drawings some few years ago.

Let me now say through "N. & Q.," in the hope that it will reach the possessors of either of these sketches, that a copy, or the loan of either of them, will greatly oblige the Council of the Huddersfield Archaeological Association. Address, Rev. George Lloyd, Hon. Sec., Thurstonland, Huddersfield. GEO. LLOYD.

THE METROPOLITAN ROADS IN 1692.—There is a curious entry in the Lords' Journals for March 1, 1692, which shows the difficulties of travelling even in the neighbourhood of London at that time. The House had assembled at one o'clock to meet the Commons at a Conference; but the Speaker, Sir Robert Atkyns, the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, not having arrived, the Duke of Somerset was chosen Speaker pro tempore. The cause of his absence is shown by an entry in the latter part of the day's proceedings:—

"A message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Miles Cook and Sir Adam Ottley:

"To let the Commons know, that the Speaker of the House of Lords, living two miles out of town, and the badness of the roads at this present, was the only occasion of their Lordships not coming to the Conference at the time appointed."

Sir Robert Atkyns, it is understood, was then living at Kensington. M. N. S.

DE GUSTIBUS, ETC.—I enclose you for publication a letter from Mr. Maywood, the American actor, to my grandfather, introducing Mr. Greenhow. The postscript is very curious.

"Dear Sir,

"I trust time has not intirely erased my name from the tablets of your memory, and that you will pardon a moment's intrusion.

"Mr. Greenhow, the gentleman who will present this, is a warm admirer of your talents; and finding occasion to brave the world of waters which lie between this vast continent and the emporium of learning and genius, wished an opportunity of seeing you. I have, therefore, taken the liberty of introducing him, in the hope of double gratification. He is a gentleman of good mind, extensive reading, and well acquainted with the history and all particulars relative to his country. He is, too, a profound lover of the drama. He will be happy to inform you of its state in this country; which, with other matters, may while (sic) away an hour, and perchance amuse you. Your society and converse will on his part be highly valued. I learn that poor 'Ogilvie' has passed that 'bourne whence no traveller returns': his troubled spirit now finds rest. In the confidence that you do not think me presuming, and that your literary labours may ever be crowned [crowned in MS.] by a golden harvest, I remain yours, with great respect,

R. C. MAYWOOD.

"New York,
April 29th, 1821.

"William Hazlitt, Esq.

"P.S. I feel assured that any parts of so great a being as George Cooke, will be esteemed a curiosity, and richly valued. The bearer of this will offer a morsel of the liver of this wondrous man.

R.—[sic]."

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

FLY-LEAVES.—A spare page, before a copy of the Works of William Gouge, 1627, folio (which belonged to the Earl of Harborough), exhibits the following interesting particulars:—

"Yorke, 10th 18^o An^o Dnl, 1626.

For Mr^e Mary Cholmeley.

HEN^r FAIRFAX.

MARY CHOLMELEY.

Anagrams.

Hail, comely Mrs.	S. super est .
Mal, y ^e are comely.	H. non est . . . *

'Though tricky to see, too be gallant to drue,
Yet comely and wise is y^e huswife to thriue.'

Tusser.

MARY CHOLMELEY.

Anagram.—Oh I'me all mercy.

M. My hand, my heart, my selfe, and what doth make it,
C. Claime to be mine, Oh I'me all mercy, take it.

HEN^r FAIRFAX.

Fly, restless thoughts! But, heark ye, stay;

I need not question where you goe.

The haste you make doth that betray;

Salute my Loue, and let him know

* A word here is illegible.

Thought nor Heart.

... reply and say, that I
Possess his heart, when mine I gauce,
Beleue[e] it not; its fals, for why
I haue none, but one would gladly haue.
If carelessly hee say, Take either,
Answer, I will haue his or neither.
If falsly hee asure them doth,
And fly, still follow: finde him out.
Say I'll exclude him: yet I'me loath,
For why, I haue no heart to doo't.
You leau[e] me neither Heart nor Thought,
And I'll conclude I'me good for nought.

M. C. of ever happy memory.

M. High flying Thoughts and Heart of thine,
Fl. Finde rest in Heaveⁿ. These wee resigne."

Upon the title-page of the book, is "Fare fac |
M. F."; and throughout the earlier portion of the volumes (two in one, original binding), are copious
MS. annotations by Henry Fairfax: conclusive as to the careful perusal by him of the copy of the work, which he presented to Mary Cholmeley, afterwards Mary Fairfax.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

TOAST.—It appears to me that "N. & Q." might be made the means of rescuing from oblivion many of the toasts of former days, valuable on account of their wit, quaintness, or historical bearing. Hitherto, I think, no attempt of any magnitude has been made. I give my quota to the undertaking:—

"May the last king be strangled in the bowels of the last priest."—(Given at the meetings of the revolutionary Societies of the close of the last century.)

"Here's a health to those that we love, here's a health to those that love us; here's a health to those that love them that love those that love those that love them that love us."

"Here's a health to you and yours who have done such things for us and ours; and when we and ours have it in our powers to do for you and yours what you and yours have done for us and ours, then we and ours will do for you and yours what you and yours have done for us and ours."

These two were given me some years ago by an gentleman who remembered them as favorites in the last century. One of them was composed by Dr. Enfield.

"May the trade of Kidderminster be trampled under foot by all the world."

Said to have been given by Pitt at a dinner in that town.

"Sink your pits, blast your mines, dam your rivers."—(By Henry Erskine.)

"May all our labours be in vein."—(Mining toast in Yorkshire.)

CYRIL.

BATLER.—In The Reader of April 27, is a notice of the finding in an old house in Yorkshire of a batler, or batlet, such as the enamoured Touchstone kissed (As You Like It, Act These batlers or battledores, as they are rally called, are still in use in Yorkshir are the prototype of the "patent mang consist merely of a flat rectangular piece some two feet long, and six inches broad, thin short handle. The linen to be mai coiled round a roller, which is placed on and then the batler is placed on the to pushed forwards and backwards on the roll pressure of the hands.

They were not used in Yorkshire only. cured a very handsome specimen in Suffolk years ago, the upper surface of which is r elaborately carved with a Gothic design. initials of the owner are burnt in in Gothic let and the article cannot have been made n lately than the beginning of the sixteenth cent
J. ELIOT HODGKIN

THE EPISTLE TO THE LAODICEANS.—Ma have supposed from an expression in Col. iv. 1 that St. Paul wrote an Epistle to the Church Laodicea. The following cutting now going ti round of the newspapers bears upon this subjec and seems to call for a remark:—

"At a recent sale by auction at Mingdon, a magnificent illuminated Latin manuscript of the Bible, written in the twelfth century, and containing, in addition to the Apocrypha, the Epistle of Paul to the Laodiceans (long received as a canonical book), was knocked down to Mr. Thomas Hughes, of Chester, for thirty-two guineas. It is said that this precious manuscript will be deposited in the Chapter Library, Chester."

It is well known that no ancient Greek text of this forgery is extant, and that we have no proof that the Latin text is identical with the Epistle to the Laodiceans mentioned, and rejected by Jerome, Theodoret, Gregory the Great, and Timotheus the Presbyter. The statement that it was "long received as a canonical book" is utterly untrue, and I hope will not be adopted by the authorities at Chester. (See Herzog's Real-encyklopädie, xii. 335). The text has been many times printed, and even appended to some editions of the Latin Vulgate.
B. H. C.

"THAT'S THE CHEESE."—Popular slang phrases, however absurd in themselves, are usually corruptions of expressions in our own or other languages. Such would appear to be the case with "That's the cheese." A friend of mine, who has just returned from India, has suggested that it is derived from a word very common in Bengalee as spoken in Calcutta. The word chiz is used in the sense of "thing;" e. g. "That's the chiz for me," or "That's the chiz." It is easy to see how, in its transit to this country by means of the P. and O. company, chiz becomes "cheese;" and hence our slang phrase. Such varieties of it as "That's the Stilton," "That's the Cheshire."

mere offshoots of the parent stem, due to
of the ingenious. W. S. ale Road.

LETS.—I do not know whether the followplet has ever appeared in "N. & Q.," or, whether it is current. At all events it de-so to be, from the noble sentiment con-
:—

"Chi vuol Catone amico, Facilmente l'avrà: sia fido a Roma."

copy it as found in a letter addressed to Mr.
wards Sir William Jones in 1782, by the ness of Devonshire. The same letter contained her couplet of a very different character, being ing less than a Greek epigram, which may ially amuse all who bear the same honourable ne:—

Αἱ Χαρίτες, τέμενός τι λαβεῖν ὅπερ οὐκ πεσεῖν
Ζητούσαι, ψυχὴν εὖρον Ἰωάννου.

In sending it, the Duchess adds this graceful ompliment,—

"I will attempt to copy it: and after the various chaacters I have, in days of yore, seen you decipher, I will ot despair of your making out Greek, though written by me."—Life and Writings of Sir W. Jones, by Lord Teign-mouth, vol. i. 398, ed. 1807.

FRANCIS TRENCH.

Islip Rectory.

Queries.

"NAN HARTLIB" AND "CLODIUS."

In Pepys' Diary are the following entries, mentioning two persons about whom I am anxious to get some information:—

"Home and called my wife, and took her to Clodius's,* to a great wedding of Nan Hartlib to Mynheer Roder, which was kept at Goring House, with great state, cost, and noble company."—July 10, 1660.

"While I was at dinner, in came Samuel Hartlib and his brother-in-law, now knighted by the King, to request my promise of a ship for them to Holland."—August 7, 1660.

The question is, Who was Nan Hartlib? I believe that she was the sister of Samuel Hartlib, the particular friend of Milton. But, on the contrary, Mr. Keightley, in his Account of John Milton (p. 107), after quoting the above passages, says: "Nan Hartlib was then evidently the niece, not the daughter, of the elder Hartlib."

If this statement is correct, then the Samuel Hartlib mentioned by Pepys must have been the nephew of him to whom Milton dedicated his Tractate of Education. That he had a nephew is shown by his Letter to Lord Herbert (Nov. 22, 1600), where he says: "I have nothing left to keep me alive, with two relations more, a daughter and a nephew, who are attending my sick condition." It was the younger Samuel Hartlib who annoyed Pepys at Bartholomew Fair:—

*called "Clodius" by Pepys.—ED.]

"... and so we resolving to be dirty, and was coach; and my wife, being a little before me, .. be taken up by one, whom we saw to be Sam Hartino.
My wife had her vizard on: yet we cannot say that he meant any hurt; for it was just as she was by a coach-side, which he had, or had a mind to take up; and he asked her, 'Madam, do you go in this coach?' but, as soon as he saw a man come to her, I know not whether he knows me, he departed away apace. By-and-by did get a coach, and so away home."—Sept. 6, 1667.

The question then is, To which of the Hart-lib's does Pepys allude in the entry of August 7, 1660? Lord Braybrooke thought clearly to the elder; and so does Mr. Dircks, in his recently published Memoir of Samuel Hartlib.

The next query is, Who was Clodius, who was concerned in the marriage of Nan Hartlib? Lord Braybrooke gives no note to the passage, but if I may be allowed to conjecture, he was the person of whom William Wotton, writing to John Evelyn (Aug. 13, 1703), asks, "Do you know anything of one Clodius a chemist? Was he (or who was) Mr. Boyle's first master in that art?"
Evelyn, in his answer, says:—

"Clodius, whom you inquire after, was his [Hartlib's] son-in-law, a professed adeptus, who by the same methodus mendicandi and pretence of extraordinary arcana, insinuated himself into acquaintance of his father-in-law:
but when or where either of them died (though I think poor Hartlib's was of the stone), or what became of them,
I cannot tell."

From this it is clear that "Clodius" the chemist is the person alluded to by Pepys.
Query, did he marry an older daughter of Hart-lib's, or was it the one who attended him in his sickness in 1660? The points I have mooted concerning Hartlib's relatives are important ones, and it is a pity that Mr. Dircks did not investigate the matter more fully when engaged upon the subject. A good biography of this old worthy is still a desideratum. The voluminous correspondence and state papers of the period would surely yield ample material if carefully examined.

EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

BISHOP BEDELL.—Are there extant any records of a grant made to Bishop Bedell of houses or tenements in the city of Dublin? Was one of these the ancient mayoralty house, formerly situated in Pill Lane, a back street near the Law Courts, since pulled down? This became the property of the Stanford family from Beltrabet, county of Cavan, supposed to be descended from the bishop.

ATKEN IRVINE.

Kilbride, Bray.

CARFAX.—Passing through Horsham, in Sussex, a few days ago, I observed the name of Carfax given to a turning. I had not heard of the name except at Oxford, and I should be glad if any c your readers can tell me its meaning in this case. The explanation given of the Oxford Carfax (Quatre voies) cannot apply, as the Sussex one is a piece of ground of somewhat triangular shape, with two entrances at the west end, and one at the east, thus bearing no resemblance to the spot so well known to University men. F.

ANNUAL SERMON ON CENSORIOUSNESS.—I have a manuscript sermon in my possession, from the text "Judge not, that ye be not judged," and for genealogical reasons I am anxious to discover who was the writer of it. From memoranda on its covers I learn that it was preached "at ye Minster, May 16, 1714, upon Mr^r Clerke's account."

"Vpon ye same acc^t at ye Minster, Whitsunday, 1721."

"Vpon ye same account at ye Minster, Whitsunday, 1759, by L. B. Jun^r for Mr^r Cook of the Pool."

A note on the margin runs thus:—

"Endeavour to be as suitable to ye occasion as I can, in order to answer ye good intentions of a certain pious person, who, to express her detestation to censorious proceed. has occasion'd an annual disc. agⁿ it to be transmitted to posterity."

Perhaps some of your readers may be able to inform me, at what "Minster" an annual sermon on this subject is or was preached. In order not unnecessarily to take up space in your columns, I add my address. H. FISHWICK.

Carr Hill, near Rochdale.

THE DUBLIN "COMET" NEWSPAPER.—I am sure some Dublin correspondent can furnish information respecting a weekly newspaper that was published in Dublin, commencing perhaps about 1830, and ending some time before the commencement of 1835. I know that a perfect copy was sold at the sale of the library of the "Repeal Association," after the death of the late Mr. O'Connell, and, as I have heard, a large figure was given for it. It was, perhaps, one of the most extraordinary and talented hebdomadal publications (as a newspaper) of the present century; and these were published (I do not know the date) by the writers of the Comet, two literary gems—The Purson's Hornbook and the Valentine Post Bag. I would give a reasonable price for any of the three publications, or for the lot. Information relative to those publications will be grateful to

S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

EDWARD DYER OF BRENT, CO. SOMERSET.—A commission, dated 1644, was granted by Prince Charles to Edward Dyer, Esq., to raise a regiment of foot in the hundred of Brent, co. Somerset, and to be Colonel thereof. I should be much indebted to any one who would enable me to connect him with the family of Dyer, which had long been settled in that county, and would acquaint me with the names of his descendants, if any.

C. H. M.

The Union, Oxford.

FOREIGN DRAMATIC BIBLIOGRAPHY.—Is there any bibliographical catalogue of dramatic works written by—1. Dutch authors; 2. Danish (including Norwegian) authors; 3. Swedish authors? Where and at what price could I obtain any volumes of the description indicated above?

R. L.

KING'S LYNN.—In A General History of the County of Norfolk, 8vo, Norwich, 1829, i. 465, is mentioned "an old book," entitled Lenne Redi-uina, or a Description of King's Lynn in Norfolk, &c., by Ben Adam. The work is said to be in verse, and to consist of 214 MS. pages. A long extract from it is also said to be contained in a Catalogue of Seals presented to the Norwich Museum by Richard Taylor, Esq. This Catalogue is still in the Norwich Museum, or, I should rather say, was there when I last visited it, about two years ago, but no trace is to be found of the "old book," or of the "extract" above alluded to. The present curator could give me no information, nor could another gentleman on the spot, who has been intimately connected with the Museum from its commencement. Can any Norwich or Lynn correspondent give any tidings of this "old book," which from the description and specimen given in the History of Norfolk must be a curiosity, as it is said to commence with A.D. 1, and end with the reign of Edward IV.? Is anything known of the existence of such a book, and of its author? The Catalogue, I may add, is a very thin folio, consisting of only a few leaves, and shows no trace of anything having been cut or torn out of it since it was bound. Q.

LADY BIRDS.—The Daily News of 18th April quotes an article from the City Press, recording that a portion of the income of the parish of St. Peter, Cornhill, arises from a rent charge on certain property, which is to be applied to the destruction of lady birds in the parish. In these days, the offence of being found in the parish of St. Peter, Cornhill, might be followed by a milder punishment, and the convict lady birds would pay the cost of their transportation to parishes where they could earn an honest livelihood by the destruction of aphides "and such small deer."

Can any of your correspondents inform me of the date of this gift to the parish, and the name of the donor, and the purpose to which the gift is now applied? VRYAN RHEGED.

MERCER'S HOSPITAL, DUBLIN.—Five years ago the late Mr. Horatio Townsend published Part I. of The History of Mercer's Charitable Hospital in Dublin, pp. 54. A promise was given to publish

Part II. with as little delay as possible; author was not spared to fulfil his undertaking. May we hope that some one will be found to complete what has been so well begun? ABHBA.

PETER PELHAM THE ENGRAVER.—In a recent Dictionary of Painters, Engravers, &c., I find mention of "Peter Pelham an English Engraver, born about 1684, and died about 1738. He executed quite a number of portraits in mezzotinto; among them those of George I., George II., Oliver Cromwell, Lord Carteret, Rubens," &c. Also mention of J. C. Pelham, his son, born in 1721, who painted history and portraits, but of whom little is known. Can any of your readers furnish more particulars, and especially can they point out any connection between him and Peter Pelham, the first artist and engraver resident in New England?

This Peter came to Boston prior to 1727, but had lived in London, where he had a son Peter baptized at St. Paul's, Covent Garden, in 1721, and Charles baptised in 1723. Of his relations I have one trace hereinafter mentioned. Peter married, secondly, the widow of Richard Copley, and thus became stepfather to John Singleton Copley, the well known artist, the father of the late Lord Lyndhurst. Peter Pelham, of Boston, engraved several portraits in admirable style, and I think was also quite a painter. To his instruction Copley was indebted for his first knowledge of the art.

Our Peter had a sister Helen living in Chichester in 1762, and a letter from her mentions that her father lived to be over eighty. In 1748 her father was alive, and she orders her letters sent to her at the Hon. Mrs. Conway's in Green Street, near Grosvenor Square. Perhaps some one from these facts can tell us who Peter Pelham's father was?

One other note. Writing from Chichester in 1762, Helen Pelham says:—
"I saw in the papers you had a fine burial at Boston; poor General Whitmore; some of his troops are here. I think it was a sad accident he met with."

This was Major-General Edward Whitmore, xii. 88.) It would seem as if he might have belonged in Sussex, and the local papers in the first half of 1762, may tell something about him if any one have access to them.

W. H. WHITMORE.

Boston, U. S. A.

PETRUS DE ALVA ET ASTORGA.
"d'Alva has published forty-eight folios on the Conception." F. C.

Hell. extant? The

GUSTAVUS SCHWAB.—This German poet died in or about 1849, was the author of Romances, Lyrical Poems, translations from Lamartine, De Vigny, &c., &c. I think that there was a memoir of this poet published in Germany a few years ago. Can any of your readers inform me whether Schwab was the author of any dramatic work either unpublished, or in his miscellaneous poems? R. I.

THE SEVEN BISHOPS.—Can any of your readers inform me if paintings of "The Seven Bishops" similar to one in my possession, are common? This painting (4 ft. 2 in. x 3 ft. 4 in.) has the portraits of the bishops in small medallions suspended upon the columns of a temple with altar and seven candlesticks behind them, with the following inscriptions:—
"Qui vicerit faciam illum cum in Templo Dei mei." And "Ecce tabernaculum Dei cum hominibus, et habitabit cum eis, et ipsi populus ejus erunt, et Deus eorum erit in aeternum."

Upon close observation, within the medallion portrait of Sancroft—the centre in the upper tier—an eye is seen represented. I suppose that such paintings may have been multiplied soon after the Bishops' Trial, and shall be obliged to be informed if there is any known history attaching to them. K. S.

SHERIFFS OF DUBLIN EXCOMMUNICATED.—In the Liber Munerum Publicorum Hibernie, part III. p. 146, the following entry occurs:—
"1765. Jan. 8. George Robbins.
Jan. 10. [Writ of excommunication against the Sheriffs of the city of Dublin]."

Will some reader who is acquainted with the Municipal Annals, Dublin, kindly inform me why this writ was issued, or refer me to some authorities on the subject? ALICE IRVINE.

TIP ME THE TRAVELLER.—

"Mayhap thou wouldest rather see me dead," answered the uncle, "for then, my lad, there would be some picking. Aha! dost thou tip me the traveller, my boy? Tom answered him, he scorned any such mercenary view!" —Smollet's Sir Launcelot Greaves, i. ch. vi.

What is the meaning of the italicised phrase
CYR

TYLER'S "LIFE OF HENRY OF MONMOUTH
In a note at p. 5 of this book Mr. Tyler speaks of an order, dated June 6, 1372, to lodge two pipes in Kenilworth Priory, and to hasten with a me flote, the midwife, to the Queen Constance.

ford, on horse or in carriage, as should be best for her case."

Can any one kindly give me the reference to this order? It is not on the Issue Rolls. There can, moreover, be little doubt that the date of the year, 1372, is a mistake. The Duchess Constance was married in the early part of that year; and the two following years are also out of the question, since the Princess Katherine was born in March, 1374 (not Feb., 1373, as stated in the same note by Mr. Tyler). See the Issue Roll, Mich. 47 Edw. III., Mar. 31.

HERMENTRUDE.

Queries with Answers.

EDWARD VI.—I have just met with a reprint of a curious Latin tract, ascribed by the editor (J. P. Berjeau) to no less a person than Peter Martyr, touching the death of King Edward VI. by unfair means.

Is there any hint of foul play in any English work of the time?

NEWINGTONENSIS.

[Sir John Hayward, in his Life of Edward the Sixth, has adopted the story that the king's death was hastened by poison, administered by the agents of Northumberland. "At the last (he says), a gentlewoman, unworthy to be named, but accounted to be a schoole-mistresse for the purpose, offered her service assuredly to cure him, in case he were committed wholly to her hand. Hereto the physicians would in no case afford their advice, because, as she could give no reason either of the nature of the disease, or of the part afflicted, so she would not declare the means whereby she intended to worke the cure. After some shew of deliberation among the counsell, it was resolved that the physicians should be discharged, and the case committed to her alone. The apparent defect both of her judgement and experience, joyned to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvell, and some deeply to suspect that she was but an instrument of mischief. This surmise was strongly confirmed within a very short time ensuing, when the king did fall into desperate extremities; his vitall parts were mortally stuffed, which brought him to a difficultie of speech and of breath, his legs swelled, his pulse failed, his skin changed colour, and many other horrid symptoms appeared.

"Then were the physicians called againe, who, espying him in that furefull estate, departed from him with a sad silence, leaving him to the miserable mercy of neere approaching death. Some of these whispered among their private friends, that they were called for fashion only, but neither their advice nor appliances were any deale regarded, but the king had been ill dealt with more than once, and that when by the benefit both of his youth and of careful means there was faire hope of his recovery he was againe more strongly overlaid."

In the Zurich Letters, the First Portion, published by the Parker Society, 1846, p. 265, is a letter from Julius Tournemine to John [ab Ulm], dated Strasburgh, Nov.

20, 1553. The writer says "The most godly Josiah, our earthly hope, died on the sixth of July; of consumption, as the physicians assert; by poison, according to common report." To this passage is appended the following editorial note: "Osorius, Bishop of Sylva in Portugal, affirmed expressly, in a letter wrote to Queen Elizabeth, that King Edward was poisoned in his childhood. But Walter Haddon, who replied to that letter, esteemed this report to be but a fable, raised by idle people, and carried about by such as favoured popery.—See Strype, Memoirs, ii. ii. 118."]

MELANTHE: a Latin play by S. Brooke (afterwards Archdeacon of Coventry) was acted before King James I. at Cambridge University in 1614. The Rev. Dr. Pegge, a well known antiquary of last century was, I believe, possessed of a copy of the play, in which the names of the performers were noted. Is this copy still existing? If any of your readers who are dramatic collectors, have got it, perhaps they would have the kindness to give the names of the actors in this academic play. R. I.

[We have not been able to trace Dr. Pegge's annotated copy of Melanthe, 4to, 1615, but the names of the performers occur in a letter from the Doctor to his friend Professor Ward of Gresham College (Addit. MS. 6211, p. 33, Brit. Mus.). He says, "With your leave I will here subjoin the Dramatis Personæ, with the names of the Cantabrigians that acted those parts placed opposite, as they are written with a pen in my copy:—

Palemon,	Summus sacerdos Diana	Mr. Cleark.
Serranus,	Inferiores sacerdotes	Dr. Pierce.
Montanus,		— Holmes.
Melanthe,	Nympha, Alcini amasia	Mr. Darcy.
Alcinus,	Pastor adolescens, amator Melanthes	Dr. Stubbe.
Alteus,	Pastor senex, pater Melidori creditus	Dr. Wilson.
Melidorus,	Pastor adolescens, amator Sylveria	Mr. Chappel.
Sylveria,	Nympha, amica Melidori	Thorndicke.
Nicander,	Pastor adolescens subrusticior, amator Ermilla	Mr. Goldfinche.
Ermilla,	Nympha lepida	Peake.
Glaucus,	Satyros senex	Symons.
Leoniscus,	Satyros juvenis, Glauco filius	Mr. Sleepe.
Cervinus,	Satyros juvenis	Hacklitt.
Eccho,		Dr. Ward.
	Chorus, Sacerdotum, Pastorum, Satyrorum. Scena in Arcadia.

"ALBANIA."—Who was the author of a poem bearing this title? It is a production of considerable merit, though "now neglected and unknown." It was originally published at London in the year 1737. Are there any later editions of it?

This work is quoted from by Dr. Beattie in his Essay on Poetry and Music, ii. 179, and by Dr. Nathaniel Drake in his Literary Hours, ii. 240.

GEORGE VICKERS.

Shimpling, Suffolk.

[The fate of this remarkable poem has been extremely unlucky, as the author and the original editor are equally unknown. It was reprinted in Scotish Descriptive Poems, 12mo, 1803, edited by J. Leyden.]

"THE WESTERN PROSPECT OF BEAR'S-DEN HALL IN CO. SURREY."—I have a curious satirical print with the above heading, and sundry references and explanations, as—A. The Den's Front; B. The Beare; II. [Two Crutches.] Supporters to the arms [a tree with C. T. and a tent]; the crest, two chins [a head of Janus]. [Underneath one] C. T. Crab Tree. [Underneath the other] N. Numps. [In the air a bird with] K. Crab-tree transmigrated.

At the bottom in Greek capitals ΑΤΕ ΚΟΝΟΙΖ-ΧΕΤΡΕ ΔΕ ΑΑ ΚΟΝΟΙΖΞΑΝΞ, and the Latin motto "Non sine socio."

I shall feel obliged to any of your readers who will give me an explanation of it. It has at the back in an old hand "N° 5848," and I was told that it came from the Gulston Collection. CPL.

[This print by James Hill is a burlesque on Charles Christiern's villa, near Putney, circa 1720. Gough's British Topography, ii. 280.]

ST. AGNES AND HER LAMB.—Where is to be found full, and where the original, account of the following, which I extract from Notes Ecclesiological and Historical, on the Holy Days in the Kalendar of the English Church, republished from the English Church Union Kalendar, 1864 (London: The Church Press Company, 1864)?—

"Her sorrowing parents continued to visit her tomb in secret. One night they had a dream: they saw the blessed martyr coming to them, and a spotless lamb was at her side. She told them of the glory to which she had attained. This appearance is commemorated in the Latin Church on January 28 [21.]"

II. C.

[The legend of St. Agnes, one of the oldest in the Christian church, is printed in Mrs. Jameson's Sacred and Legendary Art, ii. 601—604, edit. 1857.]

BULL AGAINST MENDICANT FRIARS.—Among my MS. collections I have memorandum of a bull or breve of Pope John XXII. against some friars mendicant who preached sedition in Ireland. The breve was directed "to the Archbishops of Dublin and Cashel, and the Dean of the Church of Dublin," and appears to be dated in 1317. So far I glean from the memorandum in my possession. Where will I find the original?

AIKEN IRVINE.

Kilbride, Bray.

[This Bull is printed Rymer's Fœdera, edit. 1739, ii. 122, and is entitled "Bulla contra Fratres de Ordine Mendicantium, ad populum Hybernicum Rebellionem prædicantes," and is signed "Dat. Avinion. quarto Idus Aprilis, Pontificatus nostri anno primo, i. e. 1317."]

Replies.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENTS.

(3rd S. vii. 351.)

On 30th December, 1818, a man named Robert Johnston was executed in Edinburgh for highway robbery. The circumstances which attended his execution were striking and painful.

A wooden platform on which the gibbet stood was erected at the west end of St. Giles's Cathedral, and around its south and east side a space was railed in to leave room for the criminal and officers of justice to have free access from the Lock-up-House to the place of execution. What follows is abridged from a letter to the Magistrates of the City by "an Eye-Witness":—

"About half-past two they came out, and Johnson walked steadily. I marked his countenance, but saw no change of features. He ascended the scaffold with unaltered visage, and merely gave a look to the apparatus such as a man would give who was determined not to shrink. His convulsed effort to appear composed when he submitted his neck to the noose was appalling. I turned my back, and was about to withdraw, when one who stood next me exclaimed, 'Good God! his feet are not off the scaffold;' and it was so. He stood on the platform; a partial compression of the windpipe, caused by the sudden jerk, insufficient to cause death but sufficient to produce exquisite agony, shook his whole frame, but did not appear to have suspended his mental powers, for thrice he bent his legs upwards, evidently on purpose to terminate his sufferings. Still he touched the platform. He made several unsuccessful attempts to assist in his own strangulation. During all these efforts, unutterably horrible, carpenters were brought to cut away the wood below the table; but for at least ten minutes, could make no impression on the machinery. He remained convulsed in every fibre, till the motion of his limbs attracted the notice and sympathy of the immense crowd, from whom, the moment they perceived the protracted torture, a spontaneous burst of indignation resounded, and then followed a pause, still as death, for a few seconds; but when they saw no attempts at relief, a shower of stones aimed at the scaffold, accompanied a second expression of their indignation. A gentleman who had observed his ineffectual struggles, sprang forward and relieved the feelings of the spectators by cutting the man down."

